statute are, To whom the reversion or remainder shall then appertain: see 11 R. 2. Fitz. Detin. 46. and so he concluded, because that this remainder is in the custody of the law, and not in esse, it is privileged and preserved and not destroyed by the fine; and upon issue had, the remainder shall be executed, notwithstanding the said act done by the father; and without any entry to be made by the conusees to raise the use, for the remainder limited, seniori puero, neither was, nor could be discontinued: as to the principal point of the case, viz. how these words, seniori puero, shall be expounded, although divers authorities have been cited out of Latine authours, that this word (puer) shall be taken for the male or female; yet I conceive, that more commonly it shall be taken for the male than for the female, and we ought to judge according to the intent of the parties, and not according to the strict signification of the word in Latine, especially where it is doubtfull how it shall be expounded: 9 H. 7. 16. A. was bound in a bond upon condition to pay, decem libras auri puri; although there be not any such phrase in Latine, yet because it appeareth so to be the meaning of the obligee to have fine gold, it was so taken: 39 H. 6. 10. and 11. The word (uterque) id est, quilibet pro parte sua, see the book: so it was lately adjudged in the Court of Common-pleas, where three were bounden, et eorum uterque, which was construed to be, quilibet, for we ought always in construction of deeds, to have regard to the meaning of the parties, and not to argue the aptness of the Latine word. And I conceive, that if a lease be made for life, the remainder puero of J. S. who hath a son and a daughter, the son shall have the land, &c. for the most worthy shall be preferred; and therefore, if a freeman marrieth a niefe, she is enfranchised for ever, according to the opinion of Fitzherbert, which I hold to be good law, for the husband is the more worthy: so if the lease for life be made to J. S. the remainder to the right heirs of A. B. who hath issue three daughters, and dieth, the eldest shall have the remainder, and not the other with her, because she is the more worthy; and so a remainder upon an estate for life of lands in gavelkind limited to the right heirs of J. S. who hath issue two sons, the eldest shall have it; so here in the principal case, (puer) shall be expounded son, because he is the more worthy: but here are other circumstances, which give occasion of another construction; for this doubtfull word (puer) is explained by the English indenture, which the father, W. Humphreston, caused to be made: [unto the use of the eldest child] which is a good exposition of the former conveyance: and I am of opinion, that the same ought to be meant of the daughter, for so soon as she is born, the remainder vests in her, and by the birth of the son after shall not be devested: land is leased to A. for life, the remainder to T. son of A. who hath two sons of the same name, the eldest shall have it, because the more worthy; but, if afterwards the doner declares his meaning to the contrary, the same shall stand, &c. And afterwards judgment was given against the plaintiff, and that the daughter should have the lands.

A man devised his lands to his wife for life, and because he was in doubt whether he should have issue or no, he farther willed by his will, that if he should not have any issue by his wife, that then after the death of his wife, the lands should be sold, and the money thereof coming, distributed to three of his bloud, and made his wife and another his executors, and died; the executors proved the will, the other executor died, and the wife sold the lands; and it was the opinion of Wray and Southcote, Justices, that the sale was good, although it be not expressed in the will, by whom the lands should be sold; for the moneys coming of the sale, are to be distributed by his executors, to persons certain, as legacies, and it appertains to executors to pay the legacies, and therefore they shall sell, &c. As if a man willeth, that his lands shall be sold, and that the moneys coming thereof, shall be disposed of for the payment of his debts; now the executors shall sell the lands, for to them it belongs to pay debts: also they held, that the lands should be sold in the life of the wife, otherwise it could never be sold; and also the surviving executor shall sell the lands because the authority doth survive.

Three men were bounden by recognizance, jointly and severally, against all which the conusee sued forth execution by scire facias; and upon issue joined, it was found for the plaintiff in the King's-Bench, and execution awarded by capias ad satisfaciend. And because the same erronicè emanavit, being upon a recognizance, it was drawn off the file; and now the conusee brought an action of debt upon the judgment against one of them, and the opinion of the whole Court was, that it would not lie, because the judgment was joint against them all three.

CCLXXVIII. Pasch. 16 Eliz. In the King's Bench.

A. brought an action upon the case, and declared, that the Dean and Chapter of Westminster, did lease unto him a house for years by deed indented, of which indenture he was possessed, and afterwards lost it, and by trover it came to the hands of the defendant, who sold it, and converted the money thereof coming to his own use; the defendant pleaded, not guilty; and the plaintiff gave in evidence, that the said lease was made to him, and to one B. and that the said indenture was delivered to the said B. (and that was agreed to be the possession of them both) and afterwards B. died, and afterwards A. the plaintiff, was the sole owner of it: and that was holden to be good evidence on the part of the plaintiff; and if the plaintiff can prove the other part of his declaration; i.e. that the indenture came unto the hands of the defendant, and that he sold it, that then he should recover. But it was given in evidence on the defendants parts, that the said B. sold to the said defendant his part and interest in the said lease, and also the said indenture; so as now he is become tenant in common with the plaintiff, and then his sale doth not give any cause of action to the plaintiff and that was holden by the whole Court to be good evidence without pleading of it; the case went farther; that A. being within age, his father leased the lands [221] for 20 years, and afterwards the son at his full age upon the back of the indenture did release to the defendant all his right; and it was holden by Wray, Justice, that when the father leased, he did it as guardian to his son; and it was not any ejectment of the son, but it was a lease in the behalf of the son, although the son might avoid it, and then when the indorsement is ut supra, the same is a good assignment; and afterwards the plaintiff was nonsuit.

CCLXXIX. Pasch. 16 Eliz. In the King's Bench.

In an action upon the case, the plaintiff declared, that B. by his will did devise to each of his daughters, he having two daughters, 200l. and that the survivor should have the whole; and shewed farther, that one of his two daughters died, and that B. made his wife his executrix, and that the said wife took to husband the defendant; and farther declared, that the defendant in consideration of all that, and that the defendant should take the surviving daughter to wife, and in consideration that the defendant had assets to pay all debts and legacies, &c. did promise to pay to the plaintiff 400l. at four several days: the first day of payment incurred, and no money was paid, whereupon the plaintiff brought the action; the defendant pleaded, that he made no such promise; and it was found for the plaintiff, and damages were assessed for the default of payment at the first day; and that was moved in arrest of judgment, because the assumpsit was intire, and the plaintiff ought to have forborn his suit until all the days of payment were past, and then to have one entire action for the whole;

but the opinion of the whole Court was against that; for they said, it is not like unto a debt upon a contract, or a bill, where the debt is to be paid at several days; for here no debt is to be recovered but onely damages for the debt; and this default of payment is a wrong, and therefore the action will well lie, and so it was adjudged.

CCLXXX. Pasch. 16 Eliz. In the King's Bench.

A. devised, that his lands should descend to his son, but he willed, that his wife should take the profits thereof until the full age of his son, for his education and bringing up, and died; the wife married another husband, and died before the full age of the son; and it was the opinion of Wray and Southcote, Justices, that the second husband should not have the profits of the lands until the full age of the son; for nothing is devised to the wife but a confidence, and she is as guardian, or bailiff for to help the infant, which by her death is determined; and the same confidence cannot be transferred to the husband; but contrary, if he had devised the profits of the land unto his wife until the age of the infant to bring him up and educate him, for that is a devise of the land it self.

CCLXXXI. Bawell and Lucas's Case.

In a replevin by Bawell against Lucas; it was agreed by all the justices, viz. Mounson, Manwood, Harper and Dyer, that if a man seised of a manor, leased part of the demeans for years, or for life, that the reversion doth remain parcel of the manor, but such a reversion by the grant of the manor, doth not pass without attornment [222] of the lessee: and where a manor is granted by feoffment unto another, and afterwards the tenants attorn, the services pass by the livery and not by any grant; and although in the first grant the lessee doth not attorn, but a long time after, yet the reversion is not severed from the manor; for the attornment, as to that intent, shall have relation to the livery to make the reversion to pass from the time of the grant, but not to charge the lessee with waste; and Dyer said, that if a feoffment in fee be made of a manor, with an advowson appendant, and the tenants do not attorn, yet the feoffee shall have the advowson; for the advowson is appendant to the principal part of the manor, (scil.) the demeans, and cannot be appendant to the services: and Dyer saith, that if A. maketh a feoffment in fee of a manor, part of which is in lease for years, habendum to the feoffee and his heirs, to the use of the feoffee and his heirs upon condition that the feoffee shall pay to the feoffor within ten days, 1000l. and if he fail, then to the use of the feoffor for life, the remainder to the use of his son in tail, and the money is not paid, the lessee attorns after the ten days to the feoffee, the same is a good attornment to raise secondary uses, although that the first uses did not take effect; for the condition is not annexed to the estate of the land but unto the use onely: and the meaning was, that the feoffor should never have again the inheritance: a feoffment is upon condition, that the feoffee shall give the land in tail to a stranger, who refuseth the gift, there the feoffor may re-enter; but a feoffment upon condition to enfeoff a stranger, or to grant a rent-charge, if the stranger refuseth, there the feoffor shall not re-enter, for his intent was not, that the land should revert, &c.

CCLXXXII. Vavasor's Case.

The case was, that Nicholas Ellis seised of the manor of Woodhall, leased the same to William Vavasor and his wife, for the life of the wife, the remainder to the right heirs of the husband: the husband made a feoffment in fee to the use of himself and his wife for their lives, the remainder to his right heirs, the husband died, the wife held in, and committed waste in a park, parcel of the manor; it was moved, if the writ of waste shall suppose that the wife holdeth in, ex dimissione Nichol. Ellis, or ex dimissione viri: and the opinion of all the justices was, that the writ upon this matter ought to be general; viz. that she holds in, de hæreditate, J. S. hæredis, &c. without saying, ex dimissione hujus, vel illius, for she is not in by the lessor, nor by the feoffees, but by the Statute of Uses; and therefore the writ shall be, ex hæreditate, &c. And also the opinion of the justices was, that the wife in this case, is not remitted, but that she is in according to the form of the feoffment: Dyer, The formedon brought against manures, rehearsed in the writ, a will and divers conveyances, by reason of which, the writ was of exceeding length; and in such cases the writ is good; yet if the writ be general, it is sufficient. Note in this case, that the plaintiff assigned the waste in destroying of deer in the park: and Mead, Serjeant, said, that waste cannot be assigned in the deer, unless the defendant hath destroyed all the deer, and of that opinion was Dyer: Manwood, If the lessee of a pigeon-house destroy all the old pigeons but one or two couple, the same is waste; and if the keeper doth destroy all the deer, so as the ground is become not parkable, the same is waste, although he hath not destroyed [223] the whole: see 8 R. 2. Fitz. Wast. 97. If there be a sufficient store left in a park; pond, &c. it is well enough, &c.

CCLXXXIII. MUTTON'S CASE.

Jane Mutton brought a writ of entry, sur disseisin, against Anne Mutton who pleaded, that one John Mutton was seised, and levyed a fine to the use of himself, and such wife and wives as the said John should after marry, by what name or names they should be called, for term of their lives, and afterwards to the use of the same Jane, now demandant in tail, the remainder over to the right heirs of the said John Mutton, and afterwards the said John Mutton took to wife, the now tenant, upon which bar the demandant did demur in law. And it was argued by Jeofries, Serjeant, that here the wife taketh nothing by this limitation, because she was not capable thereof at the time of the limitation; but if the use had been limited especially to John Mutton, untill he took a wife, and then unto the use of him and his wife for their lives, the same had been a good use to the wife; but in our case, the use is limited to the wife in præsenti, and not upon a contingent; and because the wife at the time of the limitation was not capable, she shall never take after; and yet it may be said, that a joynt estate may be in esse, and yet to begin at several times: as 18 E. 4. 12. A feoffment is made to three, and livery is made to one of them; and first one of them agrees to the livery, and a year after, another agreeth, and afterwards the third; although they take nothing untill agreement, yet when they have agreed, the agreement shall have relation to the time of the livery; but in truth, the reason thereof is, because the freehold shall be adjudged in them all, untill they have disagreed. And if a disseisin be to the use of A. B. and C. and first A. agrees to it, and afterward B. and after C. although they took nothing untill agreement, yet when they have agreed, their agreement shall have relation to the time of the first disseisin; and if in such case the disseisor had made a lease before agreement, the party to whose use after agreeing, shall avoid such lease.

CCLXXXIV. STAMFORD'S CASE.

The case was, A. took a wife, and afterwards married Elizabeth Stamford, living his first wife, and by deed gave part of his goods to the said Elizabeth; and as to the residue of his goods, being but of small value, he made the said Elizabeth his executrix, and died; she refused the executorship, for which the Ordinary committed administration to B. Gawdy, Serjeant, asked the advice of the Court, against whom the action of debt should lie? for, if the creditor impleadeth the administrator, he hath not assets; if the executrix her self, she will plead that she hath renounced the executorship, and that administration is committed to B. And the opinion of Dyer, Justice, was, that the gift is void by the common law, and also by the statute of 13 Eliz. and then, if the gift be void any way, the creditor may have an action of debt against the said Elizabeth as executor of her own wrong: and see that such a gift is void by the common law, 43 E. 3. 2. And by Manwood, Justice, He who takes the goods of the dead, shall not be charged as executor of his own wrong, [224] unless he doth something as executor: as to pay debts, make acquittances, &c. See 41 E. 3. 31. 32 H. 6. 7. Dyer. If one takes the goods of the dead, and converteth them to his own use, he is chargeable as executor, and so it hath been adjudged in the time of this Queen, in the case of one Stokes, which was affirmed by Bendloes and Harper: see now Co. 2 Part. 53. Reade's case; where no lawfull executor, or administrator is, there, if a stranger takes the goods of the dead into his possession, the same is a good administration to charge him as executor of his own wrong.

CCLXXXV. Hill. 19 Eliz. In the Common Pleas.

The case was, a man made a feoffment in fee to the use of himself for life, and afterwards to the use of his eldest son in tail; and after, to the use of his right heirs, not having at the time of the feoffment any son; afterwards he suffered a common recovery, had issue a son, who died in the life of his father, having issue a son, and afterwards he himself died; it was holden by the justices in this case, that the son and heir of the son should not avoid this recovery by the statute of 32 H. 8. for there was not any remainder in him at the time of the recovery had, and the words of the said statute are; that such recovery shall be void against such persons to whom the reversion, or remainder shall then appertain, i.e. at the time of such recovery. And it was said by one of the Serjeants at Bar; that if lands be given to E. for life, the remainder to B. in tail, the remainder to C. in fee, B. dyeth, his wife young with child, with a son; a recovery is had against E. with the issue of C. and afterwards the son is born, he shall not be helped by this statute of 32 H. 8. for that remainder was not in esse, at the time of the recovery. But it was holden in the principal case, that the heir might avoid the said recovery by the common law; for the recompence cannot extend to such a remainder, which is not in esse.

CCLXXXVI. Sidenham and Worlington's Case.

In an action upon the case upon a promise, the plaintiff declared, that he at the request of the defendant, was surety and bail for J. S. who was arrested in the King's Bench, upon an action of 30l. and that afterwards, for the default of J. S. he was constrained to pay the 30l. after which, the defendant meeting with the plaintiff, promised him for the same consideration, that he would repay that 30l. which he did not pay, upon which the plaintiff brought the action; the defendant pleaded, non assumpit, upon which issue was joyned, which was found for the plaintiff. Walmsley, Serjeant, for the defendant, moved the Court, that this consideration will not maintain the action, because the consideration and promise did not concur and go together; for the consideration was long before executed, so as now it cannot be intended that the promise was for the same consideration, as if one giveth me a horse, and a month after, I promise him 10l. for the said horse, he shall never have debt for the 10l. nor assumpit upon that promise; for there is neither contract, nor consideration, because the same is executed: Anderson, This action will not lie; for it is but a bare agreement, & nudum pactum, because the contract was determined, and not in esse at the time of the promise; but he said, it is otherwise upon a consideration of marriage of one [225] of his cosins; for marriage is always a present consideration: Windham agreed with Anderson, and he put the case in 3 H. 7. If one selleth a horse unto another, and at another day he will warrant him to be sound of limb and member, it is a void warrant, for that such warranty ought to have been made or given at such time as the horse was sold: Periam, Justice, conceived, that the action did well lie; and he said, that this case is not like unto the cases which have been put of the other side: for there is a great difference betwixt contracts and this case; for in contracts upon sale, the consideration, and the promise, and the sale, ought to meet together, for a contract is derived from con and trahere, which is a drawing together, so as in contracts every thing which is requisite, ought to concur and meet together, viz. the consideration of the one side, and the sale or the promise on the other side; but to maintain an action upon an assumpit, the same is not requisit, for it is sufficient, if there be a moving cause or consideration precedent; for which cause or consideration the promise was made; and such is the common practice at this day: for in an action upon the case, upon a promise, the declaration is laid, that the defendant, for, and in consideration of 20l. to him paid, (postea scil.) that is to say, at a day after super se assumpit, and that is good; and yet there the consideration is laid to be executed; and he said, that the case in Dyer, 10 Eliz. 272. would prove the case: for there the case was, that the apprentize of one Hunt, was arrested when his master Hunt was in the country, and one Baker, one of the neighbours of Hunt, to keep the said apprentize out of prison, became his bail, and paid the debt; afterwards Hunt the master, returning out of the country, thanked Baker for his neighbourly kindness to his apprentize, and promised him, that he would repay him the sum which he had paid for his servant and apprentize: and afterwards upon that promise, Baker brought an action upon the case against Hunt, and it was adjudged in that case, that the action would not lie, because the consideration was precedent to the promise, because it was executed and determined long before. But in that case, it was holden by all the justices, that if Hunt had requested Baker to have been surety or bail, and afterwards Hunt had made the promise for the same consideration, the same had been good, for that the consideration did precede, and was at the instance and request of the defendant. Rhodes, Justice, agreed with Periam; and he said, that if one serve me for a year, and hath nothing for his service, and afterwards, at the end of the year, I promise him 20l. for his good and faithfull service ended, he may have and maintain an action upon the case upon the same promise, for it is made upon a good consideration; but if a servant hath wages given him, and his master, ex abundanti, doth promise him 10l. more after his service ended, he shall not maintain an action for that 10l. upon the said promise; for there is not any new cause or consideration preceding the promise; which difference was agreed by all the justices, and afterwards, upon good and long advice, and consideration had of the principal case, judgment was given for the plaintiff, and they much relied upon the case of Hunt, and Baker, 10 Eliz. Dyer, 272. See the case there.

S. for life, and made his will, by which he devised the said house, and all his lands called Jacks, then in the occupation of the said J. S. unto his wife for life, and that after the decease of his wife, the remainder thereof, and of all his other lands belonging to Jacks, should be to R. his second son, &c. And by Mead, The wife shall not have by implication the residue of Jacks; for she had an express estate in the house and 40 acres of lands, and having expressed his will concerning the same, it shall not be extended by implication; and he said, it had been adjudged between Glover and Tracy, that if lands be devised to one, and the heirs males of his body, and if he die without heirs of his body, that then the land shall remain over, that the donee hath but an estate in tail to the heirs males of his body: Anderson, In the time of Sir Anthony Brown, it was holden that if a man seised of two acres of lands, deviseth one of them to his wife for life, and that J. S. shall have the other acre after the death of his wife, that the wife hath not any estate in the latter acre. It was also moved, what thing shall pass to his second son by this devise? and by the Lord Anderson, The words, usually occupied with it, amount to the words, the lands let with it: but these 60 acres are not let with it, therefore they shall not pass: Windham contrary; Although they do not pass by the words, occupied with it, yet they shall pass by the name of Jacks, or belonging to Jacks; and afterwards Anderson, mutata opinine, agred with him.

VI. Stapleton and Truelocks Case.

William Stapleton, executor of John Scardenyll, brought an action of debt against John Truelock, administrator of the goods of William Truelock, who died intestate, upon a bill sealed. The defendant demanded oyer of the testament: by which it appeared, that the said Scardenyll had made the plaintiff, [3] and the said William Truelock his executors: and in the said will was this clause, I will, that my friend William Truelock, shall pay to my other executor all such debts as he oweth me, before he shall meddle with any thing of this my will, or take any advantage of this my will for the discharge of the same debts, for that I have made him one of my executors. And upon this matter, it was clearly resolved, that the said William Truelock could not administer, nor be executor before he had paid the debts. And the defendant said, that the said William Truelock in his life had paid unto his co-executors all such debts which in vita sua debuit to the said Scardenyll; and also, that the said William Truelock in his life time had administered the goods of Scardenyll, with his co-executors. And in this case, judgment was given for the plaintiff, and that for default of pleading: for the defendant ought to have shewed acquittances of the payment of the debts to his co-executors; and also ought to have shewed in certainty, what debts they were.

The King and Queen brought a writ of disceit against Due and Kirley; and declared, that one Colley was seised of certain lands in fee, and held the same of the King and Queen as of their mannor of Westbury; the which mannor is ancient demesne: and so seised, levies a fine thereof to the said Due, sur conusans de droit come ceo, &c. Due rendred the land to Colley for life, the remainder over to Kirley in fee: Colley died; Kirley entred as in his remainder. Kirley pleaded, that the land whereof, &c. is frank fee, &c. Upon which, they are at issue: which issue depending, and not tryed, Due died. It was moved in this case, that the writ might abate. But that was denyed by the Court. For this action is but trespass in its nature for to punish this disceit; and no land is to be recovered, but only the fine reversed.

IX. ELIOT AND NUTCOMBS CASE.

The case was, that the Bishop of Exeter leased certain lands in the county of Devon for years, rendring rent payable in Exeter aforesaid, with clause of re-entry; and the Bishop of Exeter had a palace in Exeter aforesaid: it was the opinion of the justices in this case, that the rent ought to be demanded at the said palace, and not elsewhere: and if that the lessee come to the common gate of the said palace, and there tender the rent, it is a good tender without more, be the gate shut or open, notwithstanding that the bishop be within the palace, and that neither he nor any of his servants be at the gate for to receive it: for the lessee is not tyed to open the gate of the palace, if it be shut; nor to enter into the palace, if it be open.

In an action upon the case, the plaintiff declared, that the defendant in consideration that the son of the plaintiff would marry the daughter of the defendant, assumed and promised to pay to him 400 marks in 7 years next ensuing, by such portions. And upon non assumpsit pleaded, it was found for the plaintiff. It was objected in arrest of judgment, that one of the said 7 years was not incurred at the time of the action brought, &c. and that appeared upon the declaration, so as the plaintiff had not cause of action for the whole mony promised. And for that cause, the writ was abated by the Court by award, although it was after verdict. See Br. Title, Action upon the Case, 108.

XIV. HOLT AND ROPERS CASE.

In a replevin by Holt against Roper, the case was: J. abbot of W. leased to T. M. Knight, a close of land in B. for 44 years, who thereof possessed, was attainted of misprision of treason, and so forfeited to the King, who seised the same: the abbot and his covent surrendred, 31 H. 8. the King leased the same to Roper for 21 years, and died: King Ed. 6th in the fourth year of his reign, leased the same to one Philips, to have and to hold, after the term to T. M. ended, for 21 years: Roper surrendred to Queen Mary, who leased the same again to Roper for 30 years. In this case, it was adjudged, that the lease made to Philips, was ut-[6]-terly void, for that the King was deceived in his grant; for the lease made to F. M. was long time before determined by extinguishment in the person of the King, who had it by forfeiture upon the attainder of T. M. and the statute of 1 E. 6. cap. 8. shall not help that lease (notwithstanding the non-recital, or mis-recital of leases made before:) for here is not matter of recital, but matter of estate and interest, which is not well limited for the commencement of it, i. the lease to Philips; for there is not any certainty of the commencement of it: for that lease cannot begin after the surrender of Roper, for the words of the limitation of the beginning of it, cannot serve to such construction.

And afterwards the said lady by her servants, felled all the other woods and underwoods growing in the same mannor, after the said felling made by the said Andrews: whereupon Andrews bringeth trespass. And the opinion of the Court was clear, that after the bargainee had once felled, that he should never after fell in the same place where the first felling was made, by force of the said grant, notwithstanding the rent yearly reserved, and notwithstanding the words of the grant, viz. to have and to hold, during the life of the said Dame Mary. S. and at the time of the taking, &c. was lord of the mannor of A. within which mannor, there was this custom time out of mind, &c. That the tenants of that mannor and other resiants and inhabitants within the said mannor, or the greater part of them at the court-baron of the said mannor, at the mannor afore-[8]-said holden, were used and accustomed to make laws, and impose pains as well upon the resiants and inhabitants within that mannor, and the tenants of the said mannor there being; as upon every occupier of any tenements within the said mannor, for good government there to be had and kept, and for the preservation of the corn and grass there growing: and that the said J. S. and all those whose estate, &c. distringere consueverunt pro omnibus pœnis sic forisfact. & per juratores Curiæ præd. ex assensu dictor. tenent. inhabitant. & residentium ibid. in forma prædict. assessis & impositis; tam super quibuscunq; tenent. maner. prædict. aut inhabitantibus aut residentibus infra maner. illud, quam super occupatoribus aliquor. tenementor. infra idem maner': and further said, that at a court-baron there holden, that coram sectatoribus ejusdem Curiæ, by the homage of the said court then charged to present, with the assent of other tenants and inhabitants of the said mannor, it was ordained and established, that no tenant of the mannor aforesaid, nor any of the resiants or inhabitants within the said mannor, nor any occupier of any tenements within the said mannor from thenceforth, should keep his cattel within the several fields of that mannor by by-herds, nor should put any of their oxen, called draught-oxen, there before the Feast of St. Peter, upon pain, quod quilibet tenens residens, &c. should forfeit 20s. And further said, that the plaintiff, at the time, &c. occupied and had such a tenement within the said mannor; and that at such a court afterwards holden, viz. such a day, it was presented, that the plaintiff custodivit boves suos, called draught-oxen, within the several fields by by-herds, contrary to the order aforesaid, by which, the penalty of 20s. aforesaid, was forfeited, notwithstanding the said pain de gratia Curiæ illius per quosd. A. & E. afferratores Curiæ illius ad hoc jurat. assess. & afferrat. fuit ad 6s. 8d. And further he said, that the place in which the taking, &c. is within the mannor aforesaid; and that A. B. steward of the said mannor extraxit in scriptis extra Rotulis Curiæ præd. the said pain of 6s. 8d. and delivered the same to the defendant, bailiff of the said mannor, to collect and receive; by force of which, he required the said 6s. 8d. of the plaintiff, and he refused to pay it; and so avoweth the taking, &c. And upon this conusans of the defendant, the plaintiff did demur in law: and judgment was given against the conusans, 1. Because he pleaded, that it was presented coram sectatoribus, and doth not shew their names. 2. The penalty appointed by the by-law, was 20s. and he sheweth, it was abridged to 6s. 8d. and so the penalty demanded, and for which the distress was taken, is not maintained by the by-law; and a pain certain ought not to be altered. 3. He sheweth, that it was presented, that the plaintiff had kept his draught-oxen: and he ought to have alledged the same in matter in fact, that he did keep, &c.

XXII. DEDICOTS CASE.

Dedicot seised of certain customary lands, surrendred the same into the hands of the lord, to the intent that the lord should grant the same de novo to the same Dedicot for life, and afterwards to Jane his wife, during the nonage of the son and heir of Dedicot; and afterwards to the said son and heir in tail, &c. Dedicot died before any new grant: afterwards, the lord granted the said land to the wife, during the nonage of the said heir, the remainder to the heir in tail, the heir at that time being but of the age of 5 years; so as the said wife by force of the said surrender and admittance, was to have the said lands for 16 years: the wife took another husband, and died; and it was the opinion of Brown and Dyer, Justices, that the husband should have the lands during the nonage of the enfant; for the wife had her said estate to her own use, and then her husband surviving her, should have it, and that without any admittance, for that he is not in of any new estate, but in the estate of his wife as assignee. And it was said by them, that if a copyholder be for years, and maketh his executors, and dieth, that the executors should have the term, and that without any admittance: Weston, contrary in that case, as to the executors.

XXIII. Tindall and Cobbs Case.

Waste was brought by Tindall, Knight, against Jeoffery Cobbe Esquire; and the plaintiff declared of a demise of the moyety of the mannor of Wolverton; and of the moyety of a wood called Wolverton-Wood. The defendant pleaded, that Robert Winckfield before the waste supposed, was seised of and in tertia parte alterius medietatis of the said mannor, and of and in tertia parte alterius medietatis of the aforesaid wood, and held the same insimul & pro indiviso with the plaintiff; and that the said Robert Winckfield, by his deed, sold to the defendant omnes & omnimodas arbores & subboscos suos crescent. in prædict. tertia parte alterius medietatis prædicti bosci ad libitum ipsius galfridi succidend. and so justified the cutting down of 300 oaks, in which the waste is assigned; with this, that he will aver, that the aforesaid 300 oaks were the third part only in numero & precio medietatis omnium arbor. & subboscorum at the said time when the waste is supposed to be done; and demanded judgment, if action: and divers exceptions were taken to the count: 1. He sheweth, that the demise of the moyety of the mannor was per nomen, &c. and doth not shew, that the demise was by writing; and if not, then he can-[10]-not plead it by a per nomen. 2. The waste is assigned in digging of clay in 100 acres of lands, parcel medietatis maner. de Wolverton, and hath not shewed in what town the land is: for he hath shewed before, the demise of the moyety of the mannor of Wolverton in Wolverton. 3. He shews the demise of the moyety of the mannor of Wolverton, and of other lands, and assigns the waste in cutting down oaks in quodam bosco vocat. Wolverton Wood, parcel præmissorum; and that cannot be: for this wood cannot be parcel of the mannor of Wolverton, and of the other lands also. And for these causes, the count by the whole Court was holden to be sufficient.

XXIV. Stamfords Case.

Hugh Stamford, seised in fee, had issue A. his eldest son, and B. his younger son: A. had issue George and Elizabeth by divers women; Hugh made a feoffment in fee to the use of himself for life, and afterwards to the use of George in tail, and afterwards to the use of A. in tail, and afterwards to the use of the right heirs of Hugh: Hugh dieth; A. dieth; George levieth a fine to the use of himself in tail, the remainder over to B. in fee, and dyeth without issue: it was holden by Bendloes, Carell, Kelloway, both the Bromleys, and Kingsmill, that Elizabeth is barred by this fine, by the statute of 4 H. 7. & 32 H. 8.

XXV. 7 ELIZ. IN THE COMMON PLEAS.

The case was this; grandfather, father, and son: lands are given to the grandfather for life, the remainder to the son in tail; the grandfather and father joyn in a feoffment with warranty; the feoffee makes a lease for years, and afterwards conveys the land to the grandfather for life, the remainder to the father in fee: the grandfather and father die; the son entreth, and puts out the lessee: Weston was of opinion, that the entry of the son was lawful; for it was the feoffment of the grandfather, and the confirmation of the father, and the warranty of the grandfather collateral to the father and his estate: but when the land is re-assured, as above is said, and afterwards the son entreth after the death of the grandfather and father, now he is remitted, and the warranty gone, by taking back the estate: and the son is now seised of as high an estate as his ancestor was at the time that he departed with the land, by which the warranty is determined. Dyer, contrary: Here had not been any discontinuance, if the warranty had not been; for the father was never seised by force of the entail; and I conceive, that against a warranty collateral, one cannot be remitted; for it binds the right, as a fine with proclamation, after the statute of 4 H. 7. And I con-[11]-ceive, that during the possession of the grandfather, the warranty is but suspended, and not determined: and although that by the death of the grandfather it be determined; yet having respect to the lessee, it is in being; for his estate is derived out of the estate which was warranted, and which descends with the warranty. Bendloes, One cannot make title by a collateral warranty only, &c.

8 ELIZ. IN THE COMMON PLEAS.

XXVI. SIMONDS CASE.

In a formedom, the tenant vouched Rose Simonds as daughter and heir of Henry Simonds, clerk; and because she was within age, he prayed that the parol might demur. Bendloes recited the case to be this; A fine was levied of the lands to Henry Simonds, upon condition, &c. who rendred back the land to the conusor by the same fine; and that the said Henry Simonds never had any possession, or seisin, but that which he had mean between the conusans, and the rendee; of which possession the wife should not be endowed: and therefore it is a good counter-plea to say, that the said Rose, nor any of her ancestors, &c. for that was not such a seisin upon which warranty might rise; and so if a feoffment in fee had been made to the said Henry Simonds to the use of another: and of that opinion, was Dyer, Justice; for Henry Simonds had not any possession by force of which he might be vouched. Welsh, contrary; For the fine imports in it self, that he hath a fee, and that he hath granted and rendred the same fee, and this fine amounts to a feoffment. Dyer said to Bendloes, The best way for you, is to plead the counter-plea generally; and if he estop you by the fine, to demur upon it. Afterwards, Bendloes moved another matter, viz. Henry Simonds was a priest, and therefore Rose is a bastard; and if so, then she cannot be vouched as heir: but I would not trust the bishop to certifie the bastardy, if I should plead it generally, and therefore I will plead the special matter, and so it shall be tryed by the country. Dyer and Welsh, So you may do, if you please; and yet if you plead general bastardy, it shall be tryed by the country: for Rose is not a party to the writ; and in such case, bastardy shall be tryed by the country.

XXVII. MICH. 8 ELIZ. IN THE COMMON PLEAS.

Note; it was said by Dyer and Brown, Justices, that if a man deviseth by his will to his son, a mannor in tail, and afterwards by the same will he deviseth a third part of the same lands to another of his sons, they by this are joynt-tenants: and if a man in one part of his will deviseth his lands to A. in fee, and afterwards by another clause in the same will, deviseth the same to another in fee, they are joynt-tenants.

XXVIII. DREW BARRENTINES CASE.

The case was; Drew Barrentine and Winifred his wife, were seised of the mannor of Barrentine, which is ancient demesne, and holden of the Lord Rich, as of his mannor of Hatfield, levy a fine thereof sur conusans de droit, &c. by which fine the conusee rendreth the said mannor to the said Drew and Winifred in special tail, the remainder to Winifred in tail, the remainder to the Countess of Huntington in tail, the remainder to the heirs of the body of Margaret late Countess of Salisbury, the remainder to the Queen in fee: it was moved by Bendloes, Serjeant, If the Lord Rich being lord of the mannor, might reverse this fine by a writ of disceit, and so recontinue his seignory: and he said, that he might; and thereby all the estates which passed by the fine, should be defeated, even the remainder which was limited to the Queen, for by it the fine shall be avoided to all intents. Welsh, Justice, Such a writ doth not lie; for by the remainder limited to the Queen by the fine, all mean signories are extinct, then, if it be so, disceit doth not lie. If the tenant in ancient demesne levieth a fine, and afterwards the lord paramount, who is lord of the mannor, doth release to the conusee, and afterwards the lord of the mannor brings a writ of disceit, he gains nothing by it: and if the tenant in ancient demesne levieth a fine of it, and dieth, and the heir confirmeth the estate of the conusee, and afterwards the lord by a writ of disceit reverseth the fine; yet the estate of the conusee shall stand. But all these cases differ from our case. For in all those cases, another act is done after the action given to the lord; but in our case, the whole matter begins in an instant, & quasi uno flatu, and then if the principal be reversed, the whole is avoided; for the whole estate is bound with the condition in law, and that condition shall extend as well to the Queen and her estate, as to another. And if lands is ancient demesne be assured to the King in fee upon condition, now during the possession of the King, the nature of the ancient demesne is gone; but if the condition be broken, so as he hath his land again, it is ancient demesne as it was before: and so the estate of the Queen is bounden by a condition in law.

XXIX. MICH. 8 ELIZ. IN THE DUTCHY CHAMBER.

Note; it was holden by Welsh in the Dutchy Chamber, that whereas King Edw. the 6th, under the seal of the dutchy, had demised firmam omnium tenentium at will manerii sui de S. that nothing but the rent passed, and not the land: for firma, signifies rent; as in a cessavit de feodo firmæ: but the Clerks of the Court said, that their course had always been, to make leases [13] in such manner. But Welsh continued in his opinion as aforesaid: and further he said, that this was not helped by the Statute of Non-recital, or Mis-recital, &c. for that here is not any certainty; for sometimes (firma) signifies land, sometimes rent.

XXX. MICH. 8 ELIZ. IN THE COMMON PLEAS.

This case was holden for law by the whole Court; two coparceners are, and one of them dieth, her heir of full age, she shall not pay a relief; for if she should pay any at all, she should pay but the moyety; and that she cannot do, for a relief cannot be apportioned, for coparceners are but one tenant to the lord.

XXXI. 8 ELIZ. IN THE COMMON PLEAS.

An action upon the case was brought, for stopping of a way; the plaintiff declared, that the Duke of Suffolk was seised of a house in D. and leased the same to the plaintiff for life; and that the said duke, and all those whose estate, &c. have used time out of mind, &c. to have a way over the lands of the defendant unto the park of D. to carry and recarry wood necessary for the same house, from the said park to the same house; and further declared, that the defendant obstupavit the way. It was moved by Carus, that upon this matter, no action upon the case lieth, but an assise, because that the freehold of the house is in the plaintiff; and also the freehold of the land over which, &c. is in the defendant; but if the plaintiff or defendant had but an estate for years, &c. then an action upon the case would lie, and not an assise: all which was granted by the Court. It was also holden, that this word obstupavit, was sufficient in it self; scil. without shewing the special matter how; as by setting up any gate, hedge or ditch, &c. for obstupavit implyes a nusans continued, and not a personal disturbance, as a forestaller, or in saying to the plaintiff upon the land, &c. that he should not go there, or use that way; for in such cases, an action upon the case lieth. But as to any local or real disturbance, obstupavit amounts to obstruxit: and although in the declaration is set down the day and the year of the obstruction, yet it shall not be intended, that it continued but the same day: for the words of the declaration are further, by which he was disturbed of his way, and yet is; and so the continuance of the disturbance is alledged: and of such opinion also was the whole Court. Leonard, Prothonotary, said to the Court, that he had declared of a prescription, habere viam tam pedestrem quam equestrem, pro omnibus & omnimodis cariagiis, and by that prescription he could not have a cart-way, for every prescription is stricti juris. Dyer, That is well observed, and I conceive that the law is so; and therefore it is good to prescribe, habere viam pro omnibus cariagiis, generally, without speaking of horse-way or cart-way, or other way, &c.

XXXVII. MICH. 14 ELIZ. IN THE COMMON PLEAS.

A man brought an action of trespass against another, for chasing of his ewes being great with lambs, so as by such driving of them, he lost his lambs. The defendant justified, because they were in his several damage-feasans; wherefore he took them, and drove them, to the pound: and it was holden by the whole Court, to be no plea: for, although that he might take; yet, he cannot drive them with peril, &c.

[16] XXXVIII. MICH. 14 ELIZ. IN THE COMMON PLEAS.

The case was; A. made a lease to B. for life, and further grants unto him, that it shall be lawful for him to take fewel upon the premisses; proviso, that he do not cut any great trees: it was holden by the Court, that if the lessee cutteth any great trees, that he shall be punished in waste: but in such case, the lessor shall not re-enter, because that proviso is not a condition, but only a declaration and exposition of the extent of the grant of the lessor in that behalf. And it was holden also by the Court, that lessee for life, or for years, by the common law, cannot take fewel but of bushes and small wood, and not of timber-trees. But if the lessor in his lease granteth fireboot expresly, if the lessee cannot have sufficient fewel, as above, &c. he may take great trees.

XXXIX. Mich. 14 Eliz. In the Kings Bench.

In trespass, upon an evidence given to the jury at the Bar, the case appeared to be thus; land was given to A. in tail, the remainder in fee to his sisters, being his heirs at the common law: A. made a deed in this manner; viz. I the said A. have given, granted, and confirmed, for a certain piece of mony, &c. without the words of bargained, sold: and the habendum was to the feoffee with warranty against A. and his heirs; and a letter of attorny was to make livery and seisin: and the deed was in this manner, To all Christian people, &c. And the deed was enrolled within one month after the making of it; and the deed was indented, although that the words of the deed, were in the form of a deed poll: and after 4 months after the delivery of the deed, the attorny made livery of seisin. A. died without issue, and the sisters entred, and the feoffee ousted them of the land; and thereupon they brought an action of trespass: and the opinion of the whole Court, was for the plaintiff; for here is not any discontinuance, for the conveyance is by bargain and sale, and not by feoffment, because the livery comes too late after the inrollment, and then the warranty shall not hurt them: and although that in the deed there be not any word of indenture, and also that the words are in the first person; yet in as much as the parchment is indented, and both the parties have put their seals to it, it is sufficient. Also, it was clearly agreed by the Court, that the words, give for mony, grant for mony, confirm for mony, agree for mony, covenant for mony, if the deed be duly inrolled, that the lands pass both by the Statute of Uses, and by the Statute of Inrollments, as well as upon the words of bargain and sale. And by Catline, Wray, and Whiddon, the party ought to take by way of bargain and sale, and he hath not election to take the land by way of livery: but when all is in one deed, and takes effect [17] equally together, in such case the grantee hath election; but here in this case, the bargain and sale (the deed being inrolled) doth prevent the livery, and taketh his full effect before. And by Wray and Catline, If he in the reversion upon a lease for years, grants his reversion to his lessee for years by words of dedi, concessi, feoffavi, and a letter of attorny is made to make livery and seisin, the donee cannot take by the livery, for that the lessee hath the reversion presently.

XL. Mich. 14 Eliz.

In an ejectione firmæ, the case upon evidence appeared to be thus; the Bishop of Rochester, anno 4 E. 6. leased to B. for years rendring rent; and afterwards, granted the reversion to C. for 99 years, rendring the ancient rent, to have from the day of the lease without impeachment of waste; which grant was confirmed by the dean and chapter: but B. did not attorn; and for default of attornment, it was holden by the whole Court, that the lease was void; for it is made by way of grant of a reversion, and to pass as a reversion. But by Catline, If the bishop had granted the reversion, and also demised the land for 99 years, it should pass as a lease to begin first after the former lease determined. And as to the attornment, it was given in evidence, that B. after the notice of the grant to C. spake with C. to have a new lease from him, because he had in his farm but 8 years to come, but they could not agree upon the price: and the justices were of opinion, that that was an attornment, because he had admitted the said C. to have power to make a new lease unto him. Also the said B. being in company with one R. seeing the said C. coming towards him, said to the said R. See my landlord; meaning the said C. Bromley, sollicitor, that is no attornment, being spoken to a stranger. Barham, contrary, because he was present. And it was held by the whole Court, to be a good attornment. But it was holden, that if the attornment was not before that the bishop was translated to Winchester, that the lease should be void: and although that the confirmation of the dean and chapter was before the attornment, so as no estate had vested in C. yet it is good enough; for the assent of the dean and chapter is sufficient, whether it be before or after; by Catline, Southcote, and Whiddon: Wray, contrary.

XLI. MICH. 14 ELIZ.

The King seised of a mannor to which an advowson is appendant, a stranger presents, and his clerk is in by 6 months; the King grants the mannor, with all advowsons appendant to it, to B. The incumbent dieth, the grantee may present; for the advowson was always appendant, and the inheritance [18] thereof passeth to the grantee, and is not made disappendant by the usurpation, as in the case of a common person, for the King cannot be put out of possession. But the patentee shall not have a quare imped. of the first disturbance, for that presentment doth not pass to him, being a thing in action, without mention of it in his grant. And if the patentee bringeth a quare impedit of the second avoydance, he shall make his title by the presentment of the King, not making mention of the usurpation; yet if the bishop presenteth for lapse in the case of a common person, he ought to make mention of it; for that is his title to the presentment, &c.

XLII. HUMFREY AND HUMFREY'S CASE.

Between Humfrey and Humfrey, the case was, that the defendant in debt after judgment aliened his land; and the plaintiff sued forth execution upon the new statute: and the Court of the Request awarded him to the Fleet, because that he sued forth execution. Whereupon the Justices of the Common Pleas awarded a habeas corpus, and discharged the plaintiff. It was said by Bendloes, Serjeant, that the Chancery after judgment could not enjoyn the party that he shall not sue forth execution; for if they do, the party shall have his remedy as above.

XLIII. MICH. 14 ELIZ. IN THE KINGS BENCH.

A man seised of copyhold lands, deviseth a certain parcel of them to his wife for life, the remainder to his brother and his heirs; and afterwards in the presence of 3 persons of the Court, said to them, I have made my will, and I have appointed all things in my will as I will have it. And afterwards he said, and here, I surrender all my copyhold lands into your hands accordingly. And it was moved, if all his copyhold lands should be to his wife, or by those which were specified in the will. And the opinion of the whole Court was, that the surrender is restrained by the will, so as no more passeth to the wife upon the whole matter, but that which is mentioned in the will; and the general words shall not enlarge the matter.

XLIV. HILL. 14 ELIZ. IN THE COMMON PLEAS.

Lands were devised to the Mayor, Chamberlain, and Governors of the Hospital of St. Bartholomew in London, whereas in truth, they are incorporated by another name, yet the devise is good, by Weston and Dyer; which Manwood also granted, because it shall be taken according to the intent of the devisor: and it was said by Weston, if lands be devised to A. eldest son of B. [19] although that his name be W. yet the devise to him is good, because there is sufficient certainty, &c.

XLV. PASCH. 14 ELIZ. IN THE COMMON PLEAS.

The case was; A. seised of lands, deviseth the same to his wife for life, the remainder to his three younger sons, and to the heirs of their bodies begotten, equally to be divided amongst them by even portions; and if one of them die, then the other two which survive, shall be next heirs. The devisor dieth, one of the sons dieth; and, by Dyer and Weston, Justices, the 3 brothers were tenants in common in remainder. But contrary it is, where such a devise is made between them, to be divided by my executors, &c. there they are joynt-tenants, until the division is made: but here, although the words are, equally to be divided, the same is not intended of a division in fact and possession, but of the interest and title; for if a man bringeth a præcipe quod reddat, de una parte manerii de D. in 7 parts to be divided, it is not intended, divided in possession, but divided in interest and title. And it was said by the said justices, that although one of the brothers dieth, the two surviving brothers have his part by purchase, and not by descent, and they are joynt-tenants of it. And this was the case of one Webster and Katherine his wife, the late wife of John Bradbury.

XLVI. Pasch. 14 Eliz. In the Common Pleas.

The case was; Lessee for years of the pawnage of the park of H. grants all his goods and chattels, moveables and immoveables within the said park: it was holden by Weston and Dyer, Justices, that the lease of the pawnage passeth by these words. And it was said by Dyer, if a man hath a lease for years of a house, and grants all his goods and chattels being in the same house, that as well the lease of the house as the goods within it, pass by such a grant.

XLVII. Pasch. 14 Eliz. In the Common Pleas.

Note: it was said by Weston, and Bendloes, that a retraxit cannot be before a declaration; which Leonard and Filmer, Prothonotaries, granted: and Dyer said, that it being before a declaration, it is but a nonsuit; and Wheatley and Filmer affirmed the same: and therefore, it was adjudged, that such a retraxit in the Court of Hustings before the sheriff, is no plea in bar.

[20] XLVIII. Pasch. 14 Eliz. In the Common Pleas.

In debt brought against Christmas, who shewed forth a protection, quia profecturus with the Lord Hunsdon to Barwick: Dyer doubted, if the protection did lie: but said, it should be rather moraturus, then profecturus: for a protection quia profecturus to Calleis, was never good, but super victitation. Calicii. Harper, contrary; for Barwick is out of the realm: and he said, that he was once of counsel, where a bill was exhibited in Parliament, to make Hexham part of England: and he said, that in the time of the Queen that now is, one Carre struck a man, who thereof died at Barwick; and in an appeal thereof, brought here by the wife, Carre was dismissed.

Hill. 14 Eliz. Rott. 938. In the Common Pleas.

XLIX. Cranmers Case.

Thomas Cranmer, Archbishop of Canterbury, having a reversion in fee of certain lands upon a lease for years, granted the reversion to the use of the grantor himself for his life; and after his decease, to the use of the executors and assignees of the grantor for 20 years next after the death of the grantor; and after to the use of Thomas his son in tail, and afterwards to the use of the grantor in fee: the grantor is attainted of treason, and the Queen gave the said term of 20 years to the wife of the grantor, who took to husband Ed. White-Church, who let the land to A. Thomas the son entred, and leased the same land to one Kirk, who upon an ouster, brought ejectione firmæ. This case was argued by the justices; Manwood, the puisne justice, conceived, that the plaintiff ought to be barred, and that the lessee of White-Church, who claimed by the grant of the Queen the said term of 20 years, ought to hold the land against the son of the grantor; for the remainder limited to the son, is not yet begun in possession. And he insisted much in his argument upon this point, that uses limited upon any conveyance, are governed and directed according to the rules of the common law: as if a feoffment in fee be made unto the use of another for life, the remainder to the use of the lessee for life, and the heirs of his body, &c. now the party hath an estate tail executed in possession, and that is according to the rule of the common law. And he cited the case of 40 E. 3. 20. Where land was given by fine to A. B. and C. and to the heirs of the body of C. and for default of such issue, the remainder to the right heirs of A. C. died without issue; B. dyed, and afterwards A. died; his heir brought a scire facias out of the said fine: and by judgment of the Court, the scire facias did not lie, for the fee was vested in the father of the demandant, although that ex vi verbi, the remainder was limited not to the father, but to his heirs; but where uses are limited in other [21] manner than according to the rules of the common law, there they shall not be ruled and governed by the rules of the common law: as if lands be given to the use of one for life, and to the use of such lessees to whom the tenant for life shall demise the same for years or life, rendring rent, the remainder over to a stranger in tail, and afterwards the tenant for life makes a lease for years, or life, and dieth; such a lease shall bind him in the remainder, although that the lessor had not but for life, and be now dead: for the use limited here to the lessees, which would be, was limited contrary to the rules of the common law. For by the common law, such leases made by tenant for life, are determined by his death: and in this case, this lease for 20 years, after the death of the grantor, was limited according to the rules of the common law, and therefore it shall take effect accordingly, as if it had passed in possession, and not in use, as if the conveyance had been of the land it self, and that land had been granted to the grantor for 20 years after his death, that interest had been vested in him to sell, forfeit, or otherwise to dispose at his pleasure, and shall not accrue to the executors as a purchase. 19 E. 2. Fitz. Covenant 25. Land was leased to one for life, and after his decease, to his executors and assigns for 10 years; the lessee assigned the term; and, by Herle, it is a good assignment; for it is in the election of the lessee to devise that interest, or to assign it in his life-time. And see 39 E. 3. 25. A lease was made to one for life, and a year over. 17 E. 3. 29. Lessee for life, so as after his death, the land remain to his executors for 8 years; lessee for life died; he who had the freehold of the land was impleaded, who rendred the land, and the executors of the lessee for life prayed to be received; scil. (where as executors do hold the term;) which proves, that they had the term as executors to the use of the testator, and so assets, therefore the same was before in the lessee for life. But by Dyer, in his argument, that case doth not prove it, and certainly it is not assets; for although the executor have the same term by purchase, yet they have it as executors, for that is a good name of purchase, which Harper concessit: and Manwood argued further, and he cited 19 E. 3. Fitz. Covenant, 24. Land was let for life, and if the lessee died within 12 years, that his executors should hold the same until the end of the 12 years; the lessee for life died, and the executors entred, and the executors of the lessee for life brought actions of covenant, which proved, that the executors had the term as a chatel vested in the testator, and not in their own rights as purchasors, by the name of executors. See 22 Ass. 37. Land demised to A. ad totam vitam suam; et ulterius concessit, that if the lessee objerit infra 20 annos proxime sequent, the said lessee potuit legare & dare prædict. tenementa alicui personæ usq; ad terminum prædict. 20 annorum, &c. And Dyer cited the case, 16 E. 3. Quid juris clamat, 22. Land was leased to one for [22] life, and if the lessee died within the term of 20 years, that his executors or assigns should have it until the end of the said 20 years, and a quid juris clamat was brought against the lessee for life without any mention of any other estate. To which the defendant pleaded the special matter, and demanded judgment upon that fine, if he should be driven to attorn, where he is supposed tenant for life only; and it is there said, that that special matter is but a protestation to save the term to his executors. And upon such a fine, such tenant hath been driven to attorn: and by Dyer, if the lessee doth not make such protestation, yet his special interest is not impaired by it; yet it is but reason that it be entred for the more manifestation of it. 32 E. 3. Quid juris clamat, 5. A lease to W. for life, and 20 years over, he may grant the same term or any part of it: and he cited the case between Parker and Gravenor, 3 & 4 Mar.

Dyer 150. Where a lease for life was made, and by the indenture of lease provisum fuit, that if the lessee died within the term of 60 years, that then his executors and assigns should have and enjoy the said lands pro termino totidem annorum, which did amount to the number of 60 years, to be accompted from the date of the indenture. And it was the opinion of the Court, that that was not any lease: but they all agreed, that a lease for years in remainder might be upon a lease for life in the same person. See 40 E. 3. A lease was made for life, and half a year after; the lessee died, and waste is brought against the executors, supposing that the testator held for years; and the writ was holden good: and there it is said by Kirton, that the executors could not have that term, unless it were in the testator; and there the term is not limited to any person. And see 11 H. 4. 187. Annuity granted to one for life, and 20 years after. And 50 E. Ass. 1. A lease for life, and 3 years over to his executors. And then here in our case, this use being limited in order, according to the rules of the common law, shall vest in the grantor to give or forfeit, and then by the attainder it was forfeited to Queen Mary: and if so, then the plaintiff shall be barred. Harper, Justice, to the contrary; And that the interest in the remainder for years limited to the executors and assigns of the grantor is in abeyance, and not in the grantor, and then it cannot be forfeited: but if this use had been limited to the grantor himself, then all had been in him to give, &c. But here in our case, the remainder for years is limited and appointed to the executors, &c. Also, uses shall not be ruled in such manner as lands; but the law shall rule the possession obtained by use in another manner, than the possession obtained by the order of the common law: as in the case of Amy Townsend, Plow. Com. 111, 112. Where the husband seised in the right of his wife, made a feoffment in fee to the use of himself and his wife for life, with divers remainders over; now is not the wife remitted, as she should be by conveyance at common law: as if the husband discontinueth the land in the right [23] of his wife, and the discontinuee giveth the lands to the husband and wife, and to a third person, she is remitted to the whole, and the third person hath not any thing. Dyer, to the same intent; And here we ought to intend and consider, that it was the purpose of Cranmer, to advance his executors with this term unto their own use and benefit, and not to leave the same in himself. And I do conceive, that the use is in abeyance until the executors are made, or an assignee appointed; for he may make an assignee who shall have the term: for assignee may be made two ways, 1 By grant of an estate which is in the grantor before; 2 A person nominated and appointed by another to take any thing, &c. And it shall be also intended, that Cranmer was purposed to make other provision to leave to his executors assets to perform his will; and not that that term should be applyed to that purpose, for then he would have shewed it in the conveyance by words; scil. as to pay his legacies, and perform his last will: and the cases put by my brother Manwood, do not go to the point: for I agree, where lands are given to one for life, the remainder for years, and doth not say to whom, it cannot be intended to any other but to the lessee for life; or otherwise it shall be void. And also where land is given to one for life, and for two years after to his executors or assigns, or heirs, all is in the lessee, for all is as one gift: but where it is given to one for life, and after his death, the remainder to his executors, I do not see any reason that that remainder should be any assets in the hands of the executors; or that if the lessee dieth intestate, that his administrator should have it; and therefore the executors shall have the same as a purchase: but Cranmer might have given the same, or appointed one in the mean time to receive it, and in the mean time it shall be in abeyance. Also if lands be leased to B. for life, the remainder for years to his heirs, the same remainder for years is in abeyance until the death of the lessee, and then it shall vest in the heir as a purchasor, and as a chattel, and shall go to the executor of the heir, &c. and the tenant for life cannot meddle with it, for it is not in him: also, uses shall not be raised as lands; i.e. at the common law, but shall be raised by the statute, and as uses were raised in the Chancery before the statute. And therefore if this conveyance had been before the statute, he could not have compelled the feoffees to dispose of that interest at his pleasure, &c. And then Cranmer the son shall have the land by force of the entail limited unto him; for the estate for years is gone, because no assignment of it is made, nor any executors who can take it, and the estate for life is determined by the death of Cranmer; and the feoffee to an use cannot have it, for there is not any consideration whereof he should have any use; for by the limitation, nothing was left in the feoffee: and so I conceive, that the plaintiff shall recover. See the case, 14 Eliz. in Dyer.

[24] L. MICH. 15 ELIZ. IN THE COMMON PLEAS.

TOTTENHAM AND BEDINGFIELDS CASE.

In an accompt by Tottenham against Bedingfield, who pleaded, that he never was his bailiff to render accompt, the case was, that the plaintiff was possessed of a parsonage for term of years, and the defendant not having any interest, nor claiming any title in them, took the tythes being set forth, and severed from the 9 parts, and carried them away, and sold them. Upon which, the plaintiff brought an action of accompt: and by Manwood, Justice, The action doth not lie, for here is not any privity; for wrongs are always done without privity: and yet I do agree, that if one doth receive my rents, I may implead him in a writ of accompt, and then by the bringing of my action there is privity: and although he hath received my rent, yet he hath not done any wrong to me; for that it is not my mony until it be paid unto me, or unto another for my use, and by my commandment: and therefore notwithstanding such his receipt, I may resort to the tenant of the land, who ought to pay unto me the said rent, and compel him to pay it to me again; and so in such case, where no wrong is done unto me, I may make a privity by my consent to have a writ of accompt: but if one disseiseth me of my land, and taketh the profits thereof, upon that no action of accompt lieth; for it is meerly a wrong. And in the principal case, so soon as the tythes were severed by the parishioners, there they were presently in the plaintiff, and therefore the defendant by the taking of them, was a wrong doer, and no action of accompt for the same lieth against him, And upon the like reason was the case of Monox of London lately adjudged; which was, that one devised land to another, and died; and the devisee entred, and held the land devised for the space of 20 years; and afterwards for a certain cause, the devise was adjudged void, and for that he to whom the land descended, brought an action of accompt against the devisee: and it was adjudged, that the action did not lie. Harper, contrary; for here the plaintiff may charge the defendant as his proctor, and it shall be no plea for the defendant to say, that he was not his proctor, no more than in an accompt against one who holdeth as gardian in socage, it is no plea for him to say, that he is not prochein amy to the plaintiff. Dyer, The action doth not lie; if an accompt be brought against one as receiver, he ought to be charged with the receipt of the mony: and an accompt doth not lie, where the party pretends to be owner, as against an abater or disseisor; but if one claimeth as bailiff, he shall be charged, and so it is of gardian in socage. And it was agreed, that if a disseisor assign another to receive the rents, that the disseisee cannot have an accompt against such a receivor.

[25] LI. 15 ELIZ. IN THE COURT OF WARDS.

Note: that this case was ruled in the Court of Wards; that where tenant of the King, of lands holden by knight's service, in chief, made a feoffment in fee of the same lands to the use of himself for life, and afterwards to the use of his younger son in tail, the remainder to the right heirs of the feoffor, and died, his eldest son within age, that the Queen should have the wardship of his body, and of the third part of the land; and when the eldest son comes of full age, that the younger son should sue livery, and pay primer seisin according to the rate and value of the whole land, viz. of the third part as in possession, and of the two parts as a reversioner: for the remainder to the right heirs of the feoffee, is in truth a reversion; for the fee simple was never out of him, because there is not any consideration as to that, nor any use expressed And because livery shall not be sued by parcels, the younger son shall not be suffered to sue livery of the third part presently, and respite the residue as to the two parts in reversion, until the reversion fall; but he shall sue livery presently as well of the two parts in reversion, as of the third part in possession: and if the eldest son had been of full age at the time of the death of his father, the younger son should pay primer seisin as to the third part, the whole value of it for one year as in possession; and as to the two parts, the moiety of the value of a year, as of a reversion.

15 ELIZ. IN THE COURT OF WARDS.

LII. OLIVER BREERS CASE.

Oliver Breer, who was tenant in chief by knights-service, made a feoffment in fee to the use of himself for life, and afterwards to the use of A. his eldest son and heir for life, and after to the use of the first begotten son of the said A. in tail; and afterwards to the use of the second son of the said A. &c. and for default of such issue, to the use of the right heirs of the feoffor; Oliver died, the said A. his son being of full age; it was holden by the council of the Court of Wards, that he should pay for his first primer seisin, a third part as in possession; and two parts as a reversion. See the case before.

LIII. MICH. 15 ELIZ. IN THE KINGS BENCH.

Note: this case was moved to the justices in the Court of the Kings Bench: a man had issue two daughters by divers women; and being seised of lands in fee, he made his will, and by the same devised, that his wife should have the moyety of his [26] lands for years, and that his eldest daughter at the day of her marriage, should enter into the other moyety; his eldest daughter married and died without issue: and the question was, whether her uncle should have that moyety or the fourth part of the whole land. Catline conceived, and said, that when the devise which was made to the eldest daughter, that she might enter after certain years, is not the inheritance in her presently, and the other words void? So he said here, that it is not a purchase in the eldest daughter, but both the daughters should enter in common as one heir to their father, until the marriage; and then the inheritance which was once settled in them, should not be removed. Southcote, Justice, said, There are no words of limitation of any estate that the daughter should have after the marriage, and therefore the devise was void; and if he had limited, that the daughter after marriage should have it for life, the fee-simple is vested in her before, and then she cannot have it for life. And he said, that if a lease be made to the eldest daughter for years by the father, and afterwards the land descends to her and her sister, as unto one moyety of the land, the lease is determined, but not as to the other moyety. Whiddon, Justice, Where a devise is for the benefit of a stranger, there the heir shall take by the devise, and not by descent. As if a lease be made for years, the remainder to the heir, there the heir shall take the land by the devise. Catline, She hath it by descent, and not by the devise. But if he deviseth the land to the heir in tail, with this, that he shall pay a certain sum of mony unto another, there the heir shall take by the devise, for the benefit which may accrue to the stranger, and not by descent, for otherwise the will should not be performed: but where the estate of the heir is altered by the will, nor any benefit doth accrue unto another after that the lands come to the hands of the heir; in that case he shall have the land by descent: and so here in this case for as much as the devise is, that the daughter shall enter, they both being but one heir to their father, shall have the land by descent; and the words of the will, that he shall enter into the moiety, shall be void; as, if the devise had been to the heir for life, there the same is void, because the fee-simple which descendeth to her, doth drown the particular estate for life. And therefore in the principal case here, the uncle shall have but the moyety of the moyety which is so devised, and the other sister shall have the other moyety of the land; and as to that moyety which is devised to the wife for years, the same shall enure according to the common law, that the uncle shall have the moyety of that; and the other sister the other moyety.

[27] LIV. MICH. 15 ELIZ. IN THE COMMON PLEAS.

This case was moved to the Court by Lovelace, Serjeant; A man covenants with another to make and execute an estate of such lands as should descend to him from his father and grandfather by a certain day, the same lands to be of the clear yearly value of 40 marks: and the question which he moved to the justices, was, that if the party had more lands which came to him from his grandfather and father, than did amount to the yearly value of 40 marks, if he was to make assurance of all the lands, or of so much thereof only as amounted to the value of 40 marks? And Manwood, Justice, conceived, that he should make assurance of lands only which were of the value of 40 marks per annum: for the words (such which) do not go so largely as if he had said, all my lands which shall descend, or to me be descended; for then the yearly value were but a demonstration, and all his lands ought to be assured. But here the intent of the indenture cannot be taken otherwise, than to have but an assurance of so much land; as if he had said, of such lands and tenements as were my grandfathers, and fathers, amounting to 40 marks by the year: for there by those words, he shall have but 40 marks by the year. Lovelace, It hath been taken, that where the Queen made a lease of all her lands in such a town, amounting to the yearly value of 40l. that that valuation is not a demonstration, and shall not abridge the grant precedent, to have all in the town which should be of the value of 40l. but her grant shall be taken and construed according to the words precedent. Manwood, The common case of assurance upon a settlement of marriage is, that he shall stand seised of so much of his land as shall be of the clear yearly value of 40 marks; if the marriage take effect, the question hath been, if they to whom the assurance is made, may enter into any part of the land at their election, and take that which is the best land, to the value of 40 marks per annum, and hold the same in severalty, or if they shall be only tenants in common with the other? And also it hath been a question, whether they may choose one acre in one place, and another acre in another place, and so through the whole land where they please, because the grant shall be taken strong against him that granteth: but I conceive, that it should be a hard case to make such election of acres. But it was said by some serjeant at the Bar, that if a man granteth to another to take 20 trees in his lands, that the grantee may cut down one tree in one place, and another in another place: Manwood agreed that case: but of the other case, the Court doubted of it. The principal case was adjourned.

LV. VERNON AND VERNONS CASE.

Note; that in the case of dower between Vernon and Vernon, and the argument of it, the plaintiff would have been nonsuit. Dyer, Justice, said, it should be an ill president, if a nonsuit should be after demurrer: and therefore he said, that for his part he would not agree, that any nonsuit should be upon it; but he said, he would be advised, and take better consideration of it, if the nonsuit should be awarded, or not. And afterwards at another day, Manwood and Dyer took a difference, where the nonsuit is the same term, and where in another term; and said, it is like unto the case, where a man would wage his law, and is present ready to do it, that there the plaintiff cannot be nonsuit, because it is in the same term, but he shall be barred: but in another term afterwards he might be nonsuit, if the defendant take day over to wage his law until another term; and so they said it should be in this case.

LVI. SIR PETER PHILPOTS CASE.

This case was moved by Meade, Serjeant to the Justices of the Court of Common Pleas, viz. that Sir Peter Philpot Knight, seised in fee of divers mannors and lands, suffered a recovery, and made a feoffment thereof unto divers persons, to the use of himself for life, the remainder to his right heirs: and after the Statute of 32 H. 8. of Wills, he devised all his said mannors and land to his wife for life; and it was expressed in his will, that he could not devise all his lands, by reason of the statute of 32 H. 8. that his will was, that his wife should have so much which might be devised by the laws of the land: and there was another clause in the said will, that his feoffees should stand seised of the same mannors and lands after the death of his wife, to the use of one Hurlock and others for years, for the payment of his debts, and for the raising of portions for the preferment of his daughters in marriage: and further by his said will he willed, that if the law would not bear it, that Hurlock and the others should have the interest, then he willed that his son should have all his mannors and lands, and should pay his debts, and should give certain sums of monies for the marriage portions of his daughters; and the question which was moved to the Court, was, whether the first part of his will, that is to say, that Hurlock and the others should have his lands, &c. were void, or not, by the later words of his will? Dyer, Justice, said, that the last words of the will did well expound the meaning of [29] the first words, and that the will should be performed as it might be: and afterwards Harper said, that upon this matter, Hurlock and the others had had a decree in the Court of Wards, to have the whole lands during the years, and not two parts of the lands only. Dyer, Justice, said, that the will of Sir Tho. Umpton, which was made mean between the statutes of 32 H. 8. and 34 H. 8. and which is excepted by the same statute, that it should not be construed in other form than according to the first statute was, of all his lands. And upon a demurrer argued, it was adjudged, that the will was good of two parts, although that by the will it was not divided: for where a man hath a warrant to do a thing, and he doth it, and more, so as he exceeds his warrant, yet it is good for that part for which it is warranted, and void for the rest: as if a man makes a warrant of attorny to make livery and seisin of the mannor of Dale, and he makes livery of the mannors of Dale and Sale; it is good for the mannor of Dale, and void for the mannor of Sale. The case was, in a writ of partition: and afterwards the record was removed by a writ of error, supposing that this Court had erred; and the judgment was affirmed by three of the Justices of the Kings Bench. But because there was a discontinuance in the record, which was erronious, for that the first judgment was reversed, but not for any other cause. And such was the meaning and intent of the statute of 32 H. 8. before the making of the Statute of 34 H. 8. of Explanation of Wills. And therefore here in the principal case, it was holden, that the will was good for two parts, both to the wife, and also to Hurlock and the others. And it was holden, that by the intent of the will, that the son was to pay such sums of monies a Hurlock was to have paid, so as the will was not for the advantage of the heir, but to be construed according to the meaning of Philpot, that if Hurlock could not have the lands, &c. that then the son should have them, but with such charge as aforesaid: and it was no intent to subvert the first part of the will, if the same might stand with the law. And so it was adjudged.

LVII. MICH. 15 ELIZ. IN THE COMMON PLEAS.

The case was this; A man makes a lease for 30 years; and bargains and sells the woods in and upon the premisses to the lessee, and that he might carry them off the lands during the time of 30 years: the lessee cut down all the woods; and afterwards other wood grew up from the stocks, and the lessee cut them also within the term; and the lessor brought an action of waste for cutting of the new wood. And it was moved by Meade, Serjeant, if the action of waste would lie, or not? Harper, Justice, Is the bargain, de bosco & subbosco, growing in and upon the premisses? Meade, No; but all his woods in and upon the premisses. Harper, The grant is in the present tense in præsenti; so as he can-[30]-not have that which shall grow there, after: and if he would grant all his woods which should grow in time to come, the grant should not be good, because it is not of a thing in esse. And if a man will grant all his wood growing upon Black-Acre, and there be then no wood, he cannot have any thing, although that afterwards, woods grow there; and if his meaning had been, that he should have the wood which should there after grow, he would have expressed the same in another form. Mounson, If a man grants all his hay growing upon his land; shall he have that which is growing there, after? No truly; and if he grant all the wooll which is growing upon his sheep, shall he have more than that which groweth this year? Meade, No truly: but if he had granted all the wooll growing upon the sheep for 20 years, then the same is like to our case; for he hath granted, that he may carry the wooll during the 30 years. Harper, The same is but a liberty to sell the trees which were growing at the time of the sale, and to carry them when he pleaseth, and not to give other trees or wood, which should there after grow.

LVIII. Mich. 15 Eliz. In the Common Pleas.

Lovelace, Serjeant, moved this case to the Court, that an assise was brought of the office of registership in the county of Devon: and he shewed, how that the Bishop of Exeter granted the office, and shewed the name of the bishop: and that after William Alley bishop there, granted the same office after the death of the first grantee to the plaintiff: and further he shewed, that the bishop might grant the office ad idoneam personam: and because he doth not say in his plaint, that the person to whom it was granted, is idonea persona, I conceive, that the plaint is not good; for if there be no such person which can exercise the office, he shall not have it: for that is a condition which is annexed to the office, that he be a fit person who shall take it: and the prothonotaries of this place ought to have skill in that which appertaineth to their office; for if such an office should be given to a courtier who hath not skill in that which appertaineth to the office, nor knowledge how to execute, he shall not have it. Also he said, that he hath not shewed, that the first bishop is dead, or that he hath resigned; or whether that he be deprived; and therefore it shall be intended, that he continueth, unless the contrary be shewed: and then the grant made by Alley to the plaintiff, cannot be good. And for these causes, and for others, he prayed to know the opinion of the Court. Dyer, Justice, The matter is not before us; and wherefore should we give our opinions to serve the fancy of every person, and to resolve the doubts of every Court? But if the matter laid come before by adjournment for difficulty, because the justices of assise are of divers opinions, or that they doubted of any thing upon such difficulty and adjournment, we use to shew our opinions, and to take some pains to search our books [31] to resolve the doubts; but when we have not any thing before us; but are moved for the pleasure of the parties, what resolutions shall we make by speaking at random? Manwood, As to the first exception, I, nor my brother Jeffery, do not doubt of it, but that the plaint was good, notwithstanding that it is not shewed, that he was idonea persona, for the law shall intend him so to be, until the contrary be shewed. And so it is of a grant of an annuity, as long as he se bene gesserit, the law shall intend that he carrieth himself well, until the contrary be shewed. But as to the other point, that he doth not shew the death of the first bishop, my brother Jeffery doubted of it, but I make no doubt of it, for that is but a recital, and the plaintiff makes his title but from Bishop Alley, and therefore that is not material, nor parcel of his plaint, whether the predecessor of Alley be alive, or not; for he doth not derive any title from him, but from Alley. Dyer, Can a bishop grant an office in reversion, without title of prescription, that they have used so to do time out of mind? And here no prescription is laid, that the bishop might so do. And then, as I conceive, the reversion of the office cannot be granted, for there is not any reversion of it: and it is not like unto an advowson, which may be granted, that the grantee may present when it shall be next void. And as I conceive, no reversion of any office can be granted, if not by the King who hath a special prerogative; for he reciting, how that such an one hath such an office for life, he may grant that such a person shall have the same office after the death of the first grantee. And so the Queen may grant the reversion of such an office; as if she recite, that such an one is keeper of such a park, there she may grant the keepership of it after the death of another: but if a common person will grant the stewardship of his courts after the death of such a person as is now steward, or the reversion of it, the same is not good: for of offices, there is not any fee, or reversion, but a nomination which the party hath to name what person he pleaseth when the same shall become void. Manwood, It is the order in the Arches, and in the Prerogative Court, and of all the Courts of Pauls, to grant the offices in reversion, as in the case of Doctor Drury and others, who have the reversion of every office which doth belong to the Spiritual Courts. Dyer, I do not care, nor regard what they do, but what they ought to do; and I do not respect the person of any one in relating the law; but it may be, that by words of covenant, such a covenant may be good: and of late time here a case hath been adjudged, that where one prescribed, that such an one might grant an office, cuicunq; personæ idoneæ voluerit, and the grant was made to two, and because the prescription did not warrant this manner of grant, it was adjudged void; for when the prescription is to grant alicui personæ, and not quibuscunq; personis, by that he cannot grant it but to one person, and not unto divers, because the prescription doth not extend so far. Manwood, I conceive there is a difference betwixt such per-[32]-sons who have offices for life, as the Admiral of England, the Lord Treasurer, the Justices of the two Benches, which have offices incident to their Courts, they cannot grant any of those offices in reversion; but a bishop hath a fee, and therefore the cases are not alike. Dyer, He hath not prescribed in the person of the bishop here; but he hath said, that the custom is, that the bishop may grant the said office, whereas in truth, if there were a prescription, he ought to prescribe, that the bishop for the time being might grant the said office in possession or in reversion: and so as I conceive here, no office shall be granted in reversion, unless by prescription; which ought to be alledged. And in the time of this Queen, an office of this Court was granted to Fry and his son by the King; and the patent was shewed here in Court, and rejected: and it was said, there was no place in Court for two to sit there, and the office might be exercised as well by one, as by two; and therefore the patent was disallowed. And although that offices are granted to two, as now in the Kings Bench of late time, there is not any president to warrant the same; and therefore, as I conceive, such a grant is not good, nor warranted by the law; for I do not regard in this case, against what persons I speak. Mounson, In the Chancery, a patent was granted to Bagot and Swirenden, of an office in the Chancery by King Henry the 6th, and in 9 E. 4. it is disputed, whether the grant were good, or not, &c.

LIX. Mich. Eliz. In the Kings Bench.

The case was; A man mortgageth his lands, to pay to the mortgagee his heirs, executors, or assigns, a certain sum of mony at a day certain: the mortgagee dieth, and maketh his heir within age his executor; and the mortgagor pays the mony at the day to the heir: it was holden, the same shall be assets in the hands of the heir as executor, and that he hath not the mony as heir, and he shall be charged with it, within age.

LX. Mich. 15 Eliz. In the Common Pleas.

The case was this; A man had made a lease for 40 years to one by indenture, if the lessee should so long live; and afterwards by another deed he demised the same lands and tenements to the same lessee, to have to his executors and assigns for 40 years after the expiration of the first lease. And Lovelace, Serjeant, demanded the opinion of the Court, (the Lord Dyer being then in the Star-Chamber) whether in this case, the lessee should have the interest in the second lease, or his executors; or whether it was a void lease? Harper, Justice, said, that in every lease there are 3 things incident to make it good, 1. That there be a lessor to make the lease. 2. That there be a lessee to take the lease. And, 3. That there be a thing which should [33] be let: and then he said, that here, although that there be a lessor, and a thing which should be leased, yet here there was not any lessee: for executors are not until after the death of the testator: but he said that if a lease be made for years, or for life, and that the executors shall have the same for certain years after his death, the same is good; for there is an interest of the term. And if a man maketh a lease to begin at the month of Easter, his executors may have this term, because the same was an interest of a term in the lessee, and the term shall be executed at Easter: but here in this case, there is no person to take it, and therefore he conceived, that the lease was void. Mounson, Justice, The case is as it is recited: and he said, that the premisses of a deed, is to limit the person who shall have the lease, and the habendum shall not declare the person who shall have it, or the lease, but to declare the estate which shall be in the lease; and it is but a limitation of the estate: and if the premisses do not limit the person who shall have it, the habendum shall not give any thing to the person, unless it be expressed in the premisses what person shall have it: and therefore when he saith, habendum to his executors and assigns, these words (executors and assigns) are void: but when a man makes a lease to one, habendum to his executors and assigns, the same is not void; for if livery be made, his heir shall take it after his death. Harper, By the lease of the same land by a new deed, as the case is here, nothing shall pass without an habendum: and if a lease be made to the lessee, habendum to his executors, he himself hath no estate; and when no estate is limited, the person in the premisses gains not any thing, and without the habendum he cannot have any thing. Lovelace, If I may declare my opinion, this new lease shall be a lease in possession as a confirmation of the first lease, and shall be taken to be a lease for life, and the habendum shall be void; and therefore he prayed the opinion of Manwood, Justice, therein: who said, that in every lease there are 3 principals, as he had said, of lessor, lessee, and thing let: and by the premisses, the lessor and lessee are expressed; and by the habendum, the interest which the lessee shall have, ought to be set forth; and if no habendum be in the deed to express any certainty of time, the lessee by the same shall be tenant at will, unless that livery be made: and therefore I am not of your opinion, Brother Lovelace, that the same shall be a lease for life, unless that in the second deed the words had been, that he leased and granted; by which word, grant, it might enure and amount to a lease for life: but if the deed had been, demise and grant, that cannot be intended for the life of the lessee; and as I have said before, by apt words it might enure to a confirmation, and make it a lease for life; but by the premisses it is not so, and by this deed it is not expressed, that the lessee shall take a freehold; for by the habendum, his mind appeareth to be otherwise by agreement betwixt the parties, that his executors and assigns [34] should have it for a certain time after his death, and that he himself would not have it, for he hath sufficiently provided for himself, to have it for 40 years, if he liveth so long, although it cannot be intended, that he should live beyond the term which he hath, so as it cannot be taken to be the meaning of the parties, that he should have it as a lease for life: and when by the premisses of the deed, the parties are not named, the habendum shall never bring in a strange person: as, where a lease is made to the husband, habendum to the wife, the habendum to her is void, because it shall not introduce one who is a stranger to the premisses of the deed. And as my brother Mounson hath said, the office of the premisses of a deed is to limit the persons who shall have it, and the office of the habendum is to limit the estate of the thing which is granted; and therefore when the habendum is to such a person as was not named in the premisses of the deed, it is but a nugation: as if he had leased to J. S. habendum to the moon for certain years, there the habendum to that thing is a nugation, and void; and therefore then if the words be in the premisses, that he leaseth to J. S. for 20 years, and doth not say, that he shall have it for 20 years, it shall be intended that the person named in the premisses shall have it, for the habendum waits upon the grant before; and when he gives an estate in the habendum without limiting of the person in it, then the person named in the premisses shall have it; and then when he names a strange person who was not named before in the premisses, or which hath no capacity, as the moon, or such like who are not in rerum natura, as his executors of the lessee, or his assigns, these persons or things named in the habendum, are but nugations, and void; and then it is like unto the case where no person is limited in the habendum: and where apt words are, there the law shall construe them strong against the grantor; and therefore the law couples the habendum and the premisses together, that the intent of the parties may (if by any means it may) have a reasonable construction. And therefore if a man maketh a lease to two, habendum to one of them and a third person, there as to the third person he gets nothing by the habendum, because he was not named in the premisses, and therefore the naming him in the habendum is but a nugation. And so here, the naming of the executors and assigns by the habendum, is but a nugation, and so there is no person named in it. But I conceive, that the habendum, when the years are expressed, and the estate limited by it, shall have reference to the person who is named in the premisses of the deed, and so the lease shall be good to him to begin after the first term expired. Harper, It appeareth that it was the meaning of the parties, that he himself would not have any thing, but that his will was, that his executors should have it, and the law shall frame his intent and meaning, and shall not subject the law to his intent; and when he doth not so, but overthwarts the law, and frames such an instrument, the law shall be first served, and not their meanings, [35] when the same doth not agree with the law. And therefore as to the case which my brother Manwood hath put, where no person is named in the habendum, by construction of law, he who is named in the premisses shall have it: but when the habendum makes express mention of his intent what person shall have it, and another than was named in the premisses, then if those cannot have it, the estate limited shall not be carried over to him who was named in the premisses. And as to the case put, where a lease is made to two, habendum to one of them, and a third person, there I well agree, that as to the third person it is but a nugation; and the other two who are named with him in the habendum, and have a capacity to take it, shall have it, although the other getteth nothing; but that is not like to the case at Bar, for no person is named there. Manwood, If a lease be made to J. S. except Green-Close, to J. D. who is a stranger, the exception is good, and J. D. shall have it. The principal case was adjourned.

Mich. 15 Eliz. In the Kings Bench.

LXI. The Lord Windsors Case.

Upon an evidence given to a jury in the Kings Bench, in an ejectione firmæ, the case appeared to be thus; that Sir Roger Lewknor, knight, being seised in fee of the mannor of South Myms, made an indenture, anno 11. H. 8. by which indenture, he leased the said mannor to 20 persons, to the use of Andrew Windsor, afterwards Lord Windsor, and Henry his son, and the survivor of them, as long as any of the said persons named in the said indenture should live: and further covenanted by the same indenture, to stand seised of the said mannor, to the use of the said Andrew and Henry, and the survivor of them, during the lives of any of the said feoffees named in the same indenture; which deed was made without livery and seisin; and reserved upon it an yearly rent: and afterwards the son died. And in 22 H. 8. a fine was levied by a stranger upon a release to Andrew Lord Windsor; and afterwards, 34 of Henry 8 Andrew Lord Windsor made a lease to one for years, and died; and made William and Edmond his sons his executors: and afterwards William his eldest son being Lord Windsor, 2 & 3 Phil. & Mary, made a lease of the same land unto another, to begin after the first lease ended: which William died, and the Lord Windsor that now is, accepted the rent, and of late time agreed with one Vaughan, who had married the heir of Sir Roger Lewknor, for the reversion in fee; and afterwards the lease made by Andrew Lord Windsor, 34 H. 8. ended in the 4th year of the reign of the Queen that now is; whereupon, the second lessee, that is to say, the lessee of William Lord Windsor, entred; and being ousted, he brought the ejectione firmæ. And then, and yet one of the 20 feoffees of Sir Roger Lewknor is alive: so as the estate of cestuy que vie, is [36] not as yet determined. And now the question upon the first part of the evidence is, if this later lease made by William Lord Windsor, be a good lease or not? And who shall be said occupant? For when the Lord Andrew died, then the lessee (as Catline said) shall not be said in otherwise than according to his lease, when his occupation by lease was lawful before: and he who shall be said occupant, shall have a freehold; and if he should be occupant, he should be in by a new title. Then we are to see, if the executors of the lord which have the rent, and to whom the same is paid by the lessee, shall be said occupant? And he conceived, that they should not, although that they enter, unless they claim the freehold at the time of their entry; for if they enter generally, it shall be intended according to the will, as executors; and if he had granted his estate to another, there after his death, the grantee shall be said to be in by reason of his grant, and not as occupant; and so if he would devise his estate, the devisee shall be in by reason of the devise, and not as occupant; which case of devise, Southcote denyed, that he should not be in by reason of the devise, when his estate determines with his death: but if the devisee entreth by force of the devise: he shall be in as an occupant. And also Southcote denyed that which had been said, that the lessee for years who holdeth the lands after the death of Andrew Lord Windsor, should not be an occupant: for, as he said, the lessee being in possession after the death of the Lord Andrew, should be said occupant, and no other; for the executors of the lord could not be occupant by the having of the rent, because they had not the possession of the land; for none shall be occupant, but he who is in possession. Whiddon said, that if the first lease be made by Andrew Lord Windsor, was now in esse, and that an ejectione firmæ was brought upon that, that the lessee ought to aver, that some of the feoffees for whose lives, &c. were then living. Southcote, If a præcipe quod reddat shall be brought, against whom shall it be brought, against him in the reversion, or against him in possession? And if it shall be brought against the tenant in possession, then he ought to have the freehold; for it cannot be brought, but against one who hath a freehold at the least: and then if the Lord William Windsor had nothing in the land, then how could he make this lease to the plaintiff that now is, when the first lessee continueth occupant after the death of the Lord Andrew, during the life of cestuy que vye? And as to the fine, the question did further arise, if the Lord Andrew Windsor should have a feesimple by that fine? for being levied, (as Catline said) it cannot be to the first uses, because a fine upon a release, cannot be intended to the use of any other but to him to whom it is levied, unless an use be expressed in the fine, or by another deed: and upon a fine levied upon a release made unto tenant life by a stranger, the same is not a forfeiture of his estate; but if tenant for life taketh a fine [37] sur conusans de droit come ceo, &c. the same is a forfeiture. And although a fine levied by those who have not any thing in the lands, be void, yet here it is not so; and it ought to be pleaded specially, and shewed, that he had not anything in the land at the time the fine was levied, as Anderson said. And Catline said, that this fine was not without good advice, for the Lord Brook and others who were learned in the law, were of counsel with the Lord Windsor in the levying of this fine, so as the intent was to settle the feesimple in himself by the fine, and not that the first uses should stand after that: and thereupon he put the case of Putnam and Duncomb, which hath much resemblance to this case, which he argued when he was serjeant, and held the same opinion as he holdeth now; and therefore he said, that although the purchase was but of late time of Vaughan and his wife, yet the fee was in the Lord Windsor before, and this manner of purchase was to no other end, but to discharge the lands of incumbrances, as appeareth by the small sum which was paid, the land being of a great yearly value. And, as Vaughan confessed, he took this sum of mony, because that his council informed him, that the feesimple was in the Lord Windsor before, and that otherwise he would not have sold it at such a price. And he said, that before that agreement, the Lord Windsor told him, that he had the feesimple in himself. Whereupon Vaughan asked him, wherefore he paid the rent? To whom the Lord Windsor answered, that he paid the same during the lives of the feoffees, but after their deaths, he paid nothing; but notwithstanding that payment, that the feesimple remained in him, and that his counsel advised him to pay the rent to the heirs of Lewknor, who was the wife of the said Vaughan. And Catline said, that if a fine be levied upon a release, in a scire facias against the conusor, he shall not plead, that the conusor had not any thing in the land at time of the fine levied. And he said further, that if a disseisor be, and the disseisee levieth a fine upon a release, that thereby his right is gone.

And note; that as to the principal case, Southcote was of opinion, that the fee was not gained by the fine levied by a stranger to him who had the use before the statute of 27 H. 8. and that if no feesimple was in the Lord Windsor, at the time of the lease made by him, that the lease could not be good, nor the action maintainable. And because the Court was divided in opinions in both points, Catline commanded the jury to find a special verdict.

[38] LXII. Mich. Eliz. In the Kings Bench.

Note: that it was said by the whole Court, that if a man delivereth mony to another man to buy cattel, or to merchandise with, although that the mony be sealed up in a bag, yet the property of the mony is to the bailee, and the bailor cannot have an action for the mony, but only an accompt against the bailee, although that he never buyeth the cattel or other things, for the auditors upon the accompt shall allow him the sum and such other allowances as they shall think fit. And that a stranger takes away the mony, after the death of the bailee, or in his life-time, the bailor shall not have an action against the stranger, but the executors of the bailee, or the bailee himself during his life: and yet if the bailee dieth, no action of accompt lieth against his executors, because the testator had the property of the monies. And therefore if he, who takes the mony from the bailee, promiseth the bailor, to pay him the like sum of mony as the bailee had received of him in his life, and as should be truly proved by the bailor; there, upon that promise, an action upon the case doth not lie against him who took away the mony, as Catline said, in an action upon the case brought by the Master of the Rolls, and another, who supposed, that they delivered 100l. to one Moore, and that he is dead, and that the mony came unto the hands of the defendant, and that thereupon he promised to pay the like sum which might be proved that Moore had of the plaintiffs. It was holden, that the action upon the case did not lie. Southcote, Justice, said, that although the property of the mony be changed as before, and that no accompt lieth against a stranger; yet when he hath the mony, and for that cause promiseth to pay it as before, it is reason, that an action upon the case should lie upon his promise, although the law will not charge him nor the executor upon an accompt.

LXIII. The Lord Cromwells Case.

Jeffery recited, that a replevin was brought by Franklin; the defendants made conusans as bailiffs of the Lord Cromwell; because, that the said lord was seised of the mannor of North-Elmes; and that the custom of the said mannor is, that the homagers have used to make by-laws (when necessity shall be) within the same mannor, and upon a pain and forfeiture, and that the lord of the mannor for the time being, might distrain in the land of any for the forfeiture. And further saith, that in anno 6 of Ed. the 6th, the homage then (whereof Franklin the plaintiff was one) made a by-law, that none should put his sheep to feed in the pasture or lands of the lord upon a pain, &c. And that the said Franklin, in the 13th year of the reign of the Lady [39] the Queen that now is, had put his sheep into the pasture and lands of the lord to feed; and for that they avow the taking in the right of the Lord Cromwell, for not payment of the said forfeiture: and Jefferies of council with the plaintiff, said, that the avowry, nor the conusans were not good; for the custom is, as they themselves have shewed, that the by-law shall be made when necessity required (and without necessity a by-law cannot be:) and it is not alledged here, that there was a necessity at the time of this by-law made; and then if there be no necessity, they cannot make the by-law. Also, it is not alledged, that there were any sheep there; and when a custom is pleaded, it shall be pleaded stricti juris. And at the common law, you may see divers cases, that when a man is to have one thing for the cause of another, that he must alledge the thing for which he must have it: as in 9 H. 6. Where an abbot had granted to one, that he should have common, wheresoever the cattel of the abbot should go; there if the commoner will justifie or make avowry for his common, he must aver that the beasts of the abbot went then in such a place, field, or pasture; for if they did not go there at the time that he justifieth or avoweth, his justification or avowry shall not be good: and there it was said by Babbington, Chief Justice, that if a man grants common whensoever his cattel shall go in such a pasture, if the grantor doth never put his cattel into the pasture, the grantee shall not have common there: and therefore he must say, that he put his beasts into the pasture. And in 15 H. 7. in the case of an annuity granted until he be promoted to a benefice, in a writ of annuity brought, he must say, that he is not promoted, &c. And if an obligation be made to you, to you my lord, for mony, when J. S. shall return from Rome; you shall not have an action upon the bond for not payment of the mony, without alledging, that J. S. is returned. See 33 H. 6. Hilary's case; and before the Statute of Quia Emptores Terrarum, if a man had made a feoffment to hold by fealty, and the guarding of his castle, in an avowry for the castle guard, that there was then war, and so cause of necessity; for in time of peace he shall not be bound to guard it. And so it appeareth, 34 H. 8. where a feoffment was made before the statute, to hold by fealty, and every year to marry a poor maiden within the mannor, if he doth avow for not marriage, he ought to alledge, that there was a poor maid that year within the mannor. So, if the tenure be to repair a bridge that is for the common wealth, and he and all others are to have advantage of it, yet the lord shall not avow for not repairing of it, without alledging, that the bridge was in decay. And so when the tenure is to cover his hall, he shall not avow, without alledging, that his hall needed reparations. And so in the principal case, here he ought to alledge, that there was a present necessity for making of the by-law; for it may be, that there was not any sheep within the mannor when the by-law was made, and then there was no [40] cause that it should be made. And in the like manner as it hath been said of the common law, that certainty ought to be shewed, so shall it be by the statute laws. As if tenant for life makes default, if one prayeth to be received for the default of the tenant for life, he ought to shew that he hath the reversion, and that he bringeth his action by reason thereof: and as it hath been said of the common law, and statute law, so it shall be said of custom; as in 44 E. 3 where the parishioners prescribe to make by-laws, and that they made such an ordinance, that for every acre of land, or for every beast, every one should pay for the reparations of the church, &c. there it may be said in avowry, that the church wanted reparation. And so where a tax and levy is to make a wall against the sea, there if the party will justifie the levying of the tax or levy, he must say, that there was need of it, otherwise the same cannot be levied: but as to the ability of a person, he shall be enabled by intendment. As if an obligation be made by a man or a woman, in an action brought upon the bond, he shall not be compelled to say, that the man was of full age, or that the woman was a single woman, for that shall be intended, until the contrary be shewed: but by statute law, if a man pleads a grant, it shall be otherwise. As upon the statute of 1 R. 3. if he plead a feoffment or a grant of cestuy que use, he must plead, that he was of full age, out of prison, of sound memory, and within the 4 seas. And so where a pardon was made in the time of King Ed. the 4th, to all, but to those who were with Queen Margaret; there, if he will take advantage of the pardon, he must plead, that he was not with the said Queen. And if a man plead a feoffment of J. S. at the common law, it shall be good; and if he were within age, it shall be shewed on the other side: but if a man pleadeth a feoffment by custom; and the other saith, that the feoffor was within age, and the plaintiff replyeth, that an enfant by the custom may make a feoffment; the same is not good, but a departure: for he ought to have shewed that at the beginning in his declaration. And in 37 H. 6. where a man pleaded a devise, and it was shewed, that the devisor was within age; there the plaintiff need not say, that the custom is, that an enfant may devise; for that is a departure. Another matter of the custom which they have alledged, is, that they may make by-laws for the better ordering; and they have not taken averment, that this ordinance was either better or worse:

and if it be not better, then they have no cause to make the by-law. If a feoffment be made causa matrimonii præloquuti, it shall not be intended, that the feoffment was for any other cause than marriage: and if a woman brings a writ of dower, and the defendant pleads a lease for life made by the husband, it shall not be intended that that lease was in allowance of her dower according to the statute, if it be not expressly shewed. And so, if cestuy que use in tail makes a lease for life, it shall not be intended that cestuy que vie [41] is alive, unless a special averment be taken, that he is yet alive: and so here it doth not appear; that this is the better order, nor that the lands are several, or lie in common, so as by no means or circumstance it can appear if it be the better or not. Another cause wherefore the pleading is not sufficient, is because he saith, upon a pain of forfeiture to the lord for the time being; and he hath not alledged in fact, that the Lord Cromwell, who was lord of the mannor in anno 6 E. 6. was lord in the 13th year of the reign of the Queen that now is; and, without shewing, that shall not be intended. As in 7 H. 7. a man pleads a feoffment, and that J. S. was seised, and did enfeoffe him, that is not good; but he ought to plead, that he being so seised, made the feoffment; for it shall not be intended, that his seisin continued until the time of the feoffment, without shewing of it. And so where a man pleads, that J. S. was seised of a reversion, granted it; he ought to plead, and that he being so seised, granted it: and so where an attornment is pleaded; for if he was not seised at the time of the attornment, the attornment was not good. And so where a man will plead a surrender, he shall shew, that he who surrendreth, and he to whom a surrender is made, were seised. Quære, if the one or the other were not seised, one of the term and the other of the reversion, whether the surrender be not good. And 31 H. 6. if a man will plead a lease by feoffees to use, he shall say, and that so seised, they made the lease. And see 6, 7, 10, 11 H. 7. Where cestuy que use makes a feoffment, averment shall be taken, that at the time of the lease that the feoffees were seised to the use of the lessor. And because that here it is not shewed, nor alledged, that the Lord Cromwell is now lord of the mannor, it shall not be so intended: also, for divers other causes, I conceive, that the avowry is insufficient: for he hath shewed, that a by-law was made, but doth not shew when it was made, nor for what time it was to continue; and it is not shewed, whether the same were made for the better ordering of the lands which the lord held joyntly, or in common with others, or which he held in his own right alone: and as to the prescription, I conceive that the same is not good; because it is against reason, and not ex rationabili causa: for if one man keeps the law, and another man breaks the law, yet according as they have alledged this custom to be, he may be distrained who hath not offended, and his cattel taken for the offence done by the cattel of another man; and it is against reason, that any one should be punished for the default or offence of another: but the custom of borough English is good; and so is the custom of gavelkind, because that every son is as good a gentleman as the eldest; and therefore those customs stand with reason. And so in 5 H. 7. where a man prescribes, that for the pasture which the beasts of the tenant have taken in his lands in the day-time; that he have the foldage of them upon his said lands in the night to manure his lands, is a good prescription, [42] because the party hath for it quid pro quo. And so where a man prescribes to have a farthing of every one who passeth over his land, the same is called toll traverse, and is good. And so in 7 H. 4. where a man prescribes in common by reason of vicinage, it is good; for though it cannot be of common right, yet because each hath quid pro quo, it is good. And so is the custom for fishermen to dry their nets upon the banks of the lands of other men lying upon the sea coasts, because it is for the common wealth; and every man hath an advantage by it, but if a man should prescribe to fowle there upon the lands of another, that were not good. Meade, contrary, That case is, as it hath been put; and divers cases of the common law, custom, and statute laws, have been shewed: and by common intendment, it is intended, that need doth require the making of the by-law; for otherwise, they would not have made it; and there needs not any averment, that there was need of it, for that shall be taken by intendment: as 19 E. 4. A man counts of the grant of the next avoydance, and the count is good, without shewing, that that was the next avoydance, but yet it would have been better, if it had been expressed. And 21 H. 7.

in trespass, the first day of May, the defendant pleads the licence of the plaintiff; without shewing, that it was for the same trespass: and yet it shall be intended, when he pleads a licence for the same day, that it was for the same trespass. And as to the case put upon the statute of 1 R. 3. it hath been ruled otherwise; for it shall be shewed on the other side, that he was within age, as it appeareth by 10 & 13 H. 7. Also he said, that the Court here shall intend, that there was a necessity sufficient, without expressing of it; and if there was not, then it ought to be alledged on the other side; as 15 H. 7. An annuity is granted until he was advanced to a benefice, the plaintiff shall not need to shew it, but that shall come on the defendants part; and the statute which is, that no cattel of the plough shall be distrained where the party hath other cattel of which a distress may be taken, there the party needs not to alledge, that he had other cattel, or other goods. And as to that which hath been said, that it was the better order, that needs not, for the defendant himself was one of the makers of the order; and when by-laws are made, they shall not extend but to the tenants within the mannor where they are made, and to such only as have lands there, and not to the lands of others which are out of the mannor: and the defendant in this case shall not be received to say, but that this is a good custom and order, because he is a party to it, and was the maker of it, and that there was then a necessity for the making of it, for the better ordering of the lands; and that especially when as the defendant himself was a party to it: and as to that which is said, that seisin is alledged in the Lord Cromwell in 6 E. 6. and it is not alledged, that the seisin did continue in him until 13th of this Queen; it [43] shall be intended, that he continued seised until the contrary be shewed. As in 11 H. 7. a man prescribed to have common by reason of the house, &c. The avowant doth not say, that he was seised of the house at the time, &c. of the disseisin of the common, because he once alledged seisin of the house, and that seisin shall be intended to continue unto the time of the disseisin. And so 10 H. 7. a prior domus & ecclesiæ de C. brought waste, and supposed, that it was to the disenheresin of the house, and did not say, prædict. domus; and yet it was good, and shall be referred to the said priory: and so here, when he saith, that he was lord, and that the by-law was made as before, and a penalty imposed, and a distress taken by the bailiff of the Lord Cromwell, for not observing the by-law, and payment of the sum assessed, all being put together, makes a sufficient certainty, and that the Lord Cromwell continued his seisin of the mannor and land: and as to that which hath been said, that the by-law made, and the custom alledged to distrain in the lands of any man for the offence of another, is not reasonable, and against the law; to that he said, that the tenants here had authority to make by-laws, and by their consents have bounden themselves to the observing and performance of them, and therefore shall not now be received to say, that the by-law made by themselves was against the law. And he said, that the customs in some places are, where there are waste lands, that they may make by-laws, that if any tenant or person dig turfs in the same waste, that the lord may distrain for such offence within any place of the mannor, and the cattel of any person. Quære of it. The principal case was adjourned.

LXIV. Mountford and Catesbys Case.

An action upon the case was brought by Mountford against Catesby; and the plaintiff declared, that the defendant covenanted, assumed and promised in consideration of a certain sum of money to him paid; and in consideration of the payment of a rent of certain lands demised to the lessee, that he should peaceably and quietly enjoy the same, without interruption of any person, and he was ousted by a stranger; and the matter aforesaid was found by special verdict: and it was argued by Lovelace, Serjeant; and he prayed judgment for the plaintiff: and he said, that there is a difference, when it is said, that a man shall hold and enjoy peaceably and quietly; as in case where one warrants land, there if he be ousted by a stranger who hath not any title to the land, he shall have an action of trespass against him: but a man by word, or covenant, may bind himself to that which he is not bound to do by the law. As, if the covenant and [44] promise be, that he shall leave the houses in as good plight as he found them: there, although the law doth not bind the party to re-edifie the houses in case they be overthrown by tempest of wind; or that they be destroyed by enemies; yet by his special covenant he shall be bound to re-edifie them. Meade, contrary, and that this promise shall not be taken strictly against the lessor, that he shall enjoy it against all persons, but only against all persons who have title, and not against those who have not any title, because against them he may have his remedy. And if a man makes a feoffment of his lands with warranty, and covenants, that it is discharged of all rents, there it shall not extend to rent services which are incident to the lands of common right: in 3 H. 7. 4. the case was, The condition of an obligation was, that the obligor should make appropriation of the church of Dale such a day to such a house, at his costs and charges discharged of incumbrances; there, although there was a pension granted thereout to another, it was holden, that the obligee was not bounden to discharge it of that pension; no more than if a man be bounden to make a feoffment of his land, there, although that he charge the land, yet he shall not forfeit his bond: but if it were, that he should make a feoffment of his land discharged, &c. it is otherwise; but yet he shall not be bounden to discharge it of such things with which it is charged by the law. Barham, The words are precisely, that he shall enjoy it without interruption of any person, so as he be interrupted by one that hath title, or no title, the plaintiff hath cause of action. Manwood, What if the words were, that he should enjoy it without suit in law? Meade, That shall be intended of a lawful suit: and in the principal case, although the contract be by words, yet it is upon a good consideration; that is to say, of a fine and income, and upon the payment of the rent: and therefore as Dyer said, when Catesby the son leased the lands to Mountford, the now plaintiff, and it appeared that his father, or a stranger, made claim to it, and thereupon he made the promise as before, shall it be intended, that he should hold and enjoy the lands peaceably without interruption of them only who had title? and that he should not have his remedy against the defendant upon his promise, if a stranger who had not title did interrupt him? Truly, he shall have his remedy against him: as if the son had promised that he should enjoy it against his father; or else that in truth if it were the land of the father, shall it not be intended, that the son did presume that his father should not interrupt his lessee? and that he would so deal with his father, that he should not interrupt him: and it may be, that upon the presumption of the good will of his father, or that he had treated with him, or compounded with him; that for these, or the like causes, the son made the promise aforesaid: and if the father had not any right or title to the land, should not the lessee have his action against the defendant, if the father did inter-[45]-rupt him, for this unlawful interruption? Truly, yes; for by the words it is to be supposed, that the son would so deal with his father, that the lessee should enjoy and hold the lands without any manner of interruption. Mounson, You have well tasted the opinion of the Court upon this matter before, and now you hear our opinions again. Manwood, As I said the other day, cannot an hostler take upon him, that the goods of his guests which are within his inn, shall be safe, and charge himself further therewith, than he is chargeable by the custom of the realm, and to be chargeable against every one that taketh them away? Truly, I conceive he may. Harper, The common making of assurance is, that he shall enjoy them without any lawful interruption: and if the law, upon the general words of enjoying without interruption, should be intended but of lawful interruptions, it were in vain to have this word (lawful) in the deed, &c.

LXV. Mich. 15 Eliz. In the Common Pleas.

An action of debt was brought against one upon an obligation: it was upon an apprentice bond; the condition of which was, that if such a one did become the apprentice of the obligee; and transport his merchandises beyond the seas, and make a retorn of them, and maketh an accompt unto the obligee, and payeth the monies upon his accompt within a certain time, that then, &c. And afterwards, the obligee doth release by deed to the servant the apprentice, and not to the obligor: and in debt brought against the obligor, he pleaded the release. And it was said by the Lord Dyer, and by the whole Court, that by the release to the servant, the obligation was saved, if the release were made before any forfeiture; or that the servant or apprentice had broken any of the conditions, or any point according to the covenants: but if it was made after any of them was broken, then such a release to the servant, did not dispence with the obligation which was made by the stranger, because an obligation once forfeited, cannot be saved by any act or release made or done to a stranger.

LXVI. Mich. 15 Eliz. In the Common Pleas.

In a quare impedit brought by the patron against the Archbishop of York, and the incumbent, who was in by the collation of the archbishop, after the death of the incumbent of the patron. It was said by the Lord Dyer, that of an avoydance by resignation, or deprivation, the patron shall have 6 months time, after notice thereof given unto him, to present his clerk, because it may be done secretly, in the Chamber of the Ordinary; and therefore in such case the law is, that the bishop is to give notice of it to the patron, before he be bound to that knowledge of [46] such a presentment; as it appeareth by the case in 1 H. 7. 4. And Lowe, the Prothonotary said, that so is the roll of the same year, where the issue was, whether the patron had 6 months after the notice? And then the Lord Dyer said to the prothonotary, Shew me the roll at another day, that I may compare it with my book. But if the church become void by death of the incumbent, there the patron is to take notice of it at his peril, without any other notice thereof to be given him by the Ordinary: and he said, that if the patron doth present his clerk a week before the 6 months be ended, and the Ordinary doth refuse the clerk for inability, because he is unlearned, and then the six months pass before he presenteth another, after the six months after the death of the incumbent; in such case, the bishop shall have the collation of the clerk, because it was the folly of the patron, that he did not present his clerk before, so as the Ordinary might examine him; and that thereupon if he be found to be unable, that he might present another clerk to the Ordinary within convenient time, and for that cause is the six months given to the patron, that he provide another clerk in the mean time. And there is a good case in 14 H. 7. which was long debated, where the Ordinary commanded the clerk to come to him afterwards to be examined, because the Ordinary had then other business. And there the better opinion of the book is, that it was a good plea for the Ordinary, that he did not refuse the clerk, but that the clerk did not return to him again, and that the 6 months passed, so as he made the collation, and that the patron made his presentation too late, so as he had not convenient time to examine him. Then in the case at Bar, it was moved, that when the ability and disability of the clerk came in question, by whom the same should be tryed; because in the case here, the Bishop of York was a party to the suit, whether by the metropolitan of York, or by the metropolitan of Canterbury. And he said, that as he conceived, the tryal of the ability should be by the metropolitan of York, and not of Canterbury: but he said, that if the party in whom the disability was alledged was dead, so as he could not be examined, the tryal of his ability or disability should be by the country, as it appeareth in the book of 39 E. 3. Manwood, Justice, The cure of souls is to be regarded, and therefore if an enfant be to make a presentation, the same shall not be stayed for his nonage; and therefore if in such case he doth surcease, and shall not present his clerk, the law which regardeth more the cure of souls that the enfacy, will permit that the Ordinary shall collate to the church, if a presentment thereto be not made within the six months. And he said, that if the patron should present one but a week before the end of the six months, and the Ordinary should refuse him for disability: if the patron should have other six months then next after, he might then likewise present an enfant or other disabled person to the Or-[47]-dinary, and so detract the time by fraud, and so the lapse by such great fraud should never devolve to the Ordinary, and so the cure should be unserved; and so the issue would be and arise upon the conveniency of the time. And as to that which hath been said, concerning the ability and disability of the clerk, I conceive the same shall be tryed by the metropolitan of Canterbury, and not by the metropolitan of York. Mounson, to that intent; and he said, There is a good case in 14 H. 7. 21. which is a short case, and not the case which has been vouched; by which it appeareth, that the presentment that shall be within 6 months, shall be accompted from the time of the avoydance, and not from the time of the presentment, by the whole Court: and there it is said, that the Ordinary shall give notice to the patron, if he be a lay man, of the disability of the clerk, but not if he be a spiritual person: but if the party presentee be criminous, of that the patron shall take as well notice as the Ordinary. And afterwards, the Lord Dyer caused the record to be read, and it did not appear therein, at what day the presentment was made to the Ordinary: which ought to have been shewed: for the great point of the case doth rest here upon the time of the presentment, if it were before a week that the six months were ended or not. Also the Ordinary saith in his bar, that the clerk was insufficient, and that he gave notice to the plaintiff, and that nullam idoneam personam præsentavit: and the Court said, that that was no good manner of pleading; but it had been better, if it had been nullam etiam personam idoneam præsentavit, and the first form would be a jeofail. Manwood said that the time of the notice given to the patron, ought to be alledged, because if the patron sends his clerk within a month after the avoydance, and the Ordinary will not give notice to the patron in the meantime; the same shall not be any default in the patron: and as to the notice given to the patron, he said the same was well pleaded, and it shall be intended that it was given to the person of the patron. And as to the words in the declaration, scil. tunc vacantem, they are but void words, because nothing is spoken before of any time. And the incumbent pleaded the same plea, as the Ordinary pleaded. And Dyer asked, if the incumbent were person impersonee, for that none should plead that plea, but he who is parson in fact, and incumbent.

[48] LXVII. Mich. 15 Eliz. In the Common Pleas.

The case was, that an information was exhibited into the Court of Common Pleas, for the Queen and the party, upon a penal law; and a subpœna issued forth against two: one of them was served with the writ, and the other not; and now, a new subpœna was prayed against him who was not served: and Dyer, Justice, conferred with his companions and the prothonotary, and demanded of them, if the plaintiff might exhibit an information in this Court? who answered, that he might; for this is a Court of Record, and the statute law limiteth, that it may be exhibited in any of the Queens Courts of Record. Then he demanded of them, if a subpœna lay out of this place? and Whetley, Prothonotary, said, that it did. Dyer said, It is a strange thing to have an attachment at the first day. Manwood said, In this Court it is the common usage, upon an audita querela, to award a venire facias against the conusee. Dyer, said to the prothonotaries, Advise with your selves against the morrow, what process hath been used to issue forth upon the presidents of information which have been before this time, if a subpœna shall be awarded. And afterwards it was said by Gawdy, who moved for it, that he might have a subpœna upon this matter.

LXVIII. Mich. 15 Eliz. In the Common Pleas.

Note: a special verdict was found at the Bar, and the issue was taken upon a traverse; and Dyer, Justice, said, that a special verdict could not be taken upon a traverse, but precisely according to the issue, and so it was agreed by the whole Court here; but some serjeants at the Bar did doubt of it.

LXIX. Mich. 15 Eliz. In the Common Pleas.

In an ejectione firmæ, the case was thus: King Henry the 8th was seised of certain lands, and by his letter patents granted the same to Thomas Holt for life, the remainder to John Holt his son, who in truth was a bastard; and the letters patents were, ex certa scientia, & mero motu, &c. And because the plaintiff did suppose, that the same was not a good purchase, he tooke a lease from the Queen, of the lands, intending to make void the letters patents, because the defendant was nullius filius. And what difference there was in such a case, in case of the King and a common person, was moved to the Court by Lovelace, Serjeant. Dyer, Justice, I conceive, that it is a good purchase in law as well in the case of the King, as in the case of a common person. And see to that purpose, 39 E. 3. and in this case, if the King had granted the land to John Holt without na-[49]-ming him son, the same had been a good purchase: but if the King had called him John, the son of Thomas, without giving him a sirname, there such a purchase should not be good, if he were a bastard; because he hath not nomen cognitum, as where he hath a sirname: and a man cannot purchase by the name of John only; and then if he be called John, the son of Thomas, when he is not his son, it cannot be good. And such case hath here lately been adjudged, where the Lord Powis gave certain lands to Thomas Gray his son, by him begotten upon the body of Jane Orwell; and in truth the said Thomas was a bastard of the said Lord Powis, (and the name of Jane was not Orwell, but the daughter of one Punt; and the mother of Jane, who was first married to Punt, betwixt whom Jane was begotten, married with one Orwell;) and yet notwithstanding that wrong name, and that the said Thomas Gray was not the son of the Lord Powis, born of Jane Orwell, but of one Jane Punt; yet it was a good purchase and gift to Thomas Gray, because it was his known name. Manwood, As I take it, the letters patents are ex certa scientia, & ex mero motu; and then the Kings grant shall not be taken in such plight as the grant of a common person, void for incertainty, because that the King takes notice of the person, of what degree he is; and in the Kings case, where he takes knowledge, by the words, ex certa scientia, there all matter of uncertainty shall be avoided and made good; but not matter which is not true: and for uncertainty, he said, where a thing may be taken two ways, there without the words, ex certa scientia, &c. the best shall be taken for the King, and strongest against the patentee. But by Dyer; by the words, ex certa scientia, &c. that incertainty is saved, and shall be taken strong for the patentee; and if it can any ways be taken for him, then the patent shall not be void: and then when in the principal case, there is the word (son,) and the word (son) may be taken two ways, either for a base son, or a true son; there by the words, ex certa scientia, the King taketh upon him to know in what manner he is son; and a base son is a son quodam modo, so as the letters patents shall not be false: but where the King, in his letters patents recites a thing which is false, that shall not make the patent good, although the words be, ex certa scientia, et mero motu.

LXX. Mich. 15 Eliz. In the Common Pleas.

Note; it was agreed by the Court, that if a man in a replevin pleadeth, and they are at issue, and the jury is charged, and gone from the Bar, and returns to give their verdict, and the plaintiff be non-suit, their retorn irreplevisable shall not be awarded, as in case if a verdict had been given; but the party may have a writ of second deliverance, as well as if he had been nonsuit before declaration or appearance.

[50] LXXI. Trin. 15 Eliz. In the Common Pleas.

The case was; The husband levied a fine of his land, and died, and his wife within the 5 years after the death of her husband, brought her writ of dower, but did not pursue her writ, until 6 years were past, and then she would have revived her suit.

And Meade, Serjeant, demanded the opinion of the justices, if the wife should be barred of her dower, or not: and by Manwood, Justice, it was moved again, if they at the Bar did agree, that if a fine be levied by the husband, and the wife doth not make her claim within the 5 years, if for that she shall be barred: and he conceived that she should not be barred; for he said, that he who hath title to the land at the time of the fine levied, if he doth not sue within 5 years after his title accrued, should be barred: but where the title accrues after the fine, there he who hath title shall not be barred by the 5 years; but he may come 30 years after, and make his title and claim. But in the principal case he said, that if the fine had been levied after the death of the husband, there the wife should be barred, if she did not pursue her right and claim within 5 years: and he agreed, that if the 5 years be a bar here, that then by the wives suffering of her writ of dower to be discontinued till after the 5 years were past, that she should be barred, because vigilantibus & non dormientibus subveniunt leges. Harper said, that the discontinuance should be no bar unto her; for he said, that if a gift be made to one in tail, the remainder over, and tenant in tail dieth without issue, and he in the remainder brings a formedon in the remainder within 5 years, and discontinueth it, yet it is no bar, but that after the 5 years ended, he may revive his suit: which Manwood denyed: and then Dyer came into the Court, and the case was moved to him: and he said, that the not prosecuting of the action by the wife, should be a bar unto her: and that the marriage which was before the fine, was the cause of dower, although she could not come to be endowed, until after the death of her husband: and he said, that the wife could make no other to have her dower, but only by bringing of her writ of dower; and therefore if she did surcease her time until the 5 years were past, that her new claim by her new writ, would not revive the ancient claim, and that therefore she should be barred; for she could not enter into the land to defeat the fine: and he said, that as to the principal case, that it was adjudged, anno 4 H. 8. And it was also said by the Court, that an assignment of dower made to the wife in the Court of Wards, was no sufficient claim of the wife; because she cannot have a writ of dower there; and there by this surceasing of her demand of her dower for the 5 years at the common law, that she should be barred.

[51] LXXII. Trin. 15 Eliz. In the Common Pleas.

The case was; A man made a lease for years, and the lessee covenanted to make reparations; the lessor granted the reversion to another, and the lessee for years made his wife his executrix, and died: it was holden in this case by the Court, that the grantee of the reversion should not recover damages, but from the time of the grant, and not for any time before: but yet the wife the executrix should be charged for the not reparations as well in the time of her husband, as in her own time. And if she do make the reparation, depending the suit; yet thereby the suit shall not abate, but it shall be a good cause to qualifie the damages according to that which may be supposed, that the party is damnified for the not repairing from the time of the purchase of the reversion, unto the time of the bringing of the action. And it was said by Manwood, that by the recovery of the damages, that the lessee should be excused for ever after, for making of reparations; so as if he suffer the houses for want of reparations to decay, that no action shall thereupon after be brought for the same; but that the covenant is extinct.

LXXIII. Easter Term. 15 Eliz. In the Common Pleas.

Lovelace moved the Court, that in the Kings Bench this case was argued upon a demurrer there; a feoffment was made by one Coxley, who took back an estate for life, the remainder to him who should be his heir at the time of his death, and to the heirs males of his body begotten: and afterwards, the tenant for life after the statute of 32 H. 8. suffered a recovery to be had against him, that that recovery was good as it was at the common law, because the statute doth not speak but that it shall not be a bar to him who hath the reversion at the time of the recovery, but this remainder was in abeyance until the death of the tenant for life; and that in the same Court it was adjudged accordingly in an ejectione firmæ; and because the same was a discontinuance, the plaintiff had here brought his formedon in the remainder; and therefore Lovelace prayed, that they might proceed without delays (because the plaintiffs title appeareth) without essoigns, and feigned delays: which Dyer, Justice, conceived to be a reasonable request, and that it should be well so to do; because, as he said, this Court is debased and lessened, and the Kings Bench doth encrease with such actions which should be sued here, for the speed which is there: and he said that the delays here were a discredit to the Court; so as all actions, almost, which do concern the realty, are determined in the Kings Bench in writs of ejectione firmæ, where the judgment is, quod recuperet terminum, and by that they are put into possession; and [52] by such means, no action is in effect brought here, but such actions as cannot be brought there; as formedons, writs of dower, &c. to the slander of the Court, and to the detriment and loss of the serjeants at the Bar. And Lovelace shewed, that divers mean feoffments were made, &c.

LXXIV. Mich. 15 Eliz. In the Common Pleas.

Note: this case was in Court: An heir female was in ward of a common person, who tendred to her a marriage, viz. his younger son; and she agreed to the tender, and the guardian died; the heir married the younger son according to the tender; the executors of the guardian brought a writ de valore maritagii, supposing the tender by the lord to be void by his death. But the Court was of a contrary opinion, because the tender of their testator was executed.

LXXV. Riches Case.

Elizabeth Rich brought a writ of a dower against J. S. who pleaded, and judgment given for the defendant, and afterwards the judgment was reversed. And she brought a new writ of dower, and the tenant pleaded, that he always was ready, and yet is, &c. Against which the demandant pleaded the first record to estop the tenant. To which the tenant pleaded, nul tiel record. It was the opinion of the Court, that here the demandant cannot conclude the tenant by that replication, to plead nul tiel record; for the judgment is reversed, and so no record, and it cannot be certified a record. But if the tenant had taken issue upon the plea of the tenant absq; hoc, that he was ready; the same might well have been given in evidence against the tenant.

Note: that the case was, that the demandant after the death of her husband entred into the land in demand, and continued the possession of it 5 years; and afterwards the heir entred; upon which she brought dower. It was agreed in that case, that the tenant needed not to plead, tout temps prist. after his re-entry; for the time the demandant had occupied the same, is a sufficient recompence for the damages.

LXXVI. Vavasors Case.

Nicholas Ellis, seised in fee of the mannor of Woodhall, leased the same to William Vavasor, and E. his wife, for the life of the wife, the remainder to the right heirs of the husband; the husband made a feoffment in fee to the use of himself and his wife for their lives, the remainder to his right heirs: the husband died, the wife held the land, and did waste in a park, parcel of the mannor: it was moved to the Court, if the writ of waste should suppose, that the wife held ex dimissione Nicholai Ellis, or ex dimissione of her husband: it was the opinion of the Court, that upon this matter, the writ should be general, viz. that she held de hæreditate J. S. hæredis, &c. without saying any more, either ex dimissione hujus, vel illius. For she is not in by the lessor nor by the feoffees, but by the Statute of Uses; and therefore the writ shall be ex hæreditate: it was also the opinion of the justices, that the wife here is not remitted, but that she should be in according to the term of the feoffment. Note in this case, the waste was assigned in destroying the deer in the park. And Meade, Serjeant, conceived, that waste could not be assigned in the deer, unless the defendant had destroyed all the deer: and of that opinion also was Dyer. Manwood said, If the lessee of a dove-house destroyed all the old pigeons, but one or two couple, the same is waste. And if a keeper destroy so many of the deer, so as the ground is become not parkable, the same is waste; although he doth not destroy them all. See 8 R. 2. Fitz. Waste 97. If there be sufficient left in a park, pond, &c. it is enough.

LXXVII. Mich. 15 Eliz. In the Common Pleas.

An action upon the case was brought against executors; they were at issue, upon nothing in their hands: it was given in evidence on the plaintiffs part that a stranger was bound to the testator in 100l. for performance of covenants; which were broken; for which the executors brought debt upon the obligation, depending which suit, both parties submitted themselves to the arbitrament of A. and B. who awarded, that the obligor should pay to the executors 70l. in full satisfaction, &c. and that the executors should release, &c. which was done accordingly. And it was agreed by the Court, that by the release, it shall be taken in judgment of law, that the executors have assets to the value of the whole 100l. And although the executors were compelled by the award to make the release; yet it was their own act to submit themselves to the arbitrament.

[54] LXXVIII. Mich. 15 Eliz. In the Court of Wards.

Note: it was ruled by Kellaway and Wilbraham in the Court of Wards, that where the Kings tenant of lands holden by knight service in capite, made a feoffment of the same land to the use of himself for life, and after to the use of his younger son in tail, the remainder to the right heirs of the feoffor, and died, the eldest son within age, that the Queen should have the wardship of his body, and of the third part of the land; and when the eldest cometh at full age, the younger shall sue livery, and pay primer seisin according to the rate of the value of the whole land, viz. of the third part, as in possession; and of the two parts as a reversion: for the remainder to the right heirs of the feoffor, is in truth a reversion. For the fee-simple was never out of him, because there was not any consideration as to that, nor any use expressed. And also because that livery shall not be by parcels, the younger son shall not be suffered to sue livery of the third part presently, and respite the residue as to the two parts in reversion, until the reversion fall, but shall sue livery presently, as well of the two parts in reversion, as of the third part in possession: and if the eldest son had been of full age, at the time of the death of his father, the younger son should pay primer seisin as to the third part of the full value of it for one year as in possession; and as to the two other parts, the moyety of the value of a year as a reversion. And at that time Breers case was vouched; which was, Oliver Breers, tenant in chief by knights service made a feoffment in fee to the use of himself for life, and after to the use of A. his son and heir for life, and after to the use of the first begotten son of A. in tail, and after to the use of the second son of A. &c. and for default of such issue, to the right heirs of the feoffor: Oliver died, the said A. his son being of full age: it was ruled by the said council of the said Court of Wards, that he should pay for his primer seisin, a third part of the land in possession, and two parts as a reversion.

LXXIX. Mich. 15 Eliz. In the Common Pleas.

The case was; A man was seised of a pasture, in which was two great groves and a wood, known by the name of a wood; and also in the same pasture were certain hedge-rowes and trees there growing sparsim, leased the same by indenture for years. And by the same indenture bargained and sold to the lessee all woods and underwoods in and upon the premisses: and further, that it should and might be lawful to the lessee to cut down and carry away the same at all times during the term. Harper, Justice, The hedge-rowes did not pass by these words, Hedge-rowes sparsim. Dyer, The hedge-rowes shall pass, for [55] the grant is general, all woods. Mounson, contrary; for the words of the grant may be supplyed by other words. It was moved further, if by these words, the lessee may cut them oftner than once? and by Harper, Manwood, and Mounson, He can cut them but once. Dyer, contrary; And so it should be, if the words had been, Growing upon the premisses. And this word (growing,) although it sounds in the present tense, yet it shall be also taken in the future tense, if the word (tunc) had not been alledged; for it is a word of restraint. The case which was argued in the Chancery, 27 H. 8. where I was present, was such, The prior of St. John of Jerusalem leased a commandry; provided, that if the said prior, or any of his brethren there being commanders, will dwell thereupon, then the said lease to be void. It was doubted, if that did extend to the successors, for the word (being) is in the present tense. And yet it was holden by Fitzherbert, that it should be taken in the future tense, and so extend to the successors: otherwise, if the words had been (nunc) being.

LXXX. Mich. 15 Eliz. In the Common Pleas.

A man seised of lands in fee, devised, that his wife should take the profits of his lands, until Mary his daughter, and heir came to the age of 16 years; and if the said Mary died, that J. S. should be her heir. Manwood, The daughter after she hath attained the age of 16 years, shall have the land in tail; for devises ought to be construed according to the intent of the devisor, so far forth as any certainty with reason may be collected, but no intent shall be taken against all reason and certainty. It is certain, that the daughter shall not have the land in fee; for that shall descend to her without any devise: and these words (if she dieth) cannot be intended a condition; for it is certain she shall die. But if the words had been, that after the death of Mary, J. S. should be his heir; in such case, Mary had had but an estate for life, for there it is limited what estate she should have. And when it is said, J. S. shall be his heir, it shall be meant his collateral heir, so as the estate tail remains in the daughter. Mounson and Harper, to the contrary, and that she shall have but for life. And by Mounson, If Mary had been a stranger to the devise, she should take nothing. And this case was put by Barham, Serjeant, A man deviseth 100l. to his youngest daughter, 100l to his middle daughter, and another 100l. to his eldest daughter; and that all these sums shall be levied of the profits of his lands. It was holden by the better opinion of the Court in this case, that the youngest daughter should be first paid, and then the middle, and then the eldest daughter; and that was said to be Coniers case.

[56] LXXXI. Mich. 15 Eliz. In the Common Pleas.

The case was; The King granted to the Bishop of Salisbury, that he should have catalla felonum & fugitivor', and fines and amercements of all tenants and resiants within the mannor of D. which mannor, the bishop leased for years, and that the lessee should have all profits and hereditaments within the same mannor. Manwood, Justice, conceived, that the lessee should have the post fines: for all things have a being somewhere, although they be not visible; as rents, fines, have their being in the lands out of which they are issuing, and that is in the son, of a fine levied of the land within the mannor, which is due by land of him who ought to pay the fine. And this fine is due be reason of the land, therefore it is in the land, or within the land; i.e. the mannor. For the King may distrain for the fine as well in the same land, as in the land of him who ought to pay it. Dyer doubted of it, and said, that the bishop could not distrain in the land for this fine, but should have it by allowance in the Exchequer upon the estretes; and if the party would not pay it, the lessee should have a subpœna against him out of the Exchequer. And some were of opinion, that the lessee could not have this fine, for that they were not hereditaments within the mannor, but rather in the Exchequer, or Court where the record is.

It was moved further, if by those words, the lessee might cut them a second time, or but once? Harper, Manwood, and Mounson, He may cut them but once. Dyer, contrary; and so it should be, if the words had been, Growing upon the premisses. LXXXIII. Mich. 15 Eliz. In the Common Pleas.

A. made B. his executor, and died; B. to the intent to defraud the creditors, refused to take upon him the executorship, but caused a stranger to take upon him letters of administration; which stranger fraudulently gave the goods of the testator to B. Dyer, If the gift be fraudulent, then by the statute of 13 Eliz. the gift is void; and then B. by the occupation of the goods, shall be charged as executor of his own wrong. Manwood, I conceive there is a difference, if one makes an executor, and another takes the goods, but doth no act which concerns the office of an executor, as paying of debts; he is not executor of his own wrong, but a trespassor to him who is executor in right: but if he doth any act which belongs to the office of an executor, then he is executor of his own wrong. Dyer, That case hath been adjudged against you: and although the books of 9 E. 4. & 22 H. 6. were vouched; yet judgment was given against the opinion of Manwood. It was the case of one Stoke.

LXXXIV. JACKSON AND DARCYES CASE.

In a writ de partitione facienda, between Jackson and Darcy, the case was; Tenant in tail, the remainder to the King, levied a fine, had issue, and died; in that case, it was adjudged, that the issue was barred, and yet the remainder which was in the King was not discontinued; for by that fine, an estate in feesimple determinable upon the estate tail, did pass unto the conusee.

LXXXV. STROWDS CASE.

In a replevin, the case was, that lands holden of a subject, came to the possession of the King by the Statute of 1 E. 6. of Chauntries, and the King granted the lands over: in that case, it was holden, that the grantee shall hold the lands of the King according to the patent, and not of the ancient lord: but the patentee shall pay the rent by which the said land was before holden, as a rent seck distrainable of common right to the lord only and his heirs; scil. to him of whom the said lands were before holden.

MICH. 17 ELIZ. IN THE KINGS BENCH.

LXXXVI. TRESHAM AND ROBINS CASE.

Tresham brought an action of debt upon a recognizance against Robins; the condition of which recognizance was, to stand to the arbitrament of A. and B. who made award, that Robins should have the land, yielding and paying 10l. per annum; and that Tresham in further assurance, should levy a fine to Robins of the same land, and upon that, Robins should grant and render to Tresham; which is done accordingly: the rent is behind, Tresham brought debt upon the recognizance: the defendant pleaded the special matter, with this perclose, unde petit Judicium, if the plaintiff should have execution against him. And by the opinion of the whole Court, the conclusion of the plea is not good; for here is not any execution of the same debt, but an original action of debt brought; in which case, he ought to have concluded judgment si actio. It was further moved, if these words, yielding and paying, make a condition? and it was agreed, that the words do amount to as much as, so as he pay the rent: and if a man makes a feoffment in fee, reddendo & salvendo 10l. for years, the same is a condition. But in the principal case, it is not a condition; for it is not knit to the land by the owner itself, but by a stranger; i.e. arbitrator: but it is a good clause to make the same an article of the arbitrament, which the parties are bound to perform, upon pain of forfeiture of the recognizance: which Wray concessit; and that this rent should not cease by eviction of the land.

LXXXVII. THE EARL OF WESTMERLANDS CASE.

The Earl of Westmerland seised of a mannor, whereof the demesnes were usually let for three lives by copy, according to the custom of the mannor, granted a rentcharge to Sir William Cordell, pro consilio impendendo, for the term of his life, and afterwards conveyed the mannor to Sir William Clifton in tail. The rent is behind, Sir William Cordell dieth; Sir William Clifton dieth, the mannor descended to Sir John Clifton, who granted a copy-hold to Hempston; the executors of Sir William Cordell distrain for the rent: and it was agreed by the whole Court, that the copyholder should hold his copy-hold charged. Vide inde, 10 Eliz. Dyer 270. Windham, It hath been adjudged, that the wife of the lord shall not be endowed against the copyholder, which Periam granted, and shewed a reason thereof; for the title of dower is not consummated before the death of the husband, so as the title of the copyholder was compleated before the title of dower; but the title of the grantee of the rent is consummated before the dower. Fenner conceived, that the executors could not distrain upon the possession of the copyholder; and he argued, that this case is not within the statute of 32 H. 8. For by the preface of the said statute, he conceived, that the statute extended but to those cases, for which by the common law, no remedy was provided; but in this case the executors by the common law might have had an action of debt, ergo. But Periam and Windham held the contrary; for this statute intends a further remedy for that mischief, viz. not only an action of debt, but also distress and avowry. See the words of the statute, viz. distrain for the arrearages, &c. upon the lands, &c. which were charged with the payment of such rents, and chargeable to the distress of the testator so long as the said lands continue, remain, and be in the seisin or possession of the said tenant in demesne, who ought immediately to have paid the said rent so being behind to the said testator; or in the seisin or possession of any other person or persons claiming the said lands only by and from the said tenant by purchase, gift, or descent, in like manner and form as their testator might or ought to have done in his life-time. It was moved by Fenner, that here the land charged, doth not continue in the seisin or possession of the tenant; and here Sir J. Clifton was issue in tail, and therefore he doth not claim only by the father, but per formam doni, and therefore he is not lyable, ergo, nor his heir. Shuttleworth contrary, Sir J. Clifton was chargeable, and he claims only from them who immediately ought to have paid the rent. And the copyholder claims by purchase from Sir J. Clifton, so he claims from Sir [60] William Clifton the tenant, although he doth not claim immediately. For if the tenant ought to have paid it, and he dieth, and the land descendeth to his heir, and the heir maketh a feoffment, the feoffee shall be charged within this statute; although he doth not claim immediately: so where land discharged descends from the tenant who ought to have paid it; and so from heir to heir. The statute of 1 R. 2. is, that all grants, &c. shall be good against the donor, &c. his heirs, &c. claiming the same only as heirs to cestuy que use; yet if cestuy que use grants a rent-charge, and his feoffees are disseised, the grant shall be good against the disseisor, and yet he doth not claim only by cestuy que use. And although Sir J. Clifton be tenant in tail, and so claims per formam doni, yet forasmuch as the estate tail comes under the estate of him who grants the rent, he shall be subject to the charge: and this statute extends not only to him who claims by the tenant, but also to the heir of him, &c. And by Windham, and Rhodes, The copyholder doth not claim only by the lord, but he claims in also by the custom; but the custom is not any part of his title, but only appoints the manner how he shall hold. The possession here is continued in Sir J. Clifton, for the possession of his copyholder is his possession; so as if the copyholder be ousted, Sir J. Clifton shall have an assise; and so the strict words of the statute are observed, for the seisin and possession continue in Sir J. Clifton, who claims only by Sir William Clifton, who was the tenant in demesne who ought to pay the rent. But Fenner said to that, that the seisin and possession intended in the statute, was the very actual possession, i.e. pedis dispositio, and such a possession in which a distress might be taken, and that could not be taken in a freehold, without actual possession.

XC. MICH. 18 ELIZ. IN THE KINGS BENCH.

In an ejectione firmæ, upon an evidence, the case was this; The Bishop of Rochester, 4 E. 6. leased to B. for years, rendring rent; and afterwards granted the reversion to C. for 99 years, rendring the ancient rent; habendum from the day of the lease, without impeachment of waste; which grant was confirmed by the dean and chapter, but B. did not attorn. And in default of attornment, it was holden by the whole Court, that the lease was void: for it was made by way of grant of the reversion, and to pass as a reversion. But by Catline, If the bishop had granted the reversion, and also demised the land for 99 years, it should pass as a lease to begin first after the former lease determined. And as to the attornment, it was given in evidence, that B. after the notice of the grant to C. had speech with C. to have a new lease from him, because he had in his term but 8 years to come; but they could not agree upon the price. And it was the opinion of the justices, that the same was an attornment, because he had admitted the said C. to have power to make to him a new lease. Also the said B. being in company with one R. and seeing the said C. coming towards him, said to the said R. See my landlord, meaning the said C. Bromley, Sollicitor, The same is no attornment, being spoken to a stranger. Barham, contrary; Because that C. was present. And it was holden to be a good attornment: but if that attornment was not before that the bishop was translated to Winchester, the lease should be void. And although the confirmation of the dean and chapter was before the attornment, so as no estate was vested in C. yet it was good enough; for an assent of the dean and chapter is suffi-[62]-cient, be it before or after; as it was holden by Catline, Southcote, and Whiddon. But Wray contrary.

XCI. NORWICH AND NORWICH'S CASE.

Henry Norwich was bound by obligation to Symon Norwich, upon condition, to stand to the award of J. S. who awarded, that the said Henry should pay to Symon 150l. at such a day. And that the said Henry should find 3 sureties to be bounden with him to the said Symon for the payment of another sum of mony to the said Symon. In debt, upon this obligation, Henry pleaded, as to the 150l. payment; and as to the other point, that he was always ready to become bounden, &c. And as to the finding of sureties, he demanded judgment; for that, as to that, the arbitrament is void. See 22 H. 6. 45. 17 E. 4. 5. 21 E. 4. 75. It was holden, that in such a case of such award to find sureties, the defendant is not to find sureties, but is only to tender his obligation. And of that opinion, was the whole Court, because it was an act to be done by a stranger to the award. But if the award had been of an act to be done to a stranger, by him who was party to the award, then the award had been good: but if the stranger will not accept of the monies awarded, his obligation is saved. So if the award be, that one of the parties to the award shall discontinue a suit, which he hath against another; if the Court where the action is depending, will not suffer the discontinuance of it, the award is performed: and in the principal case, it was ruled accordingly.

Note; The same day another case was in the same Court, between Dudley and Mallery: the condition was, to perform an award, &c. The defendant pleaded performance of the award. The plaintiff assigned the breach of the award in this, because the award was, that the servant of Mallery should pay to the servant of Dudley 5l. which the defendant had not paid. It was the opinion of the Court, that the bond was not forfeited, for the servants utriusq; are strangers to the submission. But if the award had been, that Mallery should pay to the servant of Dudley 5l. it had been good, for that Mallery is a party to the submission, &c.

XCII. RIVERS AND PUDSEY'S CASE.

John Rivers, alderman of London, brought a writ of accompt against Pudsey; who said, that at the time, &c. and now, he is the plaintiffsa pprentice; and demanded judgment, &c. And it was holden by Wray, Justice, that it is no plea: for although an apprentice cannot be charged by this action, for ordinary receipts upon his masters trade; yet upon collateral receipts, which do not concern the ordinary trade of his master, he shall be charged as well as another. See 8 E. 3. tit. Acc. 94. And, F. N. B. 119.

XCIII. POTKINS CASE.

In debt upon an obligation by Potkin; the defendant pleaded, that he himself borrowed of one Watson a certain sum of mony, paying for the forbearance thereof excessive usury; and that the plaintiff was bound with the said defendant to the said Watson, for the payment thereof; and that he himself by this obligation upon which the action is brought, was bound to the said plaintiff to save him harmless against the said Watson, &c. And because that this bond was a counter-bond for the payment of excessive usury, &c. And it was holden by Manwood, that the same was a good bar; for here, the plaintiff when he was impleaded upon the principal bond, might have discharged himself upon this matter, and therefore his lachess shall turn to his prejudice; and therefore the issue was joyned upon the excessive usury.

XCIV. ABRAHALL AND NURSE'S CASE.

John Abrahall brought a writ of right-close against John Nurse, in the Court of George Earl of Shrewsbury, and made protestation to prosecute that writ in the form and nature of the writ of the Lady the Queen, of assise of novel disseisin, at the common-law, and made his plaint accordingly. And afterwards the assise was taken, who spake for the plaintiff; whereupon Abrahall had judgment to recover. After which, Nurse brought a writ of false judgment, and assigned error in this, that whereas the said writ of right-close was directed to the bailiffs of George Earl of Shrewsbury of his mannor, &c. that the said bailiffs should do full right, &c. that it appeareth by the record, that the plea was [64] holden before the suitors, and not before the bailiffs of George Earl of Shrewsbury. For all the precepts in the plea aforesaid, are, quod sint hic ad proximam Curiam coram sectatoribus tenend. An other error was in this, and false judgment was given therein, because that the roll is, præceptum est ministro Curiæ prædict. that he cause to come 12 free and lawful men, &c. videre illud tenementum, &c. & nomina eorum imbreviare, &c. and the minister of the Court retorned 12 recognitors of the assise aforesaid; whereas by the law of the land, 24 recognitors in a plea of land ought to be retorned. But notwithstanding that these exceptions were taken; yet upon due consideration of the Court, notwithstanding these exceptions, the judgment was affirmed. See the record, Mich. 17 & 18 Eliz. Rot. 1301.

XCV. THE MASTER AND SCHOLARS OF LINCKFORDS CASE.

In an ejectione firmæ, the case was; That the master and scholars of Linckford were seised of the mannor of Haldesley in the town of Laberhurst; which town extended into the county of Sussex, and also in the county of Kent; and they made a lease to one Clifford of all their lands in the town of Laberhurst, except the mannor of Haldesley; whereas in truth they had not any lands in the said town, but the said mannor: and the ejectione firmæ was brought of that mannor in Kent; and from thence the visne came, and all the special matter aforesaid was found by verdict: and exception was taken to the verdict, because they have found generally, that the master and scholars had not any thing in the said town of Laberhurst, but the said mannor: whereas, they ought to have said, that they had not any thing in the said town in the county of Kent: for they could not take notice what lands the master and scholars had in that part of the town which was in the county of Sussex. And of that opinion the whole Court seemed to be. But quære of it; for it was adjourned.

XCVI. HINDE AND LYONS CASE.

In debt by Hinde, against one as son and heir of Sir John Lyon, who pleaded, nothing by descent, but the third part of the mannor of D. The plaintiff replyed, assets; and shewed for assets, that the defendant had the whole mannor of D. by descent: upon which they were at issue. And it was given in evidence to the jury, that the said mannor was holden by knights-service; and that the said Sir John the ancestor of, &c. by his will in wri-[65]-ting, devised the whole mannor to his wife, until the defendant his son and heir should come to the age of 24 years; and that at the age of his son of 24 years, his wife should have the third part of the said mannor for her life, and his son should have the residue: and if that his said son do die before he come to his said age of 24 years without heir of his body, that the land should remain to J. S. the remainder over: the devisor died, the son came to the age of 24 years. The question was, If the son had an estate in tail, for then for two parts he was not in by descent. And it seemed to Dyer and Manwood, that here was not any estate in tail; for no tail shall rise, if not that the son die before his said age, and therefore the tail shall never take effect: and the fee-simple doth descend, and remain in the son, unless that he dieth before the age of 24 years; and then the estate vests with the remainder over: but now having attained to the said age, he hath the fee, and that by descent of the entier mannor, and then his plea is false, that but the third part descended. And a general judgment shall be given against him as of his own debt; and an elegit shall issue forth of the moyety of all his lands, as well those which he hath by descent from his ancestor, as his other lands; and a capias also lieth against him. But Manwood, Justice, conceived, that if a general judgment be given against the heir by default, in such cause, a capias doth not lie, although it lieth in case of a false plea. Dyer, contrary, And the writ against the heir is in the debet & detinet; which proves, that in law it is his own debt. And he said, that he could shew a president, where such an action was maintainable against the executors of the heir.

XCVII. Mich. 19 Eliz. In the Common Pleas.

The case was; A. seised of lands in fee, by his will in writing, granted a rent-charge of 5l. per annum out of the same to his younger son, towards his education and bringing up in learning: the question was, if in pleading, the devisee ought to aver, that he was brought up in learning? And it was holden by Dyer, Manwood, and Mounson, Justices, that there needs no such averment; for the devise is not conditional: and therefore although he be not brought up in learning, yet he shall have the rent: and the words of the devise are, Towards his bringing up. And the devisor well knew, that 5l. per annum, would not and could not reach to maintain a scholar in learning, diet, apparel, and books. And this rent, although it be not sufficient to such intent, yet the son shall have it. And by Dyer, Three years past, such case was in this Court, scil. Two were bounden to stand to the award of certain persons; who awarded, that the one of them should pay unto the other 20s. per annum during the term of 6 years, towards the education and bringing up of [66] such an enfant; and within two years of the said term, the enfant died, so as now there needed not any supply towards his education: yet it was holden, that the said yearly sum ought to be paid for the whole term after: for the words, Towards his education, are but to shew the intent and consideration of the payment of that sum; and are not the words of a condition.

XCVIII. Mich. 19 Eliz. In the Common Pleas.

In a quare impedit; the plaintiff declared, that the defendant was seised in fee of the mannor of Orchard, alias Lydcots-farm, to which the advowson is appendant, and presented such a one, &c. And afterwards leased to the plaintiff the said mannor per nomen of the mannor of Orchard, alias Lydcots-farm, with the appurtenances for 21 years, and the church became void, &c. And the truth of the case was; that there is the mannor of Orchard, and within the said mannor, the said farm called Lydcots farm, parcel of the said mannor, and the lease was of the said farm; and not of the said mannor, and so the advowson remained to the lessor, as appendant to the mannor; in this case, it was moved, what thing the defendant should traverse: Dyer, He shall say; that the advowson is appendant to the mannor of Orchard, absq; hoc, that it is appendant to the farm of Lydcots: but it seemed to Manwood, that the defendant shall say; that the advowson is appendant to the mannor of Orchard, and that the farm of Lydcots is parcel of the said mannor, and that he leased to the plaintiff the said farm, with the appurtenances, absq; hoc, that the mannor of Orchard, and the said farm, are all one; for if he traverse the appendancy to the farm of Lydcots, then he confesseth, that the mannor and farm are all one, &c. But Dyer doubted of it.

XCIX. Kirlee and Lees Case.

In action upon the case upon assumpsit, the plaintiff declared, that the defendant in consideration, that the plaintiff would marry the daughter of the defendant, did promise to find to the plaintiff and his said wife convenient apparel, meat and drink for themselves and two servants, and pasture also for two geldings, by the space of 3 years, when the plaintiff would require it; and further shewed, that licet the plaintiff had married the defendants daughter, and that he had required the defendant to find, ut supra, &c. the defendant refused, &c. The defendant said, that he promised to find meat, drink, and apparel for the plaintiff and his wife for 3 years, absq; hoc, that he promised to [67] find meat and drink for two servants, and pasture for two geldings: the plaintiff replicando, said, that the defendant did promise to find, &c. for 3 years next following. Upon which they were at issue, and found for the plaintiff. It was moved in arrest of judgment, that here is no issue joyned; for the plaintiff hath declared upon a promise to find, &c. for 3 years, when the plaintiff will that require. The defendant hath pleaded a promise to find apparel, meat and drink for the plaintiff and his wife for 3 years, absq; hoc, that he promised for two servants, and two geldings; and now the plaintiff replicando, saith, that the defendant assumed for 3 years next following; so here is another assumpsit in the replication, than that whereof the plaintiff declared, and so the plaintiff hath not joyned issue upon the assumpsit traversed by the defendant, and so there is no issue joyned, for the defendant denyeth the assumpsit whereof the plaintiff hath declared. And the plaintiff in his replication hath affirmed another assumpsit than that whereof he hath declared; and that is not helped by the Statute of Jeofails; for it is not a mis-joyning of issue, but a not joyning of issues; and that was holden by the Court, to be a material exception. And the Lord Dyer conceived, that here is a departure; for the plaintiff in his replication hath alledged another promise, than that whereof he declared. Another exception was, because that the plaintiff had not averred in facto, that he had married the daughter of the defendant, but by an argument implicative (licet;) but that exception was disallowed; for that the word (licet) is not a bare implicative, but it is an express averment; and so it was said, it had been ruled before. A lease for years was, upon condition, that the lessee should not grant over the land at will, or otherwise: he devised the same to his executors, who accepted the same only as executors, and not as devisees: and yet it was the opinion of the justices, that the condition was broken, because he had done as much as lay in him, to have devised the land. CII. MICH. 20 ELIZ. IN THE KINGS BENCH.

An action upon the Statute of 5 Eliz. of Perjury, was brought by three; and they declared, that the defendant being examined upon his oath before commissioners, if a surrender was made at such a court of such a mannor of a copyhold, to the use of A. and B. two of the defendants swore, that no such surrender was made, &c. Exception was taken to the declaration, because that the certainty of the copyhold did not appear upon the declaration: for the statute is, that in that case the party grieved shall have remedy; so as it ought to appear in what thing he is grieved, quod fuit concessum per totam Curiam. Another exception was taken, because that the action in such case is given to the party grieved. And it appeareth upon the declaration, that the surrender in the negative deposing, of which the perjury is assigned, was made to the use of two of the plaintiffs only; and then the third person is not a party grieved; for he claims nothing by the surrender; and therefore, and because the two parties grieved have joyned with the third person not grieved, it was the opinion of Wray and Southcote, Justices, that the writ should abate.

Note: it was said by Dyer and Manwood, Justices, If one be condemned in an action upon the case or trespass, upon nihil dicit, or demurrer, &c. and a writ issueth to enquire of the damages, and before the retorn of the writ, the defendant dyeth; the writ shall not abate for that; for the awarding of the said writ is a judgment. And Manwood said; In a writ of accompt, the defendant is awarded to accompt, and the defendant doth accompt, and is found in arrearages, and dieth; the writ shall not abate, but judgment shall be given, that the plaintiff shall recover, and the executor shall be charged with the arrearages; and yet accompt doth not lie against them.

CIV. Mich. 20 Eliz. In the Common Pleas.

In an action upon escape, the plaintiff is nonsuit. It was holden by the justices, that the defendant in that case shall not have costs, by the statute of 23 H. 8. Note, the words in the statute, upon any action upon the statute, (for any offence or wrong personal supposed to be done immediately to the plaintiff) notwithstanding this action is, Quodam modo an action within the statute; scil. by equity of the Statute of Westm. 2. which [69] give expresly against the warden of the Fleet; yet properly it is not an action upon the statute: for that in the declaration in such action, no mention is made of the statute. Which, see the Book of Entries 169, 171. And also here there is not supposed any immediate personal offence, or wrong to the plaintiff: and an action upon the case, it is not, for then the writ ought to make mention of the escape, which it doth not here; and yet at the common law before the Statute of Westm. 2. An action upon the case lay upon an escape; and so by the opinion of Dyer, Manwood, Mounson, Justices, costs are not given in this case; and Manwood said; that upon nonsuit in an action upon the statute of 8 H. 6. The defendant shall not have costs, for that the same is not a personal wrong, for the writ is disseisivit, which is a real tort.

In debt upon an obligation to perform certain covenants, in a pair of indentures; the plaintiff assigned the breach in one of the covenants; scil. that the defendant should do all reparations of such a house demised to him; and that he had not repaired, but suffered the same to decay. To which the defendant said, that the plaintiff had acquitted and discharged him of the reparations. Upon which the plaintiff demurred in law. Manwood, The same is an acquittal and discharge of the reparations as well for the time past, as for the time to come, by force of the said covenant, and amounts to as much as if he had released the covenant. And it was moved, if the covenant being broken for want of reparations, if now that acquittal and discharge, or release of the covenant, should take away the action upon the obligation which was once forfeited before? and it was the opinion of Manwood, that it should not; for if one be bound in an obligation for the performance of covenants, and before the breach of any of them, the obligee releaseth the covenants, and afterwards one of the covenants is broken, the obligation is not forfeited, for there is not now any covenant which may be broken, and therefore the obligation is discharged: but if the release had been after the covenant broken, otherwise: all which, Dyer and Mounson concesserunt.

Husband and wife, seised in the right of his wife of certain customary lands in fee, he and his wife by licence of the lord, make a lease for years by indenture rendring rent, have issue two daughters: the husband dieth; the wife takes another husband, and they have issue a son and a daughter: the husband and wife die, the son is admitted to the reversion, and [70] dieth without issue. It was holden by Manwood, that this reversion shall descend to all the daughters, notwithstanding the half-blood; for the estate for years which is made by indenture by licence of the lord, is a demise and lease according to the order of the common law; and according to the nature of the devise, the possession shall be adjudged; which possession cannot be said, possession of the copyholder; for his possession is customary, and the other is meer contrary, therefore the possession of the one shall not be said the possession of the other; and therefore there is no possessio fratris in this case: but if he had been guardian by the custom, or this lease had been made by surrender, there the sister of the half-blood should not inherit. And Meade said, that the case of the guardian had been so adjudged. Mounson to the same intent; And if the copyhold descend to the son, he is not copyholder before admittance; but he may take the profits, and punish trespass, &c.

CVII. Hinde and Lyons Case.

Debt by Hinde, against one as son and heir of Sir John Lyon, who pleaded, nothing by descent, but the third part of the mannor of D. The plaintiff replyed, assets; and shewed for assets, that the defendant had the entire mannor of B. by descent; upon which they were at issue; and it was given in evidence to the jury, that the mannor was holden by knights-service, and that the said Sir John the ancestor of the defendant by his will in writing devised the whole mannor to his wife, until the defendant his son and heir should come to the age of 24 years; and that at the age of the son of 24 years, his wife should hold the third part of the said mannor for the term of her life, and his son should have the residue: and if his son do die before he come to the age of 24 years without heir of his body, that the land should remain over to J. S. the remainder over to another; the devisor died, the son came to the age of 24 years; Dyer and Mounson, Justices, conceived, that here was not any estate tail, and then for two parts he is not in by descent; for no estate tail shall rise unless that the son dieth before his said age, and therefore the tayl never took effect, and the feesimple descends and remains in the son, if not that he dieth before the age of 24 years, and then the whole vests with the remainder over; but now having attained the said age, he hath a fee, and that by descent of the whole mannor; and then his plea is false, that but the third part descended. And a general judgment shall be given against him as of his own debt; and an elegit shall issue forth of the moyety of all his lands, as well those which he hath by descent from the same ancestor, as of his other lands; and a capias lieth [71] also against him. But Manwood, Justice, conceived, that if a general judgment be given against the heir by default, in such case a capias doth not lie, although in case of a false plea it lieth: but Dyer held the contrary. And the writ against the heir is in the debet & detinet: which proves, that in law it is his own debt. A. seised of lands in fee, devised them to his wife for life; and after her decease, she to give the same to whom she will; had issue two daughters, and died; the wife granted the reversion to a stranger, and committed waste; and the two daughters brought an action of waste: it was holden by the justices, that by that devise, the wife had but an estate for life, but she had gained authority to give the reversion by his will to whom she pleased. And such a grantee should be in by A. and his will: for A. had given expresly to his wife for life, and therefore by implication she should not have any further estate: but if an express estate had not been appointed to the wife; by the other words, an estate in fee-simple had passed.

It was moved, if that decree were a lawful eviction by which the covenant was broken? It was holden by the Lord Dyer, that the same was not any eviction: for although that in conscience it be æquum, that the said stranger have the possession; yet the same is not by reason of any right paramount the title of the lessor; which was in the party for whom it was decreed.

CX. THE MARQUESS OF NORTHAMPTONS CASE.

Parre, Marquess of Northampton, took to wife the Lady Bouchier, the heir of the Earl of Essex, who levied a fine of the land of the said lady, sur conusans de droit, &c. with a grant and render to them for life, the remainder to the right heirs of the body of the lady: and afterwards by Act of Parliament, 35 H. 8. it was enacted, that the said lady should hold part of [72] her inheritance, and dispose of the same as a feme sole, and that the marquess should have the residue, and that he might lease the same by himself without his wife for 21 years or less, rendring the ancient rent, being land which had been usually demised, &c. The marquess leased for 21 years, and afterwards durante termino prædict. leased the same land to another for 21 years, to begin after the determination of the first lease. It was moved in this case, that this last lease was void, and that for 3 causes; 1. because the marquess had but an estate for life, and then it could not be intended that the statute did enable one who had but such an estate determinable, to make such a lease, which peradventure might not commence in his life-time. 2. The letter of the statute is, 21 years, or under; and the word (under) strongly expounded the meaning of the statute to be, not to extend to such an estate; for here upon the matter is a lease for 40 years. 3. Because the land demised, is the inheritance of the wife: and in this case it was said, that in the case of one Heydon, such a private act was strictly construed; which was, that it was enacted, that all copies for 3 lives, granted by the Lord Admiral of the lands of his wife, should be good. The admiral granted leases in reversion for 3 lives: and it was holden, that that grant was not warranted by the statute. Dyer said, The words are general, omnes dimissiones, and therefore not to be restrained unto special leases; scil. to leases in possession. Manwood said, A feme covert by duresse, joyns in a lease with her husband, the same shall bind her.

CXI. THE QUEEN AND SIR JOHN CONSTABLES CASE.

A quo warranto was brought by the Queen against Sir John Constable, who claimed certain wreck in the county of York; the defendant pleaded, that Edward Duke of Buck. was seised of such a mannor, to which he had wreck appendant, and that he was de alta proditione debito modo attinctus, and that found before the escheator; and shewed further, that the said mannor descended to Queen Mary, who granted the same to the Earl of Westmerland, who granted the same to the defendant: upon which, it was demurred. And exception was taken to the plea, because the attainder is not fully and certainly pleaded. It was argued by Plowden, that the attainder was certainly pleaded, scil. debito modo attinctus; and it is shewed, that the wreck is appendant to the mannor, and then if the defendant hath the mannor, he hath the wreck also; and if he hath the mannor, it is not material as to the Queen how he hath it, for the Queen doth not claim the same, but impeacheth the defendant for using there such a liberty; but if the heir of the said duke [73] had demanded the mannor there against him, the attainder ought to have been pleaded certainly. And it was said by him, that the interest of the Queen in the sea, extends unto the midst of the sea betwixt England and Spain; but the Queen hath the whole jurisdiction of the sea between England and France, because she is Queen of England, France, &c. And so it is of Ireland.

In an action upon the case, the case was, that A. had pawned an indenture of lease for years, of a messuage and lands to Banks; Thwaits, intending to purchase the same, required Banks to deliver him the said lease, and he would give Banks 10l. whether he bought it or no, at what time he would request the 10l. And Banks delivered the same to Thwaits accordingly. And afterwards brought an action upon the case, and declared upon the whole matter; and concluded, licet sæpius requisitus, &c. without alledging a request express in certain, and the day and place of it. It was said by Cook, that here the monies did not grow due before request, nor is payable before request, and therefore a request ought to be made in facto; and so, he said, it was ruled in this Court, in an action upon the case, betwixt Palmer and Burroughs; and he said, that the mony was not due by the promise, but by the request. And it was the opinion of the whole Court, that although it be a duty, yet it is not a duty payable before request; and the request makes a title to the action: but if A. selleth to B. a horse for 10l. there is a contract, and a request in facto, need not be layed. And the opinion of the Court was also, that upon this matter the plaintiff could not have an action of debt; for there is not any contract, for the thing is not sold, but it is a collateral promise grounded upon the delivery: and by Clench, Here the request is traversable: and afterwards judgment was given against the plaintiff. And it was said, it was so ruled in Alderman Pullisons case, in the Exchequer.

CXIV. SEGAR AND BOYNTONS CASE.

In trespass, the case was this; King Henry the 8th, anno 27 of his reign, gave the manor of D. to Sir Edward Boynton, knight, and to the heirs males of his body; Sir Edward Boynton had issue Andrew his eldest son, and C. the defendant his younger son, and died: Andrew Boynton covenanted by indenture with the Lord Seymore, that the said Andrew Boynton would assure the said mannor to the use of himself for life, the remainder to the said lord and his heirs: the said Lord Seymore in recompence thereof, should assure other lands to the use of himself for life, the remainder to the use of the said Andrew Boynton in tail; who 37 H. 8. levyed a fine of the said mannor without proclamations to two strangers, to the uses according to the said agreement; and before any assurance made by the said lord, the said lord was attainted of treason, and all his lands were forfeited to the King: and afterwards the said Andrew Boynton made a suggestion to Queen Mary, of the whole matter; and upon his humble petition, the said Queen by her letters patents reciting the said mischief, &c. et præmissa considerans, et annuens petitioni illius, granted to him the mannor aforesaid; and further de ampliori gratia sua, released to the said Andrew Boynton all her right, possession, &c. which came to her ratione attincturæ prædict', vel in manibus nostris existant, vel existere deberent: after which, viz. 5 Eliz. Andrew Boynton levied a fine to the plaintiff with proclamations, and died without issue. And, the defendant as issue in tail entred. Puckering, Serjeant; It is to see, 1. If by the words of the letters patents of Queen Mary, viz. de ampliori sua gratia, &c. the reversion in fee which the Queen had, passed or not. 2. Admitting that the reversion did not pass, then if the fine levied by Andrew Boynton, 5 Eliz. to the plaintiff, the reversion being in the Queen, be a bar to the issue; for when the first fine was levied 37 H. 8. which was levied without proclamations, the same shall not bind the issue in tail, neither as to the right, nor to the entry, for it is not any discontinuance, because the reversion is in the King, as of things which lie in discontinuance, rent, common, &c. for such fine is a fine at the common law, and not within the statute of 4 H. 7. And such a fine is void against the issue: but if such a fine without proclamations be levied of a thing which lieth in discontinuance, then such a fine is not void, but voidable by a formedon: and therefore this fine, in the case at Bar, being levied without proclamations of lands entailed, whereof the reversion is in the King at the time of the fine levied, shall not bind the issue; and by such fine the conusee hath fee, [75] which fee was forfeited to the Queen by the attainder of the Lord Seymore, and that the Queen immediately restored to Andrew Boynton, because the Lord Seymore had not according to agreement betwixt them, assured his lands to the said Andrew Boynton in recompence; for the indentures themselves were not sufficient to raise any use. See acc. 1 Mar. Dyer, 96. As to the point he conceived, that nothing passed of the reversion, for the grant hath reference to the words, All his right, possession, &c. which came to her ratione attincturæ, and all the residue of the grant, ought to have reference to that, to the ratione attincturæ prædict. which was the foundation of the whole grant; and here the intent of the Queen was not to other intent, but only to restore Andrew Boynton to the said mannor, and to his ancient estate in it; and nothing appears in the said letters patents by which it might appear, that the Queen was apprised of her reversion which she had by descent, and therefore the same cannot pass by general words: if the King grants the goods and chattels of all those who have done any trespass for which vitam amittere debent, the goods of him who is attainted of treason, shall not be forfeited or granted by such general words: 8 H. 4. 2. The King grants omnia catalla tenentium suorum qualitercunq; damnatorum, the same doth not extend to the goods of him who is condemned for treason. See 22 Ass. 49. So in our case, the patent shall not serve to two intents, and not to pass two interests by these general words, and then nothing passeth but the fee determinable which was conveyed to the Lord Seymore, and forfeited by the attainder. Then it is to be considered, how after the said grant, the said Andrew Boynton is seised; and he conceived, that he should be in of the said fee determinable, and not of an estate in tail, against his own fine; and then if he be not seised by force of the tail at the time of the fine levied, 5 Eliz. the same fine cannot bind the entail: but admitting, that at the time of the second fine levied, that he was in of an estate in tail, yet that fine shall not bar the issue; for first, this fine cannot make any discontinuance, because that the reversion in fee is in the King, which is not touched by the fine. See the case of Saunders, where A. makes a lease for years, to begin at a day to come, and afterwards levies a fine to a stranger with proclamations, and the 5 years pass, and afterwards at the day of the beginning of the said lease, the lessee enters; his entry is lawful, and he shall not be bounden by the nonclaim; and so it was adjudged in Saunders and Starkies case. Vide inde Saffins case, 3 Jac. Cook 5 Part, 123, 124. After the making of the Statute of 4 H. 7. of Fines, it was much doubted, if the issues of common tenants in tail should be bound by a fine with proclamations, because upon the death of their ancestors, they are as new purchasors per formam doni. And therefore it was provided by 32 H. 8. that the said statute of 4 H. 7. should extend to such common entails; but there was [76] no doubt of an estate tail of the gift of the King. And see Mich. 15 & 16 Eliz. Rot. 1474. between Jackson and Darcy, in a partitione facienda, the case was, tenant in tail, the remainder to the King, after the statute of 32 H. 8. levied a fine with proclamations, and it was adjudged, that the same should bind the issues; the Act of 32 H. 8. doth not extend but where the reversion is in the King, but no mention is there of a remainder, because that the words of the said Act are general of all tenants in tail; the makers of the Act perceiving, that it might be doubted, that the generality of the words might include all estates tails of the gift of the King, they restrained the words in a special manner; as appeareth by the last proviso of the same Act, nor to any fines heretofore levied or hereafter to be levied by any person or persons of any mannors, &c. before the levying of the said fine, given, granted or assigned to the person or persons levying the said fine, or to any of his or their ancestors in tail by letters patents, or Act of Parliament, the reversion whereof at the time of the levying of such fine was in the King: and so such estates are excepted, and that in such cases, where such fines are levied, they shall be of such force as they should be if the said Act had not been made. And therefore it seemed to the said Parliament, that such estate tails of the gift of the King were not bounden by the statute of 4 H. 7. for otherwise, the said proviso or exception had been frivolous. Walmesley, Serjeant, to the contrary; and he agreed, that the first fine was not any discontinuance; and yet he conceived it is not altogether void against the issues before that they entred; for no right remains in the conusor against his fine: and also he conceived, that this clause, ex uberiori gratia, did extend to pass more than passed before; for he conceived, that the Queen intended more liberally, viz. the reversion; for this is not any matter of prerogative, but the same is a matter of interest, which might also in the Kings case pass out of the King by general words. See 3 H. 7. 6 & 7 Br. Patents, 48. A grant of the King ex insinuatione, doth not hinder the force of the words, ex mera motu. And it was the opinion of the whole Court, that the reversion which was in the King did not pass by that grant; for the whole scope of the patent was, as he conceived, to grant only that which the King had then ratione attincturæ. Anderson conceived the patent insufficient, because the petition was not full and certain; also he said, that ex speciali gratia, &c. would not help this case; for the estate tail is not recited, but only that he was seised de statu hæreditario, &c. so the Queen was deceived, &c. Periam contrary, The Queen was advised of the mischief, and granted such estate with which he parted by the fine. And as to the other point, Walmesley conceived, that the fine with proclamations should bind the tail: and as to the objection which hath been made, that the conusor at the time of the fine levied, was not seised by force of the entail; the same had been a [77] good matter to have alledged to avoid a common recovery in the tenant to the præcipe, but not to this purpose: for if there be tenant in tail, and he levieth a fine, although he was not seised at the time of the fine levied by force of the entail, yet such a fine shall bind the issue; so if tenant in tail discontinueth, and disseiseth the discontinuee, and so levies a fine. And he conceived, that the issue in tail is bound by the statute of 4 H. 7. even of the gift of the King. See 19 H. 8. 6 & 7. Where it is holden, that the issue in tail is bound by the statute of 4 H. 7. and where it hath been objected, that it doth not extend but to such fines which make discontinuance at the common law, the same is not so: for if tenant in tail of a rent, or common, levieth a fine with proclamations, it is clear, that the issues shall be barred by it. And he much relyed upon 29 H. 8. Dyer, 32. Tenant in tail of the gift of the King levieth a fine, or suffereth a common recovery, although it be not a discontinuance, because that the reversion is in the King; yet it is a bar unto the issue. But note, that that was before the statute of 34 H. 8. See Wisemans case, 27 Eliz. Cook 2 Part. And see the Lord Staffords case, 7 Jac. Cook 8 Part, 78.

A man seised of lands called Hayes, which extended into two towns, A. and B. devised Hayes-Land in A. to his wife for life, and after to his son; and if the son die without issue, then Hayes-Land shall remain to his 3 daughters, &c. The son died without issue; it was the opinion of Anderson and Periam, Justices, that all Hayes-Land should not pass by the said devise, but only that which was in A.

CXVI. Henry and Brode's Case.

In an action of trespass, the plaintiff declared, that the defendant simul cum J. S. and another clausum suum fregit; and exception was taken to it, because here it appeareth upon the plaintiffs own shewing, that the trespass whereof, &c. was made by the defendant and another; and therefore the writ brought against Brode only, was not good. But if it had been simul cum aliis ignotis personis, it had been good enough. But here the plaintiff hath confessed another person trespassor with the defendant. See 2 H. 7. 15. 8 H. 5. 5. 14 H. 4. 22. Yet afterwards in the principal case, judgment was given for the plaintiff.

CXVII. Barker and Taylers Case.

The case was; A woman tenant in tail within the statute of 11 H. 7. accepted a fine sur conusans de droit come ceo, &c. and by the same fine rendred the land to the conusor for 1000 years: it was moved, if this conveyance and disposition was within the penalty of the statute: for the statute speaks of discontinuances, &c. And it was the clear opinion of the Court, that the same is within the statute, for by such practice, the meaning of the statute might be defeated: and if such render for a 100 years should be good, by the same reason for 1000 years, which is as great a mischief and as dangerous to those in reversion, as discontinuances. And by Rhodes, Justice, It hath been adjudged, that if a woman who hath title of dower, if before she be endowed, she will enter and levy a fine, the same is within the said statute, and yet she is not tenant in dower. A. by his last will, willed, that his lands should descend to his son; but willed, that his wife should take the profits thereof until the full age of his said son of 21 years to maintain, and bring him up, and died: the wife took husband, and died, during the nonage of the son: it was the opinion of Wray and Southcote, Justices, that the second husband should not have the profits until, &c. for nothing is devised to the wife but a confidence; and she is as a guardian or bailiff, to aid the enfant, which by her death is determined, and cannot accrue to the husband; but if the husband had devised the profits of the land to the wife, until the age of the enfant, for to bring up and educate, ut supra. Wray said, the same amounted to a devise of the land and so a chattel in the wife, which should accrue to the husband.

CXIX. STAMPS CASE.

The case was: John Stampe being possessed of a term for years granted the same to Thomas Stampe his brother 12 May 20 Eliz. And afterwards, 8 Octob. 21 Eliz. he himself being in possession of it, mortgaged the same to one P. who suffered him to continue his possession: Thomas Stampe granted his [79] estate to John Stampe, who mortgaged the same to one G. who suffered the said John Stampe to continue in possession until 10 December, 22 Eliz. G. entred, John Stampe came to the said P. and requested him, that he would grant all his estate to B. and C. to whom the said John Stampe was endebted for security of their monies; to whom the said P. said, that if he would find him any other surety for his debt, he is contented so to do. And John Stampe offered to the said P. the said B. and C. and he accepted the same, and at the request of the said John Stampe, granted his interest to them 2 Feb. 22 Eliz. P. having notice of the grant before made to the said G. upon which G. enformed against P. upon the statute of 32 H. 8. It was holden in this case by Periam and Meade, Justices, that P. was not within the penalty of the statute: for P. granted his interest to B. and C. at the suit and at the request of John Stampe, who was the mortgager, for assurance of his debt which he ought to them; and therefore it shall not be intended, that that grant was made for any maintenance, or for any unlawful cause against the statute. And also John Stampe who granted unto P. had possession, and received the issues and profits of the said lands for a whole year before the grant, notwithstanding that he was not in possession by a whole year next before the day of the date of the grant. As if a man be in possession, or hath received the issues and profits for a whole year, and afterwards a stranger enters upon him, and hath the possession for the space of a quarter of a year, or half a year; yet he who was in possession by a year before, may grant his interest without danger of the statute, &c.

Note: per totam Curiam; A man made his will in this manner; scil. I will and bequeath my land to A. And the name of the devisor is not in the whole will; yet the devise is good enough by averment of the name of the devisor. And for proof that the same is his will, if one lying in extremis, having an intent to devise his lands by word, makes such devise, but doth not command the same to be put in writing, but another without the knowledge or commandment of the devisor, putteth it in writing in the life-time of the devisor, the same is a good devise; for it is sufficient, if the devise be reduced into writing during the life of the devisor.

CXXI. Pepy's Case.

Waste was brought by F. and his wife against Pepy; and declared, that the said Pepy was seised, and enfeoffed certain persons to the use of himself for life, and afterwards to the use of the wife of the plaintiff, and her heirs: the defendant pleaded, that the said feoffment was to the use of himself and his heirs in fee, &c. absque hoc, that it was to the uses, as in the count; upon which they were at issue: and it was found by verdict, that the said feoffment was to the uses contained in the count; but further found, that the estate of the defendant by the limitation of the use was priviledged with the impunity of waste; scil. without impeachment of waste. It was moved, if upon that verdict, the plaintiff should have judgment. Anderson and Rhodes, Justices, conceived, that he should, for that the matter in issue is found for the plaintiff; and that is, the feoffment to uses contained in the count, and this impunity of waste is a foreign matter not within the charge of the jury; and therefore the finding of the same is but matter of surplusage: as if I plead a feoffment of J. S. to which the other pleads, that he did not enfeoff, and the jury find a conditional feoffment, the Court shall not respect the finding of the condition, for it was not in issue, and no advantage shall be ever had of such a liberty if it be not pleaded, 30 H. 8. Dyer 41. In dower, the tenant pleaded, ne unq; seisi que dower, &c. The tenant pleaded, that before the coverture of the demandant, one A. was seised, and gave the land whereof dower is demanded to the husband of the demandant in tail, who made a feoffment; a stranger took the demandant to wife, took back an estate in fee, and died seised, having issue inheritable: now although upon the truth of the matter she is not dowable de jure, yet forasmuch as the parties were at issue upon a point certain, no forrein, nor strange matter not in question betwixt the parties shall be respected in the point of judgment: but if the defendant had pleaded it in bar, he might have foreclosed the demandant of her dower. See 38 Ass. 27. 47 E. 19. In a præcipe quod reddat upon the default of the tenant, came one and shewed, how that the tenant who made default, was but tenant for life of the lands in demand, the reversion in fee to himself, and prayed to be received: the demandant counterpleaded the resceit, dicendo, that the tenant had fee, &c. upon which, issue was taken: and it was found, that neither the tenant, nor he who prayed to be received, had any thing in the land. And in that case, the Court did not regard the matter which was superfluous in the verdict: for [81] they were at issue upon a point certain; scil. whether the tenant was seised in fee: for it is confessed of the one side, and of the other, that he had an estate for life, and of that matter the jury was not charged, and they are not to enquire of that; and so it is found against the demandant, by which the resceit was granted. See 7 H. 6. 20. The parties were at issue upon a dying seised; which is found by verdict; but the jury find further, that the other party made continual claim: the said continual claim shall not be respected in point of judgment, because it was not pleaded in avoidance of the discent, &c. Windham, Justice, to the contrary, because it appeareth to us upon the verdict, that the plaintiff hath not cause of action, and therefore he shall not have judgment: as in detinue, the plaintiff declares upon a baylment by his own hands; the defendant pleads, ne detinue pas, the jury find the detinue but upon baylment by another hand: in that case notwithstanding that the detinue be found; yet the plaintiff shall not have judgment. But Anderson, Rhodes, and Periam conceived, that in the principal case judgment should be given for the plaintiff: for in no case the party shall have advantage of that liberty of impunity of waste, if he doth not plead it; and the jurors are not to meddle with any matter which is not in issue; and if they do, it is but matter of surplusage, and to no purpose; and afterwards, judgment was given for the plaintiff. See the number roll, Pasch. 25 Eliz. Rot. 602.

PASCH. 20 ELIZ. IN THE COMMON PLEAS.

CXXII. SKIPWITH'S CASE.

In an action of trespass: it was found by a special verdict; that the lands were copy-hold lands. That the custom of the mannor was, that quælibet fœmina viro co-operta poterit devise lands, of which she was seised of an estate of inheritance in fee simple according to the custom to her husband, and also surrender the same in the presence of the steward and 6 other of the tenants. And it was further found, that one J. S. was seised of the copy-hold lands, wherein the trespass was; and that he had issue 2 daughters and died seised of the said lands: and that after his decease his two daughters entred into the said lands, and afterwards, they both took husbands: and that afterwards, one of the said daughters made a will in writing, and by her said will, in the presence of the steward, and six of the tenants, she devised her part of the said copy-hold lands to her husband and his heirs; and at the next court, surrendred the said copy-hold lands in the presence of the steward and six other of the tenants, to the uses in her will expressed, and shortly after she died; and that after her death, [82] her husband was admitted to the said part of her lands: who continued the possession thereof; and the husband of the other daughter and his wife entred upon him: upon whom, he re-entred; and the husband brought trespass. This case was argued at the Bar, by Rhodes: and he said, that the custom was not good; neither for the devise, nor for the surrender. First, for the incertainty of the estate, what estate she might devise, for that is not expressed in the custom; but generally that she might devise her copyhold lands of inheritance, without expressing for what estate. And secondly, the custom is not good; for that it is against reason, that the wife should surrender to the use of her husband; and that a custom to devise is not good where it is incertain, he vouched many cases; as 13 E. 3. tit. Dum Fuit infra Ætatum. 3. The tenant said, that the lands lay in the county of Dorset, where the custom is, that an enfant might make a grant or a feoffment when he could number 12d. and because it is incertain when he could do it, it was holden to be a void custom. So 19 E. 2. tit. Gard. 127. In a ravishment of ward, it was alledged, that the custom was, that when an enfant could measure an ell of cloath, or number 12d. that he should be out of ward; and it was holden to be a void custom for the incertainty: also he said, that in the principal case, the custom was void; for that it was against reason, that the wife should surrender to her husband; for every surrender is a gift; and a woman cannot give unto her husband; for the wife hath not any disposing will, but the will of her husband only. And therefore the case is in 21 E. 3. that if the husband be seised of lands in the right of his wife; and he maketh a feoffment in fee of the lands, and the wife being upon the lands doth disagree, and saith, she will not depart with the land during her life; yet the feoffment is a good feoffment, and shall bind the wife during the life of the husband. And see 3 E. 3. Br. tit. Devise, 43. that a feme covert cannot devise to her husband, for that should be the act of the husband to convey the lands to himself. And whereas the case in 29 E. 3. was objected against him, where the case was, that a woman being seised of land devisable, took a husband, and had issue by him; and the wife devised her lands to her husband for his life, and died; and a writ of waste was afterwards brought against him: and it was there holden, that the writ did lie. He said, that that case did make rather for him than against him, for that case proves, that the husband did not take the land by vertue of the devise in his own right; but that he held the lands having issue by the wife as tenant by the courtesie, and so under another title; and therefore it appeareth, that the writ of waste was there brought against him as tenant by the courtesie. Also he said, that the devise was void by the statute of 34 H. 8. cap. 5. where it is enacted, that wills and testaments made of any lands, tenements, &c. [83] by women coverts shall not be good or effectual in the law; and he said, that that statute did extend to copyhold lands: but as to that, all the justices did agree, that copyhold lands were not within the words of that statute. But Anderson said, that the equity of that Act did extend to copyholds: and further Anderson said, that the prescription or custom in the principal case was not good; for it is layed to be, that quælibet fœmina viro co-operta poterit, and it ought to be potest; and by the custom have used to devise to the husband: and a prescription must be in a thing done, and not in posse. Also he said, that the custom if it were good, is not well pursued; for the custom is, that she may devise and surrender in the presence of the steward and six tenants, and that must be intended to be done all at one time; for the words of a custom are to be performed, if it may be: but in the principal case, the devise is laid to be at one time, and the surrender at another time, and so it is not in pursuance of the custom: but to that it was not answered. But then it was said, admit that the custom to devise, and the devise were not good; yet the action did not lie against the defendant, because that the husband was admitted, and his entry into the land was countenanced by a lawful ceremony; and also he was tenant in common with the other husband by such entry. It was adjourned.

CXXIII. ROSSE'S CASE.

In trespass brought by Rosse, for breaking of his close, and beating of his servant, and carrying away of his goods: upon not guilty pleaded, the jury found this special matter; scil. that Sir Thomas Bromley, Chancellor of England, was seised of the land where, &c. and leased the same to the plaintiff and one A. which A. assigned his moyety to Cavendish; by whose commandment the defendant entred. It was moved, that that tenancy in common betwixt the plaintiff, and him in whose right the defendant justified, could not be given in evidence; and so it could not be found by verdict, but it ought to have been pleaded at the beginning. But the whole Court were clear of another opinion; and that the same might be given in evidence well enough. It was further moved against the verdict, that the same did not extend to all the points in the declaration, but only to the breaking of the close, without enquiry of the battery, &c. And for that cause, it was clearly holden by the Court, that the verdict was void; and a venire facias de novo was awarded.

CXXIV. ABSOLON AND ANDERTONS CASE.

William Absolon master of the Savoy, and the chaplains there, brought debt against Anderton; the case was, that the said master and chaplains leased lands to the defendant for certain years; and afterwards he accepted of them an indenture of bargain and sale to him and his heirs, by express words of bargain and sale, without other words; and one of the Masters of the Chancery within the 6 months came unto them into their chapter-house, and before him they acknowledged the said indenture to be their deed, and prayed that it be enrolled; which was done accordingly. It was moved, if that acknowledgment and enrollment were good or not; or if the master and the chaplains ought to have appointed one by their warrant, to be their attorny, to acknowledge the said deed? and it was also moved, if there needed any enrollment at all of it, because Anderton had then an interest in the land for years; in which case it is to be considered, if the words barganizavi & vendidi, shall be of such effect, as the words dedi & concessi? And it was said by the Court, that a warrant of attorny to acknowledge a deed were a strange thing. And it was agreed, that the indenture being once inrolled, it was not material by what means it was inrolled; but was good being done.

CXXV. SAVELL AND BADCOCKS CASE.

Savell brought an action of trespass against Badcock, and declared, that Edw. Savell was seised of the mannor of D. and leased the same for years to Henry Savell, who died, having made the plaintiff his executor, who entred, and was possessed until the first day of January, at which time the trespass was done. The defendant pleaded, not guilty. And it was given in evidence on the plaintiffs part, that the said Ed. Savell was seised, and leased to the said Henry Savell for years, who so possessed, reciting the said lease, demised the said manor to Sir William Cordell, Master of the Rolls, to have to him immediately after the decease of the said Henry for so many years of the said term which at the time of his death should be unexpired, if Dorothy the wife of the said Henry should so long live: Henry died, Sir William Cordell entred; Dorothy died within the term; the plaintiff the executor of Henry entred, and was possessed until the first day of Januarii, 23 Eliz. at which day the trespass was done. On the defendants part it was given in evidence, that [85] after the grant to Sir William Cordell, the said Henry and Edward joyned in a fine sur conusans de droit, &c. to a stranger, who granted and rendred the land to the said Henry and his heirs, who devised the same to the said Dorothy his wife for life, the remainder to Cordell Savell in tail, the remainder over, and died; Dorothy entred, and died; Cordell Savell, 22 Eliz. conveyed the mannor by fine to one Williamson, who entred; and afterwards and before the trespass aforesaid, viz. 14 January, 23 Eliz. leased to the defendant for years, by force of which the defendant entred. And upon this evidence, there was a demurrer in law. And it was argued by Shuttleworth, who was made serjeant the last term. And he said, that the demise made by Henry Savell is not in the inconveniency of the maxim, that Henry by the said grant should reserve a lesser estate to himself, than he had before; for here by this grant, no present interest passeth by Sir William Cordell, but the effect of the grant rests upon a contingency; scil. if he himself dieth within the term, &c. until which time the whole interest of the term doth remain, in the said Henry Savell subject to the contingency aforesaid, and amounts to so much; as if the said Henry had granted the same to Sir William Cordell, if he himself should die within the term: in which case, it is a limitation when the said grant shall take effect. As if I grant unto you my lease for so many years as J. S. shall name, the same is a good grant to take effect upon the naming of J. S. Then the case being so, when Henry Savell the lessee, and Edward Savell the lessor joyn in a fine, ut supra, now the possibility of the remnant of the term which upon the death of Henry Savell and Dorothy his wife within the term might accrue to the executors of the said Henry Savell, is not extinct by the fine, but doth remain quodam modo in Henry Savell, to vest in his executors, if it should happen; and here is not any conclusion by the fine in this case; for Henry at the time of the fine had not in him any interest, which is now claimed, and so cannot be bound by the fine: for the interest in respect of which the plaintiff hath cause of action, beginneth after the death of Henry who levied the fine; and first accrueth to his executors, and so shall not be touched by the fine: and therefore if such a lessee for years granteth his term to J. S. proviso, that if J. S. dieth within the term, that he himself shall have it again; and afterwards the grantor joyns with his lessor in a fine, and afterwards within the term J. S. dieth, now the grantor notwithstanding the fine shall have the residue of the term; then when the conusee by the fine regrants the land to Henry in fee, that possibility to have after the death of the donor cannot be drowned in the fee-simple for the reason aforesaid; and then when Henry deviseth the same to his wife, that possibility doth pass to Dorothy, because it was never in the devisor; and then when Dorothy dieth within the term, the residue of the said term shall accrue to the plaintiff as executor of [86] Henry. Cook, contrary, and he held, the grant to Sir William Cordell is utterly void; and he agreed, that grants although in themselves they be uncertain; yet if they may be reduced to certain, they are good: but here is no expectance of any certainty in the life of Henry; for the term limited to Sir William Cordell, is not to begin till the death of Henry, and is to end upon the death of Dorothy, so as here is not any certain beginning, nor certain end; and here this grant cannot be reduced to any certainty during the life of the grantor, and so for that cause is void, see Plow. Com. 6. Eliz. Say and Fullers case, 273. by Weston, Justice, If A. makes a lease for so many years as J. S. shall name, if J. S. in the life of A. name a certain number of years, then the lease is good; but if the lease had been for so many years as my executors shall name, that can never be made good in my life; and upon that reason it is, that an attornment ought to be made in the life of the grantor, or else no reversion shall pass. So 33 E. 3. Entry 79. A bishop aliens, and after his death, the dean and chapter confirms, it is a void confirmation. And 7. E. 6. Br. Grants, 154. A man possessed of a lease for 40 years, grants so many of the said years which shall be to come at the time of his death, it is a void grant for the incertainty. Afterwards, Shuttleworth moved another point, viz. The plaintiff hath declared of a trespass done, 1 Januarii, 23 Eliz. The defendant shews in evidence, a lease for years to him made 14 Januarii, the same year, which is 13 days after the trespass whereof the plaintiff hath declared, and it shall not be intended that the plaintiff had another title than that which he hath alledged; and forasmuch as he hath not disclosed in himself any title tempore transgressionis the plaintiff should punish him in respect of his first possession without any other title. And although it may be objected, that where the defendant hath given in evidence, that Williamson leased to the defendant, that is not sufficient; and the words subsequent 14 Januarii, are void as a nugation and matter of surplusage; truly, the law is contrary; for rather those words ante transgressionem shall be void, because too general, and shall give way to the subsequent words after the videlicet, because they are special and certain: as the case late adjudged; the Archbishop of Canterbury leased three parcels of land, rendring rent of 8l. per annum; viz. for one parcel, 5l. for another, 50s. and for the third, 40, which amounts to 9l. 10s. It was adjudged, that the videlicet, and the words subsequent concerning the special reservation of the rent, was utterly void, because contrary to the premisses, which were certain, viz. 8l. and that the fermor should pay but 8l. according to the general reservation: but in our case, the words precedent are general, i.e. ante transgressionem, and therefore the words subsequent, which are special and certain, shall be taken, and the general words rejected; as in the trespass, the defendant pleads, that A. was seised of the land where, and held it of [87] the defendant; and that the said A. 1 die Maii, 6 Eliz. aliened the said land in mortmain, for which he (within a year after) viz. 4 Maii, anno 7 Eliz. entred, now the same is no bar; for upon the evidence it appeareth, that the lord hath surceased his time, and the words, (within the year) shall not help him, for they are too general; and therefore, at the subsequent words (viz. &c.) Cook on the defendants part took exception; for it appeareth here upon the evidence of the defendant, which is confessed by the demurrer of the plaintiff, that upon this matter the plaintiff cannot punish the defendant for this trespass; for he was not an immediate trespassor to the plaintiff; for the plaintiff hath declared upon a trespass done 1 Januarii, 23 Eliz. And it is given in evidence on the part of the defendant, and confessed by the plaintiff, &c. that 22 Eliz. Cordell Savell levied a fine to Williamson, by force of which the said Williamson entred, and was seised; and so seised, 14 Januarii, 23 Eliz. leased to the defendant: now upon this matter the plaintiff cannot have trespass, but the defendant; for Williamson was the immediate trespassor to him; for he entred 22 Eliz. And at length, after deliberation had of the premisses by the Court, the Court moved the plaintiff to discontinue his suit, and to bring de novo a new action, in which the matter in law might come into judgment without any other exception. But the plaintiff would not agree to it. Wherefore it was said by Wray, Chief Justice, with the consent of his companions, Begin again at your peril; for we are all agreed, that you cannot have judgment upon this action.

CXXVI. Mich. 26 Eliz. In the Kings Bench.

The case was; A. made a feoffment in fee to the use of his younger son in tail; and after to the use of the heirs of his body in posterum procreand. and at the time of the feoffment he had issue two sons; and after the feoffment had issue a third son:

the younger son died without issue, upon a motion at the Bar, it was said by Wray, Justice, that after the death without issue of the second son, the land should go to the third son born after the feoffment, for this word (in posterum) is a forcible word to create a special inheritance; without that, it had been a general tail.

CXXVII. SMITH AND SMITH'S CASE.

Lambert Smith executor of Tho. Smith, brought an action upon the case against John Smith, that whereas the testator having divers children enfants, and lying sick of a mortal sickness, being careful to provide for his said children enfants; the defendant in consideration the testator would commit the education of his children, and the disposition of his goods after his death during the minority of his said children, for the education of the said children to him, promised to the testator, to procure the assurance of certain customary lands to one of the children of the said testator; and declared further, that the testator thereupon constituted the defendant overseer of his will, and ordained and appointed by his will, that his goods should be in the disposition of the defendant, and that the testator died, and that by reason of that will, the goods of the testator to such a value came to the defendants hands to his great profit and advantage. And upon non assumpsit pleaded, it was found for the plaintiff: and upon exception to the declaration in arrest of judgment for want of sufficient consideration, it was said by Wray, Chief Justice, that here is not any benefit to the defendant, that should be a consideration in law, to induce him to make this promise; for the consideration is no other, but to have the disposition of the goods of the testator pro educatione liberorum: for all the disposition is for the profit of the children; and notwithstanding, that such overseers commonly make gain of such disposition, yet the same is against the intendment of the law, which presumes every man to be true and faithful if the contrary be not shewed; and therefore the law shall intend, that the defendant hath not made any private gain to himself, but that he hath disposed of the goods of the testator to the use and benefit of his children according to the trust reposed in him. Which Ayliffe, Justice, granted. Gawdy, Justice, was of the contrary opinion. And afterwards by award of the Court, it was, that the plaintiff nihil capiat per billam.

CXXVIII. AMNER AND LUDDINGTON'S CASE.

A writ of error was brought in the Kings Bench by Amner against Luddington, Mich. 26 Eliz. Rot. 495. And the case was, that one Weldon was seised, and leased to one Peerepoint for 99 years, who devised the same by his will in this manner: viz. I bequeath to my wife the lease of my house during her life; and after her death, I will it go amongst my children unpreferred. Peerepoint died, his wife entred, and was possessed virtute legationis prædictæ, and took to husband one Fulsehurst, against whom Beswick recovered in an action of debt 140l. upon which recovery, issued a scire facias; and upon that a vendit' exponas; upon which the sheriff sold the term so devised to one Reynolds: Fulsehurst died; his executor brought error, and reversed the judgment given against the testator at the suit of Beswick; the wife re-entred, sold the term, and died; Alice a daughter of Peerepoint, unpreferred, entred: and upon this matter found by special verdict in the Common Pleas; the entry of Alice was adjudged lawful. Upon which judgment, error was brought in the Kings Bench: and it was argued upon the words of the devise, because here the lease is not devised, but all his interest in the thing devised: and it is not like to the case between Weldon and Elkington, 20 Eliz. Plow. Com. 519. where the case was, that Davies being lessee for years, devised, that his wife should have and occupy his land demised for so many years as she should live. Nor unto the case betwixt Paramour and Yardley, 21 Eliz. Plow. Com. 539. for there the lessee devised, that his wife should have the occupation and profits of the lands, until the full age of his son; for in those cases, the land it self is quodam modo devised: but in our case, all the estate is devised; i.e. the lease it self. And also in those two devises, a certain person is named in the will, who should take the residue of the term which should expire after the death of the wife; but in the case at Bar, no person in certain is appointed, &c. but the devise as to that is conceived in general words, children unpreferred; ergo, neither any possibility, nor any remainder is in any person certain; therefore all the whole term is intirely in the wife, and then she may well dispose the whole. But the whole Court was to the contrary, and that in this case the possibility should rise well enough upon the death of the wife, to the daughter Alice unpreferred. Another point was moved; if the said term being sold in the possession of the wife of the devisor, by force of the execution aforesaid; if now the judgment being reversed, the sale of the term should be also avoided; for now the party is to be restored to all that which he had lost. And by Cook it was [90] argued, that notwithstanding the reversal of the judgment, the sale should stand; for the judgment for the plaintiff in a writ of error is, that he shall be restored to all that which he lost ratione judicii prædict. and the judgment was, that the plaintiff should recover 140l. and therefore by the judgment in the writ of error, he shall be restored to so much; but the mean act, scil. the sale of the lease shall stand, and shall not be defeated and avoided: as 7 H. 6. 42. A statute staple is bailed in Owel Mayn, the conusee brings debt against the bailee, and hath judgment to recover the statute, and upon that suit he had execution, and the bailee brought a writ of error to reverse the judgment in detinue, yet the execution shall stand, and an audita querela doth not lie for the conusor. And see 13 E. 3. Fitz. tit. Bar. 253. Accomptant found in arrearages, committed to the goal, escaped; and reversed the judgment given against him in the accompt ex parte talis: yet an action upon the escape did lie. And as to that point, the whole Court was of the same opinion with Cook: but that point did not come in judgment: for by the sale, nothing passed but the interest in præsenti which was in the wife of the devisor, but the possibility to the children unpreferred was not touched by it. And afterwards the judgment was affirmed.

CXXIX. BUNNY AND BUNNY'S CASE.

In an action of covenant between Bunny and Bunny, the plaintiff declared, that the defendant had covenanted to find unto the plaintiff, meat and drink at the house of the defendant. The defendant pleaded, that he was always ready to find the plaintiff meat and drink, if he had come to his house to have taken it, et de hoc ponit se super patriam: and it was found for the plaintiff; and in this case, the Court awarded, that the parties should replead; for in all cases where the defendant pleads matter of excuse not contained in the declaration as here, he shall say, et hoc paratus est verificare, in the perclose of his plea: but if the defendant had pleaded, that he had given the plaintiff according to the covenant, meat and drink, then the conclusion of his plea had been good, et de hoc ponit se super patriam, &c.

[91] CXXX. HILL. 26 ELIZ. IN THE KINGS BENCH.

In an action upon the case, supposing certain goods to have come to the hands of the defendant, and that he had wasted them, and shewed in what manner: the defendant pleaded not guilty; and it was found by verdict, that the goods, &c. came to the defendants hands, and that he had wasted them, but in another manner than the plaintiff had declared: it was the opinion of the whole Court, that upon this verdict, the plaintiff should not have judgment. As in an action of trespass, the plaintiff declared, that the defendant had distrained his horse, and travelled riding upon him; and the jury found, that the defendant did distrain the horse, and killed him; in that case, it was holden, the plaintiff should not have judgment. So in an action upon the case, the plaintiff declares upon a promise upon one consideration, and the jury find the promise, but that it was upon another consideration; in such case, the plaintiff shall not have judgment. Adjudged for the defendant.

CXXXI. MERRY AND LEWES'S CASE.

Merry brought an action upon the case against William Lewes, executor of David Lewes late master of St. Katherines juxta London; and declared, that the said David, in consideration, that whereas quædam pars domus fratrum & sororum Sanctæ Katherinæ fuit vitiosa & in decasu, the said Merry ad requisitionem dicti Davidis repararet eandem, promised to pay the said Merry all such monies as the said Merry expenderet in such reparations. And declared further, that eandem partem domus prædict. reparavit, &c. And upon non assumpsit, it was found for the plaintiff. It was objected in arrest of judgment, that the declaration is too general, quædam pars domus; for the plaintiff ought to have shewed especially what part of the house in certainty, as the hall, chamber, or other rooms: but the exception was disallowed. Another objection was, because he set forth in the declaration, that the plaintiff ad requisitionem dicti Davidis repararet; and the plaintiff declares, that reparavit generally, without saying, that ad requisitionem Davidis reparavit: and that is not the reparation intended in the consideration, i.e. reparatio ad requisitionem, &c. but a reparation of his own head, and at his pleasure. And for this cause, the judgment was stayed.

And it was adjudged, that he should not; and that appears clearly upon the words of the statute, &c. for this action is not conceived upon any matter which is comprised within the said statute; and also the statute upon which this action is grounded, was made after the said statute of 23 H. 8. which gives costs; and therefore the said statute of 23 H. 8. and the remedy of it cannot extend to any action done by 1 & 2 Phil. & Mary. And Rhodes, Justice, said, it was so adjudged in 8 Eliz.

CXXXIII. MICH. 26 ELIZ. IN THE KINGS BENCH.

In a formedon of a mannor, the tenant pleaded joynt-tenancy by fine with J. S. The demandant averred the tenant sole tenant as the writ supposed; and upon that it was found and tryed for the demandant: upon which a writ of error was brought; and error assigned in this, because where joynt-tenancy is pleaded by fine, the writ ought to have abated, without any averment by the demandant against it, and the averment had been received against law, &c. Shuttleworth, at the common-law, If the tenant had pleaded joynt-tenancy by deed, the writ should have abated, without any averment; but that was remedied by the statute of 34 E. 1. But joynt-tenancy by fine doth remain as it was at the common law; for he hath satis supplicii, because by his plea, if it be false, he hath by way of conclusion given the moyety of the land in demand to him with whom he hath pleaded joynt-tenancy: and the law shall never intend that he would so sleightly depart with his land for the abatement of a writ. As in a præcipe quod reddat, the tenant confesseth himself to be a villein of a stranger, the writ shall abate without any averment free, and of free estate; for the law intends, that the tenant will not inthral himself without cause. Wray, to the same purpose; But the demandant may confess and avoid the fine; as to say, that he who levied the fine, was his disseisor, upon whom he hath before entred. And if the tenant in feesimple be impleaded, and he saith, that he is tenant for life, the remainder over to A. in fee, and prayeth in aid of A. the demandant shall not take averment, that the tenant at the time of the writ brought was seised in fee.

Note: in this formedon, joynt-tenancy was pleaded but as [93] to parcel; and it was holden by Wray and Southcote, that the whole writ should abate, the whole writ against all the defendants. And so where the demandant enters into parcel of the land in demand, if the thing in demand be an entire thing, the writ shall abate in all. In this writ, the demandant ought to have averred in his writ an especial foreprise of the land parcel of the land in demand whereof the joynt-tenancy by the fine is pleaded: for this dismembring of the mannor and distraction of the land of which the joynt-tenancy is pleaded, is paravail and under the gift whereof the formedon is conceived; and therefore in respect of the title of the demandant, it remains in right parcel of the mannor, and therefore ought to be demanded accordingly with a foreprise. But if A. giveth unto B. a mannor, except 10 acres in tail, there, if after upon any discontinuance, the issue in tail is to have a formedon; in such case, there needs not any foreprise for the said 10 acres, for they were severed from the mannor upon the gift: but if lands in demand be several, as 20 acres, except 2 acres, this foreprise is not good. See Temps E. 1. Fitz. Brief, 866. Præcipe, &c. unam bovatum terræ forprise, one sellion, and the writ was abated, for every demand ought to be certain: but a sellion is but a parcel of land uncertain as to the quantity; in some places an acre, in some more, in some less. Another point was, because the tenant hath admitted, and accepted this averment; scil. sole tenant as the writ supposeth and the question was, if the Court, notwithstanding the admittance of the tenant, ought without exception of the party ex officio, to abate the writ? And it was the opinion of Wray, Chief Justice, that it should: for it is a positive law, as if a woman bring an appeal of murder upon the death of her brother, and the defendant doth admit it without a challenge or exception, yet the Court ought to abate the appeal, 10 E. 4. 7. See the principal case there, non ideo puniatur dominus, &c. And if an action be brought against an hostler upon the common custom of the realm, and in the writ he is not named common hostler, yet the Court shall abate the writ ex officio. See 11 H. 4. and 38 H. 6. 42.

CXXXIV. Mich. 26 Eliz. In the Common Pleas.

A. seised of lands in the right of his wife for the term of the life of the wife, made a feoffment in fee to the use of his said wife for her life; it was holden in that case, that the wife was remitted. And it is not like Amy Townsends case, Plow. Com. 1 & 2 Phil. and Mar. 111. For in the said case the entry of the wife was not lawful, for she was tenant in tail; which estate was discontinued by the feoffment of her husband. And Periam, Justice, cited a case, Sidenham's case; Bacon seised in the right of his wife for the term of the life of the wife; they both surren-[94]-dred, and took back the lands to them and a third person: and it was holden, that the wife was not presently remitted, but after the death of her husband she might disagree to the estate.

quatuor mille acrarum. And many grammarians were cited; all which agreed, that it was good both ways; viz. mille acras, or mille acrarum. And Rhodes, Justice, said, that Cowper, in thesauro suo linguæ Latinæ, saith, Quod mille fere jungitur genitivo, ergo non semper. Wherefore Anderson, with the assent of the other justices, ruled, that the defendant should answer over.

In a replevin, the defendant avowed for damage-feasant; and shewed, that the Lady Jermingham was seised of such a mannor whereof the place where, &c. and leased the same to the defendant for years: the plaintiff said, that long time before, King Henry 8th was seised of the said mannor, and that the place where, &c. is parcel of the said mannor demised and demiseable by copy, &c. and that the said King by such a one his steward, demised and granted the said parcel to the ancestor of the plaintiff, whose heir he is by copy in fee, &c. And upon that there was a demurrer, because by this bar to the avowry, the lease set forth in the avowry is not answered; for the plaintiff in bar to the avowry, ought to have concluded; and so was he seised by the custom, until the avowant prætextu of the said term for years, entred, &c. In trespass brought by Rosse, for breaking of his close, and beating of his servant, and carrying away of his goods: upon not guilty pleaded, the jury found this special matter; scil. that Sir Thomas Bromley, Chancellor of England, was seised of the land where, &c. and leased the same to the plaintiff and one A. which A. assigned his moyety to Cavendish; by whose commandment the defendant entred. It was moved, that that tenancy in common betwixt the plaintiff, and him in whose right [95] the defendant justifies, could not be given in evidence; and so it could not be found by verdict, but it ought to have been pleaded at the beginning. But the whole Court were clear of another opinion; and that the same might be given in evidence well enough. It was further moved against the verdict, that the same did not extend to all the points in the declaration, but only to the breaking of the close, without enquiry of the battery, &c. And for that cause, it was clearly holden by the Court, that the verdict was void; and a venire facias de novo was awarded.

CXXXVIII. GURNEY AND SAERS CASE.

An ejectione firmæ was brought by Gurney against Saer; who pleaded, that Verney was seised, and leased the same to Baker for 21 years, 8 Eliz. Baker, 14 Eliz. assigned his interest to Rolls; who, 15 Eliz. leased the same to Topp for 10 years; and afterwards Rolls granted the residue of his term to A. Verney, 16 Eliz. leased the same land to Stephen Gurney for 21 years, to begin after the determination, surrender, or forfeiture of the first lease, rendring rent, with clause of re-entry; and afterwards Verney granted over the reversion in fee to Hampden; to which grant, A. and Topp attorned; Topp leased to B. at will; A. and Topp surrendred; B. held himself in by force of the tenancy at will: and the said surrender was made privily and secretly, without the notice of the said Stephen Gurney; the rent reserved upon the lease made to Stephen Gurney is demanded, as now begun by the said surrender. Hampden entred as for the condition broken for the non-payment of the said rent: and the lease made to the said Stephen Gurney was pleaded, quod prædictus Johannes Verney per indenturam suam sigillo ipsius Stephani Gurney sigillat. demisit, &c. And that was holden a material exception; for here upon the matter doth not appear any lease made by Verney. For here upon the pleading it appeareth, that Verney had accepted a deed of Gurney, purporting a demise by Verney to Gurney, which Gurney had sealed; but there did not appear any such deed sealed by Verney, and therefore no lease ut supra. And although a condition may be pleaded by indenture sealed with the seal of the other party, yet a conveyance cannot be pleaded by deed as it is here, unless sealed with the seal of the party agent; scil. the feoffor, grantor, lessor: and for that cause, judgment was given for the plaintiff. Another exception was taken, because that after the grant of the reversion by Verney to Hampden, the surrender of A. and Topp is pleaded; whereas A. ought not to surrender; for his estate was not a reversion for years, but a lease in reversion, and a lease for years to begin at a day to come, which could not be surrendred. See [96]. 4 H. 7. 10. But if A. had granted his interest by way of reversion, where attornment had been, as one releaseth to him the reversion for years, it is good; contrary to him who hath a lease in reversion. But as to that, it was said by the Court, that this surrender by A. was good enough, for in as much as the interest which A. had at the time of the surrender was in Rolls a reversion after his grant to Topp, and there it remained and continued in its nature as to that point; notwithstanding that by the grant it passed in another manner, than as a reversion. Another exception was taken, because that in the pleading of the surrender, it is not alledged, that at the time of the surrender, Hampden was seised of the reversion. 7 E. 3. 3. He who claims by cestuy que use, ought to alledge the seisin and continuance of seisin to the said use at the time of the feoffment or grant, notwithstanding that seisin was alledged before. And 10 H. 7. 28. Hewbade's Avowry, he there pleaded, that A. was seised of a mannor, and thereof levied a fine to B. & that C. the tenant upon whom the avowry was made, attorned, &c. And exception taken, because it is not shewed in the avowry, that B. the conusee was seised of the mannor at the time of the attornment. And it was holden a good exception. On the other side it was said, and affirmed by the Court, that in all cases where an inheritance is once alledged in a man, the law shall presume the continuance of it there, until the contrary be shewed. See 1 Eliz. the case between Wrotesley and Adams, Plow. Com. 193. And 15 Eliz. between Smith and Stapleton, Plow. 431. Which Wray and Gawdy, Justices, granted: Ayliff, Justice, to the contrary. Another point was moved, if upon this secret surrender notice ought to have been given to Gurney, who had an interest for years to begin upon the said surrender; for some conceived, that Gurney, without notice given him of the said surrender, should not be prejudiced by the condition aforesaid. And of that opinion clearly was Wray, Chief Justice.

Note, in this case, that Saer, the defendant, presently after the judgment entred, cast in a writ of error into the Court; and assigned an error in fact; scil. that Gurney the plaintiff in the first action within age, appeared by attorny; whereas he ought by gardein or prochein amy. And it was the opinion of the justices upon the first motion, that that matter could not be assigned for error; for it is not within the record, and we cannot reverse our own judgment, but only for matter of process. See for that, Fitzh. Na. Br. 21. f.

CXXXIX. PARTRIDGE AND POOLES CASE.

Trespass of battery was brought by Partridge against Poole, and supposed the battery at D. in the county of Middlesex; the defendant justified by reason of an assault at S. in the county of Gloucester, absq; hoc, that he beat the plaintiff at D. in the county of Middlesex: upon which traverse, the plaintiff did demur in law. It was argued by Popham the Queens Attorny General, that the traverse of the county is good: and he put the case of 21 H. 6. 8 & 9. In trespass of battery at D. in the county of York; the defendant justified by an assault at London in such a place in such a parish, &c. absq; hoc, that he was guilty de aliqua transgressione in comitatu eborum. Upon which issued a venire facias into Yorkshire; and, as the book is, this traverse as to the county was taken with great deliberation. See also 22 E. 4. 39. And this traverse de jure ought to be allowed; for the jury in Middlesex are not bound to find the assault in the county of Gloucester. See 2 Mar. Br. Jurours, 50. In actions upon transitory matters, although they be layed in forreign counties, yet the jurors if they will, may thereof give their verdict, but they are not bound to do it. Egerton, Sollicitor General, to the contrary: and he put a difference, where the justification is local, and where transitory: as in false imprisonment, the defendant justifies as sheriff the taking of the plaintiff by force of a capias directed to him at D. within his county of G. Where the plaintiff declareth of an imprisonment in another county; there the traverse of the county is good, for the defendant cannot take the plaintiff by force of the said process in any other county than where he is sheriff; and so the justification is local, 11 H. 4. 157. But in our case, the matter of the justification is meerly transitory. And at last, after many motions, it was adjudged for the plaintiff. Gawdy, Justice, being of a contrary opinion: and by Wray, Chief Justice, clearly, The jurors upon pain of attaint, are to take notice of such a transitory thing done in another county. See 2 Mar. Br. Attaint, 104. 9 H. 6. 63.

CXL. GERRARD'S CASE.

Gerrard, Master of the Rolls, presented Chatterton Bishop of Chester, to the church of Bangor; to which church also, one Chambers presented his clerk; by which several presentments, the same church became litigious: the Archbishop of York being Ordinary of the place, awarded jure patronatus, &c. depending which, the archbishop admitted the said bishop; upon which, the said Chambers libelled in the Spiritual Court, against the said bishop; for that the said archbishop prædicto episcopo plus æquo fidens, admisit dictum episcopum, pendente the jure patronatus; in which case by the law of the church, the admittance is void; for, pendente lite nihil movetur. And now came the said bishop, and upon this matter prayed a prohibition; and he had it, because that the right of the patronage came in debate. After which came the said Chambers, and prayed a consultation, because he medled not with the right of patronage, but only with the wrongful admittance. To whom it was said by the Court, that the awarding of the jure patronatus, is not a thing of necessity, but at the will of the Ordinary, and for his better instruction: but if he will at his peril take notice of the right of the patronage, he may receive which of them he will, without a jure patronatus awarded. And it may be, in this case, that after the jure patronatus awarded, and before any verdict given upon it, the archbishop was satisfied of the right of the now plaintiff in the prohibition to the patronage, and thereupon admitted the clerk; and by the clear opinion of the Court, the consultation was denyed.

CXLI. RAMPSTON AND BOWMER'S CASE.

In an action upon the case, the plaintiff declared, that whereas the plaintiff occupied a brew-house; and whereas one Gilbert Bowmer was the beer-clark of it, and had the government and disposition of the beer brewed there, by reason whereof he became indebted to the plaintiff in such a sum; for which the plaintiff procured the said Gilbert to be arrested, and put into the prison of the Marshalsey; and whereas the said Gilbert in dicta prisona existente, the defendant tunc & ibidem in consideration that the said plaintiff would let the said Gilbert out of prison, promised, that if the said Gilbert should not accompt with the plaintiff, and pay him all the arrearages, which upon such accompt should be found before such a day, that then the defendant would [99] pay it: upon which the said Gilbert was dismissed ad largum: and further declared, that no accompt had been made by Gilbert, or any other satisfaction. And upon non assumpit, the jury found, that the said Gilbert so endebted to the plaintiff, was arrested at the suit of the plaintiff; and that after, the defendant came unto the baily of the marshal who arrested the said Gilbert, and took upon him to the said baily, that the said Gilbert should be at the next Court holden for the said Marshalsey; by force and reason of which promise, the baily suffered the said Gilbert to go at large to his house, &c. and that after and before such Court, the defendant promised the plaintiff modo & forma, as the plaintiff had surmised in his declaration: and upon that verdict, the plaintiff could not have judgment; for here the consideration layed in the declaration is not found by the verdict; for Gilbert was discharged of the imprisonment before the promise of the defendant to the plaintiff: and the declaration is, that in consideration quod dictus Gilbertus ad largum dimitteretur, &c. And judgment was given quod querens nihil capiat per billam.

CXLII. Mich. 26 Eliz. In the Common Pleas.

One recovered certain copyhold lands in the court of the lord of the mannor by plaint in the nature of a writ of right: it was moved in the Common Pleas, if a precept might be made and awarded out of that Court for to execute the said recovery, and to put him in possession who recovered, with the posse manerii, as in such cases at the common law, with the posse comitatus. But it was clearly resolved, it could not be done; for force in such cases is not justifiable, but by command out of the Kings Courts.

CXLIII. Iplett and Williams's Case.

Iplett brought an action upon the case against Williams, and declared, whereas one J. had affirmed a plaint of debt against the plaintiff in the Queens court of her mannor of D. in the county of Cornwall; and demanded against him 100l. And whereas the defendant now plaintiff sued a corpus cum causa, &c. and delivered the same to the now defendant, being then under-steward of the said court, that notwithstanding that the now defendant proceeded to judgment, and awarded execution against the plaintiff and his sureties, by force of which the goods of the plaintiff and of his sureties were taken in execution; upon which declaration, the defendant demurred in law, because the judgment was given in a court-baron, which could not hold plea above the sum of 40s. And notwithstanding that [100] exception, and notwithstanding also that the action was brought against the under-steward, &c. the plaintiff had judgment to recover.

CXLIV. Denton and Goddard's Case.

Debt was brought against Denton administrator of the goods and chattels of James Newton; and the plaintiff declared upon an obligation made to the intestate bearing date the 4th day of April, 24 Eliz. The defendant prayed oyer of the deed and condition; and then pleaded to the action: for he said, that the aforesaid James Newton, ante confectionem prædicti suppositi scripti, scilicet ultimo die Septembris 23 Eliz. apud N. obiit, and so non est factum, &c. The jury found, that the said deed was delivered by the intestate 3 July, 23 Eliz. in the life of the intestate, bearing date 24 Aprilis, 24 Eliz. before which day, the intestate died: and upon the whole matter, judgment was given for the plaintiff.

CXLV. LICHFIELD AND GAGE'S CASE.

In an ejectione firmæ the parties were at issue; and by order of the Court, the tryal was stayed: and yet the plaintiff against the order, obtained privily a nisi prius: upon which Gawdy, Justice, being informed of it after the term, awarded a supersedeas to the justices of assise, before whom, &c. And notwithstanding that, the enquest at the instance of the plaintiff, was taken, and found for the plaintiff. All this matter was shewed to the Court, in the Kings Bench, and there examined and proved; and it was ordered by the Court, that the verdict should not be entred of record, nor any judgment upon it: and so was it put in execution in a case between Vernon and Fowler. And then the counsel moved and took exception to the supersedeas, because it was not subscribed by the hand of Justice Gawdy. But it was not allowed, because his seal was sufficient.

CXLVI. FULLER AND COOK'S CASE.

In an action upon the case, the plaintiff declared, that the defendant had informed one Tho. Colby a justice of the peace, that the plaintiff had stollen the defendants hoggs; by force of which, the said Colby ad querimoniam defendentis, made a warrant, and directed it to the constable of H. to apprehend [101] the plaintiff, and to bring him before the said Colby; by force of which, the plaintiff was arrested, and brought before the said Colby, and there was examined upon the said matter, and bound over by recognizance to appear at the next sessions, and there to answer; at which sessions he appeared; and proclamation was made, that if any one would inform against the plaintiff, &c. and none came; for which the plaintiff was discharged, and so by this matter he was discredited, &c. And all this matter was found by special verdict; and thereupon judgment was given for the plaintiff. And in this case the Court took a difference, where one whose goods are stollen comes to a justice of peace, and shews him the matter, and prays that the matter be examined, and that such a one is examined upon it; here in this case, no action lieth. But if such a person in such case will expresly say, that such a one hath stollen, &c. and procure a warrant from a justice of peace upon such surmise to arrest the party; upon such matter, an action upon the case will lie.

CXLVII. THE QUEEN AND THE LORD LUMLEY'S CASE.

It was moved in the Exchequer, that Queen Mary seised of the rectory of D. granted advocationem ecclesiæ de D. If now by this grant, the advowson should pass as now disappropriate; or that the rectory it self should pass as appropriate; or that nothing at all should pass? And by Manwood, Chief Baron, the advowson shall not pass, but remain appropriate as it was before: for the church as it was appropriate by a judicial act, so without such an act it cannot be disappropriate. And he said, that by the grant of the said advowson, the rectory did not pass; for by the appropriation, the advowson was gone, and it was not in esse, and by consequence, could not be granted: and it is not within the Statute of 4 & 5 Philip & Mary, of Confirmations of Grants of the King; for the said statute helps not, but misrecital, misnaming, &c. But here there is not such a thing in rerum natura, as the patentee pretends to be passed by the letters patents; and if it were in the case of a common person, nothing should pass; as it was adjudged in Sands case, 11 Eliz. And he said, that at this time a parsonage might be disappropriated; but that ought to be by a judicial act; as by presentment, and not by any private act of the proprietor: and so he said, a church was disappropriated by the Lord Dyer, by a presentment which of late he made to it.

CXLVIII. COX'S CASE.

In debt upon an obligation against Cox, the case was; A parson made a lease for years, and became bounden to the lessee, to perform the covenants in the lease: the defendant pleaded, that the lease is void, by the statute of 14 Eliz. because he was absent from his benefice above the space of 80 days; part of which time encurred depending the action, and before the plea was pleaded: it was the opinion of the Court, that the plea was good. But exception was taken to the pleading; the defendant saith, that the said church is a parochial church cum cura animarum, but doth not say, that it was so at the time of the lease and obligation made: for it may be, that at the time of the lease there was a vicar; and then it was not cura animarum. And afterwards upon that exception, judgment was given for the plaintiff.

CXLIX. WROTH AND CAPELL'S CASE.

The case was; A. was indicted upon the statute of 8 H. 6. and exception was taken to the indictment, because no word of freehold was in it; or to prove, that the party grieved had any freehold whereof he might be disseised. But because the words of the indictment were, Expulit & disseisivit, which could not be true, if the party expelled and disseised had not freehold; the exception was disallowed. Another exception was taken to the indictment; for these words, In unum tenementum intravit; and this word tenementum, is too general, and an uncertain word; and therefore as to that, the party was discharged. But the indictment was further, In unum tenementum & decem acras terræ eidem pertinent. And therefore as to the 10 acres, the party was enforced to answer.

[103] CL. PASCH. 26 ELIZ. IN THE COMMON PLEAS.

A. granted to B. a rent-charge out of his lands, to begin when J. S. died without issue of his body; J. S. died, having issue; which issue died without issue. Dyer said, The grant shall not take effect; for J. S. at the time of his death had issue: and therefore then the grant shall not begin; and if not then, then not at all. And by Manwood, If the words had been, To begin when J. S. is dead without issue of his body, then such a grant should take effect when the issue of J. S. dieth without issue, &c. Dyer, If the donee in tail hath issue, and dieth without issue, the formedon in reverter shall suppose that the donee himself died without issue; for there is an interest, and there is a difference betwixt an interest and a limitation: for if I give lands to A. and B. for the term of their lives, if any of them dieth, the survivor shall have the whole. But if I give lands to A. for the life of B. and C. now, if B. or C. die, all the estate is determined, because but a limitation, and B. and C. had not any interest. See Cook 5 Part, Bradnell's case.

CLI. Pasch. 26 Eliz. In the Common Pleas.

A. enfeoffed B. upon condition, that if he pay 10l. to the feoffee, his executors or assigns, within 3 years next ensuing, that then it should be lawful for him and his heirs to re-enter. The feoffee hath issue two sons, whom he makes his executors, and dieth before the day of payment. The Ordinary commits letters of administration to J. S. during the minority of the executors. Manwood conceived, that it is a most sure way for A. to pay the monies to the executors, for they remain executors notwithstanding the administration committed to another: for the administrator in such case is but as bailiff or receivor to the executors, and shall be accomptable to them; which Harper and Dyer, concesserunt: and Manwood said, if in this case the monies be paid to one of the executors, it is sufficient, and the same well paid; but that conditional feoffments are as a sum in gross, and not in nature of a debt: which the rest of the justices granted.

CLII. Pasch. 26 Eliz. In the Common Pleas.

A. seised of a mannor leased the same for years, rendring rent, with clause of re-entry; and afterwards levied a fine sur conusans de droit, to the use of himself and his heirs; the rent being demanded, is behind. Dyer, A. cannot re-enter; for although in right the rent passeth without attornment, yet he is without remedy; for it is without attornment: and it would be hard without attornment to re-enter, &c.

[104] It was moved further, if here the conusor be assignee within the statute of 32 H. 8. Manwood, The reversion of a termor is granted by fine, there wants privity for an action of debt, waste, and re-entry: but if the conusee dieth without heir, although that in right it was in the conusee; yet the lord by escheat shall make avowry, and yet the conusee by whom he claimeth, could not. And in the case at Bar, the conusee himself could not, but the conusor being cestuy que use, who is in by the Act of law, shall avow, and shall re-enter without attornment: for the conusor is in by the statute of 27 H. 8. Harper, The heir of the conusee shall avow and re-enter before attornment. Dyer, 13 H. 4. The father leaseth for years rendring rent, with clause of re-entry; the father demands the rent, which is not paid; the father dieth, the son cannot re-enter, for the rent doth not belong unto him: and therefore in the case at Bar, the conusee cannot avow for the rent before attornment; therefore not re-enter.

CLIII. Trin. 26 Eliz. In the Common Pleas.

It is enacted by the statute of 5 Eliz. cap. 8. that no person shall cut down any oak trees but between the first day of April, and the last day of June, but timber imployed and bestowed in or about buildings or reparations of houses, &c. And upon an information upon that statute, the defendant pleaded, that he cut down the said oak trees and thereof made laths to be bestowed in building, and that he had sold them to J. S. who had imployed part of them in building, and is imploying the residue in the same manner. Windham, The intent of the defendant in cutting down the oaks was not to have them imployed in building, but to sell them: although it is not necessary for the satisfaction of that statute, that the oaks presently after the cutting be imployed about building; for if the lessee of a messuage, who is to have house-bote, seeing that his messuage will want reparation, cutteth down a tree for such intent, although there be not such urgent occasion at present, that it ought to be presently repaired, the same shall not be said trespass; for it is good husbandry to have such timber to be seasonable, which cannot be, without some reasonable time between the cutting down and the imployment. Periam, If at the time of the cutting, the vendor or vendee had an intent to employ them about building, it is good enough: and it is a strong case here, because the defendant imploys the timber himself in laths, which is not of any use but for building; and cannot be made but of timber.

CLIV. EVE AND FINCH'S CASE.

Peter Eve and John Finch brought an action of trespass against Nathaniel Tracy and Margaret his wife: and upon the pleading, the case was, that John Finch, father of J. F. the plaintiff, seised of the mannor of St. Katherines, held the same of the Queen by knight service in chief, and was also seised of the land where the trespass was done, being holden in socage; and so seised, 6 Junij, 20 Eliz. for the preferment of the said Margaret then his wife, enfeoffed of the said mannor A. and B. unto the use of himself and the said Margaret, and their heirs. And that the said John the father had not any other land but that before mentioned; and that the said mannor at the time of the said feoffment, and at the death of the said John the father attingebat ad duas partes of all the lands and tenements of the said John the father in three parts to be divided. And afterwards, the father by his will devised the lands holden in socage, unto his said wife for life, with divers remainders over: it was the opinion of the Court in this case, that the devise was utterly void by the statute.

CLV. BRETT AND PEAGRIMS CASE.

In an action upon the case, the plaintiff declared, that whereas he himself and the defendant submitted themselves to the award of A. B. and C. D. and whereas the said arbitrators upon the hearing of the causes between them, did intend, and were resolved, amongst other matters of their award, to award, that two obligations by which the plaintiff was severally bounden to the defendant for the payment of certain sums of mony to the defendant, should be delivered by the defendant to the plaintiff to be cancelled: the defendant promised, in consideration, that that article of the delivery of the said two obligations should be left out of the award, that he himself would gratis deliver them to the plaintiff without any coertion or direction of the award: and further declared, that the said article ad specialem instantiam ipsius querentis was left out by the said arbitrators out of their award; and notwithstanding that, that the defendant had not redelivered, ut supra, &c. but had put the same in suit against the plaintiff. In this case, upon the matter, ut supra, &c. it was adjudged for the plaintiff.

CLVI. NICH. LEE'S CASE.

Nich. Lee by his will devised his land to W. his second son; and if he do depart this world, not having issue, then I will my sons-in-law shall sell my land. The devisor at the time of the devise having six sons-in-law, died; W. had issue John and died; John died without issue; one of the sons-in-law of the devisor died; the five surviving sons-in-law sold the land. 1. It was clearly agreed by the whole Court, that although the words of the will be, ut supra, If W. my son depart this world, not having issue, &c. and that W. hath issue which dieth without issue, there although it cannot be said literally, that William did depart this world not having issue; yet the intent of the devisor is not to be restrained to the letter; but construction shall be made, that whensoever W. dieth (in law upon the matter) without issue, the same land shall be subject to sale according to the authority committed by the devisor to his sons-in-law: and now upon the matter W. is dead without issue. As in a formedon in the reverter or remainder, although the donee in tail hath issue, yet if afterwards the estate tail be spent, the writ shall suppose, that the donee died without issue: a fortiori in the case of a devise, such construction shall be made.

As to the other point concerning the sale of the land, Wray demanded, if the sons-in-law were named in the will? The clerks answered, they were not. See 30 H. 8. Br. Devise, 31 and 39 Ass. 17. Fitz. title, Executors, 117. Such a sale is good in case of executors. See also, 23 Eliz. Dyer, 371. And see 4 and 5 Mar. Dyer, Land devised in tail, and if the devisee shall die without issue, that then the land shall be sold pro optimo valore by his executors una cum assensu of A. if A. dieth before sale, the power of the executors is determined. And afterwards it was clearly resolved by the whole Court, that the sale, by the manner aforesaid was good; and judgment given accordingly.

CLVII. RAG AND BOWLEY'S CASE.

Error was brought upon a fine, and the error was assigned in the proclamations: whereupon issued a certiorari to the custos brevium, who certified the proclamations; by which certificate it appeared, that two of the said proclamations were made in one day: upon which the defendant prayed another scire facias to the chirographer; in whose office it appeared, that all the proclamations were well and duly made. It was the opi-[107]-nion of Wray, Chief Justice, in this case, that the defendant ought to have his preyer; for the chirographer maketh the proclamations, and he is the principal officer as to them. And the custos brevium, hath but the abstract of the proclamations; and we may in discretion amend them upon the matter appearing. But the other justices seemed to be of a contrary opinion; for that the proclamations being once certified by the custos brevium, who is the principal officer, we ought not afterwards to resort to the chirographer, who is the inferior officer: and afterwards, the Clerks of the Common Pleas were examined of the matter aforesaid by the Justices of the Kings Bench; and they answered according to that which was said by Wray, Chief Justice. Wherefore it was awarded by the Court, that a new certiorari be directed to the chirographer: who certified the proclamations to be well and duly made. And thereupon the Court awarded, that the proclamations in the office of the custos brevium, should be amended according to the proclamations in the custody and the office of the chirographer.

Note, in the same case, before the writ brought, a stranger had brought a writ of error against the same defendant upon the same fine; upon which the transcript of the fine and proclamations are removed in banco, and after the plaintiff is non-suit. Now another who hath cause, may have a writ of error, quod coram vobis resident.

TRIN. 26 ELIZ. IN THE KINGS BENCH.

CLVIII. TAVERNER AND CROMWELL'S CASE.

Upon an evidence unto a jury, containing difficulty and matter in law; it was found, viz. that the Bishop of Norwich, 10 H. 8. was seised of the mannor of Northelman in the right of his bishoprick; and, at his court holden within the same mannor, granted parcel of the demesnes of the said mannor to one Taverner and his heirs, where, of the said land in truth, there was not any demise by copy before: and so the said land continued in copy until 23 H. 8. at which time, Taverner committed a forfeiture; which being presented, the bishop seised the land as forfeited; and granted the same again by copy to Taverner in fee: and so from thence it continued in copy until 8 Eliz. (which interval between 23 H. 8. and 8 Eliz. amounted to 47 years:) It was the opinion of the whole Court in this case, that the continuance for 50 years, is requisite to fasten a customary condition upon the land against the lord. It was also agreed by the Court, that although the original commencement, and that customary interest did commence 10 H. 8. ut supra, from which time, unto 8 Eliz. 60 years passed; yet the seisure for a forfeiture which happened 23 H 8. interrupted utterly [108] the continuance from the time which might by the law have perfected the customary interest. So that now, the time before the forfeiture ought not to be accounted in this case: but the original beginning of the copyhold shall be holden to be 23 H. 8. when the grant de novo by copy was made; between which time, and 8 Eliz. is an interval but of 47 years; within which time, a customary interest cannot be attached upon the land: and then before sufficient time encurred, &c. the lord may well enter upon such a tenant at will: for as yet, there is not any custom begotten by sufficient time to bind him. It was also agreed by the justices, that if the lord of a mannor is seised of an ancient copyhold for forfeiture, or by reason of escheat, and lett the same at will without any copy for divers years, one after the other, that that is not any interruption of the customary nature of the land; but that the lord may grant it again by copy.

As to other parcel of the land, it was given in evidence, that at a court lately holden at Northelman, it was presented by the homage there, that Taverner the plaintiff being a copyholder of the said mannor, had forged a customary of the said mannor, containing divers false customs, pretending them to be true customs of the said mannor, and that he had forged, and put a seal to it, about which, this word, viz. (Northelman) is engraven; and that he had procured divers copyholders of the said mannor to set their seals to it; and that he said unto them, that that customary should be put into the church of Northelman amongst the charters and evidences of the said church: and that he had now made his copyhold as good as his freehold. And, if the said offence committed by the plaintiff, ut supra, be a forfeiture of his copyhold, was the question? It was argued by Popham, who was of counsel with the plaintiff, that without further matter, it was not any forfeiture; and yet he confessed, it is a forgery against the first branch of that statute of 5 Eliz. cap. 14. And so he said it was lately adjudged in the Star-Chamber: but as to the point of forfeiture, he put this difference; if the lord demand his services of his copyholder, there, if the copyholder upon debate between the lord and himself, sheweth forth such a forged customary, and counterpleads the demand of the lord with it; now it is a forfeiture, for that the inheritance of the lord is thereby hazarded: as, if the copyholder after the forfeiture keep it himself, and doth not encounter his lord in his demand with it in his services, the same is not any forfeiture: as, if the copyholder, before any rent be due, saith, that he will not pay any rent to the lord hereafter: or when a court is to be holden, that he will not after appear to do any suit at the court of his lord &c. But if, his rent being due, he denyeth it; or when the court is holden, he saith, that he will not do any suit; the same is a forfeiture: as it was lately adjudged in the Kings [109] Bench, in the case between Sir Christopher Hatton, and his copyholders of his mannor of Wellingborough. So if a copyholder being with the other copyholders charged upon oath to enquire of the articles of the court-baron, and sufficient matter being given to them in evidence, to induce them to find a matter within their charge, and they or any of them obstinately refuse to find the same, the same is a forfeiture of his copyhold; as it was adjudged in the case of Sir Rich. Southwell, Knight, and Thurston. Clench, Justice, conceived that in the principal case, the offence of the plaintiff, is not any forfeiture, no more, than if a copyholder makes a charter of feoffment of his customary land, and delivereth the same as his deed to the party, but doth not execute it by livery, the same is not any forfeiture. It was argued by Gawdy, Serjeant, who was of counsel with the defendant, to the contrary: for he said, that if a copyholder will forge a deed of feoffment, purporting, that the lord of the mannor hath enfeoffed him of the said customary land, notwithstanding that he keepeth such charter himself, without shewing it forth, yet it is a forfeiture. At the length, the Court wished the jury to find the special matter, and to refer the same to the Court, whether it was a forfeiture, or not. In this case, another matter was moved, viz. the auncestor of the plaintiff had purchased divers several copyholds from several copyholders by several copies whereof he died seised; or committed several offences by which he forfeited to the lord all his copyholds, for which the lord seised, and granted them again to his auncestor with the ancient rent, and to his heirs, tenendum per antiqua servitia & consueta, &c. And afterwards, the same copyholder commiteth waste, whether the same shall now trench to forfeit all the copyhold lands which were granted ut supra, by one entire copy; or only that which was before the seizure holden by the same rent, et nihil ultra: for these words, tenendum per antiqua servitia, do not trench only to the quantity of the services, but also to the quality; scil. severally, so as there shall be several services as before: as if A. be seised of copyhold land on the part of his father, and of other copyhold land on the part of his mother, and thereof dieth seised, and his son and heir be admitted to it by one copy, and by one admittance; now if that son dieth without issue, the copyholds shall descend severally, the one to the heir on the part of his father, and the other to the heir on the part of his mother, &c. And afterwards, the jury found the special verdict, and the special matter, ut supra, &c.

CLIX. Vincent Lee's Case.

Vincent Lee seised of lands in fee, had issue 3 sons, F. G. and J. and by his last will in writing devised, that J. his son should have the land for the term of 31 years, without impeachment of waste, to the intent that he pay certain debts and legacies set down in his said will, the remainder after the said term expired to the heirs males of the body of the said J. begotten. And further willed, that if the said J. die within the term aforesaid, that then G. his son shall have such term, &c. and then also shall be executor; but made the said J. his present executor, and died, J. entred by force of the devise: F. died without issue, by which the fee-simple descended upon J. who had issue P. and died within the term, P. entred; G. as executor entred upon him; and he re-entred; upon which re-entry, G. brought trespass. Pigott said, that the term by the descent of the fee from F. to J. being the second son of Vincent, and heir of F. is not extinct, but only suspended. It hath been objected, that J. cannot be said to die within the term, because by the descent of the fee, the term is extinct, or suspended, and so not in esse at the time of the death of J. therefore nothing did accrue to G. because J. did not die within the term: but that is but a conceit; for the intent of Vincent was, that the heir should not meddle with the land devised as heir, until the 31 years be expired: and words, during, or within the term, extend unto the time of the term, and not unto the estate: and although, that the term as to J. be extinct, yet the right or possession of G. shall stand, and shall be expectant upon the death of J. before the expiration of the said 31 years. As A. leaseth for life to B. and afterwards granteth the reversion with warranty to C. who releaseth to B. in fee, who is impleaded in a præcipe: although now B. hath a fee-simple, yet during his life he shall not recover in value. And in the principal case, this further interest limited to G. cannot be extinct or prevented. See Plow. Com. Welden and Elkington's case. Beaumont, contrary. And that the term is extinct, because he hath the said term in his own right, and not as executor, but as a man trusted with payment of debts and legacies; but the same term which J. had, G. cannot have, for some of the years are expired; and the words of the will are, He shall have such term; but here the term is utterly extinct: as where a rent, common, or way, &c. descendeth upon the ter-tenant; 2 H. 4. A prior had an annuity out of a parsonage, and afterwards he purchaseth the advowson, which is afterwards appropriated to his house; now the annuity is extinct; and although the prior afterwards presenteth to the advowson, yet it is not revived: Br. [111] Extinguishment, 54. A man hath a lease for years as executor, and purchaseth the inheritance, his term is extinct, yet it is assets, &c. And it is said in Bracebridges case, Plow. Com. 419. 14 Eliz. that parson, patron and Ordinary, lease for years the glebe lands of the parsonage; the parson dieth; the lessee for years becomes parson and dieth, his executors shall not have the residue of the said term; for the term is extinct, although he had the term in his own right, and the freehold in the right of his church; and so in several capacities. And it was holden by some, that if the term for years comes to the lessor as executor, who dieth, the term is revived. Manwood, Chief Baron, asked this case of those who argued; A lease is made for 21 years, proviso, that the lessee shall suffer the lessor to enjoy the same, or to take the profits thereof during the life of the lessor, or so long as the lessor shall live; if the same were a good proviso, or not? Pigot conceived, that the devise to G. was a new devise, and not dependant upon the first devise to J. nor any parcel of it; but this second devise to G. did take away the absolute devise to J. before, and qualified it, so as it determined with his death. The words, such estate, shall be intended an estate to G. to be granted from the death of the testator. Land is devised to A. and his heirs, and he if dieth without heir, that it shall remain to another; the same is no good devise: but a devise to one and his heirs, and if J. S. dieth living the devisee, B. shall have it; the same is good: for it is a new devise, and an estate created de novo, and doth not depend as a remainder upon the first devise, or upon the first estate devised; as the case is 29 Ass. 17. Br. Condition 111. and Devise, 16. So here are several estates limited, one to J. and another to G. which estate of G. cannot be extinct by unity of possession in J. These words, if he die within the term, shall be construed for effluxion of the time of 31 years, and not for the termination of the term. Cooper, Serjeant, to the contrary; J. took this term as purchasor, and not as executor, for that no term was in the testator. See 14 Eliz. Dyer, 309. Granmer's case; G. shall have such term and interest as before I have willed unto J. Manwood, Such term, that is to say, the residue of the term.

Now at another day, the Barons delivered their opinions, that the plaintiff should recover, and that was now G. to whom the second term was devised: and by Manwood, in construction of wills, all the words of the will are to be compared together, so as there by not any repugnancy between all the parts of the will, or between any of them, so that all may stand: and the intent of the testator was, that his son J. should have the lands for 31 years, if he so long lived, and if he died within the term, that G. his son should have such term. And he held, that the same was in J. an estate by limitation, and he could not sell it, nor could it be extinct by Act in law, or of the law. It was a lease [112] determinable by his death, and so shall be the lease of G. determinable upon his own death; and G. upon the death of J. within the term, shall have the residue of the number of the years limited by the former devise; scil. so many in number as were not expired in the life of J. who was first executor to that special purpose. Gent, Baron, to the same intent; Here he hath the same term as executor; and it is not like a term devised, which the party hath as legatee; but in our case, he hath only authority in this lease as executor, and the land was tied to the time and the authority; and when the same determines in his person, then the land departs from him to G. who was a special executor to that purpose, as J. was before. And G. had not the same term which J. had; but such a term. Clerk, Baron, acc. And he said, that the will was further, that if G. died before his debts paid, and his will performed; and the jury finding all the special matter, concluded, that if the term limited to J. be extinct, then they find for the defendant. And he held clearly, that J. had this term of 31 years as executor, and that by the discent of the inheritance to J. the term as to himself was gone: but as to creditors and to the legatees, it shall be said in esse, and be assets in his hands: and because that the term as to that purpose shall be said in esse, he died within the term, within the intent of the said will. And this word, term, is vox polysema, terminus status, terminus temporis, terminus loci. And in our case, the word, term, hath reference to time, and not to estate; for the testator did respect the time in which his will might be performed, and that was 31 years; as if I make a lease during the term that J. S. hath in the manor of D. and J. S. hath 40 years in it; now although that J. S. surrendreth or forfeiteth it, yet he shall hold over, but he shall have it for 40 years; for my lease refers to the time, and not to the estate. In the like manner here, G. cannot have the same term which J. had, nor for 31 years after the death of J. but so much of the said 31 years shall be cut off in the interest of it, as J. had enjoyed it; and G. shall have as many years as J. hath left; and G. shall perform so much of my will as J. at his death within the term aforesaid shall not have performed: as if I lease my land to one until he hath levied 100l. and if he dieth before that he hath levied it, then J. S. shall have such term for the levying of it: the first lessee levieth 50l. and dieth, J. S. may levy the residue, but not the whole. And although that the jury saith, that if the term be extinct, then they find for the defendant; although that it be extinct, yet they are not to take conusance what the law is thereupon: but that is the office of the Judges. As 13 E. 3. the jury found, that the son was born during the elopement, and so bastard; that conclusion of the verdict is not to the purpose, but the Court ought to judge upon the premises of the verdict, if upon the birth during the elopement, the party be bastard or not? And afterwards, Manwood, with [113] the assent of his companions the barons, commanded, that judgment should be entred for the plaintiff; which was done accordingly.

CLX. THE BISHOP OF BRISTOW'S CASE.

Note, it was holden by Manwood, Chief Baron, in this case, that if a lease be made for years rendring rent, with clause of distress; and afterwards, the rent and reversion are extended upon a statute, or seised into the Kings hands for debt; if the lessee payeth the rent according to the extent, the same is not in any danger of the condition, for that now the lessee is compellable to pay it according to the extent.

CLXIV. ANNESLEY AND JOHNSON'S CASE.

In an ejectione firme, upon evidence, the case was, that Roger Wake was seised, &c. and before 27 H. 8. enfeoffed certain persons to his use, &c. and they being so seised to the use aforesaid, the said Roger by his will willed, that his feoffees and executors should found a chauntry in perpetuity, and a priest there, to say mass pro anim', &c. and that they procure a licence to alien in mortmain, and also an incorporation for such chauntry priory; and that the said lands should be conveyed to such a priest, &c. And also that every such priest should be school-master there; and that post dictam cantariam sic fundatam & stabilitam, the said priest should say mass, &c. Roger Wake died: the feoffees and executors did not procure any corporation, or licence to alien in mortmain, nor make any estate to the chauntry priest: but the appointing a priest who said mass according to the will of the said Roger, and was also a school-master, and took the profits of the said lands as owner of them, and died: after which, one Vere was appointed to be school-master there, but he was meerly a lay-person, and so continued until his death, and took the profits of the land; and upon part of the land he built a house, and there dwelt, and kept a school. And after his death, one Curtis was appointed by the executors to teach there, and he was a lay-man, and there taught many years; and afterwards he took orders, and became a priest, and said mass, and other Divine service, and continued school-master also: and 26 H. 8. the same was presented for a chauntry for first-fruits, and first-fruits were paid for it, as appeared by a particular which was shewed in evidence. And also, 2 E. 6. it was presented for a chauntry, and the possessions of it seised into the Kings hands. And it was much insisted upon, that Vere being a mere lay-man, that the same was a forcible interruption of the reputation of the chauntry. But it was the opinion of the whole Court to the [115] contrary: and that notwithstanding, that no corporation was obtained, yet because that the priest was appointed by colour of the will, and he said mass according to the will, although Vere who succeeded him was a meer lay-man, and not a priest; yet afterwards when Curtis came being appointed but a school-master, being also a meer lay-man, yet afterwards when he took upon him orders, and demeaned himself as a chauntry priest there ratione institutionis by the will of Wake, which is confirmed by the certificate, and also by the presentment; the first reputation is revived, and the law shall not construe, that Curtis took the profits in the quality of a school-master, but as a priest; for the law hath respect to the will of the said Wake, which was the ground of all these proceedings, and that, although he did not say mass within 5 years before the statute of 1 E. 6. And note, that the certificate of 26 H. 8. was, that Rich. Curtis was cantarista: and it hath always been adjudged, that a chauntry by reputation is within the statute of 1 E. 6.

CLXV. Brian and Cawsen's Case.

In trespass by Brian and his wife and others, against Cawsen; it was found by special verdict, that W. Gardiner was seised in fee according to the custom of the mannor of C. of certain lands, and surrendred them to the use of his last will, by which he devised them in this manner; scil. I bequeath to Jo. Th. my house and lands in M. called Lacks and Stone; to Ste. Th. my house and lands called Stokes and Newmans; and to Roger Th. my house and lands called Lakins and Brox. Moreover, if the said Jo. Ste. or Roger, live till they be of lawful age, and have issue of their bodies lawfully begotten, then I give the said houses and lands to them and their heirs in manner aforesaid, to give and sell at their pleasure. But if it fortune one of them to die without issue of his body lawfully begotten, then I will, that the other brothers or brother have all the said houses and lands in manner aforesaid; and if it fortune the three to die without issue in like manner; then I will, that all the said houses and lands be sold by my executor or his assignee, and the mony to be given to the poor. The devisor dieth, Jo. Ste. and Roger are admitted according to the intent of the will; Roger dieth within age without issue; John and Ste. are admitted to his part; John comes of full age, and hath issue J. and surrenders his part of the whole, and his estate therein, to the use of Ste. and his heirs; who is admitted accordingly. Ste. comes of full age, John the father dieth; Ste. dieth without issue; J. the son as cosen and heir of Ste. is admitted according to the will, and afterwards dieth without issue; the wives of the plaintiffs are heirs to him, and are admitted to the [116] lands called Lacks and Stone, and to the moyety of the lands called Lakins and Brox, parcel of the place where, &c. prætextu quorum, they enter into all the lands where the trespass is done. And it was found, that A. the executor died intestate; and that Cawsen the defendant is cosen and heir to the said devisor, and that he as heir entred and did the trespass.

First, it was agreed by all, that by the first words of the will, the 3 devisees had but an estate for life: but Fenner and Walmesley who argued for the plaintiffs, conceived, that by force of the later words, scil. if the said John, Stephen and Roger, live till they be of lawful age, and have issue of their body lawfully begotten, then I give the said lands and houses to them and their heirs in manner aforesaid, &c. They have fee; and the words, in manner aforesaid, are to be referred not unto the estate which was given by the first words which was but for life, but to make them hold in severalty as the first devisor willed, and not joyntly, as the words of the second devise purported. And Fenner said, it had been resolved by good opinions, that where a fine was levied unto the use of the conusor and his wife, and of the heirs of the body of the conusor, with divers remainders over; proviso, that it shall be lawful to the survivor of them to make leases of the said lands in such manner as tenant in tail might do by the statute of 32 H. 8. although those lands were never demised before the fine, yet the survivor might demise them by force of the proviso, notwithstanding the words, in manner, &c. So if lands be given to A. for life upon condition, the remainder to B. in manner aforesaid; these words, in manner aforesaid, refer unto the estate for life limited unto A. and not unto the condition, nor unto any other collateral manner.

The words, if they live until they be of full age, and have issue, are words of condition, and shall not be construed to such purpose, to give to them by implication an estate tail: for the words subsequent are, that they shall have them to them and their heirs, to give and sell at their pleasure. By which it appeareth, that his intent was not to make an estate tail; for tenant in tail cannot alien or dispose of his estate, &c. And as unto the last words, and if it fortune they three to die without issue, &c. these words cannot make an estate tail, and the express limitation of the fee in the first part of the will, shall not be controverted by implication out of the words subsequent. As if lessee for 40 years deviseth his lands to his wife for 20 years, and if she dieth, the remnant of the term unto another; although, that she survive the 20 years, she shall not hold over: and here the second sale appointed to be made by the executor, shall not take away the power of the first sale allowed to the devisee's after-issue. Snagg and Shuttleworth, Serjeants, to the contrary; and they conceived, that the defendant hath right to two parts; for no express inheritance vests in the devisees until full age and issue; and because two of the [117] devisees died without issue, they never had any inheritance in their two parts, and so those two parts descended to the defendant as heir to the devisor, no sale being made by the executor. These words, if John, Stephen and Roger, are to be taken distributive; viz. if John live, &c. are to be taken distributive; if John live until, &c. he shall have the inheritance in his part; and so of the rest. As if J. have right unto land which A. B. and C. hold in common, and J. by a deed release to them all, the same shall enure to them severally, 19 H. 6. And here, these later words, if these three do die without issue, by that they conceived, the same to be but an estate in tail. And see to that purpose, 35 Ass. 11. 37 Ass. 15. For a man cannot declare his intent at once, but in several parts; all which make but one sentence. And so it is said by Persay, 37 Ass. 15. We ought to have regard upon the whole deed, and not upon parcel. And see Clark's case, 11 Eliz. Dyer, 330, 331. And it was said, if I give lands to one and his heirs so long as he hath heirs of his body, it is a feesimple determinable, and not an estate in tail. Quære of that. Then here the feesimple is determined by the death of the devisees without issue, and therefore the land ought to revert to the heir of the devisor, especially being no person in rerum natura, who can sell, for the executor before sale by him made, died intestate; and if he had made an executor, yet the executor of the executor could not sell. Which see, 19 H. 8, 9 & 10. And afterwards resolved, that no estate tail is created by this will, but the feesimple settled in them, when they came at their lawful age, and had issue; so as the residue of the devise was void, and judgment was given accordingly.

In disceit by Griffith against Agard and his wife; for that a fine was levied of a messuage, being ancient demesne, by which it became frank-fee; and the fine was levied in the life of A. Griffith, grandfather of the plaintiff: exception was taken to the writ, because it is brought by the plaintiff as cosen and heir of A. G. his grandfather; and in the beginning of the writ, the words are, Si Henricus Griffith fecerit te securum; without saying, cousen and heir of A. G. fecerit te securum. But the exception was not allowed; for afterwards in the writ, these words are, cujus hæres ipse est. See the Register, 238. that it is sufficient; if there be in the body of the writ, these words, cujus hæres ipse est.

Another exception was taken to the declaration, in that it is alledged, that the lands were, de antiquo dominico Dominæ Reginæ Angliæ; whereas it ought to have been, de antiquo domi-[118]-nico Dominæ Coronæ suæ, &c. F. de tempore in tempus during the years, &c. and also deliver the said lease to the plaintiff, that then, &c. The defendant pleaded, that the said J. Exception was taken to the same, because, where the words of the condition are, keep without damage the plaintiff from all claim and interest: and he hath pleaded, that the plaintiff was not damnified ratione dimissionis, &c. But the exception was disallowed by the Court; for if he were not damnified ratione dimissionis, then he was not damnified by reason of any claim or interest. Another exception was taken, because he could not now say, there was no such lease: for it is recited in the obligation, that J. The defendants made default, by which the fine was annulled, and now the issue in tail entred upon the lessee for years; and he brought an ejectione firme. And it was found, that the land was frank-fee. And the sole question was, if by the reversal of the fine by the writ of disceit, without suing a scire facias against the ter-tenant, should bind him? Atkinson, It shall not bind the lessee for years; for a fine may bind in part; and in part, not: as, bind one of the conusees, and not the other. As 7 H. 4. 11. a fine levied of lands part ancient demesne, and part at the common law, and by a writ of disceit, the fine was reversed in part; scil. as to the land in ancient demesne; and stood in force for the residue. See 8 H. 4. 136. And there by the award of the Court, issued a scire facias against the ter-tenant; and the justices would not admit of the fine without certificate that the land is ancient demesne, notwithstanding that the defendant had confessed it. But as to those which were parties to the fine, the fine was become void between the parties; and he who had the land before, might enter. See 8 E. 4. 6. And it would be a great inconvenience, if no scire facias, or other process, should be awarded against the ter-tenant; for he should be dispossessed and dis-enherited without privity or notice of it. Whereas upon a scire facias he might plead matter of discharge, in bar of the writ of disceit, release, &c. which see, Fitzh. Na. Br. 98. and so, although that the fine be reversed; yet he may retain the land. And he resembled the same to the case of 2 H. 4. 16, 17. In a contra formam collationis against an abbot; a scire facias shall issue forth against the feoffee: and by the same reason, here in this case. And for the principal matter, he conceived, that the fine should be awarded between the parties, but not against the lessee. Kingsmill conceived, that a scire facias brought against the parties only, was good enough; for they were parties to the disceit, and not the ter-tenants, &c. it was adjourned.

As if he claim fee, &c. or other peremptory matter, after which plea pleaded, he may make an attorny, 48 E. 3. 24. 7 H. 4. 69. 21 E. 3. 48. 1 H. 7. 27.

Another error was assigned, because it is not shewed in the quid juris clamat, what estate the tenant hath. Another matter was, if the grantee of the estate of tenant in tail after possibility of issue extinct, should be driven to attorn? And conceived, he should not, because the priviledge passeth with the grant. See 43 E. 3. 1. Tenant in tail after possibility of issue extinct, shall not be driven to attorn, 46 E. 3. 13. 27. therefore neither his grantee. Williams, contrary, As to the appearance of the tenant by attorny, because the same is admitted by the Court, and the plaintiff, the same is not error. Which see, 1 H. 7. 27. by Brian and Conisby, 32 H. 6. 22. acc. And he conceived, that the grantee should be driven to attorn; for no other person can have the estate of the tenant in tail after possibility of issue extinct, but the party himself, therefore not the priviledge: and although he himself be dispunishable of waste; yet his grantee shall not have such priviledge; as if tenant in dower, or by the curtesie, grant over their estates, the heirs shall have an action of waste against the grantees for waste done by the grantees. But if the heir granteth over the reversion, then waste shall be brought against the grantees. See Fitzh. Na. Br. 57. And if two coparceners be, and one taketh husband, and dieth, the husband being tenant by the courtesie, a writ of partitione facienda lieth against him; but if he granteth over his estate, no writ of partition lyeth against the grantee. 27 H. 6. Statham, Aid; Tenant in tail after possibility, &c. shall not have aid, but his grantee shall. Clark conceived, that the grantee should not be driven to attorn: if the tenant in tail grant all his estate, the grantee is dispunishable of waste: so if the grantee grant it over, his grantee is also dispunishable. It was adjourned.

[122] CLXXIV. Trin. 27 Eliz. In the Kings Bench.

In action of trespass against J. D. for breaking of his close, &c. The defendant pleaded, that the trespass whereof, &c. was done by the defendant, and one J. S. against which J. S. the plaintiff at another time had brought an action of trespass, and recovered, &c. and had execution of the damages, &c. Plowden said, it was a good bar, for that all is but one trespass; and satisfaction by one of the trespassors, is satisfaction for the other: and if the plaintiff had released to the other trespassors, the defendant if he had it in his hand might well plead it. Wray conceived it a good bar; for it is but one trespass and one wrong, although in respect of the several persons of the trespassors, there are several corporeal acts. Atkinson conceived, that the bar was not good; and it is not like the case of release, for that taketh away the whole trespass whosoever doth it: and this action may be sued joyntly or severally against the trespassors: and when the joynt suit is released, the several suit is released. Clench, If an action of trespass be brought against two, and they plead several pleas, and afterwards one of them is found guilty by a several jury, that jury shall assess all the damages; and if the other be afterwards found guilty, he shall be subject to the said damages, although he was not party to the said jury: and by the same reason that he shall be charged with the same damages, by the same reason he shall have advantage of the satisfaction of them made by his companion. CLXXV. HITCHCOCK AND THURLAND'S CASE.

In an action upon the statute brought for taking of lands to farm by a spiritual person, 21 H. 8. it was holden, that if any such lease be made at this day to any spiritual person, such a lease is not void: but such a lease extends to such leases made before the Feast of St. Michael mentioned in the said Act, and not aliened before the said feast, &c. And so it was said, it was lately adjudged in one Underwood's case.

CLXXVI. CUTTER AND DIXWELL'S CASE.

An action upon the case brought by Cutter against Dixwell: for that the said defendant had exhibited a bill to the justices of peace against the plaintiff, containing, that the plaintiff is an enemy to all quietness, seeking all means to disquiet his neighbors, and hath used himself as a lawless person; and having process to serve upon one in the parish; viz. the parson, did keep the process, and would not serve it but on the Sabbath day in the time of Divine service, not having regard to Her Majesties laws, or the quiet of his neighbours. Upon which bill, the justices to whom it was exhibited, awarded process against the plaintiff, to find sureties for his good behaviour. It was the opinion of the justices, that upon this matter, an action would not lie.

CLXXVII. MASON'S CASE.

Mason leased certain lands to one R. for years; and afterwards leased the same lands to one Tinter for years; Tinter covenanted with the defendant, that if the said R. should sue the said Mason by reason of the later lease, that then he would discharge or keep harmless without damage the said Mason, and also would pay to him all the charges which he should sustain by reason of any suit to be brought against the said R. in respect of the said former lease: and Mason by the same indenture covenanted with Tinter, that the said land demised, should continue to the said Tinter discharged of former charges, bargains, and incumbrances: and now upon the second covenant, Tinter brought an action of covenant, and shewed, that the said R. had sued him in an action of ejectione firme upon the said first lease, and had recovered against him, &c. And Mason pleaded in Bar, the said second covenant, intending that by that later covenant, the plaintiff had notice of the said former lease made unto R. so as the first lease shall be excepted out of the covenants of former grants; for otherwise, there should be circuity of action. But the opinion of the whole Court was to the contrary: for the covenant of Mason shall go to the discharge of the land; but the covenant of Tinter only to the possession.

[124] PASCH. 27 ELIZ. ROTT. 1127. IN THE COMMON PLEAS.

CLXXVIII. KNIGHT AND BEECHES CASE.

[See S. C. 5 Co. Rep. 54 b.]

William Knight brought ejectione firme against William Beech. The case was, that the prior of St. Johns of Jerusalem, 29. H. 8. with the assent of his covent, leased by indenture divers houses in Clarken-well, in the county of Middlesex, for fifty years, to one Cordel, rendring rent 5l. 10s. and 11d. at four feasts of the year, usual in the City of London, viz. for such a messuage, called The High-House, 14s. for another house, 3s. 11d. for another house, xxs. &c. Et si contingat dictum annualem redditum, 5l. 10s. 11d. a retro fore, in parte vel in toto, ultra aut post aliquem terminum solutionis, in quo solvi deberet, per spatium trium mensium, &c. quod tunc, & ad omnia tempora deinceps, ad libitum, &c. liceret dicto priori, & successoribus suis, & omni tali personæ & personis, quam vel quas dictus prior & successores sui nominarent & appunctuarent, sine scripto, in omnia dicta tenementa totaliter re-entrare, &c. And afterwards, 32 H. 8. the said hospital of St. Johns was dissolved, and the possessions of it granted to the said King; and afterwards the said King, 36 H. 8. gave the said house, upon which the said rent of 20s. was reserved, to one Audley, &c. in fee: and afterwards the now Queen being seised of the residue, a commission issued out of the Exchequer bearing date 8 Maii, 23 Eliz. ad inquirendum, utrum the defendant to whom the interest of the said term did appertain, perimplevisset & performasset omnes provisiones fact. & reservat. in & super prædict. indenturam, necne? Office was found before the grant, and after 25 August following, the said Queen, by her letters patents, gave the said house, called The High-House, to Fortescue the lessor of the plaintiff; and afterwards Tres Mich. the commission was retorned, by which it was found all as aforesaid; et quod termini & festi solutionis in London, are Michaelmas, Christmas, Annunciation, and Mid-summer; and that at the Feast of Michaelmas, such rent was behind for the space of three months, &c. It was argued in this case by Gawdy, Serjeant, on the part of the plaintiff, that here are several rents; for the entire sum by the viz. is distributed into several portions, which make several rents; and to that purpose he cited Winter's case, 14 Eliz. Dyer, 308. A lease for years is made of the mannors of A. B. and C. rendring for the mannor of A. xxs. and for the mannor of B. xs. and for the mannor of D. xs. with a condition for the non-payment of the said rents, or any of them, or any part or parcel of them, within one month, &c. then a re-entry; here are several rents: and he conceived, that a condition in the case of the King might be apportioned; for a rent charge, and a condition, are in the King in [125] better condition than in a subject, for the King may distrain for a rent-charge in all the lands, of him who is seised of the land out of which such a rent is issuing; and if a rent-seck be due to the King, he may distrain for the same; and the King shall never demand his rent which he hath reserved with clause of re-entry; and it appeareth in the register, that if before the Statute of Westm. 3. the King purchaseth parcel of the land holden of him, the rent shall be apportioned, which was not in the case of a common person, and there are in the Exchequer divers presidents to that effect, scil. If A. be bounden in a recognizance to B. and afterwards enfeoffeth the King of part of his land, and C. of the other part: if B. be afterwards attainted of treason, so as the said recognizance accrueth to the King; that now, notwithstanding that he hath part of the land lyable to the recognizance, he shall have execution of the residue. And see F. N. B. 266. If, after the recognizance acknowledged, the conusor enfeoffeth of certain parcels of his lands several persons, and of the residue enfeoffeth the King; that land which is assured to the King is discharged of the execution, but the residue shall be charged: so that the possession of the King doth alter the nature of the rent, condition, and execution. Fenner, Serjant, contrary. And he said, that this grant before office retorned was not good; for without office the King cannot enter, multo minus his patentee; and that the King by the grant hath interrupted the relation of the office, as if a man by indenture bargaineth and selleth his lands, and afterwards makes livery to the bargainee, and afterwards the deed is enrolled. Now the party shall not be said to be in by the bargain and sale, but by the livery; for the livery hath interrupted the force of the first assurance by way of bargain, and the relation is utterly gone: so in our case, the grant of the Queen, mean between the award of the commission, and the retorn of it, hath destroyed the force and effect of the commission, so as no appearance shall be had of it: and he agreed, that here are several rents, but the condition is entire; and admit, that a condition may be apportioned in some cases, yet in some cases it cannot. And the statute of 32 H. 8. gives the condition and the reversion, to which it is annexed, to the King, in such sort as it was in the prior: but the condition in the prior was not capable of apportionment, and therefore no more it shall be in the case of the King. As where a recognizance is acknowledged, which cometh to the King by the attainder of the conusee; now, if the King will sue execution upon it, he shall not have the whole land of the conusor in execution, but only the moyety by elegit, &c.

This case afterward, Trin. 28 Eliz. for difficulty, was adjourned into the Exchequer-Chamber, and there argued before all the Justices, and Barons of the Exchequer. And Shuttleworth, Serjeant, argued for the plaintiff; and first he said, Here are several [126] rents, and so several conditions, especially when all the things demised are of such a nature, that they may yield a distress: but if any of the things demised cannot yield distress, then it shall be one entire rent, and shall issue out of the residue, &c. Which see, 17 Ass. 10. An assise was brought of 20s. rent, and the said rent was reserved upon a lease for life made of 100 acres of lands, and 15 acres of wood; scil. for the land 10s. and for the woods 10s. And by the assise it was found the disseisin in the wood, but not in the land. Wherefore it was awarded, that the plaintiff should recover seisin of the 10s. and for the residue, that he should take nothing. And although these words (reddendo inde) trench unto all the things demised entirely, yet this word (viz.) is a distributive, and makes an apportionment; and the viz. is not contrary to the premisses; scil. to the reddendo inde. As if I enfeoffe A. and B. of an acre of land, habendum the one moyety thereof to A. in fee, and the other moyety to B. in fee; this is good, for it well stands with the premises. But if I enfeoffe A. and B. of two acres of lands, habendum the one acre to A. and the other to B. the same habendum is void, because contrary to the premisses, for each of them is excluded out of one acre which was given to him in the premisses. And in our case, if the rent set forth in the (viz.) had been greater or less than that which is reserved upon the reddendo, then the (viz.) should be void for the contrariety, and the reddendo stand. Walmesley, contrary; and that here is one entire rent. Which see to be so, by the close of the condition, si redditus prædict' aut aliqua inde parcella, &c. And the lessor may distrain in any part of the land demised for the whole rent, notwithstanding the (viz.). And it was moved by Shuttleworth, that admit the rent and condition be entire; yet now when the King grants the reversion of one of the things demised in fee to a stranger, the condition remains, and not determined by the destruction of the reversion, as in the case of a subject: for the King hath divers prerogatives, by which he is exempted and protected from such mischiefs and inconveniences which happen to subjects by their own acts and their laches and folly, which shall not be imputed to the King; and the reason of extinguishment of a condition in such case in the case of a common person, is his own folly, that he will distrahere his reversion; and folly shall never be imputed to the King: and as the case is here, the King is not bound to take notice of a condition made by a common person; for it is not matter of record, and by this grant of the King, the rent doth not pass; for the grant is only of the reversion, without any mention of the rent. And the King hath divers prerogatives in a condition; as in the creating of a condition, 35 H. 6. 38. The Abbot of Sion's case, ad effectum, is a good condition in the case of the King, by prisoit: and where the King grants lands in fee to one upon condition, that the grantee shall not alien, the same is a [127] good condition. So for a rent-seck, the King may distrain; and the King may reserve a rent and a condition to a stranger; and if he doth reserve a rent and a condition to himself, he may grant the same over to a subject, 2 H. 7. 8. And the condition in the case of a common person may be apportioned: as if lessee of two acres upon condition, alien one of them in fee, and the lessor entreth for the forfeiture, or recovereth part in an action of waste, &c. but of a surrender, it is otherwise. Walmesley contrary; The condition is gone; for a condition in the hands of the King is of the same nature, as in the case of a common person, impatient of any division, partition, or apportionment: as, if the King hath a rent out of 3 acres of land, and afterwards purchaseth one of them, the rent is utterly gone, and shall not be apportioned as well as in the case of a common person: so of a common. And as this case is, if the condition doth remain, then, upon the breach of it, the King shall enter into the whole; for the words of the condition are, Wholly to re-enter; and so he should defeat his own grant. And he cited a case adjudged at the Assizes at York; the King gave land in fee-farm, rendring rent, with clause of re-entry: the King granteth the rent over to a stranger; and after, the rent is behind; the King cannot re-enter, nor the grantee.

It was also moved, if the jurors of Middlesex might enquire of the usual feast days in London. Shuttleworth, that they might do so. See 5 H. 5. 23. Where a commission issued out to enquire in the county of Surrey, of escheats, words, &c. who found, that A. held of the King in chief, and took to wife one E. Cosen of A. within the degrees they then knowing of it, and had issue betwixt them; and afterwards they were divorced in the county of Kent, &c. And exception was taken to that office, because the enquest of Surry had found a divorce in the county of Kent. Another matter was, because the jurors have found the breach of the condition; and before the jurors had put their hands and seals to the inquisition, the Queen granted part of the things demised in his hands, to Fortescue; after which grant, the inquisition was sealed, and retorned into the Exchequer: if now, the grant to Fortescue be good, or not? Vide inde, Dyer, 2 Eliz. 17. Upon a writ of mandamus, the escheator charged the enquest, who were agreed of their verdict, and delivered the same in paper to the escheator; and, before the engrossing, sealing, and delivery of it, came a supersedeas: and it was resolved, by all the justices, that before the engrossing, indenting, and sealing, it was no verdict. See this case reported in Cook 5. part, 54.

CLXXIX. NELSON'S CASE.

In trespass brought by Nelson, Chief Preignothory of the Court of Common Pleas, the case was, that the abbot of D. was seised of a common out of the lands of the abby of S. as appendant unto certain lands of the said abby of D. And afterwards the said houses were dissolved, and the possessions of them given to the King by Act of Parliament, to have and hold in as large and ample manner and form as the late abbots, &c. After which, the King so being seised, granted the said possessions of the said abby of D. to A. and the possessions of the said abby of S. to B. It was argued, that the common (notwithstanding the unity of possession) did continue; for unity of possession is so qualified and restrained by the statute, by the words aforesaid, and also by the words (in the state and condition as they now be,) and the abbot of D. was seised in the right of his house, of the said common; therefore so also shall be the King, and his patentees; and so a special seisin is given to the King. Rhodes, Windham, and Anderson, Justices, to the contrary. And the said words in the said statute are to be construed according to the law, and no further; and by the law, the said common cannot stand against the unity of possession.

CLXXX. LEONARD'S CASE.

Leonard, custos brevium, brought an action of trespass for breaking of his close: the defendant pleaded, that William Heydon was seised and enfeoffed him; and upon ne enfeffa pas, they were at issue. And it was found by special verdict, that the said William Heydon was seised, and leased to the defendant for years, and afterwards made a charter of feoffment to him, by these words, dedi and concessi, with a warrant of attorny in it, and delivered the same to the said lessee; who delivered the same to him who was made attorny in the said deed, who made livery accordingly. It was moved by the plaintiff's counsel, that here is not any feoffment found, but only a confirmation; for as soon as the charter was delivered to the lessee for years, the law gave it its operation to that effect, to vest the fee in the lessee by way of confirmation. See Litt. 532. But the opinion of the whole Court was clear to the contrary; for here the lessee hath liberty, how and by what conveyance he shall be adjudged seised of the land, either by feoffment, or by confirmation: and it appeareth here, that when the lessee de-[129]-livered the charter to the attorny; and also when the lessee accepted livery from the attorny, he declared his meaning to be, that he would take by the livery: and the Lord Anderson said, that if tenant in tail be disseised, and makes a charter-feoffment with a warranty of attorny, and delivers the same to the disseisor, who delivers the same to the attorny, who makes livery accordingly, the same is a good feoffment, and so a discontinuance. And after many motions, the Court awarded, that the plaintiff should be barred.

And all the matter aforesaid was found by verdict, upon non assumpsit pleaded. And it was the opinion of the whole Court, that the declaration was insufficient, because there is not any good consideration set forth in it; for it is not said, that in consideration that the said Henry made the defendant his executor, &c.

CLXXXII. STRANSHAM AND COLLINGTON'S CASE.

The plaintiff sued in the Spiritual Court for tythes against the defendant within the parish of C. The defendant said, that the tythes are within the parish of A. and the parson of A. came in pro interesse suo, and thereupon they proceeded to sentence, and that was given against Stansham, who now sued a prohibition: and the question was, if within such a parish or such a parish, be tryable by the law of the land, or by the law of the church: Wray, Chief Justice, said, it hath been taken, that it is tryable by our law. Fenner, The Pope hath not distinguished parishes, but hath ordained, that tythes shall be paid within the parish.

[130] MICH. 28 ELIZ. IN THE COMMON PLEAS.

CLXXXIII. HIGHAM'S CASE.

It was found by special verdict, that Thomas Higham was seised of 100 acres of lands called Jacks, usually occupied with a house; and that he leased the said house, and 40 acres of the said 100 acres to J. S. for life, and made his will; by which he devised the said house and all his lands called Jacks, then in the occupation of J. S. to his wife for life: and that after the decease of his wife, the remainder thereof, and of all his other lands appertaining to Jacks, to Richard his second son, &c. It was said by Meade, that the wife should not have by implication the residue of Jacks, for that she hath an express estate in the house, and 40 acres of the land; and her husband having expressed his will as to that, his will shall not be construed by implication to pass other lands to the wife. And it was said by him, that it had been adjudged in the case between Tracy and Glover, that if lands be devised to one and to his heirs, and if he dieth without heir of his body, that then the land shall remain over; that in such case, the donee hath but an estate in tail to him and the heirs males of his body.

And it was then also said by Anderson, Chief Justice, that in the time of Sir Anthony Brown, it was holden, that if a man be seised of two acres of land, and devised one of them to his wife for life, and that J. S. shall have the other acre after the death of his wife; that the wife hath not any estate in the later acre, for the cause aforesaid: afterwards, it was moved, what thing passed to the second son by that devise: and the Lord Anderson conceived that the words in the will, usually occupied with it, did amount to as much, as land let with it; and then the 60 acres were not let with it, and therefore did not pass. Windham, Justice, held the contrary; and he said, although they do not pass by the words, occupied with it; yet it shall pass to the son by the name of Jacks, or, the lands appertaining to Jacks, to which Anderson, mutata opinione, afterwards agreed.

PASCH. 28 ELIZ. IN THE KINGS BENCH.

CLXXXIV. WROTH AND THE COUNTESS OF SUSSEX CASE.

The case was this, In anno 4 & 5 of King Philip and Queen Mary; a private Act of Parliament was made, by which it was enacted, that the mannor of Burnham was assured to the Countess of Sussex for her joynture; with a proviso in the Act, that it should be lawful for the Earl of Sussex to may a lease or leases for 21 years; and afterwards, a year before the first lease [131] was ended, he made another lease for 21 years, and this second lease was to begin and take effect from the end of the first lease. And if this second lease were a good lease within the intent and meaning of the Act, was the question?

Popham, the Queens Attorny General said, that it was not; 1. Because it was a lease to begin at a day to come: and, 2. Because it was made before the first lease was ended. But he said, it may be objected, that the Act saith (lease or leases), it is not the sense of the Act, that he might make leases in the reversion: but the sense and meaning of the makers of the Act, was, that he might make leases in possession, and not leases in futuro; for if it should be so, then he might make a lease for 21 years to begin after his death: which should be a great prejudice to the countess, and against the meaning of the Act, which was made for her advantage

The Lord Treasurer, and Sir Walter Mildmay, Knight, have a commission from the Queen to make leases of the Queens lands for 21 years, because the Queen would not be troubled. It was holden, that by virtue of that commission, they could not make any leases, but leases in possession only: but all other leases which did exceed the term of 21 years, and in reversion, were to pass by the hands of the Queen, and her Attorny General, and not by them only by virtue of their said commission. And if I grant to one power before the statute to make leases of my land for 21 years, he cannot make any lease, but only leases in possession; and he cannot lease upon lease, for by the same reason, that he might make one lease to begin in futuro; by the same reason he might make 20 several leases to begin in futuro; and so frustrate the intent of the Act. It was Marshall's case upon the Statute of 1 Eliz. of Leases to be made by bishops; the Bishop of Canterbury made a lease to him for one and twenty years; and afterwards he made a lease unto another for 21 years to begin at the end of the first lease. And it was holden, that the second lease was void. But in the great case which was in the Exchequer-Chamber, upon this point, there the second lease was in possession, and to begin presently, and to run on with the other lease; and therefore it was adjudged to be good, because the land was charged with more than 21 years in the whole. And if the earl had done so here, it had been a good lease. Wray, Justice, said, that if the second lease had been made but two or three years before the expiration of the first lease, that then it had been utterly void; but being made but 2 or 3 days or months before the expiration of the first lease, he doubted, if it should be void, or not. The statute of 32 H. 8. makes leases for 21 years, to be good from the day of the date thereof: and a lease was made to begin at a day to come: and yet it was holden by two of the justices in the Court of Common Pleas, that it was a good lease: and by two other justices of the same Court, it was holden, the lease was [132] not good. And Clench, Justice, said, that there was no difference, if it be by one deed, or by two deeds: and therefore he held, that if the earl had made a lease for 21 years, and within a year another, the same had been void, if it were by one deed, or two deeds, for that he did exceed his authority. And he said, in the principal case, if there had not been a proviso, he could not have made a lease; and therefore the proviso which gave a power to make a lease for 21 years, should be taken strictly. There was a case of the Lord Marquess of, &c. that it should be lawful for him to make leases for 21 years by a statute; and he made another lease to begin after the end or expiration of the first lease; and it was doubted, whether it were a good lease or not, because he had not made any lease before: but if both were made by force of the statute; all held, that the second lease was void.

At another day, the case was argued by Daniel, for the lease in reversion to begin at a day to come. And he said, that in a statute the words alone are not to be considered, but also the meaning of the parties, and they are not to be severed. Also he said, that a statute-law is to be expounded by the common-law; and by the common-law, if one giveth power unto another to make leases of his lands, he might make leases in reversion, because an authority is to be taken most beneficially for them for whose cause it was given. So that if a man grant an authority to another to make estates of his lands, by those general words he may make leases for years or for life, gifts in tail, feoffments, or any estates whatsoever; if one gives a commission to another to make leases for one and twenty years of his lands, he may make a lease in reversion; and so it was holden in the dutchy in the case between Alcock and Hicks. Also he said, that this lease was a good lease by the statute-law: for the statute of Rich. 3. gives authority to cestuy que use, that he may make estates in reversion. The statute of 27 H. 8. which gives authority to the Chief Officer of the Court of Surveyors to make leases, if it had stayed there, he might have made leases in reversion; therefore the statute goes further, and saith, proviso, that he shall not make a lease in reversion. See 19 Eliz. Dyer, 357. The Statute of 35 H. 8. of Leases to be made by the husbands of the lands of their wives, by the general words of the statute they might have made leases in reversion; and therefore the case there was, that where the husband had made a lease of his wives lands for 21 years; and afterwards he made another lease for 21 years, to begin after the lease in esse: it was conceived, that such a lease was good, because in the Act there was no restraint of leases in reversion, as there is in the statute of 32 H. 8.

In all cases of statutes which are with provisoes, the law upon them shall be taken generally, but in such particulars only as are restrained by the proviso; and here in this case, the pro-[133]-viso went to the ancient rent to be reserved, and that the countess should have remedy for the said rent; and therefore it shall be construed at large as unto all other points which are not restrained by the proviso.

As if the wife be within age, and she and her husband joyn in a lease, yet such a lease shall be good, by the statute of 32 H. 8. because the law is general, and doth not restrain these imperfections expressly. So if a feoffment in fee be made with warranty, proviso, that he shall not vouch; yet that restraint goes to the voucher only, and he is at large to rebutt, or to have a warrantia chartæ. A lease is made for life, proviso, that he shall not do voluntary waste; he is at large to do any other waste: otherwise it would be, if there were no proviso; and there a proviso makes the precedent words to be expounded more liberally. The Stat. of 33 H. 8. cap. 39. of Surveyors, which giveth authority to the chief officer to set, or let for 21 years, he might have made a lease for 21 years, if by the proviso he had not been restrained; and yet the words are put singularly: but the words of this Act, upon which the case in question doth arise, are lease or leases; and therefore it shall be expounded most liberally for the party.

Again, he argued, that as to the intent of the statute, that this lease was within the meaning of it; for the meaning is to be collected out of the words, and shall not be drawn to any private construction or intent against the words, which should be here, if this lease should be avoided: for by such construction and exposition, the earl, his heirs, executors, &c. should be prejudiced, and the countess only should be benefited. Also by this Act remedy is given to the countess against such lessees, that she should have the rent, by debt, or distress; as if she had been party or privy: therefore it is reason, via versa, that the lessees have remedy against her for their leases. Also he said, that the same remedy should be for them against the countess, as they had against the earl himself if he had been alive; and therefore they should have such remedy against the countess, as they had against the earl. And further he said, that the statute is to be expounded according to the words where such an exposition is not rigorous, nor mischievous: and private laws are to be expounded by the letter, and strictly, as the deed of the party shall be. As 14 E. 4. 1 Br. Parliament, 61. A particular Act was made, that the Chancellor calling unto him one justice, might award a subpena between A. and B. and end the matter betwixt them: and there, by all the justices, except Littleton, he shall not award a general subpena, but a special subpena, making mention of the Act; for he shall pursue the particular Act strictly: but an Act which is for the common profit, shall be expounded largely. Also a statute shall not be expounded largely, or by equity to overthrow an estate. As the statute which gives, that if the woman doth consent to the ravisher, that the next heir shall enter: if the daughter entreth; and after a son is born; he shall not put out the daughter, [134] because the statute shall not be drawn to a private intent, to the overthrow of the estate before lawfully vested in the daughter: and so in the principal case, the statute shall not be drawn to a private intent for the benefit of the countess, to overthrow the lease for years. And it is not like to the case which hath been put, that if he maketh a lease for 20 years, and so for 20 years; that the same is not good by the statute; for I will agree, that that is a lease for 40 years. Egerton, Sollicitor, contrary; First, as to the word (demise, or dimission,) it is nothing else but the letting of the land, and so, (lease) comes from (laiser) a French word; and such a lease to begin at a day to come, is interesse of a lease, and not a lease it self, for he hath not left the land. As if I say to you, I let you my lands for 21 years; when shall you have my land? Not at a day to come, but presently. If I sell you land, and covenant, that it is discharged of another lease for 21 years, and there is a lease to commence after the lease for 21 years, I have broken by covenant. If I be bounden to make you a lease for 21 years, and I say to you, I make you a lease to begin 200 years hence, I have forfeited my bond. If the custom of the mannor be, that dominus pro tempore may make a lease for 21 years, may he make a lease to begin at a day to come? Truly no, if there be not a special custom so to do. If I give authority to my steward to make leases of my lands for 21 years, he cannot make a lease to begin 100 years after. As to the case of the dutchy, there the commission was, that he might make leases according to his discretion, therefore there he might make what lease he pleaseth. As to the statute which enableth cestuy que use, of 1 R. 3. that case is not like to our case, for that Act is, All feoffments, estates, &c. therefore he might make such leases without doubt. And if I devise, that my executors shall make leases of my lands for 21 years, they cannot make leases to begin at a day to come; and if they do not make the leases within convenient time, the heir shall enter, and avoid their authority.

And statute-law shall have such an exposition, as that the precise time ought to be observed; as the statute of 14 E. 3. Rastal Voucher, 8. If the tenant voucheth to warranty a dead man, and the demandants will aver, that the vouchee is dead, or that there is no such, their averment shall be received without more delay. Upon this statute the case was, 21 E. 3. where one was vouched to warranty, and the summoneas ad warrantizandum issued, and then came the demandant and would have averred, that the vouchee was dead; and the tenant said, that he ought to have averred that upon the voucher to warranty, and that now he had surceased his time: and the demandant said, that the statute did not bind him to that, nor did prescribe any time, but left the same generally. Yet it was the opinion of the whole Court, that he should have the averment at the time of the [135] voucher, or not at all. So the statute of 11 H 7. cap. 20. If a woman who hath a joynture for life or in tail, suffereth a recovery, and afterwards the issue in tail releaseth all his right by fine, and dieth, his issue may enter; for the assent ought to be by voucher in the same action, or the like: for if there be a mean instant between the recovery and the assent, then any assent after is nothing to the purpose; for the recovery being once void by the statute, cannot be made good by an assent afterwards. See Doctor and Student, 54. And yet the statute is, provided, that the statute shall not extend to any such recovery, &c. if the next heir be assenting to the same recovery, &c. so as the same assent, or agreement be of record, or enrolled. And it doth not say, that the assent should be at one time, or at another. But to come to leases upon statutes. Before the statute of 2 E. 6. cap. 8. if leases had not been found by offices, the lessees should have been ousted, and put to their traverse: but put case, that after that statute, a lease made to begin at a day to come, were not found by office, should it be helped by that statute? No truly; and so it is holden in the Court of Wards at this day; and the Lord Chief Justice of England held so in his reading at Lincolns-Inn.

The Statute of 1 Eliz. of Leases to be made by bishops, is, that leases other than for 21 years from the time that they begin; that is, when they may take effect as deeds, and not when they shall take effect to be executed; for so they might make leases infinite, &c. It was adjourned, &c.

CLXXXV. LEWEN AND MODY'S CASE.

In a replevin brought by Lewen, doctor of the civil law, against Mody; who made conusans as bailiff to one Fowke, and shewed, that 14 Elizabeth, the morrow of the Purification, a fine was levied between Lovelace and Rutland plaintiffs, and the said Fowke and other deforceants: by which fine, the said deforceants acknowledged the said mannor to be the right of the said Lovelace and Rutland, come ceo, &c. And the said Lovelace and Rutland, by the same fine, granted and rendred to the said Fowke a rent of 20l. per annum in fee out of the said mannor; and for the rent arrear, &c. And the plaintiff in bar of the conusans, shewed, that the said Fowke being seised of the said rent, granted the same to one Horden, &c. Upon which grant they were at issue: and the jury found, that the said Fowke being seised of the said rent, by indenture reciting, that whereas a fine was levied between Fowke and 7 others plaintiffs, and Lovelace and Rutland deforceants; as the rest ut supra, granted redditum prædict. to Horden; and further found, that no other fine [136] was levied between the parties aforesaid but the said fine, and that the parties to the fine were seised of the mannor at the time of the fine levied, and of no other land: and if this rent so described by the said indenture, should pass or not, was the question? And it is to be observed, that the indenture of grant between Fowke and Horden, recited a fine of the mannor of Coleshall inter alia, where the jury have found, that the fine was levied of the said mannor only. And it was argued by Shuttleworth, that the said rent did not pass to Horden by the said indenture; for the rent, described by the indenture, is not the rent which was granted by the fine: and if I let lands for years to A. and afterwards A. grants the land which B. holds of me, the grant is void; as 13 E. 3. Grants, 63. Land is given to husband and wife for their lives; and the lessor grants the reversion of the land which the husband holdeth for life, nothing passeth. Walmesley, contrary; The variance in the fine shall not avoid the grant; for the indenture of the rent agrees with the fine, in the term, in the year of the reign, and in the name of the parties to the fine, in the quantity of the rent, and in the land charged; the only difference is in the phrase of law, deforceant for plaintiff; and it is granted, that that is but a matter of circumstance, and not of substance. Snag, Serjeant, contrary. And first he took exception to the verdict; for this, that a special verdict is given upon a special absq; hoc. And the Lord Anderson interrupted him, that it was a clear case, that such a verdict upon such an issue might be found. And so it was adjudged in the case between Vavasour and Doleman. Fenner argued, as Walmesley, The grant agrees with the fine in the points of greatest importance, and one falsity shall not prejudice it where there are so many verities which may induce the Court to judge, that the rent granted by the indenture, is the rent created by the fine: and in a fine, the substance is not, who was deforceant, who was plaintiff; but who was party to the fine? And that some of the parties to the fine were seised of the land of which the fine is levied: and if the indenture had been, whereas such a rent was granted by a fine levied between A. and B. without shewing who was plaintiff, and who deforceant, it had been good enough. And although that in this case, the plaintiff and deforceant as mis-set down, yet the same shall not make the grant void; for utile per inutile non vitiatur. So if I reciting, the original grant was made to me by indenture tripartite between A. of the first part; B. of the second part; and my self of the third part; whereas the indenture it self is, between my self of the first part, the same is not material, &c. For, such a small mistaking shall not avoid the grant. So if I by my deed reciting, that whereas I am possessed of certain lands for term of years of the demise of Sir Christopher Hatton, knight, Treasurer of England; whereas in truth he is Chancellor; that mistaking of the dignity shall not prejudice the grant. And it was [137] agreed by all the justices, If the said fine had been pleaded at it is recited in the indenture, mistaking the plaintiff and deforceant; he who had so pleaded it, had failed of his record; but in the case at Bar, the reciting who was plaintiff, who defendant, was matter of surplusage, and therefore it shall not hurt the party. As 23 Eliz. Dyer, 376. A. seised of a house in D. which he purchased of Tho. Cotton, he made a feoffment thereof by these words; A house in D. late Richard Cotton's. And notwithstanding this variance, it was good enough; for the variance is in a thing which is matter of surplusage: and so much the rather, because the said A. had not another house in D. &c.

CLXXXVI. Lucas and Picroft's Case.

The case was, that an assise of novel disseisin was brought in the county of Northampton, of two acres of lands; and as to one acre, the tenant pleaded a plea tryable in a forreign county. Upon which the assise was adjourned into the Common Pleas, and from thence into the forreign county; where, by nisi prius, it was found for the plaintiff; and now in the Common Pleas, Snag, Serjeant, prayed judgment for the plaintiff; and cited the book, 16 H. 7. 12. Where an assise is adjourned into the Common Pleas for difficulty of the verdict, they there may give judgment. But all the Court held the contrary; for here is another acre of which the title is yet to be tryed before the justices of assise; before the tryal of which, no judgment shall be given for the acre of which the title is found. And the assise is properly depending before the justices of assise, before whom the plaintiff may discontinue his assise. And it is not like to the cases of 6 E. 4. and 8 Ass. 15. where in an assise, a release was pleaded, dated in a forreign county; which was denyed: wherefore the assise was adjourned into the Common Pleas, and there found by enquest, not the deed of the plaintiff's. Now if the plaintiff will release his damages, he shall have judgment of the freehold presently. But in our case, parcel of the land put in view, remains not tryed; which the plaintiff cannot release, as he may his damages, and therefore the Court remanded the verdict, to the justices of assise.

CLXXXVII. HARE AND MELLERS CASE.

[See Proctor v. Webster, 1885, 16 Q. B. D. 113.]

Hugh Hare of the Inner-Temple brought an action upon the case against Phillip Mellers, and declared, that the defendant had exhibited unto the Queen a slanderous bill against the plaintiff, charging the said Hugh to have recovered against the defendant 400l. by forgery, perjury, and cosening; and also, that he had published the matter of the said bill at Westm. &c. In this case, it was said by the Court, that the exhibiting of the bill to the Queen, is not in it self any cause of action; for the Queen is the head and fountain of justice, and therefore it is lawful for all her subjects to resort unto her ad faciendam querimoniam: but if a subject after the bill once exhibited will divulge the matter therein comprehended to the disgrace and discredit of the person intended, the same is good cause of action. And that was the case of Sir John Conway, who upon such matter recovered: and as to the words themselves, it was the opinion of the Court, that they are not actionable: for it is not expresly shewed, that the plaintiff hath used perjury, forgery, &c. And it may be, that the attorny, or sollicitor in the cause, hath used such indirect means not known to the plaintiff: and in such case it is true, that the plaintiff hath recovered by forgery, &c. and yet without reproach: and by perjury he cannot recover, for he cannot be sworn in his own cause. It was adjudged against the plaintiff.

CLXXXVIII. MOORE AND THE BISHOP OF NORWICH'S CASE.

In a quare impedit by Moor against the Bishop of Norwich, &c. it was found for the plaintiff; and thereupon issued forth a writ to the bishop, which was not retorned; upon which an alias issued forth: upon which the bishop retorned, that after judgment given in the quare impedit, the same incumbent against whom the action was brought, was presented, instituted, and inducted into the same church, and so the church is full, &c. And if that was a good retorn, it was oftentimes debated. Windham cited the case, L. 5 E. 4. 115, 116. A quare impedit against parson, patron, and Ordinary, and, pendant the writ, the parson resigned, and the Ordinary gave notice of it to the patron; and afterwards by lapse, the Ordinary presented the same incumbent, who resigned: and afterwards, the plaintiff in the quare impedit had judgment to recover; and it was holden, because the same incumbent is now in by a new title; scil. by lapse, and the same person against whom the recovery was had; and that appeared to the Court, he should be removed. See 9 Eliz. Dyer, 260. [139] and 21 Eliz. Dyer, 364. And it was said by the Lord Anderson, What person soever is presented and admitted after the action brought, unless it be that the title of the patron be paramount the title of the plaintiff upon such recovery he shall be removed: and so in the principal case, it was adjudged, that the retorn of the bishop was not good. Wherefore, he was fined 10l. and a sicut alias awarded upon pain of 100l.

CLXXXIX. PARRET AND DOCTOR MATTHEWS CASE.

A præmunire was brought and prosecuted by the Queen's Attorney-General and Parret, against Doctor Matthews Dean of Christ-Church in Oxford, and others, for that they procured the said Parret to be sued in the City of Oxford before the commissary there, in an action of trespass, by libel according to the ecclesiastical law; in which suit, Parret pleaded his freehold, and so to the jurisdiction of the Court; and yet they proceeded there, and Parret was condemned and imprisoned: and afterward, the said suit depending, the Queens Attorny withdrew his suit for the Queen.

It was now moved to the Court, If, notwithstanding that, the party informer might proceed in his suit there? See 7 E. 4. 2. the King shall have præmunire; and the party grieved, his action, see Br. Præmunire, 13. for by Brook, None can have præmunire but the King.

Cook, There is a president in the Book of Entries, 427. In a præmunire, the words are, Ad respondendum tam Domino Regi quam R. F. and that upon the statute of 16 R. 2. And see ibid. 429. tam Domino Regi de contemptu prædict. quam dicto A. B. de damnis: but it was holden by the whole Court, that if the Queens Attorny will not ulterius prosequi, the party grieved cannot maintain that suit; for the principal matter in the præmunire is the conviction; and the putting of the party out of the Kings protection; and the damages are but accessary; and then the principal being released, the damages are gone. And it was also holden, that the presidents in the Book of Entries, are not to be regarded; for there is not any judgment upon any of the pleadings there.

CXC. ARCHEBOLL AND BORRELL'S CASE.

Archeboll brought an action upon the case against Borrell, and declared, that the defendant had procured one L. to bring an appeal of the death of J. S. against the now plaintiff. To [140] which endictment the now plaintiff pleaded, not guilty; and upon that he was acquitted. The defendant pleaded, that the now plaintiff was endicted of the said death in the county of S. scil. of the stroak, and of the death of the dead in the same county. To which the plaintiff by replication said, that the said J. S. was struck in the said county of S. but died in the county of D. so as this indictment found in the county of S. is void by the common law: and by the statute of 2 E. 6 the party ought to be indicted in the county where the party died, and not where the stroke was given. And upon that replication, the defendant demurred in law.

Broughton, The plaintiff ought to be barred; 1. The plaintiff was not lawfully acquitted, for the proceedings are not by due process; for upon the writ of appeal, no pledges are retorned. Which see, 11 H. 4. 160. Then, if the appeal was not duly sued, the plaintiff was not duly acquitted; and then conspiracy, or action upon the case doth not lie: for such suit doth not lie, but where, if the plaintiff had been found guilty, he should have judgment of life and member: which shall not be, upon an insufficient appeal, 9 H. 5. 2. 2. Because it is not shewed in the declaration, if the defendant did flie, or not. 3. The declaration wants these words, falso & malitiose, as they are in the writ of conspiracy. And also it is not shewed, if the plaintiff in the appeal be sufficient or not; for if he be sufficient, the abettors shall not be enquired. See Westm. 2. And as to the action it self, he conceived, that it doth not lie by bill, but by original writ against those who are found abettors. See 2 E. 2. Fitz. Action upon the Statute, 28. such suit by writ. But see 25 Eliz. It was holden, such suit doth not lie by writ. And see Book of Entries, 43, 44.

Flemming, to the contrary, It needs not to be shewed, that the plaintiff found pledges ad prosequendum, for without that, the writ is good enough; and although that the writ be not well executed, yet it is good. For our action is not grounded upon the record of appeal, but at the common law, and the record is but conveyance to our action: and also there needs not in the declaration, falso & malitiose, for they are implyed in the words, abettavit, & procuravit. And he conceived, that this action is at the common law, and not only upon the statute of Westm. 2. Which see, Stamford, 172. And see 3 E. 3. Fitz. Conspiracy, 13. Conspiracy lieth upon an endictment of trespass, as well as upon an endictment of felony; for the law hath provided remedy in every case where a man is damnified. As 43 E. 3. 20. A writ of deceit was brought, for that the defendant by fraud and collusion had procured J. S. to bring a formedon against the plaintiff of such a mannor, by reason whereof the plaintiff was put to great charges, and holden maintainable; and the statute of West. 2. is in the affirmative, and therefore it doth not abridge [141] the common law, but the subject may take the advantage of the common law if he pleaseth; for it may be that the course according to the common-law will more avail him, than that upon the statute: for upon the statute law, if the abettors have not any thing, the party is without remedy; but by the common law, the party grieved, shall have execution upon the body. 13 E. 2. Conspiracy holden maintainable against one who procured one to sue an appeal against the plaintiff. See Fitz. Conspiracy, 25. Fitzh. Na. Br. 98. If A. procures B. to sue an action against me, to vex and molest me, an action of disceit lieth. And as to the matter of the endictment, I conceive, that it is not any bar; for the endictment is meerly void, because it was found in the county where the stroke was, and not in the county where the party strucken died, where of right it ought to be, and that by the statute of 2 E. 6. Then if the endictment be insufficient, it is as no endictment, and then the plea cannot excuse the defendant. Which see, 20 E. 4. 6. If the endictment be not sufficient, the appellee shall wage battail, and the abettors shall be acquitted. Vide inde, 19 E. 3. Coron. 444. 26 H. 8. 2. And by the common law, the plaintiff might at his pleasure bring an appeal where the plaintiff was strucken, or where he died: but in such case, the tryal shall be by both counties. And 3 H. 7. 12. Appeal was brought in the county where the party was stricken; and 44 H. 7. 18. the appeal was brought in the county where the party died; and there it is said, that in an appeal the plaintiff may declare, as if the thing were done in both counties, but the endictment ought to be in one county only. And 43 E. 3. 18. A man strucken in one county, and dieth in another county, the appeal shall be brought in the county where he died. In an action upon the case brought in the county of Essex, the plaintiff declared, that the defendant held certain lands, by reason of which he ought to repair a wall in the county of Essex juxta le Thames, and that the plaintiff had land in the county of Middlesex adjoyning to the said wall; and for want of repairing the said wall, his land in the county of Middlesex was drowned; and the writ was allowed, being brought in the county of Essex. See 6 H. 7. 10.

Clench, I conceive this action doth not lie by the common law; for no writ of conspiracy was at the common law before the statute. And vide F. N. B. 114. F. If the plaintiff in an appeal be nonsuit, conspiracy lieth; but contrary, if he be acquitted, for he shall have his remedy against the abettors, &c.

Plowden, This action lieth at the common law, and an endictment is no plea in this action; and it is not grounded upon the statute as a conspiracy is, and so it well lieth, although the abettors be not enquired.

Gawdy, Serjeant, This is an action by the common law; for in all cases where one procures damages to another, so as the [142] party is put to charges, an action lieth, a fortiori where the procurement extends to the danger of life. And see F. N. B. 116. F. Men conspire to have a false office found of my lands, which office is found by such procurement, conspiracy lieth; and the statute of 2 E. 6. doth not alter the law before; for it is in the affirmative. See the statute, cap. 24.

Gawdy, Justice, conceived, that the endictment did not excuse the defendants in this action, but against those who are sworn to give evidence for the King, and not others; for they may well procure an appeal malitiously, notwithstanding the endictment.

Walmesley, Serjeant, conceived, that the action doth not lie at the common law; for in no case where the party useth but the means of the law by the Kings writ, without any corruption or covin of the party, he shall be amerced only pro falso clamore, and no action lieth against him, because he hath not used but the means of the law. Which see, 2 R. 3. 9. by all the justices. But yet in an appeal, because it toucheth the life of a man, the defendant shall have his damages against the plaintiff, but not in any other action which is a vexation by suit, if no corporation or covin be in the party who prosecutes such suit. See such matter justifiable in Conspiracy, 35 H. 6. 13, 14. Afterwards, the principal case was adjourned.

PASCH. 28 ELIZ. IN THE KINGS BENCH.

CXCI. PARKER AND HOWARD'S CASE.

In debt upon an obligation, the condition was, that whereas the plaintiff and defendant be now joyntly seised of the office of the Register of the Court of Admiralty, if the defendant shall permit the plaintiff to exercise the said office, and take the profits of it wholly to his own use during his life, without let or interruption done by him, that then, &c. The defendant pleaded, that the custom of the realm of England is, that the Lord Admiral for the time being, might grant the said office, and that such grant should be good but for the life of the grantor. And further shewed, that the Lord Clynton, Lord Admiral, granted the said office to the plaintiff and the defendant, and died; and that the Lord Howard was appointed Lord Admiral: and that he 27 Eliz. granted the said office to one Wade, who put him out, and interrupted him; before which time the defendant suffered the plaintiff to enjoy the said office, and to take the profits of it: upon which the plaintiff demurred in law.

Cook argued for the plaintiff, that the defendant's plea was not good, for he hath not entituled the Lord Admiral to grant the office; for he saith, that the custom of the realm of England is; which he hath pleaded in such manner, as no issue [143] can be taken upon it; for it is pleaded, quod usitatum est quod Admiralis pro tempore existens, non potest concedere officium prædict. nisi pro termino vitæ suæ; and that cannot be, for it cannot be tryed; for the venire facias cannot be, of the realm of England: also, if it be, through the whole realm of England, then the same is the common law, and not consuetudo. Which see, Br. Custom, 39. And see 4 & 5 Mar. Dyer, 152, 153. An express case of this office; and there he prescribes in consuetudine in Anglia, &c. And also, that such grant is good but during the life of the Admiral who granted it. Also he doth not answer to any time of the grant of the Admiral Howard; for if he were lawfully put out by Wade, yet the defendant against his own obligation cannot put us out, or interrupt us. As L. 5 E. 4. 115. In a quare impedit against an abbot and the incumbent, who make default upon the distress; upon which a writ to the bishop was awarded for the plaintiff: upon which the bishop retorned, that the incumbent resigned; of which the bishop gave notice: and afterwards lapse encurred, and the bishop collated the said former incumbent, and then that writ came to him. Now although the incumbent be in by a new title, yet he is bound by the judgment. So here, although the defendant had another title, and the former title of the plaintiff be determined; yet against his own deed and obligation, he shall not put out the plaintiff. And the Court was clear, that the judgment should be given for the plaintiff. But afterwards, the cause was compounded by the order of the Lord Chancellor.

CXCII. MANNINGS CASE.

Note: it was agreed by the justices in this case, that where an enfant executor sold the goods of his testator at less undervalue than they were worth; and afterwards brought an action of detinue against the vendee upon it in retardatione executionis testamenti; that this sale of the enfant executor was good; and should bind him notwithstanding his nonage.

CXCIII. Mich. 28 Eliz. In the Common Pleas.

The case was; A man made a feoffment in fee to the use of himself for life, and afterwards to the use of his eldest son in tail, and afterwards to the use of his right heirs, not having at the time of the feoffment any son: afterwards, he suffered a common recovery, had issue a son, who died in the life of his father, having issue a son, and afterwards he himself dieth: it was holden [144] in this case, that the son and heir of the son, should not avoid this recovery by the statute of 32 H. 8. For there was not any remainder in him at the time of the recovery had, but the remainder then was in abeyance; for then the son was not born: and the words of the said statute are, that such recovery shall be void against such person to whom the reversion or remainder shall then appertain; i.e. at the time of the recovery. And it was said, that if lands be given to E. for life, the remainder to B. in tail, the remainder to C. in fee; B. dieth, his wife with child with a son; a recovery is had against E. with the assent of C. and afterwards the son is born, he shall not be helped by this statute, for that the remainder was not in esse at the time of the recovery. But it was holden in the principal case, that the heir might avoid this recovery by the common law: for the recompence could not extend to such a remainder which was not in esse.

CXCIV. The Countess of Sussex and Wroth's Case.

It was moved in this case by Gawdy, Serjeant, if the disseisee licence J. S. to put his cattle into the land whereof he was disseised; if it were a good licence? and, if by the execution of the said licence, the freehold should be revested in the disseisee, so as if the disseisor distrain the cattel of J. S. for damage-feasant, and in a replevin avow, the plaintiff may plead, that the freehold was in the disseisee who so licensed him? Periam, Justice, The licence is void; for at the time of the grant of it, the disseisee had but a right before he had recontinued the land by re-entry. Windham, If the disseisee make a lease for years of the land, whereof he is disseised, it is a void lease. Anderson, If the disseisee command one to enter into the land, and he doth accordingly, the same is good. The case was adjourned.

Mich. 28 Eliz. In the Exchequer.

CXCV. Payn's Case.

A writ of error was brought by Payn, Treasurer of the Records in the Kings-Bench, in the Exchequer-Chamber, upon a judgment given in the Court of the Exchequer for the Queen, upon an assignment of a lease for years by the Countess of Oxford to the Queen; one error was assigned, because whereas the issue was joyned upon the intrusion, and the taking of the profits, and so two matters put in issue; and the jury have found Payn guilty of the intrusion; but have said nothing of the taking of the profits, and so the verdict doth not meet fully with [145] the issue. The great matter of the case was upon this point; the information is, that the assignment of the Queen was, 16 Maii, the intrusion 17 Maii, the inrollment of the deed of assignment 18 Maii; and so it appeared upon the record, that the intrusion is supposed to be done before that the Queen had any interest in the land in which the intrusion is supposed, for nothing was in the Queen before the enrollment: for the Queen is a corporation of State, of such prerogative and excellency, that she cannot give or take an interest in land without matter of record; and this lease is a chattel-real, and an interest in land. See as to the inrollment, 1 H. 7. 30. 31. 5 E. 4. 7. 7 E. 4. 16.

But I agree, that if lessee for years be outlawed, the lease shall be in the King without office, for the outlawry it self is a sufficient record to entitle the King unto it. If the Queen makes a lease for years of lands rendring rent, with a clause, that if the rent be behind, that the lease shall cease, if the rent be not paid. It was agreed here in Sir Moile Finch's case, that the lessee continuing his possession, shall not be accounted an intruder before office thereof found, but he shall be accomptant to the Queen for the profits as bailiff of his own wrong: but here we are charged with intrusion.

It hath been doubted, if personal things are in the King without office, 37 H. 6. But now it is clear they are. As 35 E. 3. Br. Prerogat. 113. The villein of the King purchaseth goods, the property thereof is in the King without seisure; and so it is of all personal chattels, because they are transitory, 1 H. 7. 17. 4 H. 7. 1. 39 H. 6. 26. And here it appeareth upon the record, that this deed of assignment was delivered to Baron Clark, 16 May, at Westm. and that was Ascension-day, and so non dies juridicus, and so no Court there then holden, and then the said deed was not delivered in Court of Record, and then not delivered to him as a Judge, but as a private person, although that it was delivered to the use of the Queen. But in 37 H. 6. there is some opinion, that if such a deed be delivered in Court to one of the Barons, or be put into the Kings coffers, that then it is a record.

Atkins, to the contrary: And to the first exception, it is to be known, that in every plea where a contempt is laid to the charge of the defendant, he ought first to excuse his contempt: and therefore here the exordium of the plea is, quoad venire vi & armis, & quicquid est in contemptu Dominæ Reginæ, necnon de tota ulteriore transgressione & contemptu per ipso supposit. Quod ipse in nullo est inde culpabilis: and afterwards plead over: and so it is in an action of trespass. And also upon the Statute of 8 H. 6. of Forcible Entry; and here the issue upon the contempt doth ensue the other issue; for if the other issue is found against the defendant, so also is this. As to the other point I agree, that a corporation cannot take or speak without writing: [146] and the King being a corporation, and who only makes corporations, cannot take but by writing of as high a nature; scil. by record: and we have here a record (as is granted by the other side) being enrolled 18 May, which was delivered 16 May; and being once enrolled, it hath relation to the time of the delivery; i.e. to 16 May; and then Payn upon the whole matter was an intrudor 17 May: and an intrudor by his entry doth not gain any thing against the Queen; and therefore the information of the intrusion is, diversis diebus & vicibus intrusit; although it be but one continued possession; and therefore every instant during his possession, he is an intrudor. As to the delivery of the deed of assignment upon the day of the Ascension, which is not dies juridicus, that is not material. As 12 E. 4. 8. by Pigot, If the day of retorn of a writ, i.e. 4to die, falls upon a Sunday, it is good enough, although no Court can then be holden but the day following, and the plea is not discontinued; and this delivery of the deed of assignment might be made out of term there upon any day in the term which is not dies juridicus. Contrary, where the thing is of necessity to be done in the term; as in the case between Fish and Brocket, of proclamations made upon a fine; for a man may acknowledge a recognizance or a deed to be enrolled in the time of Vacation, &c.

Tanfield, As to the interest, the enrollment hath relation, not as to the profits; for Payn cannot be intrudor 17 May, by any relation.

Popham, the Queens Attorny, When an information of intrusion and taking of the profits is here exhibited, the defendant ought to justifie his entry; and if the entry be found against him, so as his entry is an intrusion, then the illegal taking of the profits is found also. And he said, that the deed acknowledged and delivered to the Baron, is a record, although not enrolled, be the acknowledgment thereof in Court, or out of Court. If an information upon a penal law be exhibited to a Baron of the Exchequer out of Court, and afterwards another informer exhibits another information upon the same statute for the same offence against the same person, and that is exhibited in the Court before the first; the first information shall be preferred, and the defendant shall answer to that, and not to the other: and for exhibiting the same in Court, or out of Court, it is not material. And the assignment when it is enrolled, hath relation unto the acknowledging of it. A reversion is granted to one for life, the remainder to the King; the particular tenant attorns to the King, the remainder is not in the King by the attornment; but if the deed be afterwards enrolled, it shall be said to be in the King from the time of the attornment: and the King shall have the benefit of all the mean profits from the time of the attornment. A lease for years is made by the King, reserving rent, with a clause, that if the rent be not paid, that the lease shall [147] be void: the rent is not paid 10 years, after an office is found, the King shall be answered all the profits from the time of default in payment of the rent. And although no intrusion can be laid in the information 17 May, yet it shall be good for the 18th day.

Cook, The judgment for the Queen upon an information of the intrusion, is, quod defendens, de intrusione, transgressione, & contemptu prædict. convincatur, &c. And afterwards, a commission shall issue forth, for to enquire of the mean profits, and there the defendant may shew this matter in taking of the damages: and if the intrusion be at any time in the information, it is sufficient enough to have judgment upon it: and in our case, the continuance is laid 18 May.

Egerton, Sollicitor, The record warrants the judgment given upon it; for possession laid in the Queen, is sufficient to this information. And here Payn doth not answer the Queen's title, but traverseth the intrusion, and therefore he being found intrudor by verdict, judgment ought to be given upon it. For the jury hath found the intrusion generally, and specially, 17 May. And that cannot be assigned for error; for it is part of the verdict, of which error doth not lie, but attaint: for if any error was, it was in the jury, and not in the Court. Which Manwood concessit.

Tanfield, As to the case of continuance of an intrusion, it is clear, that every continuance ought to have a beginning; for a thing, which hath no beginning, cannot be continued; and here is not any beginning: for the beginning which is laid in the information, is pretended to be 17 May; and that cannot be, causa qua supra.

Popham, If an information be brought of an intrusion, where in truth there is not any record to prove it, and the jury find the intrusion, shall you have a writ of error upon it? And every continuance of intrusion, is an intrusion. This matter had been good evidence to the jury. Sed non habet locum hic, &c.

CXCVI. Sir John Southwell's Case.

Sir John Southwel of the county of Lanc. 7 July, 19 Eliz. made a conveyance of all his land to divers feoffees and their heirs, upon condition, that they should find him and his wife, and so many persons in his house, &c. prefer his daughters in marriage, pay his debts, &c. And if there fell out at the years end upon accompt made by the feoffees any surplusage, that then at the end of every such year they should answer such surplusage as should then remain in their hands unexpended of the rents and profits of his said lands, with clause of revocation, &c. After-[148]-wards, the said conveyance being in force, came the statute of 23 Eliz. concerning recusants: upon which statute, the said Southwel was now indicted: and afterwards, a commission issued out of the Exchequer to the Sheriff of Lancast. to enquire of the lands of the saith Southwel; and although against the said conveyance it was given in evidence, that after that conveyance, the said Sir John Southwel had granted trees out of the said lands, and had taken fines and incomes for leases, &c. Yet the jurors, charged to enquire, would not find, that the said Sir John had any lands, &c. And by special commandment of the Queen, it was referred out of the Exchequer, to all the justices of England, if the lands of the said Sir John Southwel contained ut supra, were subject to the said statute, and the penalties thereof? And upon great deliberation had, it was by them all resolved and agreed, that notwithstanding that conveyance, the said lands were lyable to the said statute. And as to the jurors which against their evidence given unto them for the Queen, gave their verdict, ut supra; process was awarded against them out of the said Court, for to appear before the Lord Treasurer, and the Barons of the Exchequer: and for their said contempt, they were committed to the Fleet, and each of them fined 50l.

CXCVII. HILL. 28 ELIZ. IN THE COMMON PLEAS.

In a writ of entry sur disseisin, the tenant said, that the house in demand is within the City of London; and that the said city is antiqua civitas; and that King Hen. 3. concessit civibus civitatis prædict. quod non implacitentur de terris & tenementis suis, &c. extra muros civitatis prædict. And further said, that he himself is civis London, &c. and demanded judgment of the writ: (note, in the pleading before, the tenant said) & illis rectum teneatur intra civitatem prædictam secundem consuetudinum civitatis prædict. And to this plea, exception was taken, because that the tenant doth not shew before whom by their custom they ought to be impleaded. It was the opinion of the whole Court, that the tenant ought to have shewed, that the citizens for their lands ought to be impleaded in the Hustings, &c. And the general words in the plea; scil. sed illis rectum teneatur intra civitatem prædictam secundum consuetudinem civitatis prædict. did not supply the defect aforesaid. After, it was awarded by the Court, that the tenant answer further, &c.

CXCVIII. THE LORD ANDERSON'S CASE.

The Lord Anderson, Chief Justice of the Common Pleas, brought an action of trespass by bill, for breaking of his house in the City of Wor. against one A. citizen of the said city; now came the mayor and communalty of the said city, and shewed their charter granted to them by King E. 6. and demanded conusans of pleas. And by the award of the whole Court, the conusans shall not be granted, because that the priviledge of this Court whereof the plaintiff is a principal member, is more antient than the patent, upon which the conusans is demanded. For the justices, clarks and attornies of this Court, ought to be here attending to do their offices and services, as belongs unto them, and shall not be impleaded, or compelled to implead others elsewhere than in this Court. And this priviledge was given to this Court upon the original erection of it. And such was the opinion of the whole Court. And as for the conusans, it was denyed.

CXCIX. COCKET AND ROBSTON'S CASE.

Arthur Cocket, Thomas Andrews, and A. his wife, brought an action of accompt against Robston, and declared, that one Mountford by the hands of Jo. Wase, had delivered 100l. to the defendant pro relevamine of the said Arthur and Anne. The defendant pleaded, ne unq; receiver pur accompt render: upon which they were at issue. And judgment was given, that the defendant should accompt: who, before auditors assigned, alledged, that he had expended the said 100l. in the education of the said Arthur and Anne, by the space of 8 years after the delivery of the said 100l. Upon which they were at issue. And upon evidence it was shewed on the plaintiffs part, that heretofore the said Arthur brought a writ of accompt against the said Robston, as guardian in socage for the land of the said Arthur discended; and upon the said accompt, the said Robston demanded allowance of 20 marks by the year for the said 8 years, for the education of the said Arthur, which was allowed to him; so as now he shall not be received to demand allowance for the said 8 years for the education of the said Arthur out of the accompt of the said 100l. and that was fully proved to the jury. It was moved, how the jury should demean themselves in their verdict? for the issue is, that the defendant had expended the whole 100l. in the education of the said Arthur and Anne. And some [150] were of opinion, if the defendant had expended part in the education of the said Anne only, yet the jury ought to find for the plaintiffs: for the issue is entire upon the expending of the said 100l. in the education of the said Arthur and Anne, without saying how much for the said Arthur, and how much for the said Anne. But Periam and Anderson, Justices, were clear to the contrary: wherefore they advised the jury to find specially, if they conceived, that the defendant had expended any part of the 100l. and to find it, and how much. And after the jury found against the defendant, that nothing was expended, &c. and gave damages 20l. And the justices at the first doubted, if damages should be given in an accompt? but at length they received the verdict, by the manner, de bene esse. See 2 R. 2. Fitz. Accompt. 45. 2 H. 7. 13. 10 H. 6. 18. 21 H. 6. 26. And the Book of Entries, 17. in such case damages were given.

CC. TOOLEY AND PRESTON'S CASE.

In an action upon the case by Tooley against Preston, (which see, Mich. 29 Eliz. reported in Leon. 1. Part, fol. 297.) judgment was given for the plaintiff; and now upon the retorn of the writ of enquiry of damages, it was moved, that for as much as the damages are excessive, viz. 200l. that the Court de Gratia would abridge the damages: but the whole Court was against it; for that they as Judges cannot know what prejudice and damage the plaintiff hath sustained, by the wrongful detaining of the said recognizance, but the jury may well have notice of such matter: and as the case is here, the damages are but incertain upon the assumpsit: for the defendant assumed, that if he did not redeliver the said recognizance to the plaintiff to pay him 1000l. so as the damages are reduced to certainty by the promise of the defendant himself. And by Anderson, If I bail to you an obligation, to rebail the same to me before such a day one 10l. now upon not delivery at such a day, I shall have an action of debt for the 10l. contrary, by Windham. And by Anderson, in the principal case, If the defendant had pleaded non assumpsit, and the jury had found the promise, they might have given 1000l. damages, without danger of an attaint, notwithstanding that the plaintiff could not prove that he was damnified one penny, and that by reason of the express assumpsit of the defendant.

And the case was, that afterwards by the means and endeavour of Squire, the grant of the said next avoidance was made to Bingham. But before the next avoidance, the present arch-deacon was created a bishop, so as the presentment to that avoidance appertained to the Queen: it was adjudged in this case, that the condition was not performed, and that by reason of these words, (so that Bingham may present;) and afterwards the plaintiff had judgment to recover.

The case was; A lease is made to two, durante vita ipsorum & alterius eorum diutius vivent. absq; impetitione vasti, durante vita ipsorum; the one of them dieth: now although some conceived there was a difference between the limitation of the estate, and of the liberty, &c. for the limitation of the estate seems to be more liberal; yet it was agreed by the whole Court, that the liberty runneth with the estate, and shall endure as long.

An action upon the case for these words, I will prove Farmer to be a perjured knave. It was moved, the words are not actionable; for it is not a meer affirmation. But after many motions; it was holden by the whole Court, that upon those words, an action did well lie.

[152] MICH. 29 & 30 ELIZ. IN THE KINGS BENCH.

CCIV. ALLEN AND HILL'S CASE.

In an ejectione firme by Allen against Hill of a house in Cornhill in London; upon not guilty pleaded, the jury found this special matter; viz. that one Francis Beneson was seised of the said house in fee; and 4 Eliz. devised the same to Anne his wife for life, in full satisfaction of all her thirds in London; and after her death, to Tho. Beneson his brother in fee: proviso, that if Anne clearly (the words of the verdict are totaliter) depart out of London, and dwell in the country, that then she shall have a rent out of the said house. And the jury found further, that Francis died without issue; and that afterwards Thomas died, Robert being his next heir; and that 14 Eliz. Anne clearly departed out of London, and went to Melton in the county of Suffolk: and that afterwards Robert before any entry, released unto Anne; and afterwards against his release entred. It was argued for the defendant, that by this proviso, and the departure of Anne out of London, the freehold was not out of her, and vested in Robert, before the entry of Robert; for if it were out of Anne, then is she but tenant at sufferance, to whom a release made cannot enure; and the words of the will are not, that her estate shall cease. And here as the case is, Anne cannot be tenant at sufferance to him in the remainder, betwixt whom and her there is not any privity. See 18 E. 4. 25, 26. Tenant for the term of the life of another, the remainder over in fee, cestuy que vie dieth; the tenant remained tenant until he in the remainder entred upon him. And so in our case, although Anne hath clearly departed out of London, &c. yet the freehold of the house doth continue in her, until the entry of Robert, and then the release made to her is good. Also the breach of the condition is not fully found; for the proviso is, if she clearly departs out of London, (but it doth not stay there) and dwell in the country, &c. And here it is found, that she clearly departed out of London; but they have not found, that she dwelt in the country, &c. but only that she went to Melton; but she ought to do both before her estate shall cease. It was argued by Towse for the plaintiff, that the defendant ought to be found guilty of the ejectment; for it is found, that the defendant entred before the commandment of Anne; but they have not found, that Anne was alive.

Fenner, Justice, The same is well enough: and so it was holden, 18 Eliz. in this Court; for although her life be not found, yet it shall be intended, that she was alive: for the jury did not doubt of it; and the conclusion of the verdict is, that if it shall seem to the Court that his entry is lawful, then the defendant is not guilty. So as the doubt of the jury is only upon that point. Which Wray concessit.

[153] Gawdy, Justice, If one deviseth land to one for life, upon condition, that his estate shall cease (which is all one with the case at Bar,) and after the breach of the condition he continueth in possession, he is not tenant for life, but tenant at sufferance.

Wray, Chief Justice; Tenant for the life of another continues in possession after the death of cestuy que vie, he hath not any freehold remaining in him; for if he dieth, nothing descends. And so it was lately adjudged by all the justices of England, upon a conference had between them: and the book of 18 E. 4. is not law. Which Gawdy, Justice, concessit. See 35 H. 8. 57. acc. And he said, that the same shall be as a limitation by which the estate shall cease without an entry. And here in this case, because they have not found, that Anne had dwelt in the country, here is no breach of the condition in the case. And afterwards, by the advice of the whole Court, judgment was given for the defendant, quod querens nihil capiat per billam.

MICH. 29 & 30 ELIZ. IN THE KINGS BENCH.

CCV. CADEE AND OLIVER'S CASE.

In an ejectione firmæ by Cadee against Oliver, of a house in Holborn, &c. the case was, the Lord Mountjoy, and the Lady Katherine his wife, seised of the said house, and of other lands in fee in the right of the wife; 6 Eliz. acknowledged a statute-staple of 1200l. to Sir Lyonel Ducket: afterwards, 9 Eliz. the said Lord Mountjoy and his said wife leased the said house to Hoskins for 21 years; and afterwards by indenture, 11 Eliz. they leased the same to Sir Tho. Cotton for 99 years, to begin at Michaelmas last past: 12 Eliz. Sir Lyonel Ducket extended his statute; and the land extended was delivered to him at 53l. 7s. per annum; who held the same until 22 Eliz. Anno 23 Eliz. the Lord Mountjoy and his wife levied a fine to Perry, to the use of Perry and his heirs: 27 Eliz. Sir Thomas Cotton not being upon the land, granted omnia tunc bona & catalla sua, to Robert Cotton his son: 28 Eliz. the Lady Mountjoy died. Mich. 29 Eliz. the lease to Hoskins expired: Perry entred, and leased the house to Oliver the defendant for 21 years; and afterwards, Robert Cotton entred, and leased the house, &c. to the plaintiff. It was first moved by Brantingham, and argued by him, if this lease for 99 years which was made to begin after the lease made to Hoskins, should pass to Robert Cotton by the words aforesaid? But the Court eased him from arguing of that point; for it was holden, that it passed, notwithstanding the word tunc. Another matter argued by him, was, because at the time of the grant, the lands were in extent, and so the said Sir Thomas Cotton had but a possibility, if therefore the said grant, made during the extent, was [154] good? And he argued, that it was; for it is more than a bare possibility, for it is an interest vested: and in some cases, a possibility may be granted. As 19 H. 6. 2. The King granted to a prior, that when any tenth is granted to the King by the clergy, his house shall be discharged of it, &c. And 19 E. 2. Avowry, 224. The lord grants to his tenant, that if he dieth, his heir within age, that such heir shall not be in ward. So 21 E. 4. 44. a grant unto an abbot to be discharged of the collectorship of tenths when it shall be granted by the clergy. It hath been objected, that the term for 99 years is suspended, therefore it cannot be granted during the suspension. But the same is not so; for, a thing suspended may be granted: as 15 Eliz. Dyer, 319. Husband and wife joynt-tenants of lands in fee, the Queen having a rent out of it in fee, giveth the rent to the husband and his heirs; now the husband deviseth the said rent, and dieth; the same is good a devise, notwithstanding the suspension: and he cited the cases, 16 E. 3. Quid juris clamat, 22. and 20 E. 3. ibid. 31. A lease is made to one for life; and if he dieth within 20 years, that his executors and assigns shall hold the land until the expiration of the 20 years, the said interest may be granted. Which Wray, Chief Justice, denyed. See Gravenors case, 3 & 4 Ma. Dyer, 150. such interest is void. It was further moved by him, and argued, if the conusee of the fine might avoid the lease made to Sir Thomas Cotton? And he said, he could not; for he is in under the lessors. So is 34 E. 1. Recovery in Value, 36. see the case there. And here, although the wife after the death of her husband may affirm, or disaffirm the lease at her election; yet this election is not transferred to the conusee by the fine; but the conusee shall be bound by the fine. See 33 H. 8. Dyer, 51. As tenant in tail makes a lease for years not warranted by the statute, and dieth, the issue alieneth the land by fine, before affirmation or disaffirmation of the lease by acceptance or entry, the conusee cannot avoid this lease; for the liberty is not transferred. Which Gawdy, Justice, concessit. And election cannot be transferred over to the prejudice of another person. As if a rent de novo be granted to the father in fee, who dieth before election, the heir cannot make it an annuity to defeat the dower of the wife, quod Curia concessit. It was also moved by Brantingham, if the lessee might enter upon the conusee of the statute after his extent expired, without suing forth a scire facias: but the Court discharged him from arguing that point; for that by the death of the Lady Mountjoy, the extent was void; and therefore the feoffee or conusee might avoid it by entry: and so Wray, Chief Justice, said, it had been adjudged in the Court of Common Pleas. At another day, the case was argued by Stephens on the part of the plaintiff; who said, that the extent by computation of time according to the value to which it was extended, is not yet satisfied: the verdict hath found, that [155] the extent continued until 22 Eliz. but doth not say, that it was then expired and ended. And I conceive also, that this extent doth not evict the interest of Sir Thomas Cotton, or turn it into a possibility; the extent is quousq; leventur denarii; but yet a limitation of time is in law understood, although by a casualty such time may be abridged or extended. Which see, 15 H. 7. 16. by Fairfax, where a man is bounden by statute to pay 40l. and the conusee sueth execution upon it, and the land extended is rated at 10l. per annum: now it shall be intended, by a common intent, that in 4 years the party may be satisfied; and therefore after the 4 years the conusor shall have a scire facias: so upon the matter it is a lease for 4 years. So 7 H. 7. 12. by Keble to the same purpose. And 15 E. 4. 5. by Brian; for the law shall not intend a casualty without alledging of it; for the same shall not be by imagination. And therefore, if the conusor will have the land within the term, he ought to alledge, that the conusee hath levied the duty by an extraordinary casualty, and shew it specially. And so where the conusor sueth a scire facias, and the conusee will hold the land over, he ought expresly to surmise some extraordinary occasion wherefore he could not levy the duty upon the land within the term: which see by Brian, 15 E. 4. 5. and 44 E. 3. The conusee of a statute after extent maketh a lease for 3 years; yet it may be that the duty shall be levied within one year; but if it be so, then a scire facias shall issue forth against the conusee, and not against the lessee; for the law intends, that the whole estate of the conusee is not granted, but that he hath a reversion in him; but if he hath granted his whole estate, then a scire facias shall issue forth against the grantee. So here, although that this extent in our case would continue by computation of time for some of the years of the term granted to Sir Thomas Cotton: yet it is intended, that the extent did run out, and was determined before the expiration of Sir Thomas Cotton's term; so as, notwithstanding that, Sir Thomas Cotton hath an interest left in him which he may grant. It will be objected, how can it be said an estate for years, when as he might hold over the years? As to that, such an interest may be put off in divers cases; as, 15 H. 7. A man grants to another the third avoidance of such a church, and dieth seised, his wife is endowed of the church, she shall have the third avoidance, and the grantee shall have the 4th avoidance, and so per talem intervenientem occasionem, the benefit shall be delayed; and so here in our case: and then the estate by extent being prima facie certain, so as it cannot by intendment surmount the term of Sir Tho. Cotton, as it appeareth upon the extent; the estate shall be taken to continue according to the extent of the years, and then a certain interest doth remain in Sir Thomas Cotton, which he may grant over, which is not a possibility, but rather a reversion: so, and to such purpose, is the case of 7 H. 5. 3 & 4. If the eldest son entreth after the death of his father, and afterwards his mother recovereth [156] dower, that shall take away the possessio fratris; but if the son maketh a lease for life, and the wife recovereth dower against the lessee, there shall be possessio fratris, for the reversion doth remain in the lessor, notwithstanding the eviction of the estate for life. And 7 H. 6. 2. there it is holden by Goddard and Strange, that where the term of the wife was extended upon the statute of the husband, who died, the wife shall have the residue of the term, and avoid the extent as to her term, which proves that all the term is not drawn to the conusee by the extent, but that an interest doth remain in the lessee notwithstanding that. And see by Seton, 29 Ass. 64. If lessee for life leaseth to him in the reversion for life, yet he hath a reversion in him, and 31 Ass. 6. A. is bound by statute to B. and his land extended by force of it: C. recovers against B. in debt, and the land extended by him upon the statute, is now extended by elegit; A. grants his estate to the conusee, it is no surrender; which proves, that B. hath an interest. And so in our case, an interest doth remain in Sir Thomas Cotton, notwithstanding the extent. A. makes a lease for years to begin at a day to come, and before the day, A. is disseised; the lessee notwithstanding this disseisin, may grant his interest, for he never was in possession, and therefore it cannot be turned into a right.

As to the second point, if Robert Cotton may enter within the time of the extent, without a scire facias: and that rests upon this point; if this lease shall be subject to the extent? I conceive clearly, that it shall not. It hath been said, that our lease is not good: but I conceive it without question, that our lease is good enough; for it is made by the husband and wife: and the wife after the death of her husband by acceptance of the rent, might affirm the lease: but the statute is the act of the husband alone; therefore the conusee of the fine shall not avoid the lease, for it is but voidable. So the King grants lands durante beneplacito, and afterwards grants the reversion over, the patentee shall not avoid the estate; but if this lease had been made by the husband only, it had been void, and then the conusee of the fine should avoid it; as it was lately adjudged in Harvy and Thomas's case. And I conceive, that if tenant in tail acknowledgeth a statute, and afterwards makes a lease according to the statute of 32 H. 8. and dieth, the lessee shall not hold the land subject to the statute, for then the rent should not be paid to the issue in tail during the statute, which is against the stat. of 32 H. 8. And see also, 8 Eliz. Dyer, 252. The chaplain of a donative chappel leased for 99 years, which was confirmed by the patron, who was tenant in tail of the patronage which was appendant to a mannor, whereof he was seised in tail; and afterwards he had issue, and died; the Statute of Chauntries cometh; after the death of the incumbent, the King shall avoid this lease. And in our case, after the coverture, the conusee is in [157] by the wife, and then he shall avoid the statute extended upon it: and if so, then there needeth not any scire facias; as the issue in tail may enter upon the conusee of a statute acknowledged by his father; for if execution had been sued against the issue in tail, it had been a disseisin. And see 2 R. 3 7. that in such case, the wife, or her heirs, may enter upon the conusee; and by consequence, the conusee who is in by her, &c.

Cook, contrary; I conceive, that this grant of this lease by Sir Thomas Cotton to his son, is not good; for it is but a possibility, and no interest: I agree all the cases which have been put before, for law, but they cannot be applied to this case; the book in 7 H. 6. 2. is, that if the term of the wife be extended upon the statute of the husband, that the wife shall have the residue after the death of the husband; but it doth not say, that the wife or her husband may grant it during the extent; which is the matter now in question. And I conceive, that Sir Thomas Cotton hath but a possibility; for the conusee upon the extent hath but an incertain interest: and although it may be by some means reduced to a certainty in the Chancery, where the costs and damages shall be assessed; yet until it be reduced to a certainty, it cannot be granted. And therefore it is clear, that if I have a term for 8 years in land, and grant it unto another until he hath levied 100l. and all his costs of suit for it, by this grant all the interest of the term is in the grantee, and nothing is in me, but a possibility. And so it was holden in the Common Pleas by the Lord Anderson, the day when he was made Chief Justice there, at which time, this case was put; Lands of the yearly value of 20l. are leased to one until he hath levied 100l. And the matter was, what estate the grantee hath? and it was holden, that if livery be not made, that he hath but an estate at will, for the profits of the lands are incertain, the one year more, and the other year less: and Bromley, Lord Chancellor was then of the same opinion. Then, if in case of a lease it be so, it shall also be so in case of an extent; and in both the cases, the whole interest is out of the parties. And 19 Eliz. the case was in this Court, that the lessee for years devised his term to his executors for the payment of his debts and legacies; and after the payment of them, the residue of the years he devised to his son: the executors enter, which is an assent to the remainder; he in the remainder grants his interest: and it was holden void, because it was but a possibility, and so incertain: and although it might be reduced to a certainty afterwards, yet the same is not sufficient; for it ought to be reduced to a certainty at the time of the grant. And 17 Eliz. in this Court the case was, that land was given to the husband and wife, and to the heirs of the husband; the husband makes a lease for years, and dieth; the wife enters, and entermarrieth with the lessee: and it was moved, if the interest of the lessee by the entermarriage, was extinct? and it was holden, that [158] it was not; for it was but a possibility, and not an interest, quod fuit concessum per totam Curiam. And if a possibility cannot be extinct, then it cannot be granted. And he denyed the case put by Stephens, where a man seised of lands leaseth the same for years to begin at a day to come, and afterwards before the day, the lessor is disseised; now during that disseisin, the grantee cannot enter for his future interest; for the feesimple being turned into a right, so also shall be the interest. And that is proved by Delamere's case, A feoffment in fee was made to the use of A. for life, and afterwards to the use of C. for life, and afterwards to the use of D. in fee; and afterwards A. enfeoffed a stranger, who had notice of the use; the same doth take away all the other uses; and said feoffee although he had notice of the use, yet he shall not be seised to the first use, for the estate out of which the first uses do arise, is taken away; and then also the uses. And he said also, that the lease made to Sir Thomas Cotton is not good; for it was made, 11 Eliz. And it is found by verdict, that 10 Eliz. a writ of extent issued forth upon the statute, then was the lands in the hands of, &c. during which time, the Lord Mountjoy and his wife could not make the lease aforesaid to the said Sir Thomas Cotton. And as to that, see 5 E. 3. Retorn of the Sheriff, 99. See the case of 3 E. 6. Dyer, 67. Stringfellow's case. Then admitting the lease to Sir Thomas Cotton, yet the lessee cannot put out the conusee without a scire facias; for the conusee is in by matter of record. Also here, this lease made by the husband and wife without any rent reserved, is utterly void, and then the conusee shall take advantage of it, 9 H. 7. 24. 18 E. 4. 2. And so was it ruled in the case of seniori puero, in the case of an enfant. And see 7 Eliz. Dyer, 239. Where the Provost of Wells being parson impersonee of the patronage of W. leased the tythe for 50 years, rendring rent, which was confirmed by the dean and chapter, but not by the patron and Ordinary: and afterwards by Act of Parliament, the provostry was united to the deanery cum primo vacare contigerit; the provost died, the dean accepteth the rent; the same shall not bind the church, for the lease is void, as it is of a parson, or prebend, &c. And so the dean shall take advantage of it, although not privy to it. See 16 Eliz. Dyer, 337. Lands given to a parson and his successors for to find lights, and he leaseth the same for life; the rent is so imployed accordingly: the incumbent dieth, the successor accepteth the rent; the King grants it over, the patentee shall avoid the lease, as the successor might have done before the statute, if he had not accepted the rent: but the acceptance before the statute shall bind the successor, for that it was but a voidable lease. And the case between Harvy and Thomas, which hath been put on the other side, serves to our purpose, for there the conusee shall avoid a lease in law which is void; and here, in the principal case, the lease is void; for that no rent is reserved upon it, Wherefore, &c. It was adjourned.

CCVI. BEADLE'S CASE.

The case was, that A. leased to B. certain lands for 40l. per annum; and a stranger covenanted with A. that B. should pay him 40l. for the farm and occupation of the said lands: A. brought an action of covenant; the defendant pleaded, that before the day of payment, the plaintiff put the said B. out of his farm: it was moved by Godfrey, that the same is no plea; for this is a collateral sum, and not for rent issuing out of the land: also, the defendant is a stranger to the contract for the farm. But the opinion of the whole Court was clear to the contrary; for the defendant hath covenanted, that the lessee shall pay for the said farm and occupation 40l. so as it is as a conditional covenant, and here is quid pro quo, and here the consideration upon which the covenant is conceived, scil. the farm, and the occupation of it, is taken away by the act of the plaintiff himself; and therefore the plea is good, and the action will not lie.

CCVII. THE ARCHBISHOP OF YORK, AND MORTON'S CASE.

The Archbishop of York recovered in an assise of novel disseisin, against one Morton, before the Justices of Assise; upon which judgment, Morton brought a writ of error, retornable before the Justices of the Common Pleas; and after many motions at the Bar, it was adjudged, that a writ of error upon such judgment doth not lie in the said Court. Which see 8 Eliz. Dyer, 250. See also, N. B. 22. e. That upon erroneous judgment given in the King Bench in Ireland, error shall be in the Kings Bench in England, 15 E. 3. Error, 72. And Fenner, who was of counsel with the archbishop, demanded of the Court, how, and in what manner the record shall be sent back to the Justices of Assise, so as the said archbishop might have execution? to which the Court answered, that the surest way is to have a certiorari out of the Chancery into the Common Pleas directed to the Judges there; and then out of the Chancery by a mittimus to the Justices of Assise: but Fenner made a doubt to take such course for such remanding. Then Anderson, Chief Justice, said, Sue execution out of the said record; for in as much as the record came before us by writ of error, it shall also be removed and sent back by writ. And so it was done.

CCVIII. THE QUEEN AND HURLESTON'S CASE.

The Queen brought a scire facias against Hurleston, to repeal a patent made to him of the constableship of Chester, and judgment was given for the Queen; and now Hurleston brought a writ of error against the Queen in the Kings Bench. And it was moved by Gawdy, Serjeant, that the writ did not lie for the manner, for that he ought first to have sued to the Queen by petition. See 22 E. 3. 3. & 23 E. 3. Fitz. Error, 9. If the King recover by an erronious judgment, a writ of error cannot be granted upon such a recovery, sine gratia Regis speciali. And he said, that in Chester, they have Courts of Common Pleas, Kings Bench, Exchequer, and Chancery; and that if judgment erronious be given in the Chancery at Westminster, it cannot be reversed, but by Parliament; and so it is of an erronious judgment given in the Chancery at Chester. Also he said, they have a custom in London, that within one month they may reverse their own judgment. See 23 Eliz. Dyer 376. Erronious judgment given in the 5 ports, cannot be reversed in the King Bench; but it is reversable in the Court of the Guardian of the 5 Ports.

Clench, Here both the parties claim by the Queen, therefore there needeth no petition; for, valeat quantum valere poterit, it is no prejudice to the Queen.

Cook, There needs no petition here, for the Attorney General hath subscribed our writ of error.

Egerton, Sollicitor General, It was the case of Eliz. Mordant, who was to reverse a fine levied during her nonage; and the proceedings were stayed, because she had not sued to the Queen by petition. See the case of 24 E. 3, 35, the case of William de Ingularby, who sued to reverse a judgment given against him in a writ of conspiracy in the eyre of Derby; and there it was said by Thorp, Justice, that he must first sue to the King by petition.

Wray, An outlawry may be reversed by bringing a writ of error, without suing petition to the King.

CCIX. BECKWITH'S CASE.

Roger Beckwich by indenture tripartite, between him of the first part; William Vavasour, Frances Slingsby, and Elizabeth sister of Roger, of the second part; George Harvey, and Frances wife of the said George, (the said Frances being another of the sisters of the said Roger) of the third part; covenant with the aforesaid William Vavasour, and Frances Vavasour his daughter, [161] and with the aforesaid George and Frances, & cum quolibet & qualibet eorum, that the said Roger at the sealing and delivery of the said indenture, was lawfully and solely seised of the rectory of Aldingfleet in the county of York, discharged of all incumbrances; Francis Vavasour took to wife Frances Slingsby; and note, that by the same indenture, Roger Beckwith conveyed the said rectory to the said Francis Vavasour; Francis Slingsby and Frances his wife, brought an action of covenant against the said Roger Beckwith; and assigned the breach in this, that the said Roger was not seised of the said rectory. And note, that the plaintiff declared of an indenture bearing date at the castle of York; and upon the breach of the covenant, they were at issue; which was found for the plaintiff, and damages assessed, and judgment given for the plaintiff. And note, that the venire facias was, de vicineto castri de York. And upon that judgment, a writ of error was brought in the Exchequer upon the new statute; and error was assigned, because all the covenanters ought to have joyned in the action of covenant, notwithstanding those words, cum quolibet, & cum qualibet; which words do not make the covenant to be several: and for that cause, the judgment was reversed. Another error was assigned, because the issue is not well and duly tryed; for the issue is upon the seisin of the rectory of Aldingfleet; in which case, the venire facias ought to have been de vicineto de Aldingfleet. And of that opinion was Manwood and Anderson, Justices.

CCX. YOUNG AND ASHBURNSHAM'S CASE.

In an action of debt brought by the administrators of Young against Ashburnham; the defendant pleaded, nihil debet: and the enquest was taken by default. And upon the evidence given for the plaintiff, the case appeared to be this, that the said Young was an innholder in a great town in the county of Sussex where the sessions used to be holden; and that the defendant was a gentleman of quality in the country there; and he, in going to the sessions, used to lodge in the house of the said Young, and there took his lodging and his diet for himself, his servants, and horses: upon which, the debt in demand grew: but the said Young was not at any price in certain with the defendant, nor was there ever any agreement made betwixt them for the same. It was said by Anderson, Chief Justice, that upon that matter, an action of debt did not lie. And therefore afterwards, the jury gave a verdict for the defendant.

CCXI. HEIDON AND IBGRAVE'S CASE.

A writ of right was brought by Heidon against Ibgrave; and he demanded the third part of 40 acres of land in the county of Hertford; and they were at issue upon the meer right, upon which the grand assise appeared; and first the 4 knights were specially sworn, to say upon their oath, whether the tenant hath better right to hold the land, than the demandant to demand it. And afterwards, the rest of the jurors were sworn generally, as in other actions. And there was some doubt made, whether the demandant or the tenant should first begin to give evidence? And at the last, it was ruled by the Court, that the tenant should begin, because he is in the affirmative. And it was said by Periam, Justice, that so it was late adjudged in the case betwixt Noell and Watts; and upon the evidence, the case was, that King Hen. the 8th by his letters patents gave to the demandant the mannor of New-Hall, and all the lands in the tenure and occupation of John Whitton, before demised to Johnson, and in the parish of Watford; and the truth was, that the said 40 acres, whereof now the third part was in demand, were in the occupation of the said John Whitton, but were never demised to Johnson, nor in the parish of Watford: and by the clear opinion of the Court, the said 40 acres did not pass; for the circumstances of the deed are not true, scil. the demise to Johnson, and the being in the parish of Watford; but both were false. But if the said land had had an especial name in the letters patents, then it had been well enough, notwithstanding the misprision in the rest. And by Anderson, If upon the particular it had appeared, that the demandant had paid his mony for the said 40 acres, peradventure they had passed.

The Dean and Chapter of Gloucester brought a writ of partition, against the Bishop of Gloucester, upon the Statute of 32 H. 8. of Partition: and it was moved, that upon the words of the statute, that the action did not lie in this case; for, the statute doth not extend but to estates in joynt-tenancy, or in common of lands whereof such joynt-tenants or tenants in common are seised in their own right. And also it is further said, that every such joynt-tenant, or tenant in common, and their heirs, shall have aid to deraign the warranty; without speaking of the word, successors. And by Periam and Windham, Justices, The writ [163] doth not lie. But Anderson seemed to be of a contrary opinion.

CCXIII. HARE AND MELLER'S CASE.

Hugh Hare of the Inner-Temple brought an action upon the case against Philip Meller, and declared, that the said defendant had exhibited to the Queen a scandalous bill against the plaintiff, charging the said Hugh to have recovered against the said defendant 400l. by forgery, perjury, and forswearing and cosenage; and also that he had published the matter of the said bill at Westm. &c. It was said by the Court, that the exhibiting of the bill to the Queen, is not in it self any cause of action; for the Queen is the head and fountain of justice, and therefore it is lawful for all her subjects to resort to her to make their complaints. But if a subject after the bill once exhibited, will divulge the matter comprised in it, to the disgrace and discredit of the person intended; the same is a good cause of action. And so was the case of Sir John Conway, who upon such matter did recover. And as to the words themselves, it seemeth to the Court, that they are not actionable; for it is not expresly shewed, that the plaintiff had used perjury, forgery, &c. And it may be, that the attorny, or sollicitor in the cause, hath used such indirect means, the plaintiff not knowing it; and in such case the plaintiff hath recovered by forgery, &c. and yet without reproach: and by perjury he could not recover, for he could not be sworn in his own cause. And Stanhops case was remembred by the Court; which was, that Edward Stanhop of Grays-Inn brought an action upon the case against one who had reported, that the said Edward Stanhop had gained his living by swearing and forswearing; and by the opinion of the Court, the action did not lie; for those words do not set forth any actual forswearing in the person of the plaintiff; but it might be in an action depending between the plaintiff and a stranger, that another stranger produced as a witness had made a false oath, without any procurement or practice of the plaintiff; in which case, it might be, that the plaintiff had gained by such swearing.

And it was holden by the Court, that although here was no present consideration upon which the assumpsit could arise; yet the Court was clear, that upon the whole matter the action did lie, and judgment was given for the plaintiff.

CCXVI. FARRINGTON AND FLEETWOOD'S CASE.

Between Farrington and Fleetwood, the case was, upon the Stat. of 31 H. 8. of Monasteries, the abbot and covent of D. 29 H. 8. makes a lease of certain lands for 3 lives, to begin after the death of one J. S. if they shall so long live: and afterwards, 30 H. 8. within a year before the dissolution, they make another lease to J. S. If the first lease in the life of J. S. be such an estate and interest, which by vertue of the said statute shall make the second lease void, was the question; for it was not in esse, but a future interest.

Manwood, All the reason which hath been made for the second lease is, because the first lease is but a possibility; for J. S. by possibility may survive all the 3 lives, and so it shall never take effect: but notwithstanding, be it a possibility, &c. or otherwise, it is such a thing as may be granted or forfeited, and that during the life of the said J. S. And note also the words of the statute, If any abbot, &c. within one year next before the first day of the Parliament, hath made, or hereafter shall make any lease or grant for years, life, or lives of any mannors, &c. whereof and in which [165] any estate or interest for life or years at the time of the making of any such lease or grant, then had his being or continuance, or hereafter shall have his being or continu ance, and then was not determined, &c. shall be void, &c. CCXVII. THE MASTER AND CHAPLAINS OF THE SAVOY'S CASE.

The Master and Chaplains of the Savoy aliened a parcel of their possessions unto another in fee, and afterwards surrendred their patents, and a vacat is made of the enrollment of them: it was now moved, how the alienee should be adjudged to make title to the said lands, claiming the same by the letters patents; for the clerks would not make a constat of it. For the patents were cancelled, and a vacat made of the enrolment. And the case of Sir Robert Sidney was vouched; in which case, the statute of 3 E. 6. was so expounded upon great advise taken by the Lord Chancellor; who thereupon commanded, that no constat be made in such case.

Manwood, If tenant in tail by letters patents of the King, surrendreth his patent, and cancelleth it, and a vacat be made of the enrollment, by that the issue in tail shall be bound; for no other person at the time of the cancelling hath interest: but in the case at Bar, a third person, scil. the alienee hath an interest; and therefore he was of opinion, that he should have a constat, &c.

CCXVIII. INCHELY AND ROBINSON'S CASE.

In an ejectione firmæ, it was found by verdict, that King E. 6. was seised of the mannor and hundred of Fremmington; and granted the same by his letters patents to one Barnard in fee, rendring 130l. per annum, and also to be holden by homage and fealty; and afterwards Queen Mary reciting the said grant by King Ed. 6. and the reservation upon it, granted unto Gertrude Marchioness of Exeter, the mannor of Fremmington, and the said rent and services, and also the mannor of Camfield, and other lands and tenements, tenendum per vicesimam partem unius feodi militis; Gertrude being so seised, devised to the Lord Mountjoy the mannor of Fremmington, the mannor of Camfield, &c. and also bequeathed divers sums of monies to be levied of the pre-[166]-mises. And further found, that the said rent of 130l. was the full third part of the yearly value of all the lands and tenements of the devisor. The question was, if by these words of the devise of the mannor of Fremmington, the rent and the services pass; i.e. the rent, homage, and fealty reserved upon the grant made by King Ed. 6. of the mannor and hundred of Fremmington; and if the said rent and services are issuing out of the mannor: for if the rent doth not pass, then the same is descended to the heir of the marchioness; and then being found the full third part of the value, the King is fully answered and satisfied, and then the residue of the inheritance discharged, and is settled in the devisee. And if the rent doth not pass, then is the heir of the marchioness entituled by the statute to a third of the whole, &c.

And Shuttleworth conceived, that if the marchioness had devised by express words the said rent and services, they could not pass; for as to the services, they are things entire; as homage and fealty, they cannot pass by devise in case where partition is to follow; for such things cannot receive any partition or division, therefore not divideable: for the statute enables the proprietary to give or devise two parts of his inheritance in three parts to be divided: as catalla felonum cannot be devised, for the reason aforesaid, quod fuit concessum per totam Curiam. But as to the rent, the Court was clear, that the same was deviseable by the said statute; and in respect of that, the mischief of many distresses which the common law abhors, is dispensed with, and is now become distrainable of common right. And as to the devise, he argued much upon the grounds of devises; and put a ground put by Fineux, 15 H. 7. 12. where every will ought to be construed and taken according as the words purport, or as, it may be, intended, or implyed by the words, what the intent of the devisor was: so as we ought to enquire the meaning of the testator out of the words of the will. And see also a good case, 19 H. 8. 8 & 9. And he much relyed upon the case of Bret and Rigden, Plow. Com. 343. See there the case. So in this case, for as much as such intent of the devisor doth not appear upon the words of the will, that this rent shall pass; it shall not pass, for there is not any mention of any rent, in the whole will. Fenner, argued to the contrary; and he argued much upon the favourable construction which the law gives to wills. 14 H. 8. by reversion, for remainder, & e contra. 17 E. 3. 8. A man may make a feoffment in fee of a mannor, by the name of a knights fee, a multo fortiori, in the cases of devises: and in our case, the marchioness conceived, that the rent and services reserved out of the mannor of Fremmington, was the mannor of Fremmington, and that the law would give strength to that intent.

Walmesley conceived, that the rent did not pass by the name of the mannor, &c. for this rent nec in veritate nec in reputatione was ever taken for a mannor. Also the words, Of the mannor of [167] Fremmington and Hundred, are put amongst others which are mannors in truth. By which he conceived, that the devisor did not intend to pass but one mannor, and no other hereditaments, by this mannor of Fremmington. There is a rule in law, that in the construction of a will, a thing implyed, shall not control a thing expressed: but here, if by implication the rent shall pass, then the mannor of Camfield is not passed, which was the intent of the testator to pass, and that by express words. See 16 Eliz. Dyer, 330. Clatches Case. No implication of any estate in remainder can serve when a special guift and limitation is made by the devisor himself. See also, 16 Eliz. Dyer, 333. Chapman's Case. But in our case, here, there are not sufficient words to warrant any implication; for neither in truth, nor in common reputation was it taken for a mannor. 27 H. 6. 2. Greenacre may pass by the name of a mannor, although it be but one acre of land, because it is known by the name of a mannor. See acc. 22 H. 6. 39. And see, where before the Statute of Uses, a man had recoverors to his use, and he willeth by his will, that his feoffees sell his lands; they might sell. And he said, that if a man seised of a mannor, parcel in demesne, and parcel in service, and he granteth the demesnes to one and his heirs, and afterwards deviseth his mannor, peradventure the services shall pass; but this rent hath not any resemblance to a mannor.

Gawdy, This rent shall pass by the name aforesaid. Favourable construction is always given in wills, according to the meaning of the devisor, and no part of his will shall be holden void, if by any means it may take effect; then it here appeareth, that his intent was, that upon these words, something should pass to the devisee concerning the mannor of Fremmington; for otherwise, the words, Of the mannor of Fremmington, are void and frivolous; which shall not be in a will, if any reasonable construction may be made; for it is found expresly by the jury, that neither at the time of the will made, nor at the time of the death of the testator, the devisor had anything in the said mannor of Fremmington, but the said rent of 130l. per annum. And it may well be taken, that the devisor being ignorant what thing a mannor is, thought that this rent was a mannor, because that she had rents and services out of the said mannor. For in construction of a will, the words shall serve the intent; and therefore if a man deviseth, that his lands shall be sold for the payment of his debts, his executors shall sell them; for the intent of the devisor names the sellers sufficiently. And see Plowden, 20 Eliz. 524. L. after the statute of 27 H. 8. deviseth, that his executors shall be seised to the use of A. and his assigns in fee; whereas then there was no feoffees to use: the same was holden a good devise of the land to A. But the justices conceived, that the devisor was ignorant of the operation of the statute in that case, and therefore his ignorance was supplyed. See Br. Devises, 48. 29 H. 8. A. had [168] feoffees to his use; and afterwards after the statute of 27 H. 8. and 32 H. 8. he willed, that his feoffees should make an estate to B. and his heirs; it was holden by Baldwin, Shelley, and Mountague, Justices, that it was a good devise. And see, 26 H. 6. Fitz. tit. Feoffments & Faits, 12. A carue of land may pass by the name of a mannor; therefore a fortiori a rent; for rents and services have more affinity, and more resemble a mannor, than a carue of land. And it cannot be intended, that the meaning of the testator was, to grant the mannor it self, in which he had not any thing, especially by his will; for covin, collusion or indirect dealing, cannot be presumed in a will. Also, the marchioness for 4 years together before her death, had the rent and services of the said mannor; and she well knew, that she her self had not any thing in the said mannor but the said rent and services, and therefore it shall be intended, that the same was her mannor of Fremmington. A. seised of a capital messuage, and great demesnes lying to it, leased the same for years, rendring rent, and afterwards devised to another all her farm in such a place: and it was ruled in that case, that by that devise, the rent and the reversion passed. See the case between Wrottesley and Adams, Plow. 19. 1 Eliz. by Anthony Brown and Dyer.

Periam Justice, conceived, that this rent might be divided well enough. But by Anderson, It is but a rent-seck. Periam, It is distrainable of common right; Anderson doubted of it. But all the justices agreed, that the rent might be divided; but there should not be two tenures. The Lord Mountjoy being advised, that this rent did not pass, but descended to the heir, being the full third part of the lands, entred into the residue, and made a lease of the manor of Camfield unto the plaintiff; upon which the ejectione firmæ is brought: and afterwards, the plaintiff seeing the opinion of the Court to be against him, and for the devise of the rent, for the reasons aforesaid discontinued his suit, &c.

CCXIX. WILLIAMS AND DREW'S CASE.

The widow of Williams who was speaker of the Parliament, brought dower against Williams and Drew: upon the Grande Cape Williams made default; and now came Drew and surmised to the Court, that he is not tenant of the land: but further he saith, that the husband of the demandant leased the said lands to him for 50 years, and that this action is brought by covin to make him lose his term; and prayed to be received. And the opinion of the whole Court, was, that although he was party to the writ, yet he should be received, and that by the sta-[169]-tute of Gloucester, for he is in equal mischief. And the Court was also clear of opinion, that upon the default of Williams, the demandant should not have judgment for a moyety, for that the cause of the receipt trenched to the whole. And by all the justices, but Rhodes, if judgment had been given upon the deault of both, i.e. Williams and Drew, yet the term of Drew should stand, but Drew should be put out of possession, and put to his action. And Anderson conceived, that the resceit upon that statute did not lie, unless that covin be alleged betwixt the demandant and the tenant, to make him to lose his term; and that covin is traversable: which all the other justices denyed; for the covin ought to be averred, but ought not to be traversed. And also they all but Anderson, were clear of opinion, that in this case of receipt, the party shall not plead upon his receipt, as upon the statute of Westminster; but he shall be received, and have day to plead.

CCXX. DICKSEY AND SPENCER'S CASE.

The case between Dicksey and Spencer, see H. 29 Eliz. Notwithstanding the opinion of the Court of Common Pleas, the Mayor and Aldermen of London reversed the judgment given in an assise of freshforce; upon which, Dicksey sued a commission, directed to Anderson, Manwood, and Periam, to examine the said judgment, & ad errorem corrigendum. And the case was often argued; the principal matter was, that lessee for years in an action of debt brought against him for the rent reserved, claimed fee by bargain and sale of his lessor; the which bargain and sale the plaintiff traversed. And it was argued, because this bargain and sale was traversed, there was not any forfeiture in the case; for upon that, both parties are at large. As in a præcipe quod reddat, the tenant disclaims, and the demandant avers him tenant, he shall not enter for that disclaimer. But all the three justices were clear of opinion, that notwithstanding the traverse, it is a forfeiture; for the very claim is a forfeiture, which cannot be saved by matter subsequent. See 9 H. 5. 14. If tenant for life be impleaded in a writ of right, and joyns the mise upon the meer right, it is a forfeiture. Another error was assigned, because where it is found, that both the defendants disseisiverunt the plaintiff, but Spencer only with force, and the judgment in the assise of freshforce was, that ambo capiantur, where no force is found in Clark, one of them; yet such a judgment is good enough: for the assise have found a joynt disseisin, and that Clark was present at the said force; and then he particeps criminis. And of that opinion were all the 3 Justices. And it was objected, that forasmuch as Clark is convicted of force upon the [170] matter, for both ought to be taken, therefore the damages ought to be trebled against both; and the Court was in some doubt of that: but clearly, the incrementum shall be trebled, as well as the damages taxed by the assise; and after many arguments, the said justices moved the parties to a friendly course, to compound the matter: for if we reverse the judgment given in the Hustings, then Spencer may have his writ of error upon the judgment in the assise of freshforce, & sic infinite. And afterwards, the parties put themselves to the mediation and order of the said 3 justices, who at length made an end of the matter betwixt the said parties.

CCXXI. THE LADY NEWMAN AND SHYRIFF'S CASE.

The Lady Newman, sister of James Wingfield lately deceased, exhibited a bill of complaint in the Star-Chamber, against one Shyriff dwelling in Ireland, and two others; setting forth, that the said Shyriff had forged a deed, purporting, that the said James had by the same given to him all his goods; and also that the said James had assigned to the said Shyriff a lease for years of lands in Ireland: and also that the said Shyriff had procured the said two other defendants to depose upon their oath before the town-clerk of London, that the said deed was sealed and delivered by the said James as his deed. It was moved by the counsel of the defendant's, that these matters of forgery are not within the statute of 5 Eliz. nor also the perjury, or the procurement of it: whereupon the Lords of the Council referred the consideration of the said statute, to both the Chief Justices, who the next Court-day declared their opinions upon the said matters; 1. That the said statute did not extend to forgery of a deed conveying a gift of chattels personals: which see by the statute, which, as to that point, extends but to obligations, bills obligatory, acquittance, release, or other discharge. And also a deed of an assignment of a lease of land in Ireland, is not within the said statute. And also the said justices were of opinion, that this perjury, and the procurement of it, is not punishable by the said statute, because the oath was taken coram non Judice. For the town-clerk of London cannot minister an oath in such case, no more than a private person. But because the bill in the percluse and conclusion of it, was contrary to the laws and statutes of this realm, the said Chief Justices were of opinion, that the said Court might punish those offences as misdemeanors at the common law, but not according to the statute. And afterwards Shyriff paid for a fine 3l. and by order of the Court, was set in the pillory.

CCXXII. MIDDLEMORE'S CASE.

Middlemore brought an action upon the case for these words; scil. Middlemore is a cosening knave; for he had me to Coventry, and there cosened me of 40s. And afterwards had judgment to recover; and now the defendant brought a writ of error in the Exchequer Chamber; and there the opinion of the whole Court was, that the said words were not actionable. And the case of one Egerton was remembred, Thou art a cosening knave coroner, for thou hast cosened me of my land. The plaintiff in that case could not have judgment; for he was not particularly charged in respect of his office. And note; that in this case of error, the defendant pleaded an outlawry in the plaintiff; and being barred in that, he pleaded now an excommengement in the plaintiff, and shewed the letters of excommunication: upon which it appeared, that the plea was pleaded before the outlawry was pleaded: and it was ruled by the whole Court, that this plea lieth not for the defendant; for he cannot have two pleas to the person of the plaintiff, but where his second plea is matter of later time since the first plea: and afterwards the said judgment was reversed.

MICH. 29 ELIZ. IN THE EXCHEQUER.

CCXXIII. BARNS EXECUTOR OF THE BISHOP OF DURHAM AND SMITH'S CASE.

Emanuel Barns, executor of Barns late bishop of Durham, brought debt for arrearages of rent reserved upon a lease for years of certain mines demised to Smith; scil. mines called Argill, and mines called Greenbourn; and it was against the executors of Smith. The defendant pleaded, as to parcel, non detinet; and as to other parcel of the arrears, that in the indenture of demise, there is a covenant, quod si contigerit, that the said lessee impeditus fuerit quominus mineris prædict. gaudere possit, that then so much of rent should be deducted, amounting to the value of the mines he could not enjoy, &c. And pleads in facto quod impeditus fuit, quo minus gaudere potuit mineris prædictis, &c. And it was found for the plaintiff. And it was moved by Cook, in arrest of judgment, that here is not any place shewed, where these mines were, so as non constat from what place the visne shall come: as if in an action (as here) the plaintiff declares of a lease made of land called R. in such a county, the same is not good, causa qua supra. The issue here is non potuit fodere in prædicta minera de Greenbourn, by the space of 7 years [172] and a half. From whence shall the visne come for the tryal of this? Not from Durham where the lease was made, for there is no nearness between the place where the lease was made, and this issue: but if the issue had been, that the lessor had not any thing in the mines tempore dimissionis, it might have been tryed where the lease was made.

Another exception was taken, because the plea is, quod non potuit fodere in 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8. dimidio 10 & 11. and that appears to be 7 years and a half; and the jury find, Quod non potuit fodere per spatium 7 annorum tantum, without speaking of the half year, and so they have not given a full verdict.

As to the first exception, it was said by Cook, If a thing be alledged in pleading, which is issuable, and there is not laid down any place of it, although that no issue be joyned upon it; yet because he hath prevented the other of his plea to it, judgment given in such case shall be reversed: and so it was ruled between Matthew and Stransham. So upon the Statute of Usury, the informer charged the defendant, for that by way of corrupt bargain, he had received so much, and did not shew the place, although that no issue was joyned upon it, but they were at issue upon another point; yet if judgment in such case be given, it shall be reversed.

And in all actions upon the case, where request is necessary, and the plaintiff ought to alledge it, the place of the request ought to be shewed. And he said, that this issue ought to be tryed where the mines demised are, and here no place is alledged where the mines are, but only in com. Dunelmens. and yet a visne of the City of Durham hath tryed this issue, which ought not to be; but the visne should come de corpore comitatus.

Clark, Baron, If issue be joyned upon taking of the profits, it shall be tryed where the land is, but non debet or detinet where the lease was made: so ne lessa pas.

By Cook, The issue is, non potuit fodere, and that is local, therefore it shall be tryed where the mines are.

Manwood, Non potuit fodere, non potuit gaudere, are not local; but non fodit, non gavisus fuit, is local, and shall be tryed where the mines are. And here it is not shewed, how he was hindered to dig, &c. and the issue is, de potentia & non de actu.

Tanfield, As to that which Cook hath said, that the visne in this case shall come de corpore comitatus; it is not so, for such visne never shall be, but where the issue is, no such town, hamlet or place known. Tanfield, In another case, the tryal shall be de corpore comitatus; as in false imprisonment, the defendant justifies, that the common voice and fame was &c. there the visne shall be de corpore comitatus, 11 E. 4. 4 & 5. And see also, 21 Eliz. the case of Constantine and Gynne, (which see now reported by the Lord Cook, in Dowdell's case) Cook 6. Part, 48. And as to the defect of the verdict, upon the half year, the record is not so, [173] for the record is, dimidio anni decimi, & undecimi, and so two half-years, make one whole year, and so but 7 years in which the disturbance is supposed to be done. And see as to the visne de corpore comitatus, 22. E. 4. 4. Fitz. Visne, 27.

Another exception was taken, because the declaration is, that the lease was made at Durham in comitatu Dunelm. and doth not say also in Setberg, for such is the name of the County Palatine. But as to that it was said, every writ of execution which goes into the County Palatine, is directed episcopo Dunelmens. & cancellario suo, quod det in mandatis vicecom. suo, &c. And Durham was called Setberg in ancient time, and the name of the County Palatine there is commonly called Dunelm. & Setberg; and their pleas there are entred, placita coram justiciariis Dunelm & Setberg, but the same is amongst themselves only, and all directions from hence to them are, episcopo Dunelm. without any mention of Setberg; and a president was shewed to the Court to such effect.

Manwood, Levied by distress, and so nothing arrear, shall be tryed where the lease is made.

Clark, That is true, for by the (so) the plea before is waived. And see 8 H. 5. 10. Where an issue is to be tryed in Lincoln, &c. or such a town which is a franchise, the venire facias shall be of Lincoln, and not de vicineto Lincoln; for then the jury should be as well of the county adjoyning, as of Lincoln it self; which the visne of Lincoln cannot do: but venire facias de suburbiis of Bristow, was awarded good.

And if in the case at Bar, the defendant had pleaded, that the plaintiff had entred into part of the mines, and so suspended his rent, upon which they are at issue, the some by Manwood, shall be tryed by a jury de corpore comitatus: the issue here is, if the defendant might enjoy these mines secundum veram intentionem dimissionis prædict. and that is referred to the demise which was made at Durham, and therefore this issue may be well tryed there. And afterwards at another day, it was holden, that all the issues are jeofails. But as to the want of the place, the same was holden a material exception. See the case of Mines, Plow. Com. 337. Exception was taken to the information, because it was not laid down there, in what town or hamlet Newlands lay. And it was holden, the same had been a material exception, if the defendant had not demurred upon the information; in which case, no tryal by jury is to be, &c. And he said, Misnosmer shall be tryed, where the writ is brought, &c. so never administred as executors, &c.

Manwood, Here the lease is laid to be made at Durham in a place certain. If then there be not any other local thing laid which may draw the tryal elsewhere, it shall be tryed at Durham where the lease is made. An enfant makes a lease for years, rendring rent, and afterwards re-enters, and avoids his lease by reason [174] of his nonage, and title is found against him by that lease, upon which he pleads nonage, it shall be tryed where the lease is made, &c. And afterwards, judgment was given for the plaintiff.

CCXXV. WESHBORN AND MORDANT'S CASE.

In an action upon the case, the plaintiff declared, that whereas he was possessed of a piece of land containing 2 acres, called Parsonage, lying adjoyning to a certain river, from the 20th of May, 29 Eliz. usq; diem impetrationis istius brevis, &c. the defendant had the said 20th day of May estopped the said river, with certain loads of earth, and so continued estopped until the 14th of February, by reason of which his land was drowned, and so he had lost the profit of it for the said time. It was moved in arrest of judgment, that upon the declaration it doth not appear, that there is any cause of action, for the plaintiff hath made title to the land drowned from the 20th day, so as that day is excluded, and the nusance is laid to be done the said 20th day: and if so, then he cannot complain of any wrong, the nusance being laid to be before any possession of the plaintiff. To which it was answered, that although the stopping was made before the possession, yet the continuance of it after is a new wrong, for which an action lieth. As 5 H. 7. 4. It was presented, that an abbot had not cleansed his ditch, &c. by reason of which, the highway is estopped, the successor shall be put to answer to that indictment by reason of the continuance of it. See, that continuance of a nusance, is quasi a new nusance, 14 & 15 Eliz. Dyer, 320. And it may be that the plaintiff was not damnified, until a long time after the 20th of May, scil. after the estopping; and the words of the writ here are satisfied and true. Afterwards, judgment was given for the plaintiff.

It was agreed by the whole Court, that if the alienation had been by deed only, there the Queen without office should not have the presentment; for upon such alienation by matter in fait without licence, no scire facias shall issue without office found of the alienation. But upon alienation without licence by matter of record, a scire facias lieth before office. And in the last case, the Queen shall have the issues from the time of the scire facias retorned; but in the first case, from the time of the office found. See Stam. Prerogat. see 8 E. 4. 4. It was then moved, that if the Queen, being entituled to present ut supra, pardon the conusee all alienations without licence and intrusions, if the estate of the incumbent thereby be confirmed? CCXXVII. SIR THOMAS HOLLAND AND BONIS'S CASE.

In a replevin, the defendant made conusans as baily to Tho. Lord Howard, and shewed, that the prioress of the late dissolved priory of Hallywell was seised of the mannor of Priors in the county of Hertford, and granted the same by words of dedi & concessi pro certa pecuniæ summa to the Lord Audley, Chancellor of England, and his heirs, who died thereof seised; and that the said mannor (inter alia) descended to Mary, daughter and heir of the said Tho. Lord Audley, who died thereof seised; by force of which, the said mannor descended to the said Tho. Lord Howard, &c. And shewed, that the conveyance by the prioress bore date, 4. Novemb. 29 H. 8. and then enrolled in the Chancery. The plaintiff in bar of the said conusans, shewed, that after the making and inrolling of the said conveyance, the said prioress leased the lands to Sir Hen. Parker for 99 years, and conveyed the said lands to himself; and further shewed, that the said conveyance specified in the conusans, fuit primo deliberatum 4. November, 31 H. 8. without that, that the said prioress, the said 4. Novemb. 29 H. 8. dedit & concessit, the said mannor to the said Lord Audley. Upon which it was demurred. And it was the [176] clear opinion of the Court, that the averment de primo deliberatum against a deed enrolled, ought not to be received. For by the same reason, it might be averred, nunquam deliberatum; and so upon the matter, non est factum.

It was further objected, that a bargain and sale by a corporation is not good; for a corporation cannot be seised to another's use; and the nature of such a conveyance is to take effect by way of use in the bargain, and afterwards the statute draws the possession to the use: but the Court utterly rejected the said exception as dangerous, for that such were the conveyances of the greater part of the possessions of monasteries. And it was in this case said by Shuttleworth, Serjeant, that although such a corporation could not take an estate to another's use; yet they might charge their own possessions with an use to another.

CCXXVIII. The Queen and the Bishop of Gloucester's Case.

The Queen recovered in a quare impedit against the Bishop of Gloucester, and one S. in which quare impedit, the bishop pleaded as Ordinary; scil. quod ipse nihil habet nec habere clamat in ecclesia prædict. neq; in advocatione ejusdem nisi admissionem, institutionem, &c. And now the bishop and S. the incumbent brought a writ of error; and, if this writ of error brought joyntly by the bishop and the incumbent, was well brought, was the question? Some held, that the bishop had not cause to bring error, for that he had disclaimed in the church, and the patronage of it: for if in a præcipe quod reddat the tenant disclaims, he shall never have a writ of error. 16 E. 3. 7. Fitz. Error, 78. And note, that in the writ of error at the Bar, the perclose was, ad grave damnum Episcopi; whereas the bishop could not be grieved by the said judgment, because he had nothing, nor claimed any thing in the church, &c.

Wray, The writ of error had been the better, if those words, (ad grave damnum Episcopi) had been left out, for the bishop hath lost nothing.

And it was objected by some, if the judgment in this case be reversed, the usual judgment cannot be given; scil. that the bishop shall be restored to all which he lost, &c.

Wray, The bishop shall joyn for conformity of law, and for privity of record; and the plea of the bishop is not so strong as a disclaymer: for in case of a disclaimer, the judgment is, that the plaintiff shall take nothing by his writ; but in the case of the bishop here, the judgment is, quod querens recuperet præsentionem suam versus dictum Episcopum ad ecclesiam prædictam. [177] See 35 H. 6. 4. CCXXIX. Williams and Linford's Case.

Edward Williams brought an action upon the case against Linford, for slanderous words concerning the title of the plaintiff's lands; viz. Williams is nothing worth? and do you think that the mannor of D. is his? It is but a compact betwixt his brother Thomas and him. And declared further, that at the time of the speaking of these words, there was a communication with one J. S. to give the said J. S. the said mannor of D. for his mannor of R. and that by reason of the said slanderous words, the said J. S. durst not proceed in the said intended exchange. It was objected, that upon this matter, an action upon the case did not lie, because the slanderous words were not spoken to him who should be purchasor of the lands, but unto a stranger: for in the case betwixt Smith and Johnson; Johnson was in speech with one to sell his land to him, and Smith said to him who should be the purchasor of them, Will you buy Johnson's land, why, it is troubled with more charges and incumbrances that it is worth?

Wray, There is not any difference, be the words spoken to the parties, or unto a stranger; for in both cases, the title of the plaintiff is slandered, so as he cannot make sale of it. It was adjudged for the plaintiff.

CCXXX. Mich. 29 Eliz. In the Common Pleas.

A poor woman brought an action of trespass for breaking of her close, and declared of a continuance by 6 years: and upon nihil dicit, had judgment to recover: upon which a writ of enquiry of damages issued forth; and now came the woman and shewed to the Court, that the jury had found too little damages; scil. but 40s. whereas the land was worth 5l. per annum, and that the trespass had been continued for 6 years; and prayed, that the said writ might not be received, and that the Court would award another writ to have a better enquiry of the damages. But the whole Court denyed it; for so there might be infinite enquiries.

But some time at the request of the defendant, when excessive damages are found, or any misdemeanour is alledged in the plaintiff, in procuring, or using such a writ of enquiry of damages, we use to relieve the defendant with a new writ, but never the plaintiff, because it is his own act.

And by Rhodes, The late Countess of Darby brought a writ of dower, and had judgment to recover; and she surmised, that [178] her husband died seised, and prayed a writ of enquiry of damages, and had it: and because too small damages were found, she would have suppressed the said writ, and procured another; but she could not have it. CCXXXI. Lawson and Hare's Case.

In a replevin by Lawson against Hare of the Temple, who avowed, because he himself was seised of a hundred; and that he himself, and all those whose estate he hath in the said hundred, have used to hold a leet within the said hundred at such a place every year; and that at every time such leet should be holden, the inhabitants within the said precinct have used to pay to the lord of the leet, 16d. for the leet-fee; and that they have used to distrain for the same: and shewed, that at a leet there holden 5 July, 26 Eliz. &c. the plaintiff replied, absq; hoc, that they used to distrain; and it was found for the defendant. And it was moved in arrest of judgment, because the defendant in making his title to the leet by prescription, conveys the hundred to him by a que estate, without shewing a deed of it. See 11 H. 4. 242. Quod fuit concessum per Anderson & Windham. Periam and Rhodes, contrary; But if the hundred it self had been in question, then the exception had been material, but here the defendant intitles himself to a thing by reason of the hundred, and then it is sufficient for him to say, that he is seised of the hundred, be it by right, or by wrong. Admit, that by this not shewing, the avowry be vitious and defective, it is to be considered, if it be not helped by the Statute of Jeofail's, 18 Eliz. And therefore it is to be considered, if an avowry be within the meaning of the said statute.

Anderson, Although that the avowant be quasi an actor to have a retorn of the cattel, if the distress be adjudged lawful; yet in truth he is defendant, and not plaintiff; and if the defendant will justifie the taking, and not avow, he is meerly defendant: and although that he avow to have a retorn, yet he cannot be said plaintiff, no more than the tenant who voucheth over another to recover in value, may be said plaintiff. And therefore an avowry cannot be said a count, or declaration, but a answer to the count, or declaration.

Windham and Periam conceived, that an avowry is within the statute; for it comprehends title: and an answer to an avowry, is said a bar to an avowry; and an avowry is in the place of a declaration. Admitting, that an avowry is within the statute; if the not shewing of the deed be such a defect which may be helped by the statute.

Anderson conceived, that it was: but the plaintiff might [179] have demurred upon the avowry, for not shewing of the deed, and have had judgment. But when he hath traversed the prescription as to the point of the distress, and the same is found against him, now it shall be intended that the avowant hath a deed, although he hath not shewed it.

Windham, The title of the avowant to the hundred, is the foundation and ground of the suit; for if the avowant hath not a deed to make him a sufficient title to the hundred, he cannot have the leet: and if no leet, then no leet-fee; and then the avowant hath no cause to distrain.

Another exception was taken to the avowry, because the avowant hath not shewed any seisin of the leet-fee.

And by Periam, Such a seisin ought to be shewed in some person certain. For although it needs not always to lay a seisin, in shewing by whose hands the seisin was had, (for the inhabitants are charged, and no person certain) yet the seisin ought to be laid in a person in such sort as it may be laid: and therefore in this case, forasmuch as the seisin cannot be shewed by the hands of the inhabitants, it ought to be layed in the lord. See 4 H. 6. 29. Br. Avowry, 71. In a recordare the defendant avowed, because the King is seised of the castle of C. in jure ducatus sui cornub. to which he had 20s. rent out of the town of D. solvend. annuatim at Michaelmas, of which rent, the King and all the Dukes of Cornwal aforesaid had been seised time out of memory, &c. by the hands of the inhabitants of the same town, &c. and the same was holden a good avowry. For although that seisin ought to be laid in some person certain by his hands; yet in that case it is good enough; for the seisin by one of the inhabitants, is the seisin of them all.

And in the principal case by Periam and Walmesley, it was agreed, that the seisin here was well enough confessed; for when the plaintiff hath taken issue, that they have used to distrain, all other matters are holden confessed, because that the plaintiff hath not saved them to him by protestation. Which Rhodes granted.

Another exception was taken to the avowry, because that the leet by it is supposed to be holden in July; therefore void: which see, Magna Charta, 35.

But it was holden by Anderson, Windham, and Rhodes, that by reason of this prescription, the Court is well holden in July, notwithstanding the said Statute of Magna Charta, and it might be holden at what day he pleased; for his liberty and election is not restrained by the said statute, and such is the common experience. And note the words of the same statute, Ita quod quilibet habeat libertates suas quas habuit, vel habere consuevit, tempore Regis H. avi nostri, &c. vel quod postea perquisivit, &c.

And Rhodes conceived, that the said statute is to be intended of turns only, and not of leets. Which see, 24 H. 8. Br. Leet. 23. in the end of the case.

But by Periam, A leet cannot be holden but according to the [180] said statute, for to that purpose was the said statute made: but if a leet hath been time out of mind, &c. holden at any other day than that which is limited by the statute, it is a good prescription, and it is saved by the statute. The prescription is, that he and all &c. have used to hold a leet once in a year, and hath not shewed when the said year begins; for it may be, that a leet hath been holden there in this year before July, and then this is a void leet, and so no leet-fee due; and of that opinion was Periam, viz. that the avowant ought to have shewed the beginning and end of the year, viz. that he held the said leet pro uno anno finito, such a day: for it may be he hath holden two leets in one year: but it was said by the other justices, that that shall come on the other side; for prima facie it shall be intended that it hath been but once holden in the same year, until the contrary be shewed.

And note, by Anderson and Rhodes, if the King grants to one a leet to hold semel quolibet anno, without saying, at the liberty of the grantee, the grant is good, and the grantee may hold it at what day he pleaseth.

CCXXXII. PUTNAM AND COOK'S CASE.

In ejectione firmæ, it was found, that one Hawkins was seised of 3 messuages in Bury in fee, and had issue Robert his son, and Christien and Joan, daughters; and devised all his said messuages to his wife for life, the remainder of one of the said messuages to his son Robert and his heirs; the remainder of another of his said messuages to his daughter Christien and her heirs; the remainder of the third to Joan and her heirs; and further willed, that if any of his said issues died without issue of his body, that then the other surviving should have totam illam partem, &c. between them equally to be divided. The devisor died; the wife of the devisor died; Joan died having issue; Robert died without issue; Christien entred into the whole messuage of Robert, and died; and her husband held in as tenant by the curtesie.

Cook, The surviving child shall have the whole, and the issue of Joan shall have nothing. And he conceived, that by this devise they have an estate in tail; for the fee is not vested in them, for that it is incertain which of them shall survive; but when one doth survive, then he shall have the fee; for these words, totam illam partem, go to the whole estate, as well as to the whole land. If I devise my whole land to J. S. he hath a fee. And he conceived, that the three had an estate in tail with a fee expectant, each severally to the house limited to him.

Golding, contrary; Each of them hath an estate tail in the house devised to him, and but an estate for life expectant upon [181] the death of the other without issue; for there are no words by which it might appear what estate they shall have by the survivor, &c. I grant the case which Perkins denies, but Littleton affirms; scil. a devise of lands to one in perpetuum: for there the intent appeareth: but where there are not words of inheritance, nor words amounting to so much, then it shall be but an estate for life; and as to these words, totam illam partem, the same is all one, as if he had devised, totam illam, without partem. Also he conceived, that where one only survived, no estate further vested, for there ought to be two to take by the survivorship; for the words are, æqualiter inter eos dividend. And then if it cannot accrue by survivor, then it shall descend: and if it had accrued by survivor, they should thereof have been tenants in common, and not joynt-tenants, by reason of these words, æqualiter dividend.

Clench, Justice, The words, totam illam partam, go to the house, and not to the estate in it.

Shute, to the same intent, If both the daughters had survived, they should have fee in the house of Robert, but not by the will, but by descent in coparcenery. Also when two are dead, the son and one daughter, then it cannot be decided; therefore the will as to that is void, and then the common law shall take place, and put the messuage to the issue of one daughter, as to the sister surviving.

Gawdy, Justice, Here is but an estate for life in the survivor. It hath been objected, that then being but an estate for life, that estate is drowned by the descent of the feesimple, so as now the estate limited by the will, is void. To which it may be answered, that although now upon the matter it be void, yet ab initio, it was not so, for it became void by matter of later time; scil. by the descent of the feesimple; for if one of the daughters had died without issue before the death of Robert, so as the house of such daughter had come to Robert and the other sister; there had been no coparcener, for the son had all the fee, and the moyety of it is executed, and the moyety expectant, and the sister hath the moyety for life; and then the devise is not good. Also here are two survivors, so as nothing is to be divided, and therefore the law shall say, that the house of Robert is descended, scil. the fee of it to the daughter of Christien and Joan. And so judgment was given against the husband, who claimed to be tenant by the curtesie of the whole land and messuage.

CCXXXIII. LARGE'S CASE.

[See S. C. 2 Leon. 82 (with note).]

In an action upon the case, the case was this; A. seised of lands in fee, devised the same to his wife, till William his younger son should come to the age of 22 years, the remainder when the said William should come to such age, of his lands in D. to his two sons Alexander and John, the remainder of his lands in C. to two other of his sons, upon condition, quod si aliquis dictorum filiorum suorum circumibit vendere terram suam before his said son William should attain his said age of 22 years imperpetuum perderet eam. And before such age, two of his sons leased their parts which accrued to them by the will of their father for 60 years; and so from 60 years to 60 years, till 240 years were expired: it was argued by Bois, that Alexander and John are joynt-tenants, and not tenants in common; notwithstanding the opinion of Audley, 30 H. 8. Br. Devises, 29. And he argued also, that the said leases from 60 years to 60 years, is not within the condition of the devise, for it is not a sale from which they only are restrained: and so is it of a joynture made by any of the sons to their wives.

On the contrary, it was argued, because this remainder doth not vest presently, for it is incertain if it shall vest or not; for if William should die before he came to the age aforesaid, it was conceived, that the remainder was void. 34 E. 3. Fitz. Formedon, 68. A man deviseth land to his wife for life, so that if the said wife be disturbed, that the land shall remain over in fee; scil. to D. here is not any remainder until the wife be disturbed. So a devise unto a woman so long as she shall remain sole; and that then it shall remain to B. here this remainder shall not begin till the marriage: and this condition of restraint of alienation is good, for he is not altogether restrained, but for a time, scil. until his son shall come to the age of 22 years: as a feoffment upon condition, that he shall not alien to J. S. See 29 H. 8. Br. Mortmain, 39. A lease made for 100 years, and so from 100 years, to 100 years, until 800 years be expired, is mortmain. And see the Statute de Religiosis, the words are, emere præsumat, & vendere. A lease for years is within such words, emere, & vendere. Also, by this lease, the will is defrauded; and where the statute of Gloucester, cap. 3. wills, that if a man aliens tenements which he holdeth by the law of England, with warranty, the son shall not be barred; and yet if tenant by the curtesie be disseised, to whom he releaseth with warranty, the same is within the said statute: and yet a release and an alienation are [183] not the same, because they are in the like mischief; and if the sons might make a lease for 240 years, they might make a lease for 2000 years. So if the sons had acknowledged a statute of such a sum as amounted to the value of the land, it had been within the condition. It was holden, that where the words are, circumibit vendere terram imperpetuum perdert, this word imperpetuum, should be referred to perdere, and not to vendere.

Fenner, This lease is not within the word (sell;) for if the custom be, that an enfant of the age of 15 years may sell his land; yet by that he cannot devise it.

Note: That afterwards the words of the condition set down in the will in English, were read, viz. shall go about to sell his part, shall for ever lose the same. And then it is clear, that this word imperpetuum, shall be referred in construction to perdere, and not to vendere; for this word (shall) is inserted betwixt both.

CCXXXIV. MICH. 29 ELIZ. IN THE COMMON PLEAS.

In a formedon, the tenant pleaded a fine with proclamations: the demandant replyed, Nul tiel record; and the truth of the case was, that the record of the fine which remained with the chirographer did warrant the plea; but that which remained with the custos brevium did not warrant it; and both these records were shewed to the Court.

And Rhodes, Justice, cited a president, 26 Eliz. where, by the advice of all the justices of England, where such records differ; the record remaining with the custos brevium was amended, and made according to the record remaining with the chirographer, which Windham concessit.

And afterwards, the said president was shewed, in which was set down all the proceedings in the amending of it, and the names of all the justices, by whose direction the record was amended, were set down in it; and that the said president was written, and the amendment of the said record recorded, by the commandment and appointment of the said justices in perpetuam rei memoriam.

And the reason which induced the said justices to make such order, is here written, because, they took it, that the note remaining with the chirographer, est principale recordum.

[184] MICH. 29 ELIZ. IN THE KINGS BENCH.

CCXXXV. SIR GERVASE CLIFTON'S CASE.

In a quo warranto against Sir Gervase Clifton, it was shewed, that the said Sir Gervase was seised of a mannor, and of a house, in which he claimed to have a court, with view of frank-pledge; and that he without any grant or other authority usurpavit libertates prædictas. The defendant pleaded, quod non usurpavit libertates prædictas infra messuagium prædict. modo & forma. And upon that, there was a demurrer in law; for the defendant ought to have said, Non usurpavit libertates prædictas, nec eorum aliquam; for he ought to answer, singulatim: and also he ought to have pleaded as well to the mannor, as to the house; for if the defendant hath holden court within any place within the mannor, it is sufficient. See 33 H. 8. Br. Franc. sans ceo, 364. An information was in the Exchequer, that the defendant had bought wooll of A. B. contra statutum. The defendant pleaded, that he had not bought of A. and B. The plea was not allowed; but he shall plead, that he had not bought modo & forma: for if he hath bought of A. B. or J. S. the same is not material nor traversable, which case, Cook denyed to be law. And he also conceived, that the information upon the quo warranto, is not sufficient; for by the same, the defendant is charged to hold a court, and it is not shewed what court; for it may be a court of pipowders, turn, &c. See 10 E. 4. 15 & 16. acc.

Shute, Justice, The quo warranto contains two things in it self; 1. A claim, and, 2. An usurpation; and here, the defendant hath answered but to the usurpation, but saith nothing to the claim. And it hath been holden in this Court heretofore, that he ought to answer to both.

And he said, that it had been holden in a reading upon the Statute of Quo Warranto, which is supposed to be the reading of Justice Frowick, that a quo warranto, doth not lie upon such liberties which do not lie in claim; as felons goods, &c. which lieth only in point of charter.

[185] MICH. 29 ELIZ. IN THE KINGS BENCH.

CCXXXVI. VENABLE'S CASE.

The case was; A lease was made to A. and B. for their lives, the remainder to Tho. Venables in tail; who 3 Eliz. was attainted of felony: 23 Eliz. there was a general pardon. Tho. Venables, 24 Eliz. levied a fine, and suffered a recovery to the use of Harris, Serjeant: office is found, Harris traversed the office; and thereupon was a demurrer: it was argued by Leake, that traverse did not lie in this case; 4 H. 7. 7 where the King is entituled by double matter of record, the party shall not be admitted to his traverse, nor to his monstrans de droit, but is put to his petition. Which see, 3 E. 4. 23. in the case of the Earl of Northumberland; where tenant of the King is attainted of treason, and the same is found by office. See also 11 H. 4. in the case of the Duke of Norfolk; and the same is not helped by the statute of 2 E. 6. cap. 8. for the words are, Untruly found by office, but here the office is true: by this attainder, Tho. Venables is utterly disabled to do any act; for by Bracton, A person attainted forisfacit patriam, regnum, & hæreditatem suam, 13 E. 4. One was attainted of felony: and before office found, the King granted over his lands. Also he is not helped by the general pardon; for before the general pardon, he had a special pardon; therefore the general pardon nihil operatur as to him: but by the justices, the forfeiture doth remain until the general pardon.

Harris, to the contrary. And he put the case of Sir James Ormond, 4 H. 7. 7. Where the King is entituled by matter of record, and the subject confesseth the title of the King, and avoids it by as high matter as that is for the King, traverse in that case lieth: and if the King be entituled by double matter of record, if the party avoids one of the said records by another record, he shall be admitted to his traverse; and so here we have the pardon which is a record, and that shall avoid the record for the King: and here the pardon hath purged the forfeiture in respect of the offence. And he said, That tenant in tail being attainted of felony, shall not lose his lands, but the profits only, for he hath his interest by the will of the donor, and it is a confidence reposed in him; and as Walsingham's case is he cannot grant over his estate. And see, in Wroth's case, annuity granted pro consilio impendendo, cannot be granted over, or forfeited, for there is a confidence. See Empson's case, Dyer, 2. and 29 Ass. 60. If the issue in tail be outlawed of felony in the life of his father, and gets his pardon in the life of his father, after the death of his father he may enter. But by Thorp, If the issue in tail gets his pardon after the death of his father, then the King shall have the profits of the lands during the life of the issue. And the case of [186] Cardinal Pool was debated in the Parliament, 27 Eliz. that he being Dean of Exeter, was seised of lands in the right of his church, and was attainted of treason. It was holden, he should forfeit the profits of such lands. But admit, that by this attainder, the land be forfeited; yet the party hath the freehold until office found. See Nicholls case, Plow. Com. And also the case of the Dutchy, in Plow. Com. acc. And here, the pardon hath dispensed with the forfeiture. A tenant of the King aliens in mortmain before office found, the King pardons it, it is good. The Lord Poynings conveyed all his lands to Sir Adrian Poynings who was an alien, and after made a denizen, and the King pardoned and released to him all his right in the said lands without any words of grant; and adjudged, the same did bind the King: and he said, he had a good president, 14 H. 7. where a general pardon before seisure into the hands of the King, was allowed good; contrary, after a seisure without words of grant. See Br. 29 H. 8. Br. Charter of Pardon, 52. If a man be attainted of felony, and the King pardons him all felonies & executiones eorundem, and outlawries, &c. and releases all forfeitures of lands and tenements, and of goods and chattels, the same will not serve but for life of lands, if no office be found, but it will not serve for the goods without words of restitution and grant; for the King is entituled to them by the outlawry without office: but the King is not entituled to land, until office be found. See Ibid. 33 H. 8. 71. The heir intrudes, and before office found, the King pardons, now the heir is discharged as well of the issues and profits, as of the intrusion it self. But a pardon given after the office found, is available for the offence, but not for the issues and profits. And he cited the case of Cole in Plowden, where a pardon was granted, mean between the stroak and the death. See 35 H. 6. 1. 16 E. 4. 1. 8 Eliz. Dyer, 249. Brereton's case. 11 Eliz. Dyer, 284, 285.

Egerton, Sollicitor, contrary, This traverse is not good, for he who traverseth, hath not made title to himself as he ought, upon which the Queen may take issue; for it is in the election of the Queen to maintain her own title, or to traverse the title of the party. At the common law, no traverse lay but where livery might be sued; but that is helped by the statute of 34 E. 3. but where the King is entituled by double matter of record (as in our case he is) no traverse was allowed until 2 E. 6. cap. 8. And in such case, two things are requisite, 1. That the office be untruly found. 2. That the party who is to be admitted to his traverse, have just title or interest of estate of freehold, &c. But in our case, the office is confessed by the traverse to be true, although that the conveyance be not truly found. And also Harris, at the time of the office found, had not just title, but his interest came to him, long time after the office found. Also the traverse is not good, for he traverseth the matter of the conveyance, which is not traversable; for if the Queen hath title, non refert, quo [187] modo, or by what conveyance she hath it. As to the matter in law, tenant in tail in remainder is attainted of felony. If the King during the life of the tenant in tail, shall have the freehold. And he conceived, she should; for it shall not be in abeyance, and it cannot be in any other; for when he is attainted, he is dead as unto the King: the chief lord cannot have it; for the tenant for life is alive; and also he in the remainder in fee, &c. The donor shall not have it, for the tenant is not naturally dead, but civilly; and the land cannot revert before the tenant in tail be naturally dead without issue. But if there were any other in whom the freehold could vest, then the King should not have the freehold, but only the profits. So if the tenant be attainted, the lord shall have the land presently, 3 E. 3. 4 E. 3. The husband seised in the right of his wife, is attainted of felony, the King shall have but the profits, because that the freehold rests in the wife; and if the lord entreth, the wife shall have an assise. And tenant in tail may forfeit for his life, as he may grant during his life. See old N. B. 99. If tenant in tail for life, dower, or by the curtesie, be attaint of felony, the King shall have the land during their lives; and after their decease, he in the reversion shall sue to the King by petition, and shall have the lands out of the Kings hands: and there it is further said, that the lord by escheat cannot have it; for the party attainted was not his very tenant, but he in the reversion; for the term yet endures: but now is to see, if the freehold be in the King without office; and I conceive that it is, where the King is entituled to an action, there the King ought to have an office, and a scire facias upon it: as where the King is entituled to a cessavit, action of waste, &c. 14 H. 7. 12. Where entry in the case of a common person is necessary, there behoves to be an office for the King. As where the Kings villain purchaseth lands, or an alien born, &c. so is it, for a condition broken, mortmain, &c. In some cases an office is only necessary to instruct the King how he shall charge the officer for the profits, which may be supplyed as well by survey as by office: as if the King be to take by descent, or as the case is here. And it is true, that a person attainted of felony, may during his attainder purchase lands, and yet he cannot keep it against the King. And it is clear, that by the common law in such cases, the land was in the King, but not to grant. For the statute of 18 H. 6. was an impediment to that; but now that defect is supplyed by the statute of 33 H. 8. So as now the King may grant without office. See 26 Eliz. Cook 3 part, Dowty's case. And in our case, office is not necessary to entitle the King, but to explain his title. See 9 H. 7. 2. The lands of a man attainted of high treason, are in the King without office; so where the King's tenant dieth without heir; or tenant in tail of the gift of the King dieth without issue. See Br. Office before the Escheator, 34. See 13 H. 4. 278. A man attainted of trea-[188]-son, the King before office, grants his lands and goods; things which lie in grant, as advowsons, rents, &c. such things upon attainder are in the King without office. As to the general pardon of 23 Eliz. he conceived, that the same did not extend to this case, and that this interest of the Queen by this attainder did not pass by the pardon out of the Queen; so if the Queen had but a right and title only.

Popham, Attorny General, By this attainder, the estate of him in the remainder in tail accrued to the Queen for the life of him in the remainder; for by our law, felony is punished by the death of the offendor, and the loss of his goods and lands for the example of others, therefore nothing is left in him. Tenant for life is attainted of felony, the King pardons to him his life, yet he shall have his lands during his life; for he himself cannot dispose of them for his life: and so it is of tenant in tail, &c. for he may forfeit all that which he hath, and that is an estate for his life which is the freehold. If lands be given to one and his heirs for the life of another, and the donee be attainted of felony, the King shall have the land during the life of cestuy que vie, for the heir cannot have it, because the blood is corrupt, and there is not any occupancy in the case: for 17 E. 3. the justices would not accept a fine of lands for the life of another, because an occupant might be in the case; but for a fine of lands to one and his heir for the life of another, they accepted a fine, for there is no mischief of occupancy. Land is given to A. for life, the remainder to B. for life, the remainder to the right heirs of A. who is attainted of felony: A. dieth; now the King hath a fee executed: and here in our case, if this tenant for life had been dead, no præcipe would lie against him in the remainder being in possession, but the party who had right was to sue to the King by petition. 4 E. 3. If one seised in the right of his wife of lands for life, be attainted, the King shall have exitus & proficua: but I conceive that case is not law: for see F. N. B. 254. D. The husband seised in the right of his wife in fee, is outlawed of felony; the King seiseth, the husband dieth; now shall issue forth a diem clausit extremum; the words of which writ are in such case, quia A. cujus terra & tenement. quæ ipse tenuit de jure & hæreditate N. uxoris suæ, adhuc superstites occasione cujusdam utlagariæ in ipsum pro quadum felonia inde indictatus fuit, &c. in manu domini H. patris nostri extiterunt, &c. therefore, the King hath not exitus tantum, but also the land it self. See to the same purpose, the Register, 292. b. And see also now in the Book of Pleas of the Crown, 186, 187. which affirmeth, that tenant in tail being attainted of felony, shall forfeit the land during his life. And he conceived, that this estate of Tho. Venables was in the King without office; not to grant, for he is restrained by the statute of 18 H. 8. but it is in him so before office, that he who hath right ought to sue to the King by petition, if he will have the same; yet he concei-[189]-ved, that before the said statute of 18 H. 6. the King might grant it before office; as it appeareth by Thirning, 13 H. 4. 278. which was before the statute. So if the Kings tenant makes a lease for years, the remainder over to another in fee, who dyeth without heir, the said remainder is in the King without office, because a common person in such case cannot enter, but a claim is sufficient; and therefore it shall be in the King without office. As to the pardon, he conceived, that it did not extend to this estate; for the same is a freehold, therefore not within the pardon: as if the Kings tenant be attainted of felony, and the King pardons him all offences, and all which he may pardon; these words will not go, or extend to freehold, but only to personal matters, and such punishments and pains which do concern chattels. But it may be objected, that in this pardon, title of quare impedit, and re-entries for conditions are excepted; and therefore if they had not been excepted, they had been released by the pardon; and therefore this pardon doth extend to inheritances and freeholds. As to that, I say, that such exceptions were not in use in the time of King Ed. 4. and such inheritances and freeholds were not taken to be within such pardons; and such exceptions began 5 Eliz. And he said, he had been of counsel in such cases, where it had been taken, that such pardons did not extend to freeholds. As, an abbot was disseised, and during the disseisin, the abby was dissolved; the King made such a pardon, the same did not transfer the Kings right. And in this case, there are divers exceptions of goods and chattels in many cases, and therefore it cannot be intended that this pardon doth extend to freeholds. And see the said act of pardon; there, the Queen gave and granted all goods, chattels, debts, fines, issues, profits, amercements, forfeitures, and sums of mony; which word (forfeiture) shall be intended personal forfeiture, and not otherwise, for it is coupled with things of such nature. And as to the traverse, he conceived, that it did not lie in this case; for the office is not untrue in substance, although it be void in circumstances: and also the King here is entituled by double matter of record; i.e. the attainder and the office. And he said, that the statutes of 34 & 36 E. 3. which gave traverse, are to be meant of offices found virtute officii, and not virtute brevis; for then escheators were very troublesome. And 2 E. 6. doth not give traverse, but where the office is untruly found. As if the Kings tenant be disseised, and the disseisor be attainted; the Queen seiseth the land; now the disseisee hath no remedy by traverse upon the statute of 2 E. 6. but is put to his monstrans de droit, for that the office is true: but if I be the Kings tenant, and seised of lands accordingly; and it is found that J. S. was seised of my land, and attainted, &c. whereas in truth, he had not any thing in my land, there traverse lieth; for the office is false; and so our case for the traverse, is at the common law. And it is true, that Venables was seised, &c.

[190] Cook, to the contrary; and he conceived, that by the attainder, the Queen had gained but a chattel; and that notwithstanding this forfeiture, if Venables had been in possession, a præcipe should be brought against him. And whereas it hath been said by Mr. Attorny, that the writs set down in the register, are the best expositors of our law; the same is not so: for the register saith, that waste lieth notwithstanding a mean remainder, which is not now law, but it hath been clearly ruled to the contrary. See acc. 50 E. 3. The register therefore, and the writs, are subject to the judgments of our law. And the writ of diem clausit extremum, is not to the contrary: for I confess, that in such case, the land shall be seised into the Kings hands, but the King shall have but a chattel in it. It hath been argued, he may grant, therefore he may forfeit. Nego consequentiam; for a man, seised in the right of his wife, may grant, but not forfeit. Gardian in socage may grant, but not forfeit; the husband may grant a term for years which he hath in the right of his wife, but he cannot forfeit it. A woman enheritrix taketh husband, and afterwards is attainted of felony, the King pardons him, they have issue; the woman dieth, the husband shall be tenant by the curtesie, which proveth, that the King hath no freehold by this attainder. Before the Statute of West. 2. tenant in tail post prolem suscitatam might forfeit the land, but now the statute hath so incorporated the estate tail to the tenant in tail, that it cannot be devested; yea, a fine levied ipso jure est nullus, although as to the possession it be a discontinuance: and that is the reason, wherefore tenant in tail shall not be seised to another's use. See Stamford, 190 b. The husband seised in the right of his wife, is attainted of felony, the King shall have the issues of the land of the wife during the life of the husband, &c. So if tenant in tail be attainted of felony, that is but a chattel in the lands of the wife, and also in the lands of the tenant in tail; and if the possessions of a bishop be seised into the Kings hands for a contempt, in such case the King hath possession, and not only the profits: the same law of lands of tenant in tail or for life, being attainted of felony. So seisure for alienation without licence, or of the possessions of poor aliens. See Br. Reseisure, 10. So where the seisure is for idiocy. And he conceived, that nothing is in the King without office. And as to the case of 13 H. 4. 6. I confess it; for all that time many, and amongst them lawyers and justices, were attainted by Parliament; and so was Sir John Salisbury, whose case it was, and their lands by Act of Parliament given expresly to the King; and therefore I grant, that their lands were in the King without office. Tenant in fee of a common lord is attainted of felony, his lands remain in him during his life, till the entry of the lord; and where the King is lord, until office be found: but in the case of a common person, after the death of the person attainted, it is in the lord before [191] entry; and in the case of the King, before office, for the mischief of abeyance. And see the Lord Lovell's case, 18 Eliz. Plow. Com. 485, 486. where it is holden, that upon attainder of treason by Act of Parliament, the lands were not in the King without office in the life of the person attainted, upon the words of the Act, shall forfeit. See Stamford, 54, 55 acc. 3. He conceived, that this interest which came to the King by this attainder, was but a chattel, and then it is released by the pardon; and so he conceived, if it be a freehold. For the words of the general pardon are large and liberal; pardon and release all manner of treasons, &c. And all other things, causes, &c. and here forfeitures are pardoned; and also this word (things) is a transcendent, &c. And although it be a general word, yet by the direction of the general pardon it ought to be beneficially expounded and extended, as if all things had been especially set down. Also the words are, Pardon them and their heirs; therefore the same extends to inheritances for any offence not excepted, for there is the word heirs; and the third branch doth concern only chattels, and that is by the word grant; where the former is, by the words, release and acquit. See Br. Charter of Pardon, 71. 33 H. 8. Tenant of the King dieth seised, the heir intrudes, office is found; in that case by pardons of all intrusions, the offence is pardoned, but not the issues and profits. But by the pardon aforesaid, all is pardoned. And here in our case, the office is void; for the statute makes all precepts, conditions, void, &c. being awarded upon such forfeitures. See also in the second branch, vexed and inquieted in body, good, lands, &c. And see also amongst the exceptions, that persons standing endicted of wilful murder, and forfeiture of goods, lands, tenements, grown by any offence committed by such person; by which he conceived, that if that exception had not been, the land of such a person, if he had been attainted upon such indictment, should be forfeited. As to the traverse, he conceived, that in as much as the office is true, our plea is a monstrans de droit, although it concludes with a traverse. We vary from the office in number of persons, and in the day of the feoffment; and every circumstance in the Kings case is to be traversed, and our plea in substance doth confess and avoid the office.

Although the King here be entituled by double matter of record; i.e. the attainder and the office; yet one of the said records is discharged by another record; i.e. the pardon, and then there is but one record remaining; scil. the office, and therefore our traverse doth lie. And he conceived, that at the common law there was a traverse; as where it was found by office, that the lessee of the King had done waste, or cessed for two years; and there it is said, that the lessee and tenant in an action brought against them, may traverse the office, therefore traverse was at the common law, where the king was entituled [192] by single matter of record. So upon an office finding an alienation without licence, traverse was by the common law. See traverse in such case, in the case of William de Herlington, 43 Ass. 28. See Br. Traverse, 54. Petition is by the common law, and traverse by the statute; Frowick in his reading. See Stamf. Prerogat. 60. That traverse in the case of goods was at the common law, but traverse for lands found by office, by 34 E. 3. cap. 14. therefore the remedy was by petition. See now, Cook 4. Part, the Sadler's case, 55, 56. Traverse was at the common law concerning freehold and inheritance, but that was in special cases, when by the office the land is not in the Kings hands, nor the King by that is in possession, but only by the office, and entituled to the action, and cannot make seisure without suit there: in a scire facias brought by the King in the nature of such an action to which he was entituled, the party may appear unto the scire facias, and traverse the office by the common-law.

CCXXXVII. Mich. 27 Eliz. In the Kings Bench.

A writ was awarded out of the Court of Admiralty, against Sir Tho. Bacon, and Sir Tho. Heydon, to shew cause wherefore, whereas the Earl of Lincoln late High Admiral of England, had granted to them by patent to be vice admirals in the counties of Norfolk and Suffolk, the said letters patents ought not to be repealed and annulled. And so the said writ was in the nature of a scire facias.

It was moved by Cook, that although the admiral had but an estate for life; yet the patent did continue in force after his death: as the Justices here of the Common Pleas, although they have their places but for life, may grant offices which shall be in force after their death: and because the same matter is determinable at the common law, he prayed a prohibition; for in the admiralty they would judge according to the civil law: the Court gave day to the other side, to shew cause, why the prohibition should not be awarded.

CCXXXVIII. Mich. 29 Eliz. In the Kings Bench.

Accompt was brought by Harris against Baker, and damages were given by the jury: it was moved to the Court, that damages ought not to be given by way of damages, but the damages of the plaintiff shall be considered of by way of arrearges. But see the case, Hill. 29 Eliz. in C. B. betwixt Collet and Andrews. And yet, 10 H. 6. 18. in accompt, the plaintiff counted to his damage, but did not recover damages, 2 H. 7. 13. 21 H. 6. 26. The plaintiff shall not recover damages expresly, but the Court shall given quoddam incrementum to the arrearages.

[193] Cook said, that it had been adjudged, that the plaintiff should recover damages in an accompt ratione implicationis, & non detentionis.

CCXL. BARNS CASE.

Barns brought an action of trespass, for taking of his sack of corn; the defendants justified in the behalf of the town of Lawson in the county of Cornwell; because, that King Phil. and Queen Mary granted to them of the said town, a market to be holden within the said town; and that the plaintiff came to the said town with a sack of corn, and the vendor would not pay toll, for which cause, they took the said sack of corn. And judgment was given for the defendant. Upon which, error was brought, and assigned for error, because that the defendant pleads the letters patents with the date of the place, year, and day, without saying, magno sigillo Angliæ sigillat. For it was holden, that (hic in curia prolat.) is but form. And afterwards the judgment was reversed, for default of the said matter, magno sigillo Angliæ (sigillat.). And by Anderson, Justice, patents are good without inrollment; and that was adjudged in Hungate's case.

CCXLI. MICH. 29 ELIZ. IN THE EXCHEQUER CHAMBER.

Debt brought upon an obligation; the defendant pleaded payment apud Lockington, in the parish of Killmerston: and the venire facias was awarded de Lockington. And that was assigned for error in the Exchequer Chamber, upon a judgment given in the Kings Bench, that the venire ought to be de Killmerston. See 6 H. 7. 3. 11 H. 7, 23, 24. 9 E. 4. 3. Trespass for entry in the mannor of D. in S. the visne shall come de vicineto de S. and not from the mannor. Contrary, if it be for the entry into the mannor of D. only, for there it shall be de vicineto manerii.

Cook said, there was a case very late adjudged in the Kings Bench; a lease was pleaded to be made at Ramridge End in Lu-[194]-ton; and that he himself was of opinion, that the venire ought to have been of Ramridge End, and not of Luton. But the Court overruled the same against him. It was said in the principal case, that Lockington shall be intended a town as this case is; for a parish may contain many towns. And afterwards, the judgment was affirmed.

CCXLII. MICH. 29 ELIZ. IN THE COMMON PLEAS.

In trespass, for breaking his close; the defendant pleaded that heretofore he himself brought an ejectione firmæ against the now plaintiff of the same land in which the trespass is supposed to be done, and had judgment to recover, &c. and demanded judgment, if against, &c. It was moved, that the bar was not good, because that the defendant had not averred his title. And the recovery in one action of trespass, is no bar in another, &c. Quod Curia concessit. But as to the matter, the Court was clear, that the bar was good. And by Periam, whoever pleaded it, it was well pleaded: for as by recovery in an assise, the freehold is bound; so by recovery in an ejectione firmæ, the possession is bound. And by Anderson, a recovery in one ejectione firmæ, is a bar in another. Especially (as Periam said) if the party relyeth upon the estoppel. And afterwards, judgment was given, that the plaintiff should be barred.

CCXLIII. PETER'S CASE.

William Peters, being plaintiff in an action of debt in the Common Pleas, came to London this term to prosecute his action; and afterwards he was committed to the Marshalsey by the Lord Hunsdon, chamberlain of the Queens houshold, and one of her Privy Council: and now an habeas corpus issued out to the keeper of the Marshalsey, to have the body of the said Peters in Court: and at the day, the keeper retorned the said writ, that the said Peters was committed to the said prison, by the said Lord, and shewed the warrant for it, there to remain and to answer before the Lords of Her Majesties Council to such matters, &c. Causa vero detentionis mihi omnino incognita est. The Court examined the said Peters upon his oath, if he came to London to prosecute his said cause? Who answered, that he did. And the Court also examined the said keeper, if he had acquainted the said Lord with the said writ? Who said, that he had so done; but he shewed him not any cause. Wherefore by the award of the Court, Peters was discharged of his imprisonment.

[195] CCXLIV. HILL. 29 ELIZ. IN THE COMMON PLEAS.

Serjeant Fenner demanded the opinion of the Court in this case; A. devised lands to his wife for life, and afterwards to B. his son, and his heirs, when he should come to the age of 24 years; and if his wife died before his said son should attain his said age of 24 years, that then J. S. should have the said land until the said age of the said son: A. died; J. S. died; the wife died, the son being within the age of 24 years: if the executors of J. S. should have the land after the death of J. S. until the said age of the son, was the question.

Anderson and Periam conceived, that he should not; for this interest limited to J. S. by the will, was but a possibility, which was never vested in him, and therefore could not by any means come to his executor. Rhodes and Windham doubted of it.

Fenner put the case, in 12 E. 2. Fitz. Condition 9. Where land is mortgaged to J. S. upon payment of mony to J. S. such a day, or his heirs; and before the said day, J. S. by his will deviseth, that if the mortgagor pay the money, that then A. B. should have them; that this devise of this possibility is good; quod omnes justiciarii negaverunt.

And Windham put the case between Weldon and Elkington, Plow. Com. 20 Eliz. 519. Where lessee for years devised his term to his wife for so many years of the said term as she should live; and if she died within the term, that then his son Francis should have the residue of the term not encurred: Francis died intestate; the wife died within the term; the administrator of Francis had the residue of the term, and yet nothing was in Francis the intestate, but a possibility. A lease was made to one Hayward, his wife, and one of his children; habendum to Hayward for 99 years, if he should so long live: and if he die within the said term, that then his said wife should have the said term for so many years which should be to come at the time of the death of her husband; and if she died also before the said term, that then the child party to the devise, should have it for so many years of the said term as should not be expired at the time of the death of the wife. And the case of Cicill was vouched, 8 Eliz. Dyer, 253. A lease was made to William Cicill, pro termino 41 annorum, si tam diu vixerit. Et si obierit infra prædictum terminum, extunc uxor prædicti William Cicill habebit & tenebit omnia & singula præmissa pro residuo termini præd. incompleto, si tam diu vixerit. Et si the said Eliz. obierit, infra prædict. terminum, tunc William Cicill filius, &c. And it was holden by Catlyn and Dyer, that these remainders were void; for the term is determinable upon [196] the death of William Cicill the father, and the residue of the said term cannot remain.

And by Anderson, the remainders of the term limited ut supra, are void; for every remainder ought to be certain, but here is no certainty; for it may be, that the first possessor of the term may live longer, or die sooner, so as he in the remainder doth not know what thing he shall have.

And so also conceived Rhodes, Justice; and he put the case between Gravenor and Parker, 3 & 4 Mar. Dyer, 150. A lease was made to A. for life by indenture; and by the said indenture, a proviso was, that if the lessee died within the term of 60 years then next ensuing, that then his executors should have it in right of the lessee for so many of the years as should amount to the number of 60 years, to be accounted from the date of the indenture. And it was holden, that that secondary interest to the executor was void: and that the words concerning the same went only in covenant.

CCXLVI. SIR THOMAS GORGE AND DALTON'S CASE.

Sir Thomas Gorge and the Lady Helene his wife, brought a quare impedit against Francis Dalton; who pleaded, that the Queen was seised of the mannor of D. to which the advowson, &c. was appendant; and so seised, the church became void: and that afterwards the Queen granted the said mannor with the advowson to J. S. who presented the defendant. It was the clear opinion of the Court, that by that grant of the Queen the advowson did not pass; although that the King by his prerogative, may grant a thing in action. It was holden in this case by Rhodes and Periam, Justices, that the surrender and admittance, ut supra, are in the nature of an inrollment, and so amount to an attornment; or at the least, do supply the want of it.

CCXLVIII. CARTER AND MARTEN'S CASE.

Two men made an obligation joyntly for debt. The principal in the obligation made him who was surety only for him in the said obligation for payment of the mony, his executor, who payed the mony generally: and, whether it shall be said, that he paid it as executor, or as an obligor, was a quære, not resolved by the Court.

CCXLIX. MICH. 29 ELIZ. IN THE EXCHEQUER.

A. was endebted to B. who was endebted to the Queen; B. assigned his debt unto the Queen: by all the Barons, process shall be awarded out of the Exchequer, to enquire what goods A. had at the time of the assignment; and not what he had tempore scripti prædict. facti, &c.

CCL. HILL. 30 ELIZ. IN THE EXCHEQUER.

A. was accomptable to J. S. and afterwards J. S. was outlawed in an action personal: A. died; the Queen by her letters patents granted unto B. omnia bona & catalla, exitus, proficua, forisfactur. & advantagia quæcunq; which came to her, or accrued by reason of the outlawry of the said J. S. And now B. brought an action of accompt against the executors of the said A. as executors of their own wrong. The defendants pleaded, that they had letters of administration committed to them by the Ordinary, and demanded judgment of the writ. The plaintiff in maintenance of his writ, replyed, that the defendants did administer of their own wrong, before that administration was granted unto them. Upon which the defendants did demur in law. It was the opinion of some of the justices, that the wrong is urged by taking of letters of administration; and now [198] they are to be charged as administrators only, and not otherwise. See 50 E. 3. 9. 20 H. 6. 1. And see the case of the Cardinal of Canterbury, 9 E. 4. 33. If one administreth of his own wrong, and afterwards takes letters of administration, he shall be sued not as executor, but as administrator. See 21 H. 6. 8.

But Gawdy, Justice, conceived, that the defendants might be charged as executors. As to the grant of the Queen of this action of accompt. See Br. Pat. 98. 32 H. 8. that the King may grant a thing in action which is personal, as debt and damages, or the like; or a thing mixt, as the wardship of the body; but not a thing real, as an action concerning lands, rights, entries. But it was agreed on all sides, that if this action had been granted specially, it had been clearly good. And it was observed, that in the principal case the accomptant was dead before the grant; so that his executors were chargeable to the Queen, to render an accompt, and the Queen was entituled to it. It hath been objected, that this action of accompt came to the King by reason of his prerogative Royal, and in vertue thereof the executors are accomptable to her, and therefore the Queen cannot grant the same over to a subject: certainly the same is not an incident inseparable from the Crown, nor a flower of the Crown; as the King cannot grant over to a subject power to pardon felons, for that is proper and peculiar to the person of the King; nor that a subject may have a Court of Chancery: and although this matter of accompt is at the first, i.e. at the time of the grant, uncertain; yet by matter ex post facto, it may be reduced to certainty, i.e. by the accompt; and although the accompt be not expresly named in the letters patents, yet the words of the grant, ut supra, do amount to as much. And Gawdy, Justice, conceived, that this accompt ought to be brought in the name of the Queen: and all the justices were of opinion, that if the said A. had been living at the time of the said grant of the Queen, the grant had not been good; for then the action against the executors, which is the matter of prerogative, had not been vested in the Queen.

MICH. 30 ELIZ. IN THE COMMON PLEAS.

CCLI. SPECOT'S CASE.

[See S. C. 5 Co. Rep. 57.]

Humphry Specot, and Elizabeth his wife, brought a quare impedit against the Bishop of Exceter, &c. of the church of Tedcole in the county of Devon: the bishop pleaded, that the plaintiffs presented to him one John Holmes, quem super examinationem invenit scismaticum inveterat', and so non habilem to be instituted, vel ad acceptandum aliquod beneficium cum cura animarum, for which he refused him, and of such refusal gave notice to the plaintiffs, and of the cause of it; upon which the plaintiffs [199] did demur in law. It was argued by Fleetwood, Serjeant, for the bishop, but to little purpose, therefore I will report but certain passages of his argument: he conceived, that that general pleading of schismaticus inveteratus was good enough; as, if the bishop certifieth bastardy, it is sufficient to say, Bastardus, sive spurius, without other circumstances, as to say, On the body of such a woman begotten: Lollard derivatur à Lollio. i.e. Anglice, tares. Sampson was Dean of Christ Church in Oxford, and was convented before the Ordinary for schism, because he would not use a surplice; and for that he was condemned for a schismatick, and deprived of his deanery, in the time of the Queen that now is. Shuttleworth, Serjeant, for the plaintiffs, that the bishop in his plea ought to have shewed specially, how and in what point the presentee of the plaintiffs was schismaticus: there are divers manners of schisms. 1. In doctrine. 2. In manners; and of each kind there are many, &c. And therefore, for doubt of enveigling the metropolitan, who is to try that issue, the defendant ought to have shewed the schism in certain, in which the metropolitan was to examine the clerk readily. See 38 E. 3, 2. the case of the Countess of Arundel, where in a quare impedit the Ordinary pleaded, that the presentee was criminosus & perjurus, and shewed the cause in what and when he was perjured. And although this issue is to be tryed by the metropolitan, yet it ought to be formally pleaded in the Temporal Court, and with certainty: as where a divorce is pleaded, it is not sufficient to say, that a divorce was had; but the party ought to shew for what cause, and before what Judge the divorce was had, which see 18 E. 4. 29. where the divorce is specially pleaded for cause of consanguinity; for by one divorce the issues are bastardized, by others not. See as to the pleading of a divorce 11 H. 7. 9. Profession, although it be a spiritual thing, yet the general pleading of it, is not good; but he who pleads it, ought to shew, of what order, and under whose obedience, 40 E. 3. 37. which see the Book of Entries 444. Intravit religionem, viz. in Domo Carmelitarum de London, & ibi fuit professus sub obedientia R. prioris domus illius. So deprivation shall not be generally pleaded, which see Book of Entries 458. Ecclesia vacavit per privationem, &c. per J. S. legum doctor. delegat. &c. so of resignation, 7 E. 4. 16. Resignavit in manus I. L. Bishop of London, Ordinary of the said place. Now, it is to see, if by this general demurrer the matter in fact be confessed, scil. that the presentee was schismaticus inveteratus; and as to that, the rule is, that all matters in fait, which are well and duly pleaded, by a general demurrer be confessed; but that which is not well alledged, by no demurrer shall be holden confessed: which learning see in the Commentaries, in Partridge and Stranges case. And here for as much as scismaticus is not well pleaded, for the cause aforesaid, it shall not be holden confessed. Now, it is to see, [200] if upon the statute of 27 Eliz. this defect be helped; and he conceived it was not, for here the defect is in matter, and not in form: as if, in trespass of his close breaking, the defendant justifies by a lease for years, and doth not shew the place where the lease was made, and the plaintiff demurrs generally upon it; the said defect is not helped by the said statute, for that it is matter. So in a formedon in discender, the defendant pleads a warranty with assets, without shewing the place where the assets is, and the demandant demurrs upon it generally, the same defect is not helped by the said statute: see a good case adjudged upon the statute, Mich. 28 & 29 Eliz. between Henly and Broad. Periam and Windham, Justices, conceived, that the plea of the bishop is not good, because it is not shewed in what point the presentee was schismaticus; for by this genral pleading, if it should be allowed, the metropolitan, to whom the tryal of the cause belongeth, shall be driven to peruse all schisms, in the examination of the presentee, which is a thing infinite and inconvenient. Rhodes, and the Lord Anderson, to the contrary: and Rhodes vouched an old book, 30 E. 1. out of a written book of the Lord Catline. In a quare non admisit, the defendant pleaded, that the clerk presented was schismaticus & adulter, and the Court commanded, that he hold himself to one of them, for which he said, adulter; so as the Court did not mislike the plea for the generality, but for the doubleness. And by Anderson, Our case is not like the cases put by Shuttleworth; for they concern things tryable by our law, in which case, to have convenient tryal, all matters issuable ought to be specially alledged; but here the case is otherwise, and no peril of tryal. And by the said statute of 27 Eliz. we ought to judge according to the right of the cause, and matter in law. See this case adjudged upon a writ of error brought in the Kings Bench. Hill. 32 Eliz. in Coke 5 Part, 57. Specot's case.

CCLII. ESTRIGGE AND OWLES'S CASE.

In an action upon the case by Estrigge against Owles, it was holden by the justices, that forbearance per paululum tempus, is a good consideration. Then it was moved, that in the action, the request was not sufficiently laid in respect of the place and time.

And Cook said, that the difference had always been agreed, that where the promise is to do a collateral thing upon request, there in the declaration, the place and the time ought to be certainly set down; as it was holden in the case of Alderman [201] Pulison; where he promised to give a tun of wine upon request, in such case the request is traversable, and therefore it ought to be certainly shewed, for the request is parcel of the issue: but if such action be brought, and the plaintiff declares upon an indebitatus, then if the plaintiff prove the debt, it is not material to prove the promise; for every contract executory implyes a promise: and in such case, the request is not traversable. And the truth of the case was, that one Tickil was endebted to the plaintiff in 30l. and died intestate; B. his wife took letters of administration, and took to husband the defendant; and he, for the consideration aforesaid, and that the plaintiff would forbear his debt for a little time, promised to pay it: and further declared, that he had forborn, &c. from such a day, until such a day; but yet the defendant would not pay it, licet sæpius requisitus: and upon this declaration, the plaintiff had judgment: and now a writ of error was brought, and it was assigned for error because that in the declaration it is alledged, that the wife administred the goods of the intestate, and did not shew, that she was administratrix, &c. and took letters of administration. 2. It is not alledged, that the wife had goods of the testator at the time of the promise, for otherwise she shall not be bound. For it is but nudum pactum; for executors or administrators, not having assets, shall not be charged. And it was holden here, that request is not necessary, for the debt was before the promise, so as the request is not any cause of the action.

CCLIII. MATTHEWS'S CASE.

Note; that a bill of perjury, upon the statute of 5 Eliz. was sued by the Queen and the party, because that the defendant being one of the homage, &c. did present with the rest of the homagers, that the plaintiff had cut down certain trees, &c. whereas in truth he had not cut down any. And it was holden by all the justices, that for this matter, the bill did not lie upon this statute; for this branch of the statute is to be intended of perjury in depositions only.

And by Tanfield, A bill doth not lie upon the statute upon perjury committed in an answer to a bill in Chancery. See 41 Eliz. Flower's case.

[202] CCLIV. TRIN. 30 ELIZ. IN THE COMMON PLEAS.

In a replevin, the defendant avowed for damage feasant; the plaintiff in bar of the avowry, shewed, that every inhabitant in every messuage in the said town had used to have common in the place where, &c.

Glanvile argued, that the prescription was not good, for want of capacity in the party who pretends interest, for it is not certain, but applyed to a multitude: and he put divers cases in proof of it: 22 H. 6. 21 H. 7. 1. Mar. Dyer, 100. The King grants a rent probis hominibus of Islington; the same is void, for they are not capable.

Harris, I conceive, that the prescription is good; and he granted, that a confused multitude cannot prescribe in a matter of interest, but in an easement, or discharge; as in a way to the church, and that by reason of custom in the land, and not in the persons. See 7 E. 4. 26. where it is pleaded, that all the inhabitants within such a town time out of mind, &c. have used to have common there, &c. And for a township to have a way to the church; and good, by Danby. And by Littleton, it ought to be pleaded by way of usage. And, 18 E. 4. 3. all the inhabitants of such a town, may well prescribe. And he cited Bracton, 222, 223. Communia quandocunq; ex longo usu sive constitutione cum pacifica possessione continue & non intermixta, ex scientia, negligentia, & patientia dominor', ita etiam amitti potest per negligentiam, & non usum. CCLV. PYE AND GRUNWAY'S CASE.

In trespass brought by Pye against Grunway, and one B. the plaintiff declared against Grunway only, who pleaded not guilty: and it was found for the plaintiff. And in arrest of judgment, it was moved, that the plaintiff in declaring against one only, had falsified his own writ. To that it was said, that at the uttermost it is but a discontinuance, so but matter of form, and so relieved by the statute of 18 Eliz. But it was said by the Court, that it may be, that B. was outlawed, at the plaintiffs suit, and then the proceedings is determined as against him. And the Court demanded of the clerks, if the use of the Court be not so in such case to declare, that Grunway simul cum B. utlagat. ad sectam querentis did the trespass? Who answered, Not in this action: but in an action of debt, it is otherwise: and afterwards, notwithstanding that exception, judgment was given against the plaintiff.

CCLVI. THORP AND WINGFIELD'S CASE.

In waste, the plaintiff declared upon a lease for years generally; and the truth of the case was, that the plaintiff had made a lease for years to one A. which lease being in force for two years, he leased the same lands for years, as he hath declared, to begin presently: and the waste which is assigned in the declaration, was done during the first lease; and now, if the defendant upon this matter might plead, no waste done, was the question. And it was said by the Court, that such a plea should be perilous for the defendant, for it shall be found against him; and if he pleadeth the special matter aforesaid, scil. the former lease in esse at the time of the waste committed; after the expiration of which lease, no waste was done: if the second lease be not by indenture, it should be a good plea; but if by indenture, then the plaintiff would estop him by the indenture, to shew, that the second lease hath another beginning than the indenture purports, and then the waste shall charge the defendant; and although the plaintiff had not declared upon a lease by indenture, yet if the defendant pleaded the special matter aforesaid, he by way of replication shall estop the defendant to plead any other beginning of the term than the letter of the indenture doth purport; and the same shall be no departure, for it is matter which strengtheneth the declaration.

CCLVIII. RUSH AND HEIGHGATE'S CASE.

Process was awarded out of the Exchequer, against Rush, for the levying of the sum of 200l. which he owed to the Queen; upon which, it was found by office, that Rush, 22 Junii, 22 Eliz. was possessed of lands for the term of divers years then and yet to come; and the debt of the Queen began 12 Feb. 17 Eliz. And upon the retorn of this office, came one Heighgate, and shewed, that the said Rush, 16 Eliz. was possessed of the said lease, and the same year assigned the same to the said Heighgate, and traversed the office.

Exception was taken to the inquisition, because that the lease is not certainly set forth; scil. the number of the years in certainty.

Cook, The office is sufficient enough, notwithstanding this exception, for the Queen is a stranger to the lease, and therefore she shall not be driven to set forth the certainty. See 7 E. 6. Plowden, 85. Partridge's case, upon the statute of 32 H. 8. concerning pretended titles, &c. there the informer declared, that the defendant had leased lands for years against the said statute, &c. without shewing the number of the years; and the information was holden good enough: for it is impossible, that a stranger have notice of every certainty, &c. and it is dangerous to meddle with such a particular certainty of the lease, and to miss it: and in this case, for as much as Heighgate comes to this lease not by voluntary contract, but by compulsory means; scil. by execution upon the statute, he cannot by common intendment have notice of every particular circumstance and article of the lease, as he may in case of a voluntary contract. And also, although in pleading, the number of the years ought to be expressed, yet in an inquisition such precise pleading is not requisite. See 15 H. 7. 7. An estate tail, and dying seised of it, was found by office, without shewing of whose gift it was; and good enough.

One exhibited a bill in the Exchequer Chamber, upon the statute of 2 E. 6. cap. 13. to have the treble value, for not setting forth his tythes according to the said statute. But it was clearly holden by the Court, that the bill did not lie upon that matter; for the plaintiff hath his remedy for the same in the Court of Pleas in the Exchequer: and also for that there shall be no suit or proceedings according to the order of the Exchequer Chamber in cases of conscience, upon any penal statute.

And upon non assumpsit pleaded, it was found for the plaintiff. And it was objected, that the plaintiff had not maintained nor averred his assumpsit; for the words of it are, Non molestavit nominatos executores testamenti & ultimæ voluntatis William Matthew; but he ought to have averred more specially, quod non molestavit Juniper & Matthew, named executors of William Matthew, nor any of them, by their names: also he ought to have pleaded, quod non molestavit, before the said 10th day of May, according to his promise. And also he ought to have shewed in his declaration, how that he did not trouble them for the debt of the testator, &c.

S. licet sæpius requisitus, &c. and so there was but one licet sæpius requisitus to all the 5 assumpsits; whereas every several assumpsit ought to have his several demand; for one general request for all is not sufficient: for it hath been adjudged, where one is endebted to me severally in several sums of mony, made upon request, or demand made; and I go to him, and say to him, Pay me what you owe me; the same is not a sufficient demand or request. Wray, If one lendeth me mony, to repay it when he shall be required; licet sæpius requisitus is not sufficient: but if the plaintiff declareth upon a cum indebitatus fuisset, the defendant assumed to pay; there licet sæpius requisitus is sufficient.

It is said, in Trinity Term, 29 Eliz. he disclosed; but it is not said what day of the month it was done; 3. The endictment is that he being sworn coram justiciariis Dominæ Reginæ, &c. and it is not shewed in what Court he was sworn, but generally at Westminster. CCLXVIII. THE TOWN OF GREEN IN SUSSEX'S CASE.

The town of Green in Sussex was amerced for the escape of a felon, and that amercement was grounded upon an inquisition taken before the coroner by whom the escape was found; and it was moved for the town, that there is not any such escape found, for which the town ought to be amerced: for it is found that he who escaped 10 die Januarij. 30 Eliz. circa horam quartam post meridiem, with a pitchfork mortally struck one A. which A. of the said stroak died 8 hours in the evening of the same day, and that then the other escaped; for which escape being done in the night, the town by the law ought not to be amerced, for it is not felony until the party dieth. Which see 11 H. 4. and in Cole's case 13 Eliz. Plow. Com. 401. And therefore the town nor any other was charged with the offendor before the party wag dead. Wray, It should be a hard thing that the town should be amerced upon this matter; for, although the town in discretion might have stayed the party, yet it is not bounden to do it, &c.

In an action upon the case, the plaintiff declared, that whereas one Hill had recovered in an action of debt against J. S. 10l. upon which a capias was awarded against J. S. that by force thereof he was arrested, and being under arrest, the defendant in consideration that the plaintiff would suffer the said J. S. to go at large circa negotia sua, and to go to his own house, and also in consideration of 2d. paid to the defendant, he promised to pay to the plaintiff the said 10l. It was holden by the Court, a void promise within the statute of 23 H. 6. For, the consideration to let a prisoner go at large is not lawful or good; and if part of the consideration be not good, the whole is naught, and so it was adjudged.

CCLXXI. STRETTON AND BROWN'S CASE.

In a false imprisonment brought, the defendant justified, because at the time he was constable of D. and appointed the plaintiff to watch, and he refused, by reason of which he set him in the stocks; upon which the plaintiff did demur in law, because the defendant had not alledged, that the plaintiff was an inhabitant within the town; for the constable cannot compel strangers which pass, to watch: and it was moved, if for such a cause the constable might set one in the stocks; for it was said, he ought to complain of his refusal to a justice of the peace. Also the constable cannot appoint any to watch at his pleasure, but only in his turn, for otherwise the constable might upon a private revenge vex his neighbors. See 22 E. 4. 35. Wray, Chief Justice, The defendant ought to shew, that the plaintiff was [209] inhabitant in the town, and that it was his turn to watch: and if such inhabitant refuse to watch in his turn, the constable may set him in the stocks.

TRIN. 30 ELIZ. IN THE EXCHEQUER.

CCLXXII. PARAMOUR AND THO. ROBINSON'S CASE.

The case was, George Robinson lessee for years of the mannor of Drayton-Basset, the reversion to the King, devised his term to his wife, as long as she should keep her self a widow, the remainder over, if she married; and died, and made his wife and William his son his executors, the said William being within age; and therefore administration was committed to the wife alone, and she only proved the will: and afterwards the wife granted all her interest to the said William, and died.

Cook, Nothing passeth by the grant, for William had the term before; for every executor hath an entire interest.

Popham, contrary; For at the time of that grant, the son was within age, and had not administred, nor proved the will; therefore in effect the wife was sole executrix.

Egerton, Sollicitor, If during the sole executorship of the wife, one committeth a trespass upon the land, the wife alone shall have the action of trespass without naming her co-executor: which Cook denyed. And he cited the case, 16 H. 7. 4. If two executors be, and one of them only is possessed of the goods of the testator, and a stranger takes them out of his possession, to whom the other executor doth release; and afterwards the executor out of whose possession the goods were taken, brings an action of trespass against the trespassor, who pleads the release of the other executor; it was holden a good plea; for the possession of the one, was the possession of the other. The case was further, that Tho. Robinson the defendant in pleading had shewed, that George Robinson was possessed, and devised the same to his wife, who granted the same to William, who devised the same to the defendant. On the other side, it was shewed, that Tho. Robinson the defendant granted the said term to Paramour the plaintiff; upon which they were at issue. And the question now was, If Tho. against his own pleading might give in evidence, that Thomas did not grant; for if the gift by the wife to William was void, and he had the term as executor, then he could not devise it. And it was shewed also, that Thomas granted it by indenture to Paramour: and now, if against that indenture, he might give in evidence such special matter, was the doubt. And, if the party shall be concluded if the jury shall be concluded ad dicendum veritatem?

And by Popham and Egerton, as well the jurors as the parties are concluded by the confession of the parties in the record. For here, Thomas confesseth, that William devised to him; virtute cujus, he was possessed.

[210] To that the Queens Attorny said, that it is true, that Thomas Robinson was possessed; but it is further said, that Thomas granted it to Paramour, and so the interest of Thomas is confessed on both sides, and therefore the jury shall not be received to say the contrary.

But the opinion of Manwood, Chief Baron, was, that if the parties do admit a thing per nient dedire, the jury is not bound by it; but where, upon the pleading a special matter is confessed, there the jury shall be bound by it. And afterwards, the issue was found against Robinson the defendant.

CCLXXIII. TRIN. 30 ELIZ. IN THE KINGS BENCH.

In an action of debt by A. against B. upon an obligation, the defendant pleaded tender of the mony according to the condition; upon which the parties were at issue. And after the defendant pleaded, that after the darrein continuance, the debt now in demand was attached in the defendants hands according to the custom of London, for the debt of C. to whom the plaintiff was endebted. It was the opinion of the Court, that the plea was insufficient, for it is altogether contrary to the first plea. And also the Court held, that in an action for the debt depending here in this Court, the debt cannot be attached; and the Court would not suffer a demurrer to be joyned upon it, but over-ruled the case without any argument; for it was said by Wray, Chief Justice, that it was against the jurisdiction of the Court, and the priviledge of it.

CCLXXIV. TRIN. 30 ELIZ. IN THE KINGS BENCH.

Note: it was holden by the Court, that if a copyholder in fee dieth seised, and the lord admits a stranger to the land who entreth, that he is but a tenant at will, and not a disseisor to the copyholder who hath the land by descent, because he cometh in by the assent of the lord, &c.

An ejectione firmæ was brought de uno cubiculo; and exception was taken to it: but the exception was disallowed. The declaration was special, viz. & leas unius cubiculi, per nomen unius cubiculi, being in such a house, in the middle story of the said house. And the declaration was holden good enough; and the word cubiculum, is a more apt word, than the word camera: and such was the opinion of Wray, Chief Justice. And it was said, that ejectione firmæ brought de una rooma, had been adjudged good in this Court.

CCLXXVI. JOHNSON AND BELLAMY'S CASE. ROT. 824.

In an ejectione firmæ, it was holden by special verdict, that W. Graunt was seised of certain lands, and by his will devised the same to Joan his wife for life: and further he willed, that when Rich. his brother should come to the age of 25 years, that he should have the land to him and the heirs of his body lawfully begotten. W. Graunt died, having issue of his body who was his heir. Rich. before he attained the age of 25 years, levied a fine of the said lands with proclamations in the life and during the seisin of Joan to A. sic ut partes finis nihil habuerunt: and, if this fine should bar the estate in tail, was the question? And the justices cited the case of the Lord Zouch, which was adjudged, Mich. 29 Eliz. where the case was, tenant in tail discontinued to E. and afterwards levied a fine to B. that although that partes finis nihil habuerunt, yet the said fine did bind the estate tail. But the serjeants at the Bar argued, that there was a difference between the case cited, and the case at Bar: for in the case cited, the fine was pleaded in Bar; but here it was not pleaded, but found by special verdict. To which it was said by the Court, that the same is not any difference; for the fine by the statute is not any matter of estoppel or conclusion, but by the statute binds and extincts the entail, and the right of it. And fines are as sufficient to bind the right of the entail when they are found by special verdict, as when they are pleaded in Bar.

And Periam, Justice, said, A collateral warranty found by special verdict, is of as great force, as pleaded in Bar. And afterwards judgment was given, that the estate tail by that fine was utterly barred and extinct.

CCLXXVII. MICH. 30 ELIZ. IN THE KINGS BENCH.

The case was, A man made a lease for life, rendring rent at Michaelmas; and further leased the same to the executors of the lessee until Michaelmas, after the death of the lessee. It was affirmed by Cook, that in that case, it was adjudged, that the word (until) shall be construed to extend to the term unto the end of the Feast of St. Michael, and so the rent then due payable by the executors; for without such construction, no rent should be then due, because the term ended before Michaelmas.

[212] CCLXXVIII. PASCH. 30 ELIZ. IN THE KINGS BENCH.

One was bounden to stand to the award of two arbitrators, who awarded, that the party should pay to a stranger or his assigns 200l. before such a day: the stranger before the day died; B. took letters of administration. The question was, if the obligee should pay the mony to the administrator, or if the obligation was discharged. It was the opinion of the whole Court, that the mony should be paid to the administrator, for he is an assignee. And by Gawdy, If the word (assigns) had been left out, yet the payment ought to be made to the administrator; which Cook granted.

CCLXXIX. PASCH. 30 ELIZ. IN THE COMMON PLEAS.

The defendant in debt, being ready at the Bar to wage his law, was examined by the Court, upon the points of the declaration, and the cause of the debt; upon which it appeared, that the plaintiff and defendant were reciprocally endebted the one to the other: and accompting together, they were agreed, that each of them should be quit of the other. It was the opinion of Periam and Anderson, Justices, that upon that matter, the defendant could not safely wage his law; for it is but an agreement, which cannot be executed, but by release or acquittance.

CCLXXX. PASCH. 30 ELIZ. IN THE COMMON PLEAS.

Tenant in tail covenanted with his son to stand seised to the use of himself for life, and afterwards to the use of his son in tail, the remainder to the right heirs of the father: the father levied a fine with proclamations, and died. It was moved by Fenner, If any estate passed to the son by that covenant? for it is not any discontinuance, and so nothing passed but during his life; and all the estates which are to begin after his death, are void.

Anderson, Justice, The estate passeth until, &c. And he cited the case of one Pitts, where it was adjudged, that if tenant in tail of an advowson in gross, grants the same in fee, and a collateral ancestor releaseth with warranty, and dieth, that the same is a good bar for ever.

CCLXXXI. OGNELL'S CASE.

In a replevin against Ognel, who avowed for rent; the plaintiff was nonsuit; the question was, whether the Court might assess damages, without a writ of enquiry of damages? It was the opinion, that they might; for they are not in respect of any local matter, but they accrue to the avowant, for the delay in the non-payment of the rent: contrary, where judgment is given for the plaintiff, there, the Court shall not assess the damages, for he ought to recover for the taking of his cattel, of which the Judges cannot take notice; and the damages may be greater or less according to the value of the cattel, and the circumstances of the taking and delaying of them.

Hitchcock brought an action of trespass for breaking of his close, and spoyling of his grass, against Harvey: and the case was, that A. was seised of the land in which, &c. and granted to the plaintiff proficuum of such a mead called Tentry Mead, post falcationem inde; scil. the ear-grass. And it was found by verdict, that ear-grass is such grass, which is upon the land after the mowing, until the Feast of the Annunciation after. It was moved, if such a grantee might have trespass, quare clausum fregit? And it was the opinion of the Court, that he could not; but for spoiling the grass he might.

Clench, Justice, If a man be outlawed in an action personal, the Queen hath the profits of the land, and lets the same to another, he shall have an action of trespass quare clausum fregit; which Shute granted: and afterwards because the jury had given damages entire, as well for the breaking of the close, as for the spoyling of the grass; the plaintiff could not recover the damages.

CCLXXXIII. CHARD AND TUCK'S CASE.

In an ejectione firmæ by Chard against Tuck, it was found by special verdict, that A. was seised of a messuage, and of a curtilage, and of a garden to the same belonging in fee; and that the curtilage was on the back-side of the said house, and the garden next beyond the said curtilage, the garden being divided from the curtilage by a wall, and a door through the wall into the garden from the said curtilage, and no way to either of them, but through the house. And it was further found, that the said A. by his will devised the said messuage to B. The question was, if by that devise, the curtilage and garden did pass. Vide inde Br. 23 H. 8. Feoffments, 53. Where a feoffment is made of such a messuage cum pertinentiis, they shall pass. Curtilage, is a member, at the least an appendix of a messuage. And by the clear opinion of the whole Court in the case at Bar, it was resolved, that by this devise, the curtilage and garden did pass.

And it was said by Wray, Chief Justice, It matters not, whether the curtilage and garden be before the house, or behind it; for in both cases they shall pass.

MICH. 30 ELIZ. IN THE EXCHEQUER.

CCLXXXIV. BAXTER'S CASE.

An information in the Exchequer, was exhibited against Baxter of Cambridge, upon the Statute of 7 E. 6. cap. 5. of Wines, and the selling of them against the purview of the said statute. To which the defendant pleaded, that King Rich. the Second in the 5th year of his reign, granted unto the Chancellor and his deputy, and the scholers of the University of Cambridge, custodiam assisæ panis, vini, & cervisiæ, & correctionem & punitionem eorundum; and that the Queen that now is, confirmed the said grant in the third year of her reign by her letters patents; which were after confirmed by Act of Parliament, 13 Eliz. And so pleaded to the jurisdiction of the Court. Upon which, it was demurred in law.

Harris argued for the Queen; and said, that the defendant could not plead that matter to the jurisdiction of the Court at that time, for it is now too late, for that he hath oftentimes imparled, and that generally: in which case, the Court having general and ordinary jurisdiction and authority to hold plea of such matters, shall have conusans of them, notwithstanding the matter which hath been shewed, and set forth. On the other side, it hath [215] been said, quod assisa venit de assidendo; that is, to have the assise, as well in respect of the price, as of the measure: which although it be admitted, yet the same shall not help them; for they of Cambridge have not assisam ipsam; but only, custodiam assisæ, i.e., that the assise, set down by the Queen and her councel, be well kept; and that no other price, or measure be used in the uttering of wines.

Popham, the Queens Attorny, to the same intent. The statute of 51 H. 1. ordains, that when wheat is at such a price in the market, then every penny loaf is to weigh so much; and so when barley is at such a price, then so much beer shall be sold for a penny: and that was the general assize limited by the said statute: in these cases, the university cannot appoint another assise, than that which is set down by the said statute; but to take care, that the said statute be well executed in such assise. See the Statute of 31 E. 1. of Wines, scil. that wines shall be sold according to the assize of the King; i.e. 12d. the gallon: and in that matter, the university hath custodiam only; i.e. the survey of the assize, and the execution of it, and authority to punish the offences against the said statutes, as well in the price, as in the measure according to the said statutes, and not otherwise, &c. And as to the statute of 7 E. 6. cap. 5. by which it is provided, that the said statute shall not be prejudicial to any of the inhabitants of Oxford, or Cambridge, or unto the Chancellor, or scholars there to impair their liberties, &c. The same ought to be intended, that the liberties and franchises which the universities had before by the grant, ut supra, &c. i.e. to punish such offences against the assise, according to the old statutes. For the said statute of 7 E. 6. cap. 5. being in the affirmative, doth not take away the punishment appointed by any other statute; but doth continue the same. And a further penalty is appointed, propter ulteriorem pœnam.

And as to that which hath been said, that by the said grant of Rich. the 2d, they have granted to them cognitionem omnium actionum personalium inter partem & partem, that will not help the university in this case: for the informer by the statute, hath liberty to sue in what Court he will in any of the Kings Courts of Record. And in this case, the Queen is quodam modo a party; for she is to have the moyety; and so this cause is not meerly betwixt party and party, &c.

CCLXXXV. WILLOUGHBY'S CASE.

William Willoughby, and two other were endicted, that where the parson of the church of D. and all his predecessors have used to have common in such a place; the said defendants, Willoughby and others, had enclosed the same, and that enclosure was upon their own land.

It was moved, that upon this matter they ought not to have been endicted; but the party grieved was put to his action; as, where a presentment is made of a disseisin. See 27 Ass. 20. And it was the case of one Marden, 29 Eliz. upon the stopping of a high-way upon his own land; and if it were upon other land, it were not material; for it is but an impeachment to take common, which cannot be vi et armis, &c. Also this endictment is recorded and certified as found before Justices of Assize and Gaol-delivery, and they cannot take such presentment. And although the Justices of Assize and Gaol-delivery were in rei veritate also justices of peace; yet the endictment being recorded and certified to be taken before them in quality of justices of peace, shall not help it; for the Court shall not respect any authority but that which appears upon the record. And for these causes, the parties were discharged.

CCLXXXVII. CONY AND BEVERIDGE'S CASE.

In debt upon an obligation, the case was, that the plaintiff leased to the defendant certain lands in the county of Cambridge, rendring rent; and afterwards, the defendant became bounden to the plaintiff in an obligation for the payment of the said rent: upon which bond, the plaintiff brought an action of debt in the county of Northampton. To which the defendant [217] pleaded payment of the rent, without shewing the place of payment, and upon that they were at issue. And it was found by nisi prius, in the county of Northampton for the plaintiff; it was moved in arrest of judgment, that the issue is mis-tryed; for here the payment of the rent being pleaded, without shewing the place of payment, it shall be intended, that the rent was paid upon the land, which is in the county of Cambridge, and there the issue ought to be tryed. See 44 E. 3. 42.

And it was the opinion of Anderson Chief Justice, that no judgment should be given for the plaintiff, for the cause aforesaid.

But Rhodes and Windam Justices, were of a contrary opinion; for it doth not appear, that the issue is mis-tryed, because that no place of payment is pleaded, and it may be, for any thing that is shewed, that the rent was not paid in the county of Northampton.

A blacksmith of South Mimmes, in the county of Middlesex, took an obligation of another blacksmith of the same town, upon condition that he should not exercise the trade or art of a blacksmith within the same town, nor within a certain precinct of the same. And upon that obligation, the obligee brought an action of debt in the Common Pleas; depending which suit, the obligor complained to the justices of peace of the county against the obligee, upon which the matter being found against him by examination, the justices committed the obligee to prison; and now, upon the whole matter, Puckering Serjeant prayed a habeas corpus for the said obligee to the Sheriff of Middlesex, and had it. And Fleetwood Recorder of London being at the Bar, the Court openly admonished him of that matter; for by the law, justices of peace have not conusans of such offences, nor can entermeddle with them; for their power is limited by the commission, and the statutes. And the recorder relyed much upon the opinion of Hull. in 2 H. 5. 5. But it was said by the Court, Although that this Court be a high Court to punish such offences appearing before them of record; yet it doth not follow, that the justices of peace may also do so: but as to the obligation it self, the Court was clear of opinion, that the same was void, and against the law.

CCLXXXIX. RUSSELL AND BROKER'S CASE.

In trespass, for cutting down of 4 oaks; the defendant pleaded, that the place where, &c. and that he is seised of a messuage in D. and that he, and all those whose estate he hath, &c. habere consueverant rationabile estoverium suum for fuel, ad libitum suum capiendum in boscis, subboscis & arboribus ibidem crescentibus, and that in quolibet tempore anni, unless in fawning time. The plaintiff by replication said, that the place where is in the forrest of D. &c. and that the defendant, and all those whose estate, &c. habere consueverunt rationabile estoverium suum de boscis, &c. per liberationem forestarii, aut ejus deputati, prout boscus pati potuit, & non ad exigentiam petentis, and upon that replication, the defendant demurred in law. And it was the clear opinion of the Court, that judgment should be given against the plaintiff: for if he would have ousted the defendant of his prescription by the law of the forrest, he ought to have shewed the law of the forrest in such case: lex forestæ talis est; for the law of the forrest, is not the common law of the land; and we are not bounden to take notice of it, but it ought to be pleaded; or else the plaintiff ought to have traversed the prescription of the defendant; for here are two prescriptions, one pleaded by the defendant by way of bar; the other set forth by the plaintiff in his replication, without any traverse of that which is set forth in the bar, which cannot be good. But if the plaintiff had shewed in his replication, lex forestæ talis est, then the prescription of the defendant had been answered without any more; for none can prescribe against a statute.

Exception was taken to the bar, because the defendant hath justified the cutting down of oaks, without alledging, that there was not any underwoods: but that exception was not allowed, for he hath his choice, ad libitum suum.

Another exception was taken to the bar, because he hath not shewed, that at that time of the cutting, it was not fawning time; for at the fawning time his prescription doth not extend to it, and that was holden to be a material exception: but because that the plaintiff had replyed, and upon his replication, the defendant had demurred; the Court would not resort to the bar, but gave judgment upon the replication, and therefore nihil capiat per breve.

And upon the bill, Trussell demurred in law, because he is a person attainted of felony, and so dead in law, and therefore shall not be put to answer.

CCXCVII. MOUNSON AND WEST'S CASE.

In the case of Mounson and West; which see, in Leon. 1 Part, 88. where the case was in trespass, the parties were at issue; and at the return of the pannel, the defendant challenged the array, because it was made by B. A. who took to wife the cosen German of the plaintiff, et ex ea had issue living, the mother being dead: upon which it was demurred in law. Now this term came the plaintiff, and offered to relinquish his demurrer, and confess the cosenage, and prayed a writ to the coroners. It was the opinion of the Court, that he might so well do by the law, because the demurrer is not made up: which matter the prothonotaries excused, because the demurrer was not subscribed with a serjeants hand.

To which it was said by the Court, that a demurrer upon a challenge, is not like to a demurrer upon a plea; for in case of a demurrer upon a challenge, as soon as the demurrer is agreed upon at the Bar, it is good enough without other circumstance, and the prothonotaries of right ought to enter such demurrer.

CCCI. THE QUEEN AND LITTLETON'S CASE.

Instruction by the Queen against Littleton, and upon the general issue, as to the house, the defendant pleaded, not guilty; and as to the land and park made title, that Anne Talbot leased the same to him for years, &c. and the jury found this special matter, scil. that Anne Talbot was seised, and leased the said house, land and park, to the defendant for years, rendring rent, with clause of re-entry; and that after the said lease so made, the said Anne said to the lessee, although I have not excepted it in my lease, yet I mean to have the chamber over the kitchin to lay my stuff in, until my son come of years. To whom the lessee answered, that he was well contented with that: upon which the said Anne put in her houshold-stuff there, and after-[224]-wards she took to husband Sir Robert Stapleton Knight; after which, all the houshold-stuff is removed out of the said chamber by the said Sir Robert Stapleton and his wife; who afterwards by their warrant authorized J. S. to demand the rent due at Michaelmas, who at the last day, limitted for the payment of the rent, went to the premises, and demanded the rent; to whom the lessee said, that if the said J. S. would shew to the lessee his name, and make an acquittance, and also shew his warrant, he would pay him the rent, otherwise not; but the said J. S. utterly refused, &c. wherefore the lessee would not pay any rent: and as to the other rent (for several rents were reserved), the lessee said to J. S. upon demand of the same, I here say, that there is already a forfeiture committed upon the last demand, and therefore it is to no purpose to pay the rent; and further said, he had not any monies. It was moved by Popham Attorny General, that these demands made in manner, &c. were good; and that he who made the demand, is not bound to shew his warrant; for he may be sufficiently authorized to make such demand without any warrant in writing, no more than to tell his name, or make an acquittance; but the lessee ought to pay his rent at his peril, sub conditionis periculo, as in case of an obligation: and as to the speech of Anne

Talbot, concerning the chamber over the kitchin, and the answer of Littleton to that; the same doth not amount unto a surrender, nor was it their intent, but only a permission, or sufferance for the said Anne Talbot to lay her stuff there for a time as appeareth; for after the stuff removed, the lessee entred into the chamber, and occupied the same as he did the rest. And afterwards exception was taken to this verdict, because that here are two issues, and but one verdict, scil. as to the land and park, of not guilty; and as to the house, he makes a title by lease; and the jury have found the lease, the condition and the re-entry for the breach of the same: if the special matter aforesaid doth amount to the same, and if, &c. then they say, that the defendant is guilty of the whole: it was moved, that here is but one verdict for the lease; and the other issue is not enquired of, and then all is discontinued. See 5 H. 5. 3. in dower, the tenant pleaded as to one part, non tenure, and as to the residue, ne unq; seisie: and afterwards the seisin was found by the verdict, but nothing found of the non tenure, and therefore a venire facias de novo was awarded, &c. But it was answered by the Court, that this verdict had determined both the issues; for, the changeableness of the entry, as the Court conceived upon the special matter aforesaid, did determine both the issues.

CCCII. SCOT AND SCOT'S CASE.

The case of Scot and Scot in a replevin, the which see Mich. 29 Eliz. Leon. 2 Part, 129. was argued again by Egerton, Sollicitor General; and he said, in some case, this word (proviso) is not a condition, but only an explanation of the sentence precedent: if it be in the negative, and makes restraint of the common law, then it is a condition: as a lease for years, proviso, that he shall not alien, or do waste. And if the proviso be in the affirmative, and by that the party be bound to do a thing, which of common right he is not bound to do, it is a condition. A lease for years, or for life, proviso, that he shall pay such a sum. Lessee for years, proviso, that the lessee shall pay his rent generally, without limitation of any day; it is on condition. And he held by way of argument in the principal case, that cestuy que use should take advantage of conditions, which are knit to estates, as for payment of rent, but not concerning collateral things; and such exposition of the statute of 32 H. 8. hath been made there before. And admit it be a condition, yet the lessor cannot re-enter, for the rent was not well demanded; for 20l. rent is reserved yearly, payable at four feasts, and here the lessor hath demanded 10l. scil. the rent of two several quarters, whereas only rent was demandable in point of the condition. Cook conceived, that it was a condition; but every proviso did not make a condition; the lessor covenants, that the lessee shall take sufficient wood, proviso, that he shall not take great timber; that proviso doth not make the covenant conditional, but only explains the same: a lease without impeachment of waste, proviso, that the lessee shall not do voluntary waste, is not any proviso, but a restraint of the liberty given before, and doth but qualifie the liberty: as Littleton's case, grant of a rent-charge, proviso, that it shall not extend to charge the person of the grantor, that proviso doth not make the grant conditional, so that, if the grantee bring a writ of annuity against the grantor, the grant be determined, &c. A lease for years, proviso, that if the lessee shall be disposed to alien, that the lessor shall have the first offer, &c. The same is not a condition, which see by Fitzherbert and Baldwin, 28 H. 8. Dyer 13. A lease for years upon condition, that if the lessee will hold over his term, that then he shall pay so much rent, the same is no condition, for it is at the pleasure of the lessee, &c. and it is not compulsory. A feoffment in fee with warranty, proviso, that the feoffee shall not vouch; the same doth not make the warranty conditional, but only abridgeth the warranty. Sir Richard Pecksall leased certain lands for years, and covenanted, that [226] the lessee should take at his pleasure the trees there growing; proviso, that he should not take trees of such a bigness: it was holden in that case to be no condition. So in the covenant for further assurance, proviso, that the bargainor shall not be compelled to travail for the making of the assurance above ten miles, &c. But admit that it be a condition, yet the lessor upon the matter cannot take advantage of it; for he hath not demeaned himself in the demand of the rent as he ought. For he hath demanded rents due to him at several quarters; and that he cannot demand in point of forfeiture, for then the lessor may leave his rent in the hands of the lessee until it amount to a great sum of 200 or 300l. and then upon a sudden demand of the rent, when the lessee is not so well furnished, nor can be at so short warning, to pay the same. And it may be likened to the case in 27 H. 6. A. granteth to B. ten loads of hay percipiend. annuatim, out of his meadows in C. for 21 years: there the grantee cannot stay and take all his hay, and the arrears of it in the later year; but he ought to take his hay every year according to his grant, causa qua supra. And although the lessor here hath demanded more rent than he ought, yet the law shall construe the demand good for so much of the rent, which by the law is demandable in point of forfeiture; as where a man is bound to perform the award of such an one; who awards, that he and another shall be bound to another party for the payment of, &c. Although that the same award be void as to the stranger, yet it is good as to the party himself, and he ought to be bound by it. Dr. Mollins case, A lease for years rendring rent to be paid at two days in the year; proviso, that if the said lessee do not pay the said yearly rent, that then a re-entry; that rent is not demandable upon pain of forfeiture, but the last day of every year only, and not every year according to the reservation of it. The words of our condition are; Provided, that if the lessee do grant his term to his eldest son, that he shall pay but so much rent, the same without doubt is not any condition; yet [he shall pay so much rent] doth amount to so much. Note, In the argument of this, this case was put, A. is bound to make such an assurance to B. of such land as C. shall devise; C. deviseth, that A. and his wife shall make such assurance, A. is bounden upon the peril of his obligation to do it. See as to this point of the proviso, 5 Eliz. Dyer 222. The Archbishop of Yorks case: it was adjourned.

CCCIII. Mich. 31 Eliz. In C. B.

This case was put to the Court, A copyholder did alledge the custom of the mannor to be, that the lord of the manor might grant copies in the remainder, only with the assent of the tenants, and not otherwise, and that copies in remainder otherwise granted should be void: it was demanded of the [227] Court, if this were a good custom or not; the justices did forbear to deliver any opinion in the case: Walmesley Serjeant, that it was a void custom; for that the law doth not take notice of copyholders estate, they being but tenants at will, in the judgment of the common law; and therefore it was not reasonable, that their wills and pleasures should limit the lord of the mannor in granting of estates by copy, and therefore he said, such a custom was void; and he compared it to the case in 2 H. 4. 27. that a custom, that a commoner shall not use his common before that the lord hath put in his cattel, was holden to be a void custom; on the other side, it was said, that this custom might have a lawful beginning, and that it might be grounded upon the reason of the common law, that a remainder should not be without the assent of the particular tenant, and therefore that the custom might be good; and it was said, that wife should not have her dower, unless she claimed it within a year and a day; that the same was adjudged to be a good custom: the Court delivered no opinion in the case; but the case was adjourned to another time.

CCCIV. Mich. 31 Eliz. In C. B.

The case was, A man devised socage lands to his brothers son in tail, to have the same at his age of 25 years, and died, having issue a daughter: the nephew after 21 years entred, and levied a fine, and afterwards accomplished his age of twenty-five years. It was the opinion of the whole Court, that the issue of the devisee was barred by this fine. For the heir in tail, and the heir in fee, are all one by the statute of 4 H. 7. And it was holden, that this was not a fine which doth enure by way of estoppel; but that it passeth the very right: it was said to be the same law, if one who hath but a condition levyeth a fine, and afterward entreth for the condition broken, &c.

CCCV. PALMER AND SMALBROOK'S CASE.

In an action upon the case, the plaintiff declared, that the defendant had recovered a certain debt against one A. and thereupon took forth a capias against the said A. to arrest his body, and delivered the said capias to the plaintiff, being then sheriff, and prayed a warrant for the serving of the capias, and that he would name to him one B. for a special bayliff, and promised the plaintiff, that if B. arrested A. by force of the said capias, and suffered him to escape, that he would not sue him for the said escape; and further declared, that he made a warrant according to the said capias, and therein named and appointed the [228] said B. his special bayliff, who arrested A. accordingly, and afterwards suffered him to escape; and that the defendant notwithstanding his promise aforesaid, sued the plaintiff for the said escape, and it was found for the plaintiff: and it was moved in stay of judgment, that that promise was against the law, to prevent the punishment inflicted by the statute of 23 H. 8. upon the sheriff, and that it is meerly within the said statute, and so the promise void. Cook, This is not any bond or promise taken of the prisoner, nor of any for him; and therefore it is not within the statute, and it was Davies case: Wray, A promise is within the statute as well as a bond. But the statute doth not extend, but where the bond or promise is made by the prisoner, or by some for him; and afterwards, judgment was given for the plaintiff.

It was moved by Cowper, Serjeant, that the declaration is uncertain, messuagium sive tenementum, quod fuit concessum. Cook, We will release our damages. Kemp, Then your costs are gone also. Cowper, You cannot have judgment of the 4 acres; for the declaration is 4 acres to the said messuage or tenement belonging, and for the incertainty to which thing belonging. But to that it was said, that as to the 4 acres, it is certain enough; for the words, To the same belonging, are meerly void. And afterwards the plaintiff released damages, and had judgment.

CCCVII. BENNINGTON AND BENNINGTON'S CASE.

Bennington brought an action of trespass against Bennington, for breaking of his close, &c. The defendant pleaded, that long time before the trespass supposed, that it was the freehold of one Joan Bennington, and that he as her servant, and by her commandment entred; upon which they were at issue. And it was found, that for two parts of the land where, &c. in three parts to be divided, it was the freehold of the plaintiff; and for the other part, that it was the freehold of the defendant: and by the clear opinion of the whole Court, the plaintiff could not have judgment, for now it appeareth, that the plaintiff and defendant are tenants in common, betwixt whom an action of trespass doth not lie; and although this tenancy in common [229] be not pleaded, but found by verdict; yet it was the opinion of the Court, that it is all one.

CCCVIII. BRERETON AND AUSER'S CASE.

John Brereton of the Inner-Temple, brought a writ of error against Auser, to reverse an outlawry; and the case was, that the said Auser had caused the said Brereton to be endicted, upon the Statute of Magna Charta, and divers other statutes; for that, whereas the said Auser had sued the said Brereton in a bill of debt in the Court of Request against the said Brereton; and by the said suit procured the said Brereton to be imprisoned; upon which endictment, Brereton was outlawed; and error was assigned in the outlawry, because whereas the endictment was taken in Middlesex, the exigent upon it was in London; whereas it ought to issue out of Middlesex; but the proclamations issued in the county whereof he was named Nuper; and that was peremptory, for if he make default upon that process, he shall encur the danger of a præmunire: and for that cause, the outlawry was reversed. Also, the party was discharged of the endictment; for this suit in the Court of Requests, as it appeareth upon the endictment, was before judgment in the bill of debt.

CCCIX. CONSTABLE AND FARRER'S CASE.

In an action upon the case upon an assumpsit, the plaintiff declared, that whereas the defendant had brought an action against him, the issue in which ought to be tried at the next assises at N. the defendant in consideration that the now plaintiff should confess the action aforesaid at the assises holden the 4th of August, promised that he would stand to the arbitrament of J. S. for the said matter: and upon non assumpsit, the jury found that the defendant made such a promise the 5th of August, but not the 4th of August.

Cook, I conceive, that upon this verdict the plaintiff shall have judgment; for in truth the assises began the 4th of August; and the consideration was, that the now plaintiff should confess the action at the same assises; which although they continue divers days, yet in law, all is but one day; and all the assises shall be said to be holden the 4th of August; so as of necessity, we must lay the promise accordingly. And it is a clear case, that the plaintiff in an action upon the case, shall declare upon a promise the first day of May; and if it be found, that it was made at another day, yet the plaintiff shall recover.

CCCX. HAMPER'S CASE.

Hamper was endicted upon the Statute of 5 Eliz. of Perjury; and in the body of the endictment, the record was, that he falso & deceptive deposuit: whereas the statute speaks (wilfully;) and although in the perclose of the endictment, the conclusion is, et sic commisit voluntarium perjurium: yet the opinion of the Court was, that the same did not help the matter; and for that cause the party was discharged: for contra formam statuti, will not help the matter; and yet it was moved and urged, that contra formam statuti did supply such defect. And in this case, it was holden by the Court, that if a witness deposeth falsly, but the jury do not give credit to his oath, but give their verdict against his oath, although the party grieved cannot sue him for the perjury; yet at the suit of the King, he shall be punished.

CCCXI. COLLET AND ROBSTON'S CASE.

Arthur Collet and Thomas Andrews recovered against Robston in a writ of accompt, Hill. 29 Eliz. And now Robston brought a writ of error, and assigned for error, that whereas the said writ of accompt was brought against the defendant as receivor of monies to render accompt quando ad hoc requisitus fuerit, the said writ ought to have been more special: but the writ in its generalty was holden good enough without any special matter. And so it was adjudged in the case of one Gomersell; scil. quod reddat ei rationabilem computum suum de tempore quo fuit receptor denariorum ipsius A. Another error was assigned; for that the jury had assessed damages, which ought not to be done in an action of accompt. Which see, 2 Ric. 2. Fitz. Accompt, 45. and 2 H. 7. 13. But see the Book of Entries, 22. In a writ of accompt against one as receivor, for to render accompt, damages were given by the jury for the plaintiff: and in the case of an accompt against one as bailiff, damages shall be given: for if my bailiff by the imployment of my monies whereof he was receivor, might have procured profit and gain unto me, but he neglects the same, he shall be chargeable to me to answer the same. And here in our case, damages shall be given ratione implacitationis. And afterwards, notwithstanding the exceptions, the judgment was affirmed.

And John brought two several writs of error, to reverse both fines: and the tenant to the writ of error brought upon the first fine, pleaded the second fine in bar of it: and in bar of a writ of error brought upon the second fine, he pleaded the first fine. Cook said, that Randulphus is Latine for Randal. Owen, Serjeant, shewed divers presidents, where Randulphus was taken for Randal. But the Court did not agree upon it.

Wray, Chief Justice, Tenant at sufferance is in truth a tort feasor, by which his taking of the profits is not such as is intended by the statute: but yet he afterwards looking into the words of the verdict, which were, that the defendant tenuit the lands for two years ex permissione of another; thereupon it ought to be intended, that he was tenant at will.

And afterwards Scambler the forreign opposer allowed to them the said 15s. because the said land was within their fee; and afterwards in the behalf of the said dean and chapter, he demanded of the plaintiff the said 15s. who refused to pay it, for which he, by the commandment, and in the right of the dean and chapter, entred and took the said horse in the name of a distress as bailiff to the said dean and chapter for the said 15s. and afterwards sold it, &c. upon which the plaintiff did demur in law; and it was moved, that here it is not averred, that the land whereof the fine was levied was within their fee; but they say, that Scambler allowed it because it was within their fee. And that is not a sufficient averment quod Curia concessit: and also the opinion of the Court was, that the dean and chapter cannot distrain for this matter, but they ought to sue for the same in the Exchequer, as it appeareth, 9 H. 6. 27. in the Duchess of Summersets case.

Gawdy Justice, The grant doth not extend to the post-fine: for the fine pro licentia concordandi, is the Kings silver, and not the post-fine.

See 21 H. 7. 9. An obligation may be assigned to the Queen without deed enrolled; and where the obligee is not endebted to the Queen: but it cannot be assigned to a subject, if not for a debt due by the assignor to the assignee; for otherwise it is maintenance. And it was found for the plaintiff. It was moved in arrest of judgment, that it is not set down in the declaration, by what portions the 10l. shall be paid.

Clench, Justice, conceived, that the defendant had liberty to pay it in what portions he pleased.

Gawdy, He ought to pay it by equal portions, as a rent reserved payable at two feasts, without saying by what portions it shall be paid. And he said, that if the plea for the cause aforesaid had been defective; yet now after verdict all is helped, for it is but form. And afterwards, the opinion of the whole Court was, that the matter shewed was not good to stay judgment. Wherefore the plaintiff had judgment to recover.

And the opinion of the Court was, that he should have a special writ to the sheriff, reciting the whole matter, to restore the plaintiff his goods taken in withernam, without any allowance for the keeping in the mean time; for it is intended, that their labour, or other profits by them, doth countervail such charge. And it was said, that that debt not being yet due, was not attachable by the custom; for Dalton could not affirm a plaint of debt against Brooks, before that the debt was due; but if the principal debt had been due, Dalton might have attached the said debt that Selby owed to the said Brooks, although that debt was not due. And it was holden that here is not any consideration: for it is against law, for such an officer in such a case to deliver a thing attached, ut supra, to the plaintiff or to his wife. CCCXXVI. BROUGHTON AND PRINCE'S CASE.

Broughton, an apprentice of the Inner-Temple, being farmor to the Queen, exhibited a bill in the Exchequer, quo minus, &c. against Prince, a practicer of the law in the marches of Wales, for maintaining one J. S. in a suit, against the Statute of Maintenance.

To which the defendant pleaded, that he was consiliarius & in lege eruditus, &c. and so justified. And now it was moved by Atkinson, on the part of the defendant, that by the statute of 18 Eliz. cap. 5. that no informer shall sue any person upon any penal statute, but by way of information, or original action, and not otherwise, and here the suit is by bill, which cannot be warranted by the statute. And he conceived, that this suit is brought upon the statute of 1 R. 2. cap. 4. upon which statute, no prosecution shall be in the name of the subject only, but it may be in the name of the King only. See the Book of Entries, 393. Where the suit is, tam pro Domino Rege, quam pro seipso: and there by the King only, and there by the party only. And as to the statute of 32 H. 8. cap. 9. suit upon the same ought to be, tam pro Domina Regina, quam pro seipso: which see in the Book of Entries, 395. Also by the statute of 31 Eliz. cap. 5. the suit brought, ought to begin within one year after the offence committed: and in our case, the offence upon which the suit is conceived, was committed 3 years before the information brought; and it cannot be added, because that the plaintiff is the party grieved; for every statute made against maintenance is popular.

Broughton said, We have replied to the defendant, that he is a lay man, et non in lege eruditus; and prayed, that the same might be enquired of by the country: and the defendant Prince likewise, and so issue is joyned: and because you have such objections, they shall be saved to you to move in arrest of judgment.

Atkinson, I may offer them as well now to the jury, as well as in arrest of judgment. And afterwards it was moved, that the defendant might demur upon the replication, if he would; and if not, the issue should be tryed: and if then it pass against the defendant, that then he shew the matter in arrest of judgment; for no exception shall be allowed for staying of the enquest, if it be not an apparant fault, and not only a doubt.

At another day the matter was moved; and then it seemed to the Barons, that the plaintiff here being pars gravata, was not restrained to any year after the offence committed, but that restraint did extend only to common informers. The defendant pleaded, that he was admitted in Societatem interioris Templi, and there remained a student for so many years; and that he was [238] homo eruditus in lege, and a counsellor, and took his fee; &c. The plaintiff by replication, said of his own wrong without that, that the defendant is homo conciliarius & in lege eruditus, & hoc petit quod, &c. ut supra. And Atkinson took exception to the traverse and conclusion of it, et hoc petit quod inquiratur per patriam; for that cannot be tryed by the country, but by the Judges: for here is a question of the learning of the defendant, and that is to be tryed: and his sufficiency in this learning is to be discerned by those who are skilful in the laws of the land; for if a matter in law is to be tryed by the Judges, a multo fortiori, the learning of the law is to be tryed by them; for that is more difficult to be judged. As, where the Ordinary refuseth a clerk for insufficiency in learning, upon which they are at issue, the same shall not be tryed by the country, but by the bishop: which see Articuli Cleri, cap. 13. de idonietate præsentata ad beneficium ecclesiasticum pertinet examinatio ad Judicium Ecclesiasticum, 40 E. 3. 25. And see the statute of 18 Eliz. that pars gravata in the case of maintenance, is not tyed to a year. And this suit is conceived to be in such quality, being a private grievance to the party himself; the King not being party, but only the party grieved: but where the penalty is expressly given to the King, and him that shall sue, there all the proceedings ought to be in both their names.

And Manwood, Chief Baron, said, that this issue shall be tryed by the country. Which see in the Book of Entries, 396.

Manwood, Chief Baron said, that one might take the rents of lands in Wales in the county of Middlesex, but a man cannot take the issues and profits of the lands, but where the lands are: and Leak's case was cited, where an information was brought for cutting down of wood, and converting it into coals: and Leak the informer laid the cutting to be in the county where the wood grew, but the conversion of it into coals in the county of Middlesex.

It was agreed by all the Barons, that if Starkey had execution upon the statute before the Queen, his execution should stand against the Queen, and the Queen should not put him out. And it was further agreed by them, that if A. recovers a debt in the Common Pleas, so as he hath title to sue forth execution by elegit, and the defendant sells his lands, and afterwards A. assigns his execution to the Queen, that the Queen should not have prerogative against the feoffee to have execution of the whole land.

CCCXXX. KNIGHT AND NORTON'S CASE.

It was holden in this case, that duress of imprisonment is not intended but where the party is wrongfully imprisoned until he make the bond; and not where a man is lawfully imprisoned for another cause, and for his delivery he makes a bond; for that is not per duritiam imprisonamenti; and if in such case duresse be pleaded, the other may say of his own accord sine duritia imprisonamenti, without saying absq; hoc, that it was per duritiam imprisonamenti. And so it was also holden in the King's Bench. See 4 E. 4. 17. 12 E. 4. 7.

CCCXXXI. HUNGATE AND HALL'S CASE.

The case was, Curson acknowledged a statute to Alderman Starkey, and afterwards acknowledged another to Hampdem, which was assigned to the Queen; afterwards, the lands of Curson were extended for Starkey, and a liberate thereof. It was holden by the Court, that the same was a good execution, and that the Queen should not avoid it: but if the land had been extended at the suit of the Queen, then the execution of the Queen should hold place, although it were a statute of a puisne date.

And by Clark, Baron, if a recognizance acknowledged by a subject be assigned to the Queen, it hath been a question, if all the lands of the conusor shall be extended, or but the moyety, as it shall be at the suit of the conusee himself? It was holden, that all the lands should be extended.

CCCXXXII. THE LORD GRAY'S CASE.

The Lord Gray, tenant of the King of lands holden in capite by licence of the King, made a feoffment of the lands in fee, and afterwards levied a fine for further assurance: and upon process, the party came into the Court, and shewed this matter: and the party was advised by the Court to aver, that the said fine was for further assurance: and then upon such averment, he should be discharged without any pardon sued forth for the fine, &c.

CCCXXXIII. SIR WALTER WALLER'S CASE.

In Sir Walter Waller's case, it was holden in the Court of Exchequer, that a debt of record, as upon a judgment, &c. could not be attached by the custom of London. And so it was holden in the case of Sir John Perrot, in the Common Pleas.

And it was said by Cook, that such a debt could not be assigned upon the Statute of Bankrupts.

CCCXXXIV. SIR BRIAN TUCKE'S CASE.

In this case, it was holden by all the barons clearly, that the executor of an executor should not be charged with a devastavit made by the executor of the first testator, no not in the case of the King, because it is a personal wrong only.

CCCXXXV. FINES AND THE LORD DACRE'S CASE.

The case was; Tenant in tail, the remainder of lands in chief, levyed a fine of them without licence of the King; and, if the tenants of the Lord Dacres should be charged for the fine, was argued: for the case was, that the Lord Dacres was tenant in tail, the remainder in tail to Philip Fines. And it was holden by all the barons, that the tenants lands should be discharged: but it was holden, that if the conusor had any other lands within England, the fine might be levyed thereupon; but then the question was, if the tenants should be put to plead the same in discharge, or that the same should be discharged without pleading; because it appeareth upon record, that he who alienes was but tenant in tail, in remainder: for there was an office found of that which was pleaded by another in another cause. The opinion of the Court was, where such matter appeareth of record; as by office, livery, &c. there the party needs not to plead such matter in discharge; for the pleading of it is to no other purpose, but to satisfie the Court by the record, that the matter is so as the party hath alledged; and therefore the barons gave order, that the process against the tenants of the Lord Dacres should be stayed.

CCCXXXVI. GEORGE AP-RICE'S CASE.

In the case of one George Ap-Rice, the matter was, that tenant in tail after possibility of issue extinct, assigned over his estate unto A. against whom he in the reversion brought a quid juris clamat; and judgment was given, that he should attorn; and upon his refusal, he was committed to prison, and divers fines set upon him, and estreated in the Exchequer; it was moved, that these fines were imposed upon the party against law. And the opinion of the Court was, that when judgment is given in a quid juris clamat for the plaintiff, distresse infinite shall be against [242] the defendant to bring him in to attorn; and when he comes in, if he refuse, he shall be imprisoned, until he attorn. It was also holden by the Court, that the fines were not lawfully assessed and imposed upon him; and it was said, that it had been adjudged in a Court of Wales, that the assignee of tenant in tail after possibility of issue, should attorn; upon which judgment, a writ of error was brought in the Kings Bench; and there, upon good advise, the said judgment was affirmed. For although it be true, that tenant in tail after possibility shall not be compelled to attorn; yet that is a priviledge which is annexed to his person, and not to the estate; and, by the assignment of the estate, the priviledge is destroyed.

MICH. 32 ELIZ. IN THE KINGS BENCH.

CCCXXXVII. HARRIS AND WING'S CASE.

In the case between Harris and Wing, the first point was, that the lease made by Queen Mary was void. 1. Because a former lease of record was not recited in the letters patents of it: the reason wherefore such recital ought to be, is not, as hath been alledged by Cook, quia circa solium Regis subsistunt justitia & veritas; and then when there is a former lease in esse, the King makes a lease in possession, the same cannot stand together, so as there is not justitia & veritas; but the very reason thereof is so high, that he cannot take, &c. but by matter of record; and if that be mistaken, it makes all void: and therefore, in petitions of right, and monstrans de droit; if the King be not enformed of all the titles, all is void. And therefore in the case between Sir Moyle Finch and Throgmorton, which now depends in the Exchequer; which was this, the Queen made a lease for years rendring rent, with a proviso, that if the rent be behind, that the estate shall cease: the rent is behind, the King granted the same over to Sir Tho. H. It was first moved, if the same lease should cease without office. And it was holden by Popham, and many other grave and learned men, upon a conference, that the said lease should cease without office; for the contract which is upon record is determined and ceased, by which the estate which was created by the said contract shall also cease without office. But yet the lessee continued in possession notwithstanding that, and took the profits; but thereof after office found, he rendered recompence to the Queen: and it was holden there, upon the said conference, that the Queen in her grant to Sir T. H. of the said estate which was now ceased, ought to recite that lease; for the tenant is in possession, and could not be punished for his occupation before office. So in the case of the vicarage of Yatton, 17 Eliz. Dyer 339. The presentment being devolved to the Queen by lapse, the Ordinary collated A. and afterwards the [243] Queen presented B. who brought a quare impedit; depending which, A. proved another presentment of the Queen, without mention or recital of the first presentment, and the same was holden void; for, in that, the first presentment is not recited, nor the pleasure of the Queen to revoke it; and therefore it was in disceit of the Queen. So the case 18 Eliz. Dyer 352. An abbot leased for 60 years; the lessee made a lease for 80 years, the reversion came to the King; the 60 years expired, the second lessee surrendred to the King ea intentione, that the King would re-grant the same to him for 20 years remaining. The King reciting the indenture and surrender, ex certa scientia granted for 20 years: it was holden by the Court, that the grant was void, because the King was misenformed, &c. It hath been objected, that here needs no recital; for that the lease to be recited is ended, eo instante that the new lease beginneth. Sed distinguenda sunt temporaz aliud est facere, aliud perficere; the first lease is ended, when the new is perfected, and the Great Seal put to it. The second reason wherefore the lease shall be void, is, because otherwise the grant of the Queen shall enure to two intents. 1. To make a lease. 2. To accept a surrender; and how can the Queen accept a surrender of an estate, of which she hath not notice? for she is not enformed of it by any record, without which she cannot take notice of any thing. See 7 E. 4. 30, 31. Baggotts assise, the King granted an office to an alien, the same shall not enure to make him a denizen, for then it shall enure to two intents, &c. The words of the grant of Queen Mary, are, omnia tenementa nostra; and, if by that a reversion shall pass, was the question: certainly, in verbis ambiguis intentio sumenda est; then here in our case, by this patent, is other land which should pass, and the reversion is nostra; but in property, not possession: wherefore here (nostra) shall be restrained to that which is in possession. Where there are general words in grant of the King, they ought to be served; but if they can be served, they shall be taken in a common and general sense; but the words shall not be stretched. But if they cannot be served, then they shall not be void, but the King shall be rather prejudiced; and always the grant of the King either may be served or taken to a common intent, 2 H. 3. 4. Quælibet concessio Domini Regis capi debet stricte contra Dominum Regem, quando potest intelligi duabus viis: as if two be joyntly endebted to the King, and the King pardons to one of them omnia debita, the same shall not extend to joynt debts, but to those debts of which he is only debtor, 40 E. 3. The King granted to a subject the fines and amercements hominum suorum; all which hold of him by homage, may be said homines suos; and also his villeins are, homines suos; but because the general words may be served, the said grant shall be taken to extend to his villeins only. So in our case the general words may be served with lands in possession, and shall not extend to [244] lands in reversion. At another day the case was argued by Popham Attorny General, and he conceived, that by the lease made 2 Mar. both the former leases, as well that which was made by Henry the eighth, as that which was made in reversion by the Bishop of Bath and Wells, are gone. Lessee form term of years to begin at a day to come, accepts a new lease in possession, which is to continue until the future interest shall commence, the future interest is gone; and in Barkings case, 2 Eliz. it was holden by Dyer and Brown, that where lessee for two years accepts a new lease to begin two years after, this new interest of a term determines the present interest. For as the lessor cannot contract with a stranger for the interest of a term, which is to have continuance during a former term; by the same reason, when the first termor will accept an interest of a term from his lessor to begin at any time during his former estate, this new interest determines the first. So, if one hath an interest of a term to begin at a day to come, and he before the beginning of that interest accepts a lease for life, his first interest is gone. The words of the patent are, all her interest, lands and tenements, in the parish of St. Cutbert in Wells, and parcel of the possession of the late priory of R. and if these general words will carry lands in reversion, where other lands in possession pass, &c. was the question. General words shall have a special understanding, if the special construction may agree with the proper signification and sense of the general words, as the case, 2 H. 3. 4. before cited; and yet in the case of a common person, all manner of debts were released thereby, for that it shall be taken strongest against the party: also he conceived, that the lands in reversion should pass as well as the lands in possession. And he said, all former leases of record needed not to be recited, &c. but such leases only which are made by the King; for subjects may have leases of record, as by fine, deed enrolled, &c. but such leases need not to be recited; for such leases may determine without matter of record, as surrender, re-entry, &c. and then to compel the King or the party to search for such leases which might be so determined by any act in pais, should be as absurd, as to compel him to search by what means, and for what matter in pais such leases are determined. And he conceived, that this lease needed not to be recited (which was made by King Henry the 8th) for after the said lease made, the King granted the reversion to the Bishop of Bath and Wells, and his successors, and during the time that the said land was to the bishop; it might be, that the lease was determined by matter in suit in pais, by surrender, forfeiture, &c. and then, notwithstanding that the King obtained the reversion after, and will make a new lease; if he should be driven to recite the former lease, whereas perhaps it is determined by an act in pais, it should be very inconvenient. Also here, if any recital should be in the case, how might the party interested know such former leases, but by [245] search? and how long ought the party search? for his search ought to have an end, non excrescere in infinitum tempus. And in our case, the most equal time for search is the beginning of the last title of the King, and no further; that is, from the present time till the time of the title of the King begins; and in this case the title of the King doth begin from his repurchase from the bishop; and if the law be such, then here nothing is to be recited; for no lease is mean between the re-purchase and the new lease: for no lease made before the re-purchase, need to be recited. For admit, that King Henry the 3d had made a lease of a mannor for 500 years, and afterwards granted the reversion to an abbot, and afterwards the mannor by suppression came again to the King; and he will grant a new lease of the same, such lease shall be good without any recital of the lease made by King Henry the 3d for such lease might have been determined in the hands of the abbot by surrender, or other matter in fact. So King Edw. the 2d made a gift in tail, and afterwards granted the reversion to another, the grantee disseised the tenant in tail: one who was heir to the grantee, was attainted of treason, the grantee died, by which the land came again to the King, who made a new patent of the same, without recital of the gift in tail, and the patent holden good for the cause aforesaid. And in some cases there needs no recital of leases. As if the King makes a lease for years, rendring rent to his receivor, and for default of payment, that his estate shall cease. Now if at the day the lessee tendreth the rent, and the receivor will not accept of it; and afterwards it is found by office, that the rent was not paid, by which the lease should be void (yet he may traverse the office;) and afterwards the King grants this rent to a stranger, there he needs not to recite the lease; for it appeareth by the office, that the same is void, and yet in truth the lease was in esse, &c. and so a lease of record in esse in some case needs not to be recited. So if the King lease for years to J. S. and he assigns his interest over, and afterwards surrenders the same to the King; now if the King will make a new grant of it, he need not recite that lease; for the surrender of it appeareth of record, and the assignment of it is but matter in fait, which cannot be known by any search. So on the other side, void leases which are not in esse, shall be cited until it appear, as in the case of Throgmorton cited before by Egerton; and in such case where the Queen granted the same to Sir T. H. the grant ought to be in possession, and not in reversion, because then void, for the King had not a reversion. Also this lease ought not to be recited, for the second patent is granted to the first lessee; and so by acceptance of this new lease, the first lease is determined. And now we are to see, if the things in the former grant are necessary to be recited, the estate in the land and the tenant, not necessary; the reservation, condition, covenant, and the date. The reason [246] wherefore the estate ought to be recited, is to this purpose, that the King might know, and be enformed how far the land is encumbred with other estates, &c. but that reason is of no effect in our case, when the second patent is made to the first lessee; for by the acceptance of the new estate, the first interest is gone, wherefore of that there needs no recital. The second reason, wherefore such former lease ought to be recited, is to the intent, that the new patentee may not have colour or countenance by reason of his patent to do wrong to the first patentee who hath the present possession by disturbing of him by entry, or suit; for all the truth of the matter appears in his own letters patents, and the true estate of the tenant in possession: but that reason hath not any force in our case; for the second estate is made to him, who hath the former estate. The reason wherefore the present tenant ought to be mentioned in the second letters patents, is, so as the Queen may be ascertained what manner of person he is, who is the present possessor; for it may be he is such to whom the Queen hath given such estate upon special favour for his good service, and in recompence thereof; and that she will not disgrace the party so much, as to give his farm to another over his head, which might be much to the discomfort and prejudice of him in possession: which the Queen peradventure would not do, if she had full intelligence of it; but rather advantage him with it, and not let it to any other person. But in our case here, there is not any such matter of mischief; but it is good to consider what tenant ought to be specified in the recital; assuredly, the most sure way is, the patentee himself to whom the lease was originally made; although he be dead, or hath assigned his interest over. For it may be dangerous to rely upon the tenant, who hath the possession; for it may be, that another hath the interest, although he hath the possession, and then the recital is false; wherefore it is best to say by way of recital, Cum dimisimus, &c. And as to the land, the same also ought to be recited by the same name in such form, and by the same words as it was granted before in the former grant; and yet if the name was mis-recited in the former grant, it ought not to be so in the second. As if the King grant the mannor of Little-Court by the name of the mannor of Litt-cote, or the mannor of Wellington, by the name of the mannor of Welton, the same is good by the statute. But if a new grant is to be made of the same, in which the first grant is to be recited; now the former mis-recital shall not be put in ure, but the very name; but in this special manner, that is, where the King hath demised the mannor of Little-cote, by the name of the mannor of Litt-cote, &c. So where a mannor is known by two names, and the Queen leaseth the same by one of the said names, and afterwards grants the same by the other name; the recital ought to be, that whereas the Queen hath demised the mannor of D. by the name of the mannor of S. &c. And as to the recital of the estate, the habendum in the first patent ought [247] to be recited, and all that which preceeds the reddendum; for, in that, the estate is fully contained. But here, in our case, such recitals are not necessary; for it is impertinent to make recital of the same, which is determined eo instante, that the new patent is made, and that by reason of a matter precedent, although that all be done eodem instanti; and as to an instant, the same is not to be considered in law, as it is in logick, as a point of time, and no parcel of time. But in our law, things which are to be done in an instant, have in consideration of law a priority of time in them: as lessee for life makes a lease for years, they both surrender to him in the reversion; the same surrender which is made in an instant, shall in law be understood to have degrees. The surrender of lessee for years to the tenant for life, and then the surrender of tenant for life; so in our case, the determination of the first lease shall be first, 1 E. 3. 6. The tenant took the seignioresse to wife, had issue, the wife died; the husband shall not be tenant by the curtesie; for, although the seigniory was in him at the time of the marriage, yet by priority in law it ceased, so as no seisin of the seigniory was during the coverture. So in our case, eo instante that this new patent is made, the first estate is determined; yet in construction of law, the surrender shall be said precedent, and then the said estate needs not to be recited. For if there had been an express surrender in fact, there had not been any doubt, that recital was not necessary; ergo, neither in the case of a surrender in law. As to that which hath been objected, that the grant of the Queen cannot enure to two intents; scil. to make a surrender, and also to make a new lease, the same rule is true, where both intents enure, and work against the King; but whereas the one intent serves and works for the benefit of the King, it is otherwise: as in our case, this surrender is for the benefit of the King; therefore it shall be taken, &c. as 6 H. 8. the King grants land to another, durante beneplacito, and afterwards the same patentee purchaseth a new estate from the King; here needs not any recital of the former, for the second estate is made to the first patentee, and the first estate is determined by the acceptance of the second, 3 Eliz. The case of the Earl of Arrundel was this, The Lord John Gray being lessee for years of a house called Hull-rake, of the lease of the Queen, afterwards took a grant from the Queen of the custody of the same messuage, with a fee for it, and that was without recital of the former lease, and the grant holden good, and yet it did enure to two tenants; to a surrender of the lease, and a grant of the custody, but both the intents were not against the Queen, for the surrender was for her benefit. As to the lease made 13 Eliz. it is utterly void, for mis-reciting of the date of the former lease made 2 Mar. for the very date of the said lease was the 11th of May, and in the recital it is the 21 of May. For although the date is not necessary to be recited, yet here, as this [248] case is, the same ought to be truly recited. For the surrender of the said estate which passeth by it, is the consideration of the new grant; then, if the same be false, the patent is void, for it was made by reason of that: for there is a more ample lease recited, than in truth it is by ten days. And so the consideration, scil. the surrender, not so beneficial as the Queen expected; also this new patent doth contain in it self a grant of such lands as were demised formerly by letters patents, dated 21 of May, scil. Omnia præmissa, in forma prædict. dimissa, and nothing was demised in forma prædict. scil. by patent bearing such date; ergo, nothing passed by the later patent. For the patent of 13 Eliz. is in consideration of a surrender of a lease made and bearing date 21 of May, whereas no such lease was, and then no surrender, and then no consideration. Also here the consideration is false; for the lessee who is supposed to have surrendred his lease, before the same surrender assigned parcel of his term to one Hagget, and afterwards purchased a new lease in consideration of the surrender of the former, and of his full interest in it, whereas he had not the whole interest; and so this false consideration destroys the whole grant. For in all cases, where the considerations are real, and savour of the land, or extend to such a real thing; if it be false, it destroys the patent: but where the consideration is personal; as in consideration of mony paid, or for service done, although it be false; yet the patent may be good. So here, forasmuch as the consideration is real, in respect of this surrender, and is false as appears before, the patent is void: and as to this point, there is not any difference between consideration and suggestion; for if it be real and false, the patent is void; contrary, where personal. But in some cases where the letters patents are, ex certa scienta, &c. such falsity in the reality shall not hurt. Which see 18 Eliz. Dyer, 352. So the case between Manxel and Turvil, where lessee for years, his lease being expired, supposing that he had twenty years of his lease not entred; in consideration of such interest, took a patent de novo, the same was void. So Owens case: Terril being lessee for years of the parsonage of P. in the county of Sommerset, of the grant of the King for certain years; in consideration of his said interest, obtained a grant of the Queen of lands in Wales, whereas in truth he had before assigned his interest in the said parsonage to another; and it was adjudged, that the said grant of lands in Wales was void, for the consideration was void; and so the consideration being real, was false. And in some cases, a consideration personal, if it be false, shall destroy the patent, if it be future and executory; as if the King grants lands to J. S. ea intentione, that he shall pay to J. D. 10l. Now if he do not pay it, the patent is void, and the estate given by it void also. It hath been objected by Godfrey, that by this surrender, the patent was cancelled, and so the parcel of the term [249] which was assigned to Hagget, was defeated and avoided, forasmuch as the original letters patents out of which the estate of Hagget was derived, are cancelled, and so there is a good surrender, and then the consideration is true; especially, forasmuch as Hagget being assignee but of parcel of the term, cannot have a constat by the statute of 4 E. 6. As to that I conceive, that the assignee of part of the interest may have a constat by that statute, notwithstanding the surrender of the letters patents, and the cancelling of them: and for that matter the difference is, if the roll remains a constat may be, although that the patent be cancelled. See Brook, Patents, 89. 32 H. 8. If a vacat be entred upon the roll, then no constat can be afterwards; and therefore in Sydnies case, the assignee could not have a constat, because there was a vacat entred upon the roll. But a constat had before any vacat entred upon the roll; such a constat is good, notwithstanding the vacat afterwards: and it doth not appear, that any vacat is entred upon the roll; so for any thing that appears, Hagget may have a constat, and then his interest is saved to him, and then the surrender is void, and the consideration false; and although there be other considerations in the letters patents, which are true and good, yet that shall not help the matter. For if any part of the consideration be false, the patent is void in all; and so it was holden in Manxell's case, cited before, and so he prayed judgment for the plaintiff. Egerton Sollicitor, to the contrary. Where the words ex certa scientia, are not put in letters patents; they shall be intended to be made at the suggestion of the patentee, and so the grant shall be taken beneficially for the King, and strictly against the patentee: but where such words are put in the letters patents, there the grant shall be taken beneficially for the subject; these words, ex speciali gratia, imply the bounty of the King, certa scientia excludes all ignorance, and mero motu shew the voluntary and liberal benevolence of the King, without suit of the party; and where the words in such letters patents are general, they shall be construed liberally for the subject, but with limits and bounds, that nothing pass in such case, but such things which are aptly signified by such special words; as to pass two things, where the meaning of the King was to pass but one. And if the patent be conceived utroq; modo tam ex certa scientia, &c. as upon the suggestion of the party; if the suggestion be in any part false, the whole patent is void, for the suggestion extenuates the force of the other words, juris forensis est, siquid falsis precibus obtentum acquirenti non proderit; and to that purpose he cited the case, 18 Eliz. Dyer 352. before cited. And he conceived, that the lease made by Queen Mary is utterly void. 1. Because the first lease of record is not recited. 2. If the same shall be good, the Queen should accept a surrender, where she knew not of it; and so the patent should enure to divers intents. 3. This lease is made by general words; that is, of all the [250] lands in the parish of St. Cuthberts: for these general words may be well satisfied with the lands which the King hath in possession; and therefore they shall not extend to the lands which are now in question, of which the Queen at the time of the grant had but a reversion; and first I conceive, that general words without any restraint or limitation, will pass nothing: as, if the King pardons all demands, or grants omnia terras & tenementa sua; but, general words qualified with a restraint, where the limitations are effectual; as, if the King grants omnia terras & tenementa sua in D. which he hath by the attainder of J. S. or which were the possessions of such dissolved monasteries, such grants are good; and where the case is, that Queen Mary hath the lands in possession, of the annual value of 19l. and other land there in reversion of the annual value of 6l. and then she grants omnia terras & tenementa nostra, rendring 19l. per annum. I conceive, that upon these words the land in possession only passeth, because that the said general words may be aptly served and satisfied with the lands in possession, if no other lands pass. And I agree that the word (nostra) extends as well to the lands in reversion, as to lands in possession; but most properly to lands in possession: for land in reversion cannot dici simpliciter nostra, but quodam modo tanquam terra revertens, and not to take the natural profits of it; for the termor hath such properly, that he shall have an action of trespass, quare clausum fregit: but the intent and meaning of the Queen is to be regarded, and that is the surest way to have right intelligence of the grants of the King; for here the Queen hath reserved but 19l. rent, which is the proper and ancient rent of the lands in possession; and if lands in reversion should also pass, the rent of which was 6l. per annum, then upon the whole grant but 19l. being reserved, the Queen should lose 6l. per annum of her ancient rent; which should be contrary to the intent and meaning of the Queen; and the intent of the grantor, even in the case of a subject, shall direct the construction of grants. As 9 H. 6. Br. Grants 5 by Babington. A man grants common in his whole lands, he shall not have common in his orchards, gardens, or meadows, for such was the meaning of the grantor, a fortiori in the case of the King. It hath been argued, that the former lease ought not to be recited, because that after the first lease made by King Henry the 8th, the inheritance hath been in a subject, that is, the Bishop of Bath and Wells; but the same is not so: for if the King makes a lease for years, and afterwards grants the reversion upon condition, which after is broken, and so found by office, by which the reversion is reduced to the King; if now the King will make a new lease, he ought to recite the former estate, notwithstanding the mean grant of the reversion, or else such second lease is void. Another matter hath been objected, wherefore the former lease ought not to be recited; [251] and that is, because it is determined by surrender in law, before that the new lease takes effect; Sir, the same is not so, for the former lease is in being, as the case betwixt Fulmerston and Steward, 1 Mar. Plow. Com. 106. upon the Statute of Monasteries, 31 H. 8. See the words of the statute, whereof and wherein any estate or interest for years at the time of the making of any such lease had his being or continuance. And an abbot made such a lease to one, who had a term for years of a former grant; although here be a surrender, yet this case is within the said statute, and the said former lease shall be said to have his being at the time of the making of the later lease; and the surrender shall not be said so to preceed the making of the lease, but that the former lease shall be said in esse at the time of the making of the later lease. And in our case, it shall not be taken for any surrender, for then the Queen shall lose 6l. of her ancient rent and revenue; and always when the title of the King and of the subject concur, the title of the King shall be preferred; as 43 E. 3. The King lord, mesne and tenant; the tenant pays his rent at the day to the mesne before noon, and then the same day before the night the mesne dieth, his heir within age, the King shall be paid the rent again; for here the title of the King and the subject concur together at one time, and in that the King shall be preferred; and so he prayed judgment for the defendant. And afterwards at another day the justices declared their opinions, and by Wray, Chief Justice, we all agree, that the first lease ought to be recited; and the reason which hath been urged against that point, hath reduced us to be of that opinion, scil. that the second lease was made to the first patentee, and the King doth not make the recital; but the party ought to inform the King of all former estates of the said lands; and that he might well do, for he is well knowing of them; and although that the reversion after the first lease made hath been conveyed to a subject, the same is not material here, forasmuch as the second estate is made to him who had the first estate, and might know whether the first estate were determined or not; also by the re-purchase, the King is in statu quo prius. Gawdy Justice, Although that the former term be drowned by the taking of the second lease; yet it was in being at the time of the taking of it, as it is holden by Bromley, in the case of Fulmerston and Steward. And it is determined by the second lease, and yet it was in being at the time of the making of it. Fenner Justice, to the same intent. Clench Justice, If the grant of the Queen shall enure to two intents, then the Queen should lose 6l. per annum of her ancient revenue. It was agreed by all the justices, that the general words in as much as they are restrained to a certainty would pass the thing si cætera essent paria; contrary, if they had remained in the generalty; and afterwards judgment was given: quod querens nihil capiat per billam.

[252] CCCXXXVIII. Trin. 32 Eliz. In the Common Pleas.

A man 30 Eliz. made a feoffment in fee to the use of himself for life, and afterwards to the use of his son and his heirs; the father and the feoffees before issue for money by deed, granted and enfeoffed J. S. and his heirs, who hath not notice of the first use; the tenant for life hath issue, and dieth, the issue entreth. Glanvil, The use limited to the first son is destroyed; for without regress of the feoffees it cannot rise, and it is gone by their livery. See the case in Plowden 349. and also he vouched the case of the Earl of Kent, where by the release of the surviving feoffee, a sleeping-use was destroyed, and could not after be revived. Harris, The use may rise, without entries of the feoffees; and he put a difference between an use created before the statute, and a use created afterwards; for in the first case they ought to enter; and if they be disabled by any act, as in the case between Gascoign and the Earl of Kent, it shall never rise; but in the later case, the whole authority and confidence is by the statute taken out of the feoffee, and the contingent use shall rise without aid of the feoffees, by the operation of the law; for there the land is bound to the uses, and charged with them: as upon a judgment in a warrantia chartæ, the land of the defendant is bounden pro loco, & tempore; and according to the common experience in conveyances for payment of the Kings debts; as in the case between Proctor and Dennis, the debtor of the King makes a feoffment in fee unto the use of himself and his heirs, until he makes default of such a payment to the Queen at such a day, and upon default to the use of the Queen and her heirs. Cowper, There needs no entry of the feoffees; and he put the difference put before by Harris, betwixt a use created before, and a use created after the statute; and now the feoffees have not any power to revive or to stand seised to such uses, but are only as instruments to convey the uses. For the use is created upon the livery, and is transferred by the statute, if the person to whom the use is limited be capable of it at the time of the limitation; but if not, the law preserves it until, and it cannot be by any means prevented; and he cited the case, 30 H. 8. Br. Feoffments to uses 50 and there is a great difference betwixt a use limited before and after the statute: for now after the statute, the feoffees by reason of their seisin cannot be vouched; for they have not such a seisin, whereof they may make a feoffment, and he put the case between Cheny and Oxenbridge; Cheny leased to Oxenbridge for 50 years, and afterwards enfeoffed Oxenbridge to the use of Cheny himself, and his wife for their lives, with divers remainders over; and it was adjudged in the Court of Wards, that by the feoffment the term is not extinct; and he put the case of the Lord Pagett, adjudged in the Kings Bench. [253] A feoffment was made to the use of the feoffee for life, the remainder to him whom the feoffor should name at his death in fee, and the feoffor and feoffees for good consideration levy a fine to a stranger, and afterwards the feoffor nameth, and dieth: the party named by the feoffor shall have the land, notwithstanding the fine, &c. Beamount, The contingent use is here utterly destroyed by the feoffment aforesaid; and it appeareth by the preamble of the Statute of 27 H. 8. of Uses, that the motives of that Act did not favour uses; but it was their meaning utterly to root them out: and if contingent uses, which are not, nor can be executed by the statute, should stand in force; the mischief should be, that no purchaser should be secure of his purchase, but should be in danger of a new born use not known before. And he grounded his further argument upon the reason of Manwood and Dyer, where a man makes a feoffment in fee to the use of himself and his wife which shall be, and afterwards he and his feoffees, and those in remainder make a feoffment to divers other new feoffees, and to new uses, and afterwards he takes another wife, and dieth: the said justices were of opinion, that by the said feoffment, the contingent uses were destroyed: for when the estates which the feoffees take, is taken away, which was the root and foundation of the uses, and the branch and fruit of the said tree; it necessarily followeth, that they also be taken away; and also because the feoffees by their livery, are barred for to enter, for to re-continue the estate would continue these uses, they also are gone and extinguished. Yelverton, I conceive, that notwithstanding the feoffment, that the use shall rise in his due time according to the limitation of it, &c.

MICH. 32 ELIZ. IN THE COMMON PLEAS.

CCCXXXIX. THE SERJEANT'S CASE.

Tenant in tail, and he in the remainder in fee joyn in a grant of a rent-charge in fee, to the issue of tenant in tail a year before the Statute of 27 Eliz. of Fraudulent Conveyances; and afterwards the tenant in tail, and he in the remainder sell the land; and afterwards a præcipe is brought against tenant in tail, who voucheth him in the remainder, who voucheth the common vouchee, and so a recovery is had, and seisin accordingly; the issue in tail dieth without issue, tenant in tail dieth, the uncle distraineth for the rent. Glanvil Serjeant argued, that this grant of the rent is altogether the grant of the tenant in tail, and that nothing passed from him in the remainder; and that it doth enure as one entire grant, and not as several grants: as where tenant for life, and he in the reversion joyn in a lease; it is one entire lease, and the lease of them both; and they shall both joyn in an action of waste. But admit that here are several [254] grants, yet the estate out of which the rent was granted, continuing the rent, shall continue also: and now the recoveror comes in the post, and in the affirmation of the estate of tenant in tail; and the remainder is utterly defeated and destroyed by the recovery, and the rent always issueth out of the particular estate, and he cited, Littl. 125. If a rent-charge be issuing out of land, and the tenant of the land leaseth the same for life, and afterwards the rent is granted over; now he who hath the freehold, ought to attorn, scil. the tenant for life, for a rent-charge lieth always upon the possession; and if tenant for life granteth a rent-charge, and afterwards makes a feoffment in fee, the rent shall continue until the possession be recontinued, &c. Harris Serjeant contrary, This grant is the grant of them both, scil. of the tenant as long he hath issue of his body, and afterwards it is the grant of him in the remainder: where a man derives his interest from two, the one being a particular tenant, the other a recoveror, or a remainder in fee; the donee takes of each of them that which he may lawfully give, and no more; and the particular estate being then ended, the donee shall be then accompted in by him in the reversion, &c. See 2 E. 4. 1. And he vouched the case of the Lord Mountjoy, the Lord Mountjoy took to wife a woman enheretrix, she had issue, and so he was intituled to be tenant by the curtesie, and acknowledged a statute, and afterwards he and his wife levyed a fine, and died; now the conusee shall hold the land discharged of the statute; for after the death of the husband, the conusee is in by the wife only: and so paramount the charge. Also he said, that this grant of the rent by the father to the son, is fraudulent, and so shall be intended, if the contrary be not shewed and averred. And so it was of late adjudged in the Court of Wards, where a man alieneth to his son and heir for mony, (and mony in truth is paid) yet notwithstanding it shall be intended fraudulent, unless the contrary be shewed and averred.

Hanham Serjeant, This grant shall enure first as the grant of tenant in tail; and after the death of the tenant in tail without issue, it shall be the grant of him in the remainder. And to this purpose, he put Newdegate's case, 7 Eliz. Dyer 234. Lessee for life, and he in the reversion, lease for years by indenture, that during the life of lessee for life, is his demise only, and the confirmation of him in the reversion; but after the death of the lessee for life, it is the lease and demise of him in the reversion, and he shall have an action of waste ex dimissione sua propria, without shewing the special matter in the count. And if tenant in tail granteth a rent in fee, and he in the reversion confirm the grant, it is good. See Litt. 121. And he said, that the recoveror is in the per; for it was holden in Winter's case, that if a man makes a lease for years, rendring rent, with clause of re-entry, and afterwards suffereth a common recovery, that [255] such a recoveror is an assignee within the statute of 32 H. 8. to take benefit of a condition; and recoveries are now common conveyances. And if tenant for life be, the remainder over in fee, and tenant for life grants a rent-charge, and afterwards ceaseth, and the lord recovereth in a cessavit, he shall hold the land charged. And as to the collusion, it is not shewed in the pleading, that the grant was made by collusion: for if the collusion be not apparent, the justices, without averment of it, are not bounden to take notice of it.

Cowper, Serjeant, Here are two several grants, and one grant intire in the letter, may enure as several grants, as if two tenants in common grant a rent of 10s. here are several grants, and he shall have several rents of 10s. And if A. disseiseth B. of Black-Acre, and C. disseiseth B. of White-Acre, and afterwards by one deed releaseth to A. and C. the same shall enure as several releases upon their several possessions. And he in his argument relied much upon the collusion, and this grant shall be taken by the justices to be fraudulent; for it was made 20 Eliz. and the recovery was 21 Eliz. and in 27 Eliz. came the statute.

Beamount Serjeant, This grant shall enure as several grants; i.e. as a grant of tenant in tail, and afterwards as of him in the reversion: two joynt-tenants enfants make a feoffment, they shall have several writs of dum fuit infra ætatem, as upon several feoffments. 19 H. 6. 43. Two coparceners take husbands, who discontinue, and die; their wives shall have several writs of cui in vita: and yet the discontinuance was joynt. And 15 H. 7. 14. if 3 coparceners be, and upon partition one of them granteth to the two others rent of 20s. per annum for equality of partition, that rent shall be in the nature of coparceners, and so shall descend; and shall not go to the survivour but by descent. See 21 E. 3. 50. Also admit that it is the confirmation of him in the remainder, yet after the death of the tenant in tail without issue, now it is become the grant of him in the remainder. And to that purpose, he cited Newdegate's case, 7 Eliz. Dyer, before cited. But posito, that it be the sole grant of the tenant in tail, yet here is not any covin apparent; for covin apparent ought to be averred and approved; otherwise the Judges of our law cannot adjudge upon it: for they cannot judge upon probabilities, as the Judges of the civil law do; for so they should many times minister injustice in the place of justice: and, that the same is not covin apparent, although it be made to his son, he vouched 19 H. 6. 30. and 47 E. 3. 16. where such a feoffment to re-enfeoff the heir of the feoffor when he cometh of full age, is not in it self covin apparent, but it ought to be expresly averred. And he cited also Warnford's case, 3 Eliz. Dyer 193. And also he cited 17 Eliz. Dyer 341.

upon the Statute of 27 H. 8. of Monasteries, where there is a proviso, forasmuch as some of the chief governours of [256] such religious houses have lately fraudulently and craftily made leases, &c. to the great decay and diminution of their houses, that all such leases, &c. made within one year before the making of this Act, shall be void, &c. And also there is a proviso, that such persons as have leases whereupon the old rent is reserved, shall enjoy their leases, &c. The case was, that an abbot made a lease for 60 years, 47 days before the making of the said Act, upon which the ancient rent was not reserved: it was holden there, that although the lease was within the words of the statute, (because made within a year) yet it shall not be intended covinous, without an express averment of it; for it may be it was made bona fide. See Librum.

Yelverton Serjeant, This is a joynt grant; but yet it shall charge the several estates when they come into possession. Also he put this case, cestuy que use, and the feoffees after the statute of 1 R. 3. and before 27 H. 8. joyn in a grant of a rent; it shall enure as several grants in respect of their several authorities; scil. one by the statute of 1 R. 3. and the other by the common-law. And as to the covin, he conceived, that it is covin apparent, and needed not to be averred: and that appeareth by the suffering of the common recovery.

CCCXL. Brokesby and Wickham's Case.

A quare impedit was brought by Bartholomew Brokesby, against the Bishop of Lincoln and Wickham, Pasch. 30 Eliz. Rot. 1815. The case was, that Robert Brokesby was seised of the mannor of Sholby in fee, to which the advowson was appendant; and, the church being full, granted to Humphrey Brokesby and the plaintiff his two sons, the next avoidance of the said church; afterwards the church became void; Humphrey by deed released all his right, estate, and interest which then he had of and in the advowson of the church aforesaid for the said avoidance. Bartholomew sole presented, and the defendants did disturb him. The bishop pleaded, that he claimed nothing but as Ordinary. Wickham pleaded a lease made of the mannor with the appurtenances, by the said Bartholomew, to one Starkey for years, before the grant made, ut supra, to Humphrey and Bartholomew; which Starkey presented him: upon which they were at issue, and found for the plaintiff, that the grant was before the lease. It was holden by the Court, that this release was meerly void, for here was not any interest to be released, but a power to present, and an authority annexed to the person. And afterwards by the award of the Court the writ was abated. See 11 Eliz. Dyer 253.

CCCXLI. Woodward and Bagg's Case.

Woodward libelled in the Spiritual Court against Bagg and Nelson, for tythes of certain lands called Christen Hill. The defendant sued a prohibition, and surmised, that one Pretiman was seised of the said land; and in consideration of 5l. by him paid to the said parson, it was agreed betwixt them, that the said Pretiman and his assigns should be discharged of tythes of the land, during his life, and afterwards the said Pretiman leased the same to the defendants: upon which a prohibition was granted.

And it was holden, that the party need not to make proof thereof within 6 months, for it is not within the statute, because a composition with the same parson: but now a consultation was granted, because the agreement is shewed, but no deed of it, which cannot be any discharge: but if it had been for a time; scil. unica vice, it had been good; but for life, not. Also it is not an express grant of the tythes, but only a covenant and agreement, that he shall be discharged; upon which he may have an action of covenant, but not a prohibition.

It was said on the other side, that although without deed, tythes cannot pass in point of interest; yet by way of discharge they might.

Cook, It was holden betwixt Pendleton and Green, that upon such words of covenant and agreement, the party should hold the land discharged of tythes; which was denyed. For if the grantee of a rent-charge will grant it to the tenant of the land, the same without deed is not good. And there was very lately a case between Westbede and Pepper, where it was agreed betwixt the parson and one of his parish, that for 20s. rent by the year, the parishioner should be discharged of tythes for 20 years, if he so long lived. And it was holden, that no prohibition should lie upon it; a fortiori, where the estate is for life.

Gawdy, In the case of grant of tythes for life, a deed is requisite, but here it is not, but a contract for mony, &c. See 21 H. 6. 43.

Wray, If it had been for years, it had been good enough; but here is not any contract, but only a discharge for life; which cannot be during his life, without deed. And afterwards, the record was read; which was, that concordatum & aggreatum fuit between the parties pro omnibus decimis during the time, that the one should be parson, and the other occupier of the said land, that in consideration of 5l. the said Pretiman and his assigns should hold the said land discharged of tythes.

Wray, The same is no contract, but a promise, for he doth not grant any tythes. Afterwards a consultation was awarded.

CCCXLII. SANDERSON AND EKINS'S CASE.

In debt upon a loan by Sanderson against Ekins, who waged his law; and at the day being ready to wage his law, the Court examined him: and upon examination it appeared, that the plaintiff and defendant were reciprocally endebted the one to the other; and upon conference betwixt them before the action brought, there was an accord betwixt them, that the plaintiff should give to the defendant such a sum, (which he had done) and that the one should go quit against the other. And it was the clear opinion of the whole Court, that upon the matter the defendant could not wage his law; for a debt cannot be extinguished by word.

CCCXLIII. THE DEAN AND CHAPTER OF WINDSORS CASE.

In this case, it was moved, if he, who hath a rectory impropriate, and by the Statute of 26 H. 8. is to pay an annual rent for the same in the name of a tenth, and thereby is discharged of all first-fruits and tenths, shall have the priviledge of the Exchequer; for he is to pay the same sum yearly.

And it was the opinion of the Barons, that he should not; for so every one who is to pay any tenths or first-fruits, should draw other who have sued him into the Exchequer: and so all controversies concerning tythes and parsonages should be drawn thither; which should be a great prejudice to the Spiritual Courts.

But Egerton, Solicitor, vouched a case, viz. Conier's case. The King gave a parsonage to a priory in frankalmoign and the tythes, thereof being withdrawn, the prior impleaded him who withdrew the tythes in the Exchequer; and it was holden, that the prior should have the priviledge, for the King is endangered to lose his patronage, or rather his foundership, if the rectory be evicted.

Gent, Baron, The Kings tenant in chief, or he who pays first-fruits, or he who holds of the Queen in fee-farm, shall not have in such respect the priviledge here.

CCCXLIV. SLEDD'S CASE.

Sledd of Great Melton in the county of Oxon, was assessed to 7s. for a fifteenth: and upon refusal to pay the same, the collector distrained the beasts of Sledd, and sold them. Thereupon Sledd brought trespass against him the in the Kings Bench. And the collector exhibited a bill against Sledd; who shewed by his counsel, that the statute of 29 Eliz. which enacted this fifteenth, provides, that the said fifteenth shall be levied of the moveable goods, chattels, and other things usual to such fifteenths and tenths, to be contributory and chargeable. And shewed further, that his beasts distrained fuerunt tempore districtionis, upon the glebe-land of a parsonage presentative, which he had in lease; which glebe-land is not chargeable usually to fifteenths granted by the Temporalty, nor the cattel upon it. It was the opinion of the justices, that although the parson himself shall pay tenths to the King, yet the lay-farmor shall pay fifteenths, and his cattel are distrainable for the same upon the glebe-lands of the parsonage. And therefore it was awarded, that the distress and the sale were lawful.

CCCXLV. SIR WALTER WATER'S CASE.

It was moved in this case, that if one hath a judgment in debt, and upon the same within the year sueth forth a capias ad satisfaciendum, although that he doth not prosecute it by the space of 2 or 3 years; yet when he pleaseth he may proceed upon it, and shall not be put to a scire facias. And of that opinion was Philips.

Manwood, I grant, that if one hath sued forth a writ of execution, and the same be continued by, Vicecomes non misit Breve for 2 or 3 years; yet the plaintiff may proceed upon it, and shall not be put to a scire facias: but if such a writ be sued forth, and not continued, but discontinued by a year and a day, he shall be put to a scire facias; for it is the negligence of the plaintiff of not continuing it; which within the year and day he may do without order of the Court; but not after the year by any order of the Court, &c.

CCCXLVI. EVANS, GODFREY, AND ARNOLD'S CASE.

The case was, Evans and Godfrey were bail for one Kemp, at the suit of Alice Arnold. Kemp was condemned, and a capias ad satisfaciend. awarded against the sureties: by which process, Godfrey was taken; and he suggested to the plaintiff, that Evans the other bail was sufficient to satisfie him, but that he himself was not sufficient, but utterly unable to do it. Upon which surmise, the plaintiff was content, that Godfrey should go at liberty, so as he did procure Evans to be arrested; who did it accordingly. And now Evans, being arrested, sued an audita querela upon that escape of Godfrey; and they were at issue upon the escape. And afterwards, it was espied, that the venire facias was to summon 12 in actione transgressionis super casum; whereas it should be, in audita querela. It was said by Kemp, secondary, that the venire facias upon every original writ in this Court (as this audita querela is) ought to contain in it the issue: but when the suit is upon a bill, then the words are, ad recognoscend. in actione transgressionis super casum. And afterwards, by the advice of the Court, a juror was withdrawn by assent, and so the matter was stayed.

CCCXLVII. CHENEY'S CASE.

Note, by the Barons in this case, if rent-corn be reserved upon a lease for years, and it is behind for 2 or 3 years, that the lessor may have debt for the corn, and shall make his declaration of so much corn, and the same shall be in the detinet; but yet he shall not have judgment to have corn, but so much mony as the corn was worth every several year being accounted.

Clark, Baron, doubted, if he should recover the price of the corn, as corn was at the time of the contract, or according to the price which it was at the time when it was payable; or as it was at the time of the action brought.

Manwood, The law is clear, that the lessee shall pay according to the price which was at the time of the payment and delivery limited by the lease.

Clark, A. is bound to deliver to the obligee 10 bushells of wheat, and no place is limited where the payment shall be made; the obligor is not bounden to seek the other party wheresoever, as in case of paymene of money; for the importableness of it shall excuse him. Which Manwood granted.

CCCXLVIII. PHILIP FINES AND THE LORD DACRE'S CASE.

The case was, Tenant in tail of lands, the remainder in chief, levied a fine without the Kings licence: and, if the tenants of the Lord Dacres should be chargeable by the fine, (for the case was, that the Lord Dacres was tenant in tail, the remainder in tail to Philip Fines,) was the question? It was holden by the Barons, that the tenants should be discharged: but it was holden, that if the conusor had any other land within England, the fine might be levied thereof. But the question was, if the tenants shall be put to plead in discharge of that which would be a great charge; or should be discharged without plea, because it appeareth by record, that he who aliened, was but tenant in tail in remainder; for there was an office of it which was pleaded by another in another cause. It was said, where such matter appeareth of record, as by office, livery, &c. there he need not to plead such matter in discharge, because the pleading of the same is to no other purpose but to satisfie the Court by a record, that the matter is so as the party in his discharge hath alledged. And therefore, in this case, the Barons gave order, that the process against the tenants of the Lord Dacres should be discharged.

CCCXLIX. HILL. 32 ELIZ. IN THE COURT OF WARDS.

The case was, A. gave land to B. in tail, rendring rent; B. suffered a common recovery with voucher unto the use of a stranger and his heirs; it was the opinion of some, that the rent remained. And it was resembled to Littleton's case, 231, 232. Lord, mesne, and tenant; the lord purchaseth the tenancy, now the mesnalty is extinct; yet he who was the mesne shall have the surplusage of the rent of the lord now tenant of the land as a rent distrainable of common right.

And it was said by Heskith, late Attorny of the Court of Wards, that it was lately the case of the Lord de la Ware, that in such case, notwithstanding such common recovery, the donor should have the rent, although that his reversion was gone.

But Cook was of opinion, that the rent was gone; for the rent was incident to the reversion, and there is not any question but that the reversion is gone.

CCCL. GARDINER AND THE HUNDRED OF READING'S CASE.

Andrew Gardiner brought an action upon the Statute of Winton of Hue and Cry, against the inhabitants of the hundred of Reading in the county of Berks; and declared of a robbery committed by persons unknown on his house: it was the clear opinion of the whole Court, that the action would not lie; for that this offence is not properly a robbery intended by the said statute to be pursued, but rather a burglary: and robberies, committed in the high-way only, are relieved within this statute. And against this conusans, it was objected, that here is no devise; for A. at the time of the devise had not any feoffees. But the exception was disallowed by the Court. And they cited the case, 15 Eliz. Dyer 323. Lingen's Case, A. made a feoffment in fee to his use; and afterwards devised, that his feoffees should be seised to the use of his daughter; that the same was a good devise of the land. See 29 H. 8. Note, the case of Hambleden and Hambleden, (for the principal case, see Mich. 31 Eliz. Leon. 166. Lib. 1.) was this term adjudged, upon the devise, that the survivour shall be each others heir. It was holden, that all the surviving brothers are joynt-tenants, and although this word (survivour) be in the singuiar number; yet in sense, upon the whole matter it shall be taken, and construed, as for the plural number; (survivour shall be each others heir) i.e. each survivour, i.e. every survivour; i.e. all the survivours: and then in this case, the plaintiff and the defendant being joynt-tenants, cannot maintain an action of trespass one against the other.

[263] CCCLIII. MICH. 32 ELIZ. IN THE COMMON PLEAS.

By the statute of 32 H. 8. cap. 37. the executors of a grantee of a rent-charge, may distrain for the arrearages of the said rent in the life of the testator, so long as the land charged doth continue in the seisin, or possession of the tenant in demesne, who ought immediately to have paid the said rent; or in the seisin of any other person or persons claiming the said lands only by and from the said tenant by purchase, gift, or descent, in like manner as the testator might or ought to have done in his life-time.

It was now moved, if A. grant a rent-charge to B. the rent is behind: B. dieth; A. enfeoffeth C. in fee, who divers years after enfeoffeth D. who divers years after enfeoffeth E. It was holden in this case by Walmesley, Periam, and Windham, Justices, that E. should be chargeable with the arrearages to the executors.

Anderson, Chief Justice, held the contrary. But they all agreed, that the lord by escheat, tenant in dower or by the curtesie, should not be chargeable; for they did not claim by the party only, but also by the law.

CCCLIV. LEVERETT AND TOWNSEND'S CASE.

In an action upon the case, for disturbing him of his common; the plaintiff declared, that he was seised in fee of a messuage and certain lands; and that he and all those whose estate he hath, have common of pasture in 16 acres of lands called D. from the time that the corn is reaped, until it be sowen again: and also common of pasture in land called R. omni tempore anni, as appendant to the said messuage and land; and that the defendant had plowed the said lands and so disturbed him of his common.

It was moved in stay of judgment, that it appeareth here, that the plaintiff was seised in fee, and so he ought to have an assise, and not an action upon the case.

But the exception was disallowed by the Court. Vide inde, 2 H. 4. 11. 8 Eliz. Dyer 250. 11 R. 2. Tit. Action upon the Case, 36.

CCCLV. THE CHAMBERLAIN OF LONDON'S CASE.

The Chamberlain of London brought an action of debt in the Mayors Court in Guild-hall, grounded upon an Act of Common Council. See C. 5 Part, the matter was removed into the Kings Bench by corpus cum causa; Fleetwood, Recorder of London, prayed a procedendo. It was objected, that they of London could not make ordinances to bind the subjects, as an Act of Parliament. To which, it was said by Fleetwood, that the custom of the city is, that the mayor and aldermen, and four persons chosen out of each ward, by the communalty, may make ordinances, which they call Acts of Common Council, and they shall bind every citizen and free-man, and all their customs are confirmed by Act of Parliament, and by Magna Charta, which hath been confirmed 52 times; and also by the statute of 7 R. 2. For that King seised their liberties, and drove them to pay for the redemption of them 100000 marks, and then the said King confirmed them unto them for ever; and therefore this ordinance being made according to our custom, ought not to be impeached: as in case of matters of the forrest, if one be punished for offending against an ordinance made for the governing of the affairs of the forrest; you cannot remove the matter before you. So is the law called Lex Idumæa, concerning rivers and fishing, in which are divers ordinances, that none shall kill salmons at certain seasons of the year, and so of other fishes: if one be punished by force of such law, he shall not be relieved here; for the law of the land hath always allowed such particular customs. And see F. B. If two merchants put their stocks together, and so traffick together, and the one dieth, the survivor shall not have the whole stock, as the common law is, but the executor of him that dieth shall have an accompt against the other; and that is per legem mercatoriam. Cook, to the same intent. This Act of Common Council is good, and according to the law, that is, of common right. There are divers statutes made for the true making of cloth, and to take away the abuses and deceit in the making of it, and this Act of Common Council is for the well executing of the said statutes; and I conceive, there is a difference in making of laws by a corporation; a corporation may make an Act for the better executing of any law established at the common law, but new laws they cannot make; as those of a town, who have used to have common in certain lands, they cannot make a by-law, that such a one in such a town shall not have common there; but that none shall use his common, but at such a [265] time; such a by-law made, is good. See 15 H. 7. 21 H. 7. 40. See 8 E. 2. tit. Assise 413. A town had common of Turbary in a marsh, and divers of the inhabitants of the town had made trenches in the said marsh; and some had not a full foot of land in the town, and such persons by their trenches which they had made there, used to carry turffs out of the said marsh by boats, and sell them, unto the value of 20 marks per annum, to their great private profit, and to the great grievance of the others. For which cause, it was provided by common assent of the freeholders of the lord of the said town, that all the trenches in the said marsh should be stopped, so as from thenceforth no turffs be carried in boats by the trenches. And there it was holden, that if the greater part of the commoners assent, the same shall bind the others who have not assented; for ubi major pars, ibi totum: and then, if such towns may make laws; a fortiori, the City of London. Secondly, this law is good by custom; for they have used to make such Acts and ordinances time out of mind, &c. and these customs are confirmed by Act of Parliament; and also they may appoint a penalty, for to what purpose otherwise should they make an Act, oderunt peccare mali formidine pœnæ. Also this action is maintainable; for an amercement in a court baron, an action of debt lieth. Gawdy Justice, 44 E. 3. 19. every one ought to assent. Wray, There the ordinance made was to charge the inheritance but here it is only to charge their goods; wherefore the assent of the greater part is sufficient. And afterwards, a procedendo was granted.

CCCLVI. PENDLETON AND GREEN'S CASE.

Pendleton sued Green in the Spiritual Court for tythes, who pleaded, that Pendleton was not lawful incumbent, but one Taylor; and that plea, those of the Spiritual Court would not allow to the parishioner to plead to the right of the incumbency; and thereupon he prayed a prohibition, for otherwise he should be twice charged for tythes; and therefore a prohibition was granted.

CCCLVII. KNEVYTT AND COPE'S CASE.

Knevytt brought ejectione firmæ against Cope, and declared, quod, cum John Hopkins by his indenture bearing date the 20 of May, 32 Eliz. had let to him his house and two yard-lands containing 40 acres of land, meadow and pasture, apud Tythingham de Forecomb. in parochia de S. &c. upon not guilty pleaded, the venire facias was de Tythingham de Forecomb. Exception was taken by Cook, that the declaration had not any certainty; for it is not shewed in certain, how much there was of meadow, how much of land, and how much of pasture, there was contained in the said two yard-lands; and the jury may find the defendant guilty as to the land only, but not to the residue. Also, he hath not shewed in the declaration, when the lease was made; but only saith, that by indenture bearing date the 20 of May, &c. but doth not shew any day of delivery of the indenture, for then the lease takes effect.

To which exception, it was said by the Court, that the declaration as to that was good enough, for it shall be intended to have been delivered at the day of the date.

Another exception was taken to the visne, because that the visne ought to be of the parish, and not of Tythingham, &c. See 11 H. 7. 23, 24. Forcible entry in the mannor of B. in B. the visne shall not be [of the mannor of B.] but [of B.]

Gawdy, Justice, You shall never have a visne of the parish; for divers towns may be in one parish: but here the visne is good of Tythingham, &c. for it may be that it is a town.

Cook, It is but a ville conus, from which a visne cannot come.

CCCLVIII. TAYLOR AND FISHER'S CASE.

Taylor brought an action of trespass against Fisher, for entring into his house, and taking and carrying away of his goods. To which the defendant pleaded, that, before the trespass supposed, one A. was possessed of the said goods; and the said goods being in the house of the said plaintiff, the said A. sold them to the defendant; by force whereof he was possessed: and, so possessed, came to the plaintiffs house where, &c. And by assent and licence of the plaintiffs wife, he entred into the said house, and [267] carried away the said goods, &c. Upon which, there was a demurrer. It was holden, that the same is no plea; for there is no colour given to the plaintiff; and the licence given by the wife, is not any matter for the justifying of the entry. And as to the goods, the plea was holden good: for, if A. might sell them being in the house of another, and not in his own possession, is scrupulous to the lay-people.

Wray, If the goods of the defendant were in the house of the plaintiff with the knowledge of the defendant, it had perhaps been a good plea; but that is not alledged here.

Cook, 30 E. 3. 23. In trespass for breaking of his pound, the defendant said, that he came to the place where the cattel were impounded, and there found the plaintiff's wife, to whom he offered pledges for the cattel impounded, to make amends according to reason, and prayed to have deliverance of the cattel; and the plaintiff's wife delivered them; without that, that he brake the pound, &c. And it was said, that this want of colour is but matter of form, which he ought to have alledged upon his demurrer; or otherwise he shall not have advantage of it.

Wray Justice, The defendant in his plea doth not meet with the plaintiff; therefore the plea is not good in substance. It was adjourned.

CCCLIX. DOWNHALL AND CATESBY'S CASE.

In a formedon by Downhall against Catesby, the parties were at issue; and it was tryed by nisi prius. It was moved in banco, because that some of the jurors did eat and drink before that they gave their verdict, that the Court would not receive the postea.

The Court said, that we cannot do here; for we do not know if your information be false or not; and that matter ought to have been examined by the Justices of Nisi Prius, and they ought to certifie us of it, and then we shall have good cause to stay it.

And it was then said there, that if any of the jurors eat and drink before the verdict at their own costs, that the same doth not make the verdict void: but otherwise, if it be of the costs of the plaintiff, or the defendant.

In an appeal of murder by Withrington against Delabar, of the death of her husband; the defendant pleaded, never accoupled in lawful matrimony: and pleaded over, not guilty. The plaintiff replyed, lawfully accoupled, but did not reply over to the felony. It way moved, as a discontinuance of the whole.

Wray, If the defendant pleads matter tryable at the common law, and over to the felony, there the plaintiff ought to reply to both; but where the first matter is not tryable by the common law, there the same is not needful. Quod cæteri justiciarii concesserunt.

CCCLXI. LAKE'S CASE.

[See Shoppee v. Nathan & Company, [1892] 1 Q. B. 251.]

Stephen Lake, commissary of the Bishop of Canterbury, Fr. Alredge, register; and R. Hunt apparitor, were indicted of extortion, that they, colore officiorum suorum, had malitiose, accepted and received 11s. 6d. for the absolution of one B. who was excommunicated; where they ought to have but 2s. 6d.

And exception was taken to this indictment, because that all their offences are put together, scil. colore officiorum suorum; whereas the particular offence of every offender ought to be specially set down, but here they are confounded. Which see, by the statute of 25 E. 3. 9. that Ordinaries shall not be impeached by such general indictments, unless they say, and put in certain, in what thing, and of what, and in what manner the said Ordinaries have committed extortion.

But that exception was not allowed; for of that the party grieved cannot have notice, for they took in gross, and afterwards parted it betwixt them.

Another exception was, because it is not shewed, what is their due fee: and that was conceived to be a good cause of exception: and if no fee be due, the same ought to appear in the indictment. And afterwards the opinion of the Court was, that they should be discharged.

CCCLXII. DOUGHTY AND PRIDEAUX'S CASE.

Action upon the case by Doughty against Prideaux, for these words, Thou art a wicked and perjured fellow, and art forsworn in the Court of Star-Chamber, as appeareth by an exemplification here under the seal of this Court. The defendant justified because of a bill exhibited in the same Court, by one Brooks, against the now plaintiff, for conspiring with another to endict the said Brooks of certain felonies. And the defendant now plaintiff, in his answer to the said bill, denyed upon oath the said conspiracy: and sentence was given in the said Court against the now plaintiff, ubi revera such a conspiracy was. The plaintiff replicando, said, that the said Brooks was arraigned and convicted upon the said indictment, and prayed his clergy. Whereupon it appeared, because the said Brooks was not legitimo modo acquietatus, that the same could not be any conspiracy in the now plaintiff, to procure the said Brooks to be indicted.

Walmesley and Periam, Justices, This replication is not good; for it may be that Brooks was acquitted, and yet the plaintiff did conspire, upon which a writ of conspiracy perhaps would not lie, but an action upon the case without doubt: for the replication doth not prove, that the plaintiff did not conspire, but that the plaintiff was not punishable for such conspiracy, &c.

CCCLXIII. PASCH. 33 ELIZ. IN THE COMMON PLEAS.

The case was; An abbot leased lands to three men for 80 years; and in the end of the said lease was a clause, that if they died within the said term, that then the lessor might enter. The possessions of the abby came unto the King, who granted the reversion to J. S. who made a new lease thereof to J. D. for 21 years to begin after the expiration, determination, or surrender of the said former lease.

The 3 lessees died within the term; if J. D. might now enter before J. S. hath entred, was the question?

And it was the opinion of all the justices, that he could not; for it is in the election of J. S. if he will take advantage of the condition, and defeat the lease; but that ought to be by entry: and none can make such entry but the lessor himself, or by his express direction, &c.

[270] PASCH. 33 ELIZ. IN THE KINGS BENCH.

CCCLXIV. BOND AND BAYLE'S CASE.

Bond brought a scire facias against Bayle's administrator of one T. B. upon a recovery against the intestate in an action of debt. The defendant pleaded before the said judgment given, the testator acknowledged a statute-staple to one B. and that the same was not paid in the life-time of the intestate, nor ever after, and that they had not goods of the intestate in their hands above to pay the said statute. Upon which, it was demurred in law.

Crook argued, that the bar was not good; for here no execution upon the statute is pleaded; and then the judgment and the statute being things of as high nature, that of which execution is first sued, shall be first satisfied: and if this action had been brought upon the obligation, the plea had not been good: for although that Brian saith, 21 E. 4. that recognizances shall be paid by executors before obligations; yet that is to be intended, when a scire facias is to be sued upon it: otherwise not. See 12 E. 3. Fitz. tit. Execution 73. In a scire facias upon a judgment in debt given against the testator; enquiry was, what goods the executors had at the day of the garnishment. And he said, it was moved, 20 Eliz. by Anderson, in this Court, in debt upon an obligation against an executor, the defendants pleaded, that the testator was endebted to one A. and that they had not more than to satisfie the same; and it was holden no plea; unless they had pleaded further, that a scire facias was sued forth upon the same.

But Wray said, that was not law: and there is a difference when the judgment is given against the testator himself, and where against the executors: for where judgment is given against the executors, the judgment which was first given, shall be first executed: but if two judgments be given against the testator, he who first sueth execution against the executors, shall be first satisfied, because they are things of an equal nature; and before suit, it is in the election of the executor to pay which of them he pleaseth. See 9 E. 4. 12. As if two men have tallies out of the Exchequer, he who first offers his to the officer, shall be first satisfied; for before that, it is in the election of the officer which of them he will pay. And a judgment is a higher record, than a statute; for the statute is not a record, but debitum recordatum recognitum. And therefore, 19 H. 6. if the release enrolled be lost, the enrollment of it is not of any effect.

And, Pasch. 20 Eliz. our very case was moved in the Court [271] of Common Pleas, in a scire facias upon a judgment given against the testator, the executor pleaded, that the testator had acknowledged a statute before, not satisfied, ultra which, &c. and it was holden no plea; for a statute is but a private and poquet-record, as they then called it.

And, 32 Eliz. between Coney and Barkham, the same plea was pleaded, and holden to be no plea. Also, if this plea should be allowed, great mischief would follow; for then no debts should be satisfied by executors; for it might be, that the statute was made for performance of covenants; which covenants peradventure shall never be broken. And afterwards, judgment was given for the plaintiff.

CCCLXV. BUTLER AND BAKER'S CASE.

See the principal case reported in Cook, 3 Part, 25. The argument of Egerton, Solicitor-General, in the said case, under his own hand, was as followeth; viz. The disagreement by the wife in pais, is good by the common law. An agreement may be by word, ergo, a disagreement. If husband and wife lease for years, rendring rent, the husband dieth, the wife accepteth of the rent, that acceptance shall bind her, 15 E. 4. 17. 3 H. 6. 48. 48 E. 3. 13. 16 E. 4. 8. 11 H. 7. 13. 9 H. 6. 44. 10 H. 6. 24.

Tenant in tail makes a lease for years not warranted by the statute, rendring rent, and dieth, and afterwards the issue accepteth the rent, the same shall bind him; 21 H. 7. 38. 21 H. 6. 25. 14 H. 6. 26. 19 H. 6. 43. An enfant leaseth for years, rendring rent, and at his full age accepts the rent, 11 H. 7. 13. 21 H. 6. 24. 14 H. 8. 35. So where the successor accepts of a rent upon a lease made by the predecessor, 37 H. 6. 4. 8 H. 5. 10. 4 E. 4. 14. The same law in exchanges and partitions, if the wife accepteth of dower of the land which her husband hath taken in exchange, she shall be barred of that land which her husband gave in exchange, 6 E. 3. 50. 15 E. 3. tit. Bar. 125. 12 H. 4. 12. &c. And in all these cases where there is an agreement; and therein an agreement implyed, scil. an agreement to the lease, and a disagreement to have the possession, &c. And so agreement to the land received in exchange, and disagreement to the land given in exchange; and all that by word and act in pais.

And so here in these cases, estates are affirmed, and entred, and benefit of the possession waived and refused. So it is also of a right and title of action, 21 H. 6. 25. The lord entitu-[272]-led to have a writ of right upon disclaimer, accepts a rent of the tenant; now he is barred of his action. 13 Ass. 3. The disseisee accepts homage of the disseisor, it is a good bar in an assise. 21 Ass. 6. Pendant a cessavit, the tenant aliened, the lord accepted the services of the alienee, his action is gone, 11 E. 3. tit. Dower, 63. A woman entituled to dower, accepteth homage of the ter-tenant, the same is a bar of her dower: and as it hath been said of entries and actions, of which a man may refuse the benefit by word and acceptance in pais: so is the law also in cases of estates vested, if the party doth not enter.

Husband and wife tenants in special tail; the husband levyeth a fine to his own use, and afterwards deviseth the land to his wife for life, the remainder over, rendring rent; the husband dieth: the wife enters and pays the rent; now she hath waived her remitter, 18 Eliz. Dyer, 351. 10 E. 4. 12. The tenant enfeoffed the lord and a stranger, and made livery to the stranger, although the freehold vested in them both, yet if the lord disagreeth to the feoffment in futuro, he cannot enter and occupy the land, and he may distrain for the services, &c. If a disseisin be made to the use of the husband and wife, and the husband agreeth to it, the freehold vests in the husband and wife; but the wife is not a disseisor, and after the death of the husband, she may disagree unto the estate by word, 12 E. 4. 7. And also an agreement shall make her a dissessisor. See to the same intent, 7 E. 4. 7. and Litt. 129. Although that in such and the like cases, the estate vests in some manner, yet it shall never vest to the prejudice of the party without an express and actual agreement. And, that disagreement to an estate in such manner vested, may be in pais and by word, seems by a clause in the statute of 27 H. 8. cap. 1. Where a joynture is made after marriage, there the wife after the death of her husband may at her pleasure refuse her joynture, and have and demand, and take her dower, her writ of dower, or otherwise; scil. by word, and acceptance in pais. And if in a writ of dower, the tenant will bar the demandant, by joynture made during the coverture, he ought to say, quod intrando agreeavit. See Litt. in Dower ad Ostium Ecclesiæ; if the wife entreth and agreeth, the same is a good bar in dower, Littl. 8.

Now in the principal case, when the wife agreeth to the devise of Thoby, and the same is executed by entry; now the same is a full disagreement to Hinton.

It was afterwards objected, that although it be clear, that the wife may waive her joynture in Hinton, by word and act in pais, without matter of record; yet some conceived, that this manner of devise of Thoby is void by the statute of 32 & 34 H. 8. The statute enables to devise two parts, or so much as [273] amounts to two parts in value at the time of the death of the devisor, for then the will takes effect; which cannot be here in this case; for at the time of his death the joynture of Hinton was in force, and so continued, until the disagreement afterwards.

Also the words of the statute are, having a sole estate in feesimple; but here the devisor had but a reversion in fee expectant upon an estate tail, &c.

As to the first point, it was answered, that the disagreement doth relate to the death of the husband, and is now, as if no joynture had been made ab initio. And here the heir shall have Hinton by descent, and he shall be tenant to every præcipe; and if it be brought against him the same day that the husband dieth, the writ shall be good by the disagreement after, and the heir shall have his age, &c. And if the father had been a disseisor, and had conveyed the land, ut supra; now by this agreement of the wife, the heir shall be accounted in by descent, and thereby the entry of the disseisee taken away.

And if the heir in such case taketh a wife, and dieth, by this disagreement after, the wife shall have dower of Hinton; and hath such a possession, quod faciet sororem esse hæredem.

And if that the same day that the husband dieth, the heir levyeth a fine, or acknowledge a statute; or maketh by indenture enrolled a bargain and sale of it; by the said agreement, Hinton shall be subject to such acts of the heir. All which cases prove, that the devisor upon this matter at the time of his death, had a sole estate in feesimple in the mannor of Hinton; and that the third part in value descended to the heir: and so the devise of Thoby good.

It hath been objected, that here is not an immediate descent of which the statute of 34 H. 8. speaks; and here the mannor of Hinton doth not descend immediately; for there was a mean time between the death, and the disagreement; and so the will void for Thoby.

To that it was answered, that this word, [immediatè] sumitur dupliciter, re, & tempore, and shall be taken here immediatè re & statu, scil. that a reversion, or a remainder dependant upon a particular estate in possession which is mean, shall not be allowed for the third part descended; for a descent which takes away an entry, ought to be immediate; for a mediate descent doth not take away an entry, Litt. 92. as the descent of a reversion or remainder.

And if this word [immediatè] had not been in the statute, then the statute might have been construed, that it should be sufficient to leave the third part to descend in reversion or remainder; but this word [immediatè] makes it clear. And therefore the third part which descends, ought to descend immediatè in [274] re, & statu. Yet a reversion upon a lease for years, or for life, with the ancient rent reserved, is sufficient, and is a good and immediate descent of the third part.

And this word here [immediatè] to be construed ratione temporis, is a frivolous construction; for the wore, descent, implys that; for there cannot be an expectant and future descent; for descent is clearly immediate without mean time. But here in this case, the word, immediate, is to be taken in both senses, et re, et tempore; for by the relation of the waiver, it is, as if no joynture had been made, and the heir is to have the profits of the land from the death of his ancestor; and so the descent of Hinton immediatè, et re, et tempore; and, that the same time hath had such reasonable construction, is now to see: the statute of 18 H. 6. cap. 1. is, that the Chancellor shall make patents to bear date the same day that the warrant was made, and not before.

It hath been taken, that if the patents bear date after the warrant entred, they are good. Which see, 19 Eliz. Plow. Com. 492. in Ludford and Gretton's case.

The Statute of Acton Burnel is, that if the extendors extend the land too high, statim respondeant illi qui fecerunt extent. This word of time (statim) shall not be construed, that the extendors shall pay presently, but that they shall pay without delay; i.e. at the day limited in the statute. See 2 H. 4. 17, 18.

It hath been objected, that it is a great inconvenience, that the King for his third part should attend the pleasure of the wife, the time of her election; and therefore the will shall be void.

But the same is no inconvenience, for the joynture never was actually in the wife, to her prejudice, until she entred into the land, &c. And now by the waiver, the joynture is avoided ab initio to all intents, as if it never had been made: so as the King shall be answered of the entire profits after the time of the death of the husband; and may seize the whole land presently, without staying the election of the wife, or taking notice of her joynture.

And so are the words of the diem clausit extremum; tibi præcipimus quod omnia terras & tenementa, of which, &c. et ea salvò custodias donec aliud tibi præceperimus; and that may be before any office found: and those who have any interest in the land, or otherwise may shew the same upon the traverse of the office, or in the Court of Wards, and have allowance of it; and so there is not any prejudice to the King: no more, than when tenant in knight-service deviseth all his lands, there division is to be made, and the King hath not any prejudice by it.

[275] In the true construction of this statute, it is very necessary to consider the intention and meaning of both statutes. And it is certain, that the said statutes were made for the benefit of the subjects, to enable them to dispose of their lands for the preferment of their wives, advancement of their children, and payment of their debts, whereof they were restrained by the Statute of 27 H. 8. of Uses.

The savings in the said statute are for the benefit of the King and the lords; so as provision is made not only for the benefit of the subjects, but also for the profit of the King and other lords.

The disability of the subjects to dispose of their lands, to the intents aforesaid, appears in the preface of the statute of 32 H. 8.

And the favour and grace of the said King towards his subjects, to supply the necessity of subjects, appeareth by the prefaces of both statutes.

The later statute, is an explanation of the former in divers points.

The first statute to persons, having mannors, &c. ex vi termini, includes tenants in tail, joynt-tenants, enfants, idiots, feme-coverts; but the same is explained by the later Act, to be of feesimple only, and of sole estates, and to persons of sound memory, not of coverture. And so, if the Kings tenant deviseth all his land, the same is good for two parts of it; so if he devise all which he hath in feesimple, and leadeth the third part to descend in tail.

This statute shall be taken strict against the heir: for the whole scope and intent of the Parliament was, to bind the heirs, and to enable their fathers to dispose, so as the third part be saved to the King and the lords. And that is manifest, for the estates made by collusion are preserved, and by an express clause in the statute kept in force against the heir; but void as to the lords.

As to certain readers cases, which have been put to prove, that these statutes ought to have a strict construction, I conceive, nihil operatur. A man seised of one acre by disseisin, and of two acres by good title, all holden in chief by knight-service, deviseth the two acres which he hath by good title, and dieth, so as the acre which he hath by disseisin descends to the heir being within age: the King seiseth, the third acre is devested by eigne title; the devise of the other two acres is good against the heir; for it is within the express words of the statute, having a sole estate in fee-simple. And yet by another branch of 34 H. 8. the King for his time, shall have recompence out of the other two acres; and he agreed the law to be so: but the same doth not conclude our case.

[276] A man seised of two acres in socage, and of one acre holden by knight-service in chief of equal value, is disseised of the acre holden in chief, and deviseth the other two acres in fee, the same is a good devise; for it is within the first branch expresly, having a sole estate in feesimple, and not having any lands holden by knight-service; for during the disseisin, he hath not the land whereof he was disseised, and therefore the devise is good for the benefit of the devisee, and the lord is not at any mischief: for the disseisee notwithstanding the disseisin, remains tenant of the lord as to the avowry, and the lord shall have the wardship of such heir, and may enter upon the disseisor, and so have a third part. And that case was put out of Gilbert's reading.

A man seised in fee of two mannors of equal value holden by knights-service in capite; and a third mannor of the same value is conveyed to him by deed of bargain and sale acknowledged; and before enrollment, he deviseth the two first mannors to J. S. in fee, and dieth; and afterwards the indenture is enrolled; yet the devise is not good for the said two mannors by any relation of the bargain and sale enrolled. That case may well be agreed to be law; for the estate doth not vest in the vendee before enrollment, and so the estate was not perfectly in the devisor at the time of the will; for although that the enrollment shall relate to prevent all acts and charges made mean by the vendor; yet it shall not relate to vest the estate, from the time of the delivery of the deed, for the vendee cannot punish a trespass mean; and if the vendee hath a wife, and the vendee dieth before enrollment, and afterwards the deed is enrolled, she shall not be endowed; but here shall be some descent to take away an entry, yet the heir shall have his age. But in our case, it is otherwise; for by the waiver, the joynture was waived ab initio.

And he cited Carrs case, 29 Eliz. in the Court of Wards, the King granted the mannor of C. to George Owen in fee, tenend. in socage, and rendring 94l. per annum; and afterwards granted 54l. parcel of the said rent, to the Earl of Huntington in fee to be holden by knight-service in capite; and afterwards purchased the said rent in fee; and afterwards of the same mannor enfeoffed William Carr, who devised the same for the payment of his debts; and it was holden, that the devise was good against the heir. And the King was not entituled to livery or primer seisin: and therefore the defendant was dismissed. But peradventure the Queen shall have benefit of the Act. See Cook 3 Part, 30, 31. Butler and Baker's case.

The King gives lands unto A. in fee, to hold by knights-service during his life, and afterwards to hold in socage; he may devise the whole: for at the time when the devise took effect, he was tenant in socage.

[277] Lands holden in knight-service, are given to J. S. in tail, scil. to the heirs males of his body, the remainder to the right heirs of J. S. J. S. deviseth these lands, and afterward dieth without issue male, the same is good for two parts; yet during his life, he had not an estate in fee in possession.

The father disseiseth his son and heir apparent of an acre of land holden in chief by knight-service in capite; and afterwards purchaseth a mannor holden in socage, and deviseth the said mannor, and dieth, his heir within age, the devise is good for the whole, and the King shall not have wardship of any part, and that in respect of the remitter, and yet it is within the words, having sole estate in fee of lands holden; and within the saving.

Tenant in tail of an acre of land holden of the King in chief by knight-service, seised of two acres in fee, holden, ut supra, makes a lease for three lives of the acre entailed, reserving the accustomed rent, and afterwards deviseth the other two acres in fee; and afterwards dieth seised of the reversion and rent; the same is a good devise of all the two acres: and here is an immediate descent of the third part, for the same is within the words, in possession, reversion or remainder, or any rent or service incident to any reversion, or any remainder. See the statute of 34 H. 8.

A man seised of three acres of equal value holden by knight-service in capite, assureth one to his wife for her joynture by act executed; and deviseth another to a stranger, and the third to his wife also; the King in this case shall have the third part of every acre: but if the stranger waived the devise, the King shall have the acre to him devised, and the wife shall retain the other two acres, and it shall not go in advantage of the heir. So if he deviseth the said three acres severally to three several persons, to each of them one acre, and the one waives the devise in one acre, the devise of the other two is good; or otherwise, the King shall have the third part of every acre, &c.

[278] CCCLXVII. Mich. 35 Eliz. In the Common Pleas.

The case was, An enfant was made executor; and administration was committed to another; viz. A. durante minori ætate, who brought an action of debt against the debtor, and recovered, and had him in execution; and now the executor came of full age.

It was moved, what should be done in this case, and how the party should be discharged of the execution; for the authority of the administrator is now determined, and he cannot acknowledge satisfaction, or make an acquittance.

Windham, Although the authority of the administrator be determined; yet the record and the judgment remain in force. But peradventure you may have an audita querela. But he conceived, that an administrator could not have such action; for that he is rather a bailiff to the enfant, than an administrator: (see Prince's case, 42 Eliz. Cook 5 Part, 29.) which Rhodes concessit.

A. was bounden unto B. in an obligation of 100l. upon condition, to pay a lesser sum: the obligee made an enfant his executor, and died: administration was committed durante minori ætate to C. to whom A. paid the mony; it was doubted, if that payment was rightful: or, if the mony ought to have been paid to both?

Windham, Doth it appear within the record, that the enfant was made executor, and that administration was committed, ut supra? To which it was answered, No.

Then Windham said, You may upon this matter have an audita querela.

In this case, it was said to be the case of one Gore, 33 Eliz. in the Exchequer, in a scire facias, by an assignee of a bond against an enfant executor: he pleaded, that the administration was committed to A. and his wife during her minority. And it was adjudged no plea.

[279] CCCLXVIII. Mich. 35 Eliz. In the Common Pleas.

Note: it was the opinion of all the justices, that if lessee for 20 years, makes a lease for 10 years, that he may grant the reversion without deed: but in such case if there be a rent reserved, there ought to be a deed, and also an attornment, if the rent will be had.

And it was agreed by them all, that if there be lessee for years, and the lessor granteth the land to the lessee and a stranger, that the reversion shall pass without livery or attornment; and that by the acceptance of the deed by him who ought to attorn: but whether he shall take joyntly or in common, or whether in a moyety or in the whole, the justices were of divers opinions. Ideo quære, for it was not resolved.

I. LAUNTONS CASE.

Emblements.

A. is bound in an obligation, that B. shall enjoy a lease of black acre immediately after his death: the land being sown, the executors of A. take the corn; it was holden, the obligation was not forfeited, for that by the laws the corn did belong to the executors.

II. PASC. 23 ELIZ.

Devise.

A man possessed of a term devised the same to his son when he came to the age of 18 years, and that his wife should have it in the mean time, and made his wife his executrix, and died before the son came to the age of 18 years, the wife took husband: it was holden that she should have the term as executrix, till the son came of the age of 18 years.

[2] III. MICH. 23 ELIZ.

A man made a feoffment in fee sub conditione, ea intentione, that his wife should have the land for her life, the remainder to his younger son in fee: the feoffee died without making such an estate; the heir of the feoffor entred; it was resolved, that it was not a condition, but an estate, which was executed presently according to the intent.

Clark Baron, A cottage proprie loquendo, is where a poor man inhabits, and this being a great messuage cannot be said a cottage; inmates are, where there are more families than one. Manwood, Be it a messuage or a cottage, for more families than one makes a messuage a cottage, as to this statute. Gent. The words of the statute are, There shall not be more families than one in any cottage made, or to be made, and I conceive it ought to be a cottage accounted in law, before the inhabitations of the inmates. Clark. If I grant to you all my cottages in D. my messuages shall not pass: if I marry my daughter, and she and her husband inhabit with me in the same house, are these inmates? Manwood, An inmate is such an one who is at his own finding, and therefore if the husband and

A. recovers debt in the Kings Bench, so as he hath title to sue execution by elegit. The defendant sold his lands, and afterwards A. assigned his execution to the Queen: it was holden, that the Queen should not have prerogative against the feoffee, to have execution of the whole land; and it was holden by Manwood Chief Baron, If execution be had upon a [11] puisne statute, and that is afterward avoided by an elder statute, and the elder statute is satisfied by the execution, now the younger recognizee shall enter without suing forth a new execution.

Testatur; that the said master, with the assent of the brothers and sisters aforesaid, had leased to A. in cujus rei testimonium, the said master, with the assent of the brothers and sisters aforesaid had put their common seal: Ayliffe and Clench Justices, held that the lease was void, for here the brothers and sisters, being one entire body with the master, are not parties to the indenture, but give their consent only: and it is not like to the case, where abbot or prior makes a lease for years, with the assent of their covent, for the monks and friers, being dead persons in law, cannot be parties to the lease; but here in the case at Bar, the brothers and sisters are persons able in law: and it is not like to the case of parson, patron, and Ordinary, where the parson with the assent of the patron and Ordinary, grant a rent-charge, for there the parson is the principal grantor, and the others have not any express interest in the land charged: Gawdy Justice contrary, It is more honourable for Judges to maintain leases made by corporations, than for to permit them to avoid the same: and he said for law, If two joyntenants be of lands, and they make the like indenture, viz. testatur, that one of them with the assent of the other deviseth the land, in witness whereof he, with the assent of the other, hath put his seal, it is a good demise by them both: but Clench said, that is not like our case, for the two joyntenants are distinct persons and the one of them may assent to the other; but in our case, the master, brothers, and sisters are but one person in law, and a body cannot be distinct, so as one can consent to the other: which Ayliffe concessit: Wray Chief Justice was absent in the Star-Chamber.

By which he willed, that after his death his goods should be divided and parted betwixt his children, according to the laudable custom of London, and averred in his libel that the goods and chattels whereof the testator died possessed, amounts to such a sum, and that it belonged unto him, being one of his children, to demand so much, virtute legationis prædict. The defendant came and prayed a prohibition, and Wray Chief Justice conceived he ought to have it, for here is not any legacy, but the testator setteth forth his meaning, that his pleasure is that the custom of London should be observed in the disposition of his goods ; and the said Clare is put to his writ de rationabili parte bonorum. But yet afterwards, a special consultation was granted.

XLVIII. PASC. 27 ELIZ. IN THE COMMON PLEAS.

Pleadings.

In a writ of entry for disseisin, the tenant said, that the house in demand is within the City of London, and that the said city is an ancient city, and that King Henry 3. concessit civibus civitatis prædict. quod non implacitentur de terris, & tenementis suis, &c. extra muros civitatis prædict. and said that he himself is a citizen of London, and demanded judgment of the writ ; and to the pleading he further said, Sed illis rectum teneatur infra civitatem prædictam secundum consuetudinem civitatis prædict. [13] Exception was taken to the plea, because the tenant did not shew before that by their custom they ought to be impleaded : and by the opinion of the whole Court, the tenant ought to have shewed, that the citizens for their lands there ought to be impleaded in the Hustings, &c. And the general words in the plea Sed illis rectum teneatur infra civitatem prædictam secundum consuetudinem civitatis prædict. do not supply the defect aforesaid : and afterwards it was awarded that the tenant plead ouster.

XLIX. HUNT AND SONES CASE.

Assumpsit.

An action upon the case by W. Hunt against W. Sone. The plaintiff declared, quod cum idem Hunt was seised in his demesn as of fee, of certain lands, and shewed the same in certain; prædict. Sone in consideration that the said Hunt permit the said Sone occupare terras prædict. ab eodem die. 20 Julij 27 Eliz. usque ad secundum diem Novembris, which should be in anno 1589. assumed and promised, that he the said William Sone ad festum omnium sanctorum proxime sequend. 10l. 2s. 6d. ac ab inde annuatim durante dict. termino. 20l. 5s. ad Festa Annunciationis Beatæ Mariæ, ac omnium sanctorum, per æquales portiones solvend. eidem Hunt bene & fideliter contentare vellet, at licet prædict. W. Hunt permisit præfat. Sone occupare terras prædict. a dict. 28 die Julij 27 Eliz. usque ad secundum diem Novemb. 28 Eliz. licetque etiam post dict. 20 diem Julij 27 Eliz. & ante prædict. diem secund. Annunciationis 28 Eliz. ac alia 10l. 2s. 6d. ad fest. omnium sanctorum an 28. Eliz. superdict. nondum solvit. The defendant pleaded, that the plaintiff entred into parcel of the premises 6 October 28 Eliz. & eadem occupare eundem Sone non permisit; upon which they were at issue, and it was found for the plaintiff; it was moved in stay of judgment, that the plaintiff had no cause of action before that all the term was expired; for it is an entire assumpsit, and cannot be severed by action, and therefore it was said, that if I promise to pay you 10l. viz. at such a feast 5l. and at such a feast other 5l. there before the last day of payment no action lieth, for the sum of 20l. is one sum entire: but if I promise to pay another, at Easter next 10l. and at Midsummer as much, here they are several assumpsits, and upon default of payment of the first sum an action will lie without excepting the latter payment. But at last the Court agreed, that judgment, notwithstanding that exception [14] should be given for the plaintiff, and that the declaration was good enough, as well in respect of the exception aforesaid, as also that the word (licet) was effectual enough to set forth the permission.

Wray Chief Justice was of opinion that the conusee should hold the land discharged of the lease. Gawdy, contrary, In case of a rent granted, or a recognizance acknowledged by the husband, the conusee of the fine shall avoid any of them; but in this case the conusee meddles with the land it self, and an estate in the land is conveyed by the husband, which none but the wife or her heirs shall avoid; and if the wife, after the death of her husband, accept the rent upon such a lease, by that the lease is confirmed.

Gawdy said it was good enough, for domus in the declaration contains all things contained in the new assignment; but if the declaration had been of a close, and the new assignment of a barn, it had not been good. Wray Chief Justice, Domus est nomen collectivum, and contains many buildings, as barns, stables, &c. And such was the opinion of the Court.

LX. Par Marquess of Northamptons Case.

Leases, by a Baron contrary to Act of Parliament, void.

Par Marquess of Northampton took to wife the Lady Bourchier, heir of the Earl of Essex: who levied a fine of the lands of the lady sur conusans de droit, &c. with a grant and render to them for life, the remainder to the right heirs of the body of the said lady. And afterwards by Act of Parliament 35 H. 8. it was enacted, that the said lady should retain part of her inheritance, and dispose thereof as a feme sole, and that the said marquess should have the residue, and that he might lease the same by himself without the wife for 21 years, or lesser term, yielding the ancient rent, being land which had been usually demised, &c. The marquess leased the same for 21 years, and afterwards durante termino prædict. he let the same land to another for 21 years, to begin after the determination of the former lease. It was moved that the last lease was void, for three causes; 1. Because the marquess had but for life, and then it cannot be intended, that the statute would enable one, who had an estate so determinable to make such a lease, which peradventure could not begin in his life. 2. The letter of the Act is 21 years or under, and the word (under) strongly expounds the meaning of the Act to be not to extend to such an estate, for hereupon the matter is a lease for 40 years. 3. Because the land leased is the inheritance of the wife; and it was said that in the case of one Heydon, such a private Act of Parliament was strictly construed, it was enacted that all copies for three lives granted by the Lord Admiral, of the lands of his wife which was Queen Katherine should be good: the Admiral granted in reversion for three lives. It was holden that the grant was void, and not warranted by the said private Act of Parliament. Dyer, The words are general, omnes dimissiones, therefore not to be restrained to special leases. Manwood, A feme covert by duress joyns in a lease with her husband, it shall bind her. The case was adjourned.

Dyer, The first lessee hath election which of them he will sue, 18 H. 6. 1. in debt, against lessee for years, for the arrearages of rent reserved upon it, he needs not declare that the lessee had entred, for the contract is the ground of the action 44 Eliz. 3. 5. LXIII. SHREWSBURY AND THE INHABITANTS OF ASHTONS CASE.

Action upon Statute of Huy and Cry.

An action was brought by Shrewsbury against the inhabitants of the hundred of Ashton in the county of Bucks, upon the Statute of Huy and Cry: it was moved by Fleetwood Serjeant, for the defendants, that if upon such huy and cry the inhabitants do their endeavours as much as in them is, to pursue and take the malefactors, and yet they cannot apprehend them, that in reason they ought not to be charged: but the whole case was very strongly against him: for Anderson Chief Justice said that the inhabitants of the hundred in which the robbery is done are bound to apprehend the felons, or to satisfie the party robbed: and the party robbed is not bound to give notice to the inhabitants, nor to direct them which way the felons took their flight, but the inhabitants are bound to pursue the [19] felons without any such instruction. And afterwards the inquest was taken, and gave a verdict in this manner: that where the plaintiff had declared that the robbery was done in the parish of D. in the hundred aforesaid, the jury found, that the place where the robbery was done was a lane within the said hundred, and that the one side of the said lane was within the parish of S. and the other side within the said parish of D. and that the robbery was done on the side of the said lane, which was in the parish of S. and prayed the opinion of the Court upon the matter: and the whole Court was clear of opinion that notwithstanding the exception, the plaintiff should have judgment, for here is the right hundred, which ought to be charged, and the mistaking of the parish was not to the purpose.

LXV. THE QUEEN AND THE EARL OF SHREWSBURIES CASE.

Grants of the King. Office of Marshal of the Kings Bench. Recital in Grants of the King.

The Queen granted to George Earl of Shrewsbury, an. 15 Eliz. the office of Earl Marshal of England, and now came the said earl and prayed that J. N. one of his servants, to whom he had granted the office of Marshal of the Kings Bench, might be admitted to it, because that the same is an office incident to his office, and in his power to grant; and that Knowles, to whom the Queen had granted the same office of Marshal of the Kings Bench, which she had by the attainder of Thomas Duke of Norf. might be removed. And a president was shewed M. 14. and 15. Eliz. between Gawdy and Verney, where it is agreed, that [20] the said office was a several office from the said great office, and not incident to it; and as to the case of 39 H. 6. 33 & 34. the truth is, that the said Marshal of the Kings Bench was granted expresly to the duke, and so he had it, not as incident to his office of Marshal of England: on the other side were three presidents shewed; in the time of Edward 2. that the office of Marshal of the Kings Bench was appendant to the said office of Marshal of England. And 8 H. 2. when the said great office was in the King, he granted the said office of Marshal of the Kings Bench: but 26 R. 2. both offices were rejoyned by Parliament as they were in ancient time before; and there was also shewed one patent of 4 E. 4. and another of 19 H. 8. by which it appeared that the said inferiour office had ever been part of the grand office; then it was moved, that when the said office is in the Kings hands, and the King grants the said under office, if the same was for ever severed from the grand office. Wray Chief Justice, It is a severance of it; for the chief office is an office of dignity, which remains in the King; but the under office is an office of necessity, and the King himself cannot execute it, wherefore of necessity he ought to grant it. Another matter was moved, if the grant of the King to the Earl of Shrewsbury was good, because in the grant to Verney of the under office, it is not recited according to the statute of 6 H. 8. cap. 9. As 20 Ass. 6. the King seised of the honor of Pickering, to which a forrest was appendant: the bailywick of which forrest he granted in fee rendring rent, and afterwards he granted the honor with the appurtenances, and afterwards the baily committed a forfeiture, and the same was found in eyre, for which the office of bailywick was forfeited; the grantee of the honor seized it; yet it was holden that the King should have the rent: and here in this case, the Earl of Shrewsbury shall have this office in his power to grant it, and so much the rather, for that it was granted but for life.

Upon an habeas corpus for one Hinde, the warden of the Fleet returned, that Hinde was committed to the said prison by the commandment of the Commissioners in causes ecclesiastical. It was holden, that the warden in his return, ought to certifie the cause for which he was committed; and then upon the return the Court ought to examine the cause if it be sufficient or not. But if one be committed to prison, by the commandment of the Queens Privy Council, there the cause needs not to be shewed in the return, because it may concern the state of the realm, which ought not to be published.

18 ELIZ. IN THE KINGS BENCH.

LXXII. BETTUANS CASE.

Fines levied to uses. Feoffment to Uses.

In ejectione firmæ, the case was, A fine was levied to Cook and three others; and by an indenture between the parties to the fine it was declared, that the said fine was levied ea intentione, that the conusees should make an estate of the said land to such a person, which the conusor should name, and in the end of the said indenture was a proviso, that the conusees should not be seized to any other use, but to that which was specified before, and that the conusees should not incumber the said lands. And the opinion of all the Justices of the Kings Bench was, that upon the said indenture, the conusees are seized to their own use until the conusor hath made nomination; and if he dieth without any nomination, then the use should [23] vest in his heir: it was further given in evidence, that the conusor named the said Cook one of the conusees, and willed that the other three conusees should release to him. Gawdy Justice held, that that by nomination, the use did vest in Cook, for he said, it had been adjudged, that where before the statute of 27 H. 8. one infeoffed divers persons to his use; and the feoffor willed that his feoffees should make estate to such person as his son and heir should name, and died; the son and heir named one of the feoffees; that the same was a good nomination, &c. Wray and Jefferies to the contrary; for after this release Cook is in the whole by the conusor, and not by his co-feoffees, and by this limitation the conusor ought to name such a person which ought to take the estate: and so cannot one joyntenant from his companion, &c. LXXIII. THE BISHOP OF ROCHESTERS CASE.

Grant of a Reversion by a Bishop. Attornment.

In ejectione firmæ the case upon evidence was, The Bishop of Rochester, 4 E. 6. made a lease for years to B. rendring rent, and afterwards granted the reversion to C. for 99 years, rendring the ancient rent, habend. from the day of the lease without impeachment of waste, which grant was confirmed by the dean and chapter: but B. the lessee did not attorn; and in default of attornment, it was holden by the whole Court, that the lease was void, for it is made by way of grant of the reversion: but by Catlin, If the bishop had granted the reversion and also demised the land for 99 years, it should pass as a lease to begin first after the former lease determined. And as to the attornment, it was given in evidence, that B. after the notice of the grant to

C. had speech with C. to have a new lease from him, because he had then in his lease but 8 years to come, but they could not agree upon the price: and the justices conceived that that was an attornment, because he had admitted the said C. to have power to make a new lease: also the said B. being in company with one R. and seeing the said C. coming towards him, said to the said R. See my landlord, meaning the said C. Bromely solicitor, the same is no attornment being spoken to a stranger. Barham contrary, because he was present: it was holden by the whole Court that it was a good attornment: but if the attornment was not before the bishop was translated to Winchester, the lease should be void; and although the confirmation of the dean and chapter was before the attornment, so as no estate was vested in C. yet it was good enough, for the assent of the dean and chapter is sufficient, be it before or after; by Catlin, Southcoat, and Whiddar Justices, but Wray held the contrary.

Upon the Statute of 5 Eliz. of Perjury. Note.

The Lady Newman, sister of James Wingfield, lately deceased, exhibited a bill of complaint in the Star Chamber, against one Shyriffe dwelling in Dublin in Ireland, and two others, complaining, that the said Shyriffe had forged a deed, purporting that the said James had by that deed given unto him all his goods, and also that the said James had by that deed assigned to the said Shyriffe a lease for years of lands in Ireland, and also the said Shyriffe had procured the two other defendants to depose upon their oaths before the Town-Clerk of London, that the said deed was sealed and delivered by the said James as his deed. It was moved by the counsel of the defendant, that these matters of forgery were not within the statute of 5 Eliz. nor also the perjury, or the procurement thereof: upon which the Lords of the Council there, referred the consideration of the said statute to both the Chief Justices: who at the next day in Court declared their opinions upon the said matters, i.e. that the said matters did not extend to the forgery of a deed containing a gift of chattels personals, which see clearly by the statute which as to that purpose extends but to obligations, bills obligatorie, acquittances, releases or other discharges, and that also a deed of assignment of a lease of lands in Ireland is not within the said statute; and also they were of opinion, that the said perjury, and the procurement of it was not punishable by [26] the said statute, because the oath was taken coram non Judice, for the Town-Clerk of London could not take an oath in such a case, no more than a private person. But because that the bill in the perclose and conclusion of it was, (contrary to the laws and statutes of this realm) the two Chief Justices were of opinion, that the said Court might punish these offences as misdemeanors at the common law, but not according to the statute; and afterwards Shyriffe was fined, and by order of the Court to stand upon the pillory.

LXXX. THE QUEEN AND LORD VAUXES CASE.

Bills.

In the Exchequer Chamber before the Chancellor, &c. the Lord Vaux brought a writ of error upon a judgment given against him in the Court of Exchequer, and assigned for error that a bill was exhibited against him, that the Lord Vaux had taken certain goods of the Queen at Westminster in the county of Middlesex, and also had intruded into the rectory of Ethelborough in the county of Northampton; whereas the Queen ought to have brought several bills being for several causes, arising within several counties. But it was resolved by the whole Court, that the bill of the Queen was good enough, and here is no mischief; for if the defendant will plead not guilty, two several venire facias shall be awarded, one into Middlesex, the other into the county of Northampton.

LXXXI. OWEN AND MORGANS CASE.

Common Recovery. Feme not party to the Writ of Covenant not bound by a Recovery.

George Owen brought a scire facias against Morgan to have execution of a fine levied 8 Eliz. by which fine the land was given to the conusee and his heirs; the conusee rendred the same to the husband and wife, and to the heirs of the body of the husband, (note that the husband was the conusor) the remainder in fee to the now demandant; and note that the writ of covenant was between the conusee plaintiff and the husband deforceant, without naming the wife. And afterwards the husband suffered a common recovery without naming of the wife; the husband and wife died without issue, and now Owen, to whom the remainder was limited by the fine, brought a scire facias; in bar of which the recovery was pleaded. It was argued by Shuttleworth Serjeant, that the said recovery had against the husband was a good bar, and should bar the remainder; and the wife ought not to be named in, or party to the recovery, for that nothing accrued to her by the fine, because she was not party to the writ of covenant, and to the conusans, vide 32 H. 8. [27] Fines 108. LXXXII. SIR RICHARD LEE AND ARNOLDS CASE.

Reservation of Rents upon a joynt Lease. Assigns. Condition destroyed in part good in part. Conditions divided. Grantee of parcel of the Reversion is an Assignee within 32 H. 8. of Conditions. Condition apportioned. Condition suspended. Severance. Conditions by act in Law divided not by Act of the Party. Statute of 32 H. 8. of Conditions taken by Equity. Difference between a Reservation and a Contract. Condition suspended in part is suspended in all.

Sir Richard Lee, Kt. seized of three manors, made a lease of them to Sir Nicholas Arnold for certain years, reserving for the one manor 5l. and for the other manor 10l. and for the third manor 10l. upon condition that if the said rents, or any of them, or any part, &c. be behind, a re-entry into all the manors; and afterwards he bargained and sold the reversion of one of the said manors to William Winter in fee: and afterwards by deed indented and inrolled, bargained and sold the two other manors, and for the rent of one of the said manors, the vendee did re-enter into all the manors. Manwood, Here are several reservations several rents, and several leases; for although that the words are joynt, yet by construction they are become several; as land given to an abbot and a secular man, although here be joynt words, yet they are tenants in common, Litt. 296. And if I sell to you two horses, the one for 5l. and the other for 5l. here are two several contracts; the parties to whom these reversions are assured, ut supra, are assignees within the statute of 32 H. 8. by which it is enacted, that assignees may take advantage of conditions; for such an assignee is not meerly in by act of law, as the lord by escheat, and he is not such an assignee; but is in by conveyance: the lessor enters upon his lessee and makes his feoffment and the lessee re-enters, now the feoffee is an assignee; and this condition is destroyed in part and continued in part: if one hath common in the land of another for 20 beasts, and releases his common for 10 beasts, the common for the residue remains; but if he purchaseth part of the land in which he hath common, the whole common is destroyed; a feoffment to two with warranty, and one of them releases the warranty, all the warranty is gone: as to the condition for as much as it is not collateral, but incident to the reversion, it may be severed and is of the same nature as the rent and reversion. A man possessed of lands for 20 years, and seized of other lands in fee, leaseth all the land for 10 years, reserving rent, with clause of re-entry, and dieth, now the heir hath a reversion for the land in fee, and the executor for the other land, and so the condition is divided according to the reversion; so if lands were given to one in general tail and others in special tail and he thereof makes a lease rendring rent and dieth having several issues inheritable to each tail, now the condition shall go according to the rent: and he conceived, that the grantee of parcel of the reversion is an assignee within the said [28] statute, as if a lease for years be made rendring rent, with clause of re-entry. The lessor grants the reversion for life, such a grantee is an assignee within the said statute. Jefferies, The condition is gone: A. leaseth two acres for years, rendring rent with clause of re-entry: the lessor accepts a surrender of one acre, the whole condition is gone, but the rent shall be apportioned. A parson leaseth land, whereof he is seized in his own right, and land whereof he is seized in the right of his church, for years rendring rent, with clause of re-entry, and dieth, the rent shall go according to his respective capacity and the condition divided: so if part of the land so demised be evicted, the rent shall be apportioned, and the condition also: and he said that the bargainee is not an assignee within the statute. Barham, If the reservation doth not make the lease several, yet it shall make the reversion several, &c. Mead, 6 Eliz. The Court was moved in this case: A. leased for years rendring rent, with clause of re-entry, and afterwards became bound to another by recognizance, the recognizee extended the moiety of the rent and reversion in execution; and the clear opinion of the Court was, that the condition was suspended: if A. let lands for years rendring rent, with clause of re-entry to a man and to a feme sole, and afterwards the lessor intermarries with the feme, the condition is suspended. Mounson, Justice, The demise is joynt, although that the reservation be several. Cestuy que use is seized of an acre in possession, and of another in reversion, and makes a lease for years of both rendring rent, here are several rents. 13 E. 3. A. seized of two acres of lands before the Statute of Westminster 3. made a feoffment thereof to hold the one acre by knight service and the other in socage; the tenancy in such case is several, 9 Ass. 24. a lease is made of a mill, and of a wood, rendring for the mill 10s. and for the wood 20s. these are several rents: and so here they are several rents and several conditions: two tenants in common make a lease for years rendring rent upon clause of re-entry, the condition is several according to the reversion, for joynt words in the letter have sometimes, as the matter requires constructions in the severalty. As A. and B. covenant by indenture, and are reciprocally bound the one to the other to perform all covenants contained in the said indenture, the same is to be construed such covenants, which on the part of A. are to be performed, and so of the other part B. And he conceived that by the distracting of the reversion the condition was gone: a condition by an act in law may be divided but not by the act of the party. As a man makes a lease for years rendring rent, with clause of re-entry, takes a wife and dyeth; the wife recovers the third part of the land devised for her dower, now that third part is discharged of the condition during the estate in dower, but the residue is subject to the condition; and vide F. N. B. 21. the heir at common law [29] shall have a writ of error for his part; and the heir in borough English for his part: two joyntenants make a lease for life upon condition, and one releaseth the condition, the same barred the condition. And he conceived that the bargainee is an assignee: for the statute of 32 H. 8. shall be taken by equity, &c. As if a man leaseth lands for years to begin at Michaelmas next, and before Michaelmas he makes a feoffment, and at Mich. the lessee enters, the feoffee is an assignee within the statute: two joyntenants make a lease for years rendring rent with clause of re-entry, and the one releaseth to his companion, he is an assignee within the statute. Manwood, He is an assignee and in by the bargainor; the words of the statute of 32 H. 8 are, Grantees or assignees to or by any person or persons, and here the bargainee is an assignee to the bargainor as to the use; and for the possession he is an assignee by him: he who is in by a common recovery is not an assignee, although the recovery was to his use, for the writ disaffirms his possession: if tenant for life be disseised and he in the reversion confirms the estate of the disseisor, and the tenant for life re-enters, the disseisor is now an assignee, but otherwise it is if he in the reversion doth release to the disseisor: and he conceived, that the lessor should recover part of the land in an action of waste, or enter in part of the land for a forfeiture, for an alienation in fee that the condition remains. Harper, Several reservations do not make several leases, for the reservation is not of the essence of the lease, for it is good without any reservation: and whereas it hath been said, that a lease is a contract, I say, that there is a great diversity between a reservation and a contract: for if I sell to you a horse for 40s. and afterwards I take this horse out of your possession; yet I shall have an action of debt for the 40s. But if I lease land to you reserving rent, and afterwards enter into parcel of the land demised, I shall not have the rent: and if I lease two acres for years with several reservations, I shall have but one action of waste, but several avowries according to the several reservations. And here if any part of any of the said rents be behind, the party may re-enter into the whole, therefore the lease is but una & eadem. And I conceive, that the assignee of the assignee is by the statute to take advantage of the condition even to the twentieth degree, as a warranty to one of his heirs and assigns, extendeth to the twentieth assignee. But here in our case, he is not such an assignee that shall take advantage, &c. for he is in by the statute, scil. in the post, but not in the per, and here the bargainee hath but an use by the act of the party, and the possession of the statute of 27 H. 8. But admitting that he is an assignee, yet he is an assignee but of part, and therefore shall not have advantage, &c. When a condition is suspended in part, it is suspended in all. A. leaseth lands for years upon condition, and afterwards the lessor [30] confirms his estate in part for life, the condition is gone. Dyer, The lease is one and entire, although there be several reservations, for here are not several capacities, nor several interests. 42 Ass. Two joyntenants lease for life, rendring rent to one of them, yet the rent and reversion shall be to both of them; but if it be by deed indented, the rent shall go to one only, according to the literal reservation, vide Litt. 80. 346. But if the lease had been made by several limitations as habendum one manor for 20s. and the other manor for 10s. then the lease and the reversion had been several; but here the rent shall not rule the reversion, but the reversion the rent, and the rent shall be of the same nature as the reversion. Tenant for life makes a feoffment in fee upon condition, and re-enters for the condition broken, now by that re-entry the freehold is reduced to the lessee for life, and the fee unto the lessor; but the forfeiture remains. Two joyntenants, one of them makes a feoffment in fee of his moiety upon condition, and for the breach of the condition re-enters, the joynt estate is revived: and he conceived that the grantee of part of the estate, or part of the land should not take advantage of the condition; and he said that the bargainor is an assignee within the statute: if tenant in tail makes a lease for years, and afterwards bargains and sells the reversion, the vendee hath a fee simple determinable, and may enter for the condition broken: if a reversion be granted to two and to the heirs of one of them, they are assignees within the statute, and if he, who hath but an estate for life, surviveth, he also is an assignee, for the entire reversion passeth out of the grantor, and that is my rule. Judgment was given against the re-entry.

And both the said parties submitted themselves to the judgment and arbitrement of Mr. Godfrey, a man learned in the law, concerning the said land, and the title of the defendant to the same: the defendant in consideration that the plaintiff promised to the defendant, that if the said Mr. Godfrey should adjudge the said copy to be good and sufficient for the title of the defendant, that then he would suffer the said defendant to enjoy the said land accordingly without molestation, the defendant reciprocally promised to the plaintiff, that if the said Mr. Godfrey should adjudge the said copy not to be sufficient to maintain the title of the defendant, that then he would deliver and surrender the possession of the land to the plaintiff without any suit. And shewed further that the said Mr. Godfrey did award the said copy utterly to be insufficient, &c. Yet the defendant continued the possession of the said land: it was moved that the same was not a good and sufficient consideration to ground an assumpsit. But Gawdy Justice, said it was a good and sufficient consideration, because it was to avoid controversies and suits: and afterwards judgment was given for the plaintiff.

Difference between an Interest and a Limitation.

A. granted to B. a rent-charge out of his lands, to begin when J. S. died without issue of his body, J. S. dyes, having issue, which issue dyes without issue. Dyer held that the grant shall not take effect, for J. S. at the time of his death had issue, and therefore from thence the grant shall not begin, and if not then, then not at all. And Manwood said, that if the words had been, to begin when J. S. is dead without issue of his body, then such a grant shall take effect when the issue of J. S. dies without issue, &c. If donee in tail hath issue which dies without issue, the formedon in the reverter shall suppose that the donee himself died without issue, for there is an interest, and there is a diversity between an interest and a limitation; for if I give land between A. and B. for term of their lives, if any of them dye, the survivor shall hold the whole; but if I give lands to A. for the lives of B. and C. now if B. and C. dye, the whole estate is determined, because it is but a limitation, and B. and C. have not any interest. A. seized of a manor, leased the same for years, rendring rent, with clause of re-entry; and afterwards levied a fine sur conusans de droit, &c. to the use of himself and his heirs, the rent being demanded is behind. Dyer, A. cannot re-enter, for although the rent in right passeth without attornment, yet he is without remedy for the same without attornment, and it would be hard without attornment to re-enter; it was here moved further, if the conusor be an assignee within the statute of 32 H. 8. Manwood, The reversion of a termor is granted by fine, there wants privity for an action of debt, waste, and re-entries: but if the conusee dieth without heir, although that in right it was in the conusee, yet the lord by escheat shall make avowry, and yet the conusee by whom he claims could not: and in the case at Bar, the conusee himself could not; but the conusor being cestuy que use, who is in by act of law, shall avow, and re-enter without attornment, for the conusor is in by the statute of 20 H. 8. Harper, The heir of the conusee shall avow and re-enter before attornment. Dyer, 13 H. 4. The father leaseth for years rendring rent, with clause of re-entry, the father demands the rent which is not paid, the father dyeth, the son cannot re-enter, for the rent doth not belong unto him; and therefore in the case at Bar, the conusor cannot avow for the rent before attornment, therefore not re-enter: and in case of bargain and sale, the bargainee is assignee within the statute, but not the conusor in this case.

Lease by Tenant at Will if a Disseisin.

Tenant at will made a lease from year to year, Dyer conceived that it was not a disseisin, but the lease was void; and he said, that the book of 12 E. 4. 12. was not law. For he who disseiseth a man ought to claim inheritance in the land, whereof the disseisin is done. Harper conceived that the said book of 12 E. 4. 12. was good law, for a lease at will is a lease at the will of both parties, and therefore when the lessee makes a lease for years, his will is determined, and he will not hold at will. Manwood agreed with Dyer; for if tenant at will lease for years, rendring rent, before that the lessee for years, entreth the tenant at will shall not have any rent for it was not a perfect contract; otherwise it is where a man seized of lands leaseth the same, ut supra. If one entreth into my land, and occupieth the same of his own head, claiming to hold the same at my will, and afterwards I demand of him a certain rent for the occupation of my land, he is now my tenant at will; which all the justices granted.

C. MICH. 14 ELIZ. IN THE COMMON PLEAS.

A man seized of a pasture, within which are two great groves and wood, known by the name of a wood, leased the same by indenture for years, and also in the same pasture were certain hedgrows and trees there growing sparsim, & by the same indenture bargained and sold to the lessee all woods and underwoods in and upon the premisses; and further, that it shall and may be lawful to the lessee to cut down and carry away the same at all times during the term. Harper said the hedgrows did not pass by these words, for they are not known by the name of woods, 14 H. 8. 2. Manwood held the contrary. Mounson contrary to Manwood, for the words of the grant may be supplied by other in it, viz. woods. Dyer held that these hedgrows should pass, for the grant is general. It was further moved, if by these words the lessee might again cut them, &c. or but once. Harper, Manwood and Mounson, three of the justices, held, that he might cut them but once. But Dyer held the contrary & said so it should be, if the words had been (growing upon the premisses) and this word (growing) although it sounds in the present tense, yet it shall be taken also in the future tense: if not that the word tunc be laid, for that is a word of restraint. The case which was argued in the Chancery, 27 H. 8. where I was present, was this, The prior of St. Johns let a commandry; provided [37] that if the said prior, or any of his brethren there being commanders, will dwell thereupon, then the said lease to be void. And it was doubted if that proviso did extend to the successor; for this word (being) in the present tense, and yet it was holden by Fitzherbert, that it should be taken in the future tense, and so to extend to the successor, but otherwise if the words had been (nunc) being.

CI. CONIES CASE.

Devises. Tail. Devisee, who shall first take.

A man seized of lands in fee devised, that this wife should take the profits of his lands, until Mary his daughter and heir should come to the age of sixteen years; and if the said Mary died, that J. S. should be his heir. Manwood said, that the daughter, after she had attained the age of sixteen years, should have the lands in tail, for devises shall be construed, according to the interest of the devisor; if they have any certainty or reason; but no intent shall be taken against reason and certainty. It is certain the daughter shall not have fee-simple, for that should have descended to her without any devise; and these words (if she dye) cannot be intended a condition, for it is certain that she shall dye; but if the words had been, if she dye before the age of sixteen years, J. S. should be his heir, that had been a condition; and if the words had been, that after the death of Mary, J. S. should be his heir: so as the estate tail remains in the daughter. Mounson and Harper contrary. And that she shall have but for life; Mounson said, that if Mary had been a stranger to the devisor, she had taken nothing: and this case was put by Barham Serjeant, A man devised 100l. to his youngest daughter, and 100l. to his middle daughter, and 100l. to his eldest daughter, and that all these sums should be levied of the profits of his lands, it was holden by the better opinion, that the youngest daughter should be first paid, and then the middle, and then the eldest daughter, &c. and that he said was Conies case.

Estate executed. Extinguishment. Tenants in Common.

A man made a lease for life, and afterwards made a lease to another for years to begin after the death of the tenant for life: the lessee for years died intestate, the Ordinary committed letters of administration to A. the tenant for life and A. joyned in the purchase of the fee-simple of the land demised; it was holden by the justices in this case, that the fee was executed for one moiety, for the remainder for years, was not any impediment to the execution of it. Manwood con-[38]-ceived that the term was not extinct, for the same is not properly a term, but only an interest of a term, which cannot be surrendred. Mounson, He hath the term in auter droit as administrator, and therefore it cannot be extinct. Dyer, If an executor hath a term, and purchaseth the fee-simple, the term is determined. A woman termor for years takes husband, who purchaseth the fee, the term is extinct by Manwood, for the husband hath done an act, which destroys the term, scil. the purchase. But if a woman being a termor, marrieth with him in the remainder, the term continueth; for here it is not the act of the husband, but the act of law. It was the opinion of Dyer, that in this case the tenant for life and the administrators should be tenants in common of the fee.

CIII. MICH. 17 ELIZ. IN THE COMMON PLEAS.

Possessio Fratris.

The husband is seized in right of his wife of certain customary lands in fee, and he and his wife, by licence of the lord make a lease for years by indenture, rendring rent, have issue two daughters, and the husband dyeth; the wife takes another husband, and they have issue a son and a daughter, the husband and wife dye, the son is admitted to the reversion, and dyeth without issue; and by Manwood, that reversion shall descend to all the daughters, notwithstanding the half blood, for the estate for years which is made by indenture by license of the lord is a demise, and a lease according to the order of the common law, and according to the nature of the demise the possession shall be adjudged, which possession cannot be said possession of the copyholder, for his possession is customary, and the other is meer contrary, therefore the possession of the one shall not be the possession of the other, therefore there shall be no possessio fratris in this case: but if one had been the guardian by custom, or the lease had been made by surrender, there the sister of the half blood should not inherit. And Mead said the case of the guardian had been adjudged. Mounson agreed: and it was said, that if a copyhold doth descend to the son, he is not a copyholder before admittance, but he may take the profits, and punish a trespass before admittance.

CIV. PASC. 19 ELIZ. IN THE COMMON PLEAS.

Forfeiture. Quære.

A parson let his rectory for three years, and covenanted, that the lessee shall have and enjoy it during the said term, without expulsion, or any thing done or to be done by the lessor, and is also bound in an obligation to the lessee to perform the said covenant. Afterwards for not reading of the articles he was deprived ipso facto, by the statute of 13 Eliz. The patron [39] presented another, who being inducted ousted the lessee; wherefore an action was brought upon the obligation. It was the opinion of all the justices, that this matter is not any cause of action; for the lessee was not ousted by any act done by the lessor, but rather for non feasans; and so out of the compass of the covenant aforesaid; as if a man be bound that he shall not do any waste, permissive waste is not within the danger of it.

It was clearly resolved by the Court in this case, that the entry of the issue in tail was lawful, notwithstanding that the disseisin was done to another estate than that which was to be bound by the warranty, scil. to the estate for life, vide 50 E. 3. 12. & 13, 46 E. 3. 6. CVI. SCOT AND SCOTS CASE.

Accompt. Abatement of Writ.

Bartholomew Scot brought a writ of accompt against Thomas Scot: Thomas Scot sum' fuit ad respondend. Barth. Scot quod reddat ei rationabilem computum suum de tempore quo fuit receptor denariorum, &c. And declared quod cum the said Thomas Scot fuit receptor denariorum, &c. & recepisset, so much by the hands of such a one, &c. Cumque idem Thomas habuisset & recepisset diversa bona, and shewed what, ad merchandizand, &c. Exception was taken to the declaration, because the writ and declaration is general against the defendant as receiver, whereas for such goods as the defendant had received ad merchandizand. he ought to have been charged as bayliff, quod Curia concessit, vide Book Entries 19. 46 E. 3. 9. And afterwards the defendant traversed severally both the charges, whereupon several issues were joyned, and both found for the plaintiff: and as to the monies, with the receipt of which he was charged as receiver, the plaintiff had judgment; and as to the others, which he received ad merchandizandum, the writ abated. And it was said by the Court, that the writ should have abated in the whole, unless the several issues had helped the matter, because the plaintiff might have had an action for part in other manner. CVII. MORGAN AND COXES CASE.

Brief de Fama & gestu.

Morgan exhibited a bill of perjury in the Star-Chamber, against one Cox, setting forth, that whereas he was bound to his good behaviour by recognizance acknowledged in the Kings Bench, and he in discharge of the said recognizance had obtained a writ de fama & gestu, to enquire of his conversation, and therefore at the sessions in the county of Devon, where the said Morgan was dwelling, the grand jury charged with the said matter, the said Cox gave evidence to the said grand jury in maintenance and continuance of the said recognizance, and upon the evidence given by Cox the said bill was conceived. It was moved by the counsel of the defendant, that that bill upon the matter did not lye, for that the evidence in the bill for the perjury was given for the Queen in maintenance of the recognizance, and that to the grand jury which was charged for the Queen: but as to that it was said, by the Lord Chancellor and both the Chief Justices, that the writ de fama & gestu, is an especiall writ at the suit of the party, and not of the Queen, and the Court cannot deny it to him who asketh it; and the grand jury, as to that matter, shall be accounted a special jury, &c.

Tenures.

In a replevin, the case was, lands holden of a subject came to the possession of the King by the Statute of 1 E. 6. of Chauntries. The King granted the lands over unto another; it was holden in this case that the patentee should hold of the King according to his patent, and not of the ancient lord; but the patentee should pay the rent, by which the said land was before holden, as a rent-seck distrainable of com-[41]-mon right to the lord and his heirs, of whom the land was before holden.

CX. MICH. 19 ELIZ. IN THE COMMON PLEAS.

Estate. Devises.

A. seized of lands in fee devised them to his wife for life, and after her decease she to give the same to whom she will: he had issue two daughters, and died; the wife granted the reversion to a stranger and committed waste, and the two daughters brought an action of waste. In this case it was holden, that by that devise the wife had but an estate for life, but she had also an authority of giving the reversion by her will to whom she pleased; and such a grantee shall be in by A. and his will; for A. hath given expresly to his wife for life, and therefore by implication she shall not have any further estate: but if an express estate had not been appointed to the wife; by the other words an estate in fee should have passed.

CXI. SIR THOMAS KEMP AND WINDSORS CASE.

Sir Thomas Kemp was outlawed at the suit of one Windsor, who had against him four capias utlagat' and none of them were served, and afterwards he sued out a fifth capias: it was moved by Mead, that the said Sir Thomas keepeth open house, and yet the sheriff had not served the capias. Dyer, The sheriff may justifie to break the house to take his body, and seize his goods for the Queen, for this process is in law at the suit of the Queen; but contrary where the process is sued at the suit of a subject; and the justices commanded Ford Prothonotary to make a special capias for body and goods; and a pain in the writ of 100l. upon the sheriff to execute the writ accordingly.

CXII. MICH. 19 ELIZ. IN THE COMMON PLEAS.

Improvement of Common.

This case was moved by Anderson Serjeant at law, if in case of common appurtenant by prescription without number, the lord of the waste might improve, for it is not admeasurable, therefore not improveable, for the common being without number, the sufficiency cannot be proved. Dyer and Manwood Justices, Although it be without number, yet it may be reduced to a certainty being by prescription; as the number of the cattel, and the best and most substantial tenant of the said tenement at any time within time of memory had kept upon the said waste, and then the plaintiff the lord might improve leaving sufficient, according to such rate.

CXIII. THE EARL OF DERBYS CASE.

Debt not against the Husband upon a Contract by the Wife.

Debt by a merchant of London against the Earl of Derby and his wife, and declared upon a contract for silks, and it appeared upon the evidence, that the countess during the coverture had bought of the plaintiff certain silks for her own wearing; and for the mony, which the countess agreed to pay for the same the action was brought. It was the opinion of Dyer, Manwood, and Mounson, that the contract by the wife, during the coverture, should not bind the husband; but admit that the husband should be bound, yet this action is not well brought against the wife, for she ought not to be mentioned in the writ.

CXIV. Mich. 19 Eliz. In the Kings Bench

Indictments.

One was indicted in the country, because he commanded J. S. to take up a bridge, being in regia via, leading from such a town to such a town; and also the said J. S. was indicted for executing the command of the other: exception was taken to the first indictment, because no place of the commandment is alledged in the indictment, and for that cause the indictment was taken insufficient, although Mr. Plowden strongly insisted upon the contrary, as in trespass the defendant justifies by the commandment of J. S. the same is good, without any place of the commandment, for in the first case the commandment is traversable, but contrary put by Mr. Plowden, vide 3 H. 7. 11. Markenfield's case. Another exception was taken to the indictment, because it is not there alledged, that the bridge was a common bridge, but because there was other words in the indictment which supplyed the same, scil. in via regia, the indictment was holden good enough.

CXV. 19 Eliz. In the Common Pleas.

In a writ of partition between tenants in common upon the statute, of 20 acres of land; the defendant as to part, scil. 10 acres, pleaded non tenet pro indiviso, and as to the residue confessed the partition; and by Manwood, and Ford Chief Prothonotary, the confession ought to be in the beginning of the plea, and non tenet pro indiviso, in the second place last, so as that part of the plea which agrees with the demand, ought to preceed the part which denies demand: and the truth of the case was, that the defendant had but 10 acres in all, and of them was [43] sole seized. Manwood, If your case be such you may safely plead to the whole non tenet pro indiviso.

CXVI. Duffams Case.

Estoppel. Recital.

A man made a lease by deed indented for 20 years to begin after the expiration of a former lease thereof made to one Duffam, in an action brought by the second lessee against the lessor; the lessor said there was no such Duffam in rerum natura at the time of the supposed lease made to Duffam. It was said that such a plea did not lye for the lessor, for he is estopped to say against the indenture, that no such Duffam was, &c. And also, if no such person was, then the first lease was void, and the second lease should begin presently, which Mounson and Manwood concesserunt. And Manwood said that the defendant should be estopped by the recital of the first lease, to say that no such Duffam was; and although that the common ground is, that a recital is not any estoppel, yet where the recital is not material, as it is here, for the second lease is to be begun upon the expiration of the lease recited, there is an estoppel.

CXVII. Brown and Fulsbyes Case.

Stat. 5 Eliz. of Usury.

Upon the statute of 5 Eliz. of Usury, the case was this, A. borrowed of B. 80l. and was bound in an obligation to pay to him 90l. at the end of the year: it was the opinion of the justices, that although the 90l. was tendred, and B. the lender did tell the same, yet if he take and accept but of 80l. it is not usury within the statute to make a treble forfeiture; but yet in that case the obligation it self is void.

CXVIII. Trin. 29 Eliz. In the Exchequer.

Note in the case of the tenants of Owning and Northmaston, it was holden by Manwood Chief Baron, that he who hath vesturam terræ cannot dig the land. CXIX. Sir Walter Wallers Case.

Manwood Chief Baron, I agree that if one hath sued a writ of execution, and the same be continued two or three years by vicecomes non misit breve, yet the plaintiff may proceed upon it, and shall not be put to a scire facias. But if such writ be sued forth, but not continued, but discontinued for a year and a day, he shall be put to a scire facias, for it is the negligence of the plaintiff not to continue it, which within the year and day he might do without order of the Court; but not after the year by any order of the Court.

32 Eliz. In the Exchequer Chamber.

CXX. Russel and Prats Case.

Russel as executor of Russel brought an action upon the case against Prat and his wife, of trover and conversion of goods and 700l. in money, and declared that the testator was possessed of these goods, 6 Feb. 1 Eliz. at which day they came to the hands of the defendant dum ipsa sola fuit, and converted them, &c. and licet the wife dum sola fuit was required, and the said Prat and she after their marriage, to deliver them, yet they not only refused so to do, but knowing the said goods and money de jure to belong to the testator in his life, and to his executors after his death machinantes ipsum inde callide decipere & defraudare, the said wife dum ipsa sola fuit converted them to her use the said 6 day of February. And error was assigned in the declaration, because it is not alledged there, whether the said conversion was in the life of the testator, or after his death, for that ought to be shewed certainly: for if it was in the life of the testator, then it was not punishable by the common law or statute law, and the conversion is the principal point of the action. This action is personal & moritur cum persona; for it is grounded upon a personal wrong, and ariseth upon a disceit and wrong, and if there was no conversion, then an action of detinue should lye 7 E. 3. Replevin by executors of goods taken in the time of the testator. Fitz. Exec. 106. And it was said that this action here doth not lye upon the statute of 4 E. 3. which gives to executors an [45] action of trespass de bonis asportatis in vita testatoris, for the said statute gives remedy in cases, where there was no remedy before, but here the plaintiff might have detinue. And in our case it appeareth not whether the conversion was in the life of the testator, or after his death, therefore for the incertainty it is not good. Also here is a repugnance in the declaration, scil. scientes the said goods de jure pertinere to the testator, in his life, and after his death to his executors, & machinantes ipsum inde decipere & defraudare, the said wife dum ipsa sola fuit, converted them to her use, which cannot be, &c. Popham Attorney General contrary. And he agreed, that the executor should not have an accompt against one who was accomptable to the testator, because the privity was gone. But it hath been granted on the other side, that here upon the matter detinue lieth, and if, &c. then also this action lieth, for this is the nature of it. If the testator lends a horse to a special purpose, scil. to ride to such a place, and the party rideth further, and the testator dyeth, the executor may have detinue, or this action, be the conversion in the life, or after the death of the testator; and yet the damages recovered, for the goods converted shall be assets. Two joyntenants possessed of goods, lose them, and they come to A. by trover, who converts them to his use, be it in life, or after the death of one of them, is all one. Anderson, The conversion may be well intended after the death; and as to the exception for the repugnancy, it was said by the justices, that the words scientes &c. are but surplusage, and not traversable. Cook, If I deliver goods to a carrier, being in a chest, and he breaks it and takes them out, in that case trespass lieth vi & armis, notwithstanding the delivery. Anderson, prædicta tamen; i.e. non obstante, that the testator was dead, did not redeliver them &c. which proves that the testator was dead: Periam, prædicta tamen, refers to the non deliberavit, not to the conversion. Cook, I find your goods and use them, the same is a conversion: and in the case of Knight against Winchcomb, it was holden that a conversion is traversable, therefore it ought to be certainly alledged: and in our case the executor might have detinue or trespass for the personal wrong; where the thing it self certain is to be recovered, there the executor is sure to have an action, as detinue, replevin, &c. but where damages only, or things uncertain, there the executors shall not have action; and that difference was in a manner agreed by all. Anderson, Where it is said, that upon the assumpsit of the testator, the executor shall have an action upon the case, the reason is, because the duty upon the assumpsit is certain: and the statute of 4 E. 3. shall not be taken by equity; for by the said statute, the executor of an executor shall not [46] have an action before the statute of 25 E. 3. Also there is not any wrong, for then moritur cum persona: if one finds my goods, and denies the having of them, the same is not trespass. Periam, This case is not within the statute of 4 E. 3. for the statute is to be intended, where goods are taken vi. & armis, and if it be at all within the statute, it must be within the equity of it. Manwood, Where one takes my horse and dies, I shall not charge his executor, and that is our case. At another day some held, that the action did not lye against executors, therefore not for executors: and executors of executors shall not be charged with a devastavit made by the first executors. Manwood, The executor of the gaoler shall not be charged in an escape. Anderson, It is not within the equity of the statute of 4 E. 3. Cook, A smith pricks my horse, my executors shall not have an action for it. Anderson, If one takes my goods, I shall have detinue for it, therefore this action. Cook, If one take my goods he is a trespasser, and I shall have detinue, for that affirms a property. Manwood, If my goods be taken from me, I cannot give them to a stranger, but if my goods come to another by trover, I may give them over to another.

CXXII. Trin. 32 Eliz. In the Exchequer.

Debt.

If rent-corn be reserved upon a lease for years, and it is behind for two or three years, the lessor may have debt for the corn, and shall declare of so much corn, and it shall be in the detinet, but yet he shall not have judgment to have corn, but so much mony as the corn was worth, every several year being accompted. Clark Baron doubted if he shall recover the price of the corn, as it was at the time when it was payable, or it was at the time of the action brought. Manwood, The law is clear, that the lessee shall pay according to the price it was at the time of the payment and delivery limited by the lease. Clark said, A. is bound to pay and deliver to the obligee 10 bushels of wheat, and no place is appointed where the payment shall be made, the obligor is not bound to seek the obligee in what place soever as it is in case of payment of mony, for that the importableness therefore shall excuse him, which Manwood granted.

CXXIV. Prowses Case.

Tythes. Unity no discharge of Tythes.

It was holden in the case of one Prowse by Egerton Solicitor, upon the statute of 31 H. 8. where an abbot had a rectory impropriate, and also land within the same parish, &c. and so paid no tythes, because he could not pay them to himself, and for no other cause was discharged; and after the dissolution the rectory is granted to one, and the land to another, that in such case the King nor his patentees should not be discharged of tythes, for the lands were not discharged in right; but if the lands in the hands of the abbot were discharged in right, as by composition or lawful means, there the King and his patentee should be discharged from payment of tythes. And it was said by Burliegh Lord Treasurer, that if the composition or custom was that the abbot and his successors should be discharged without extending to farmors or lessees, if the abbot made a lease, and the lessee paid tythes, as he ought; and after the reversion cometh to the King, the lessee should pay tythes during his lease, but after the lease determined, the King and his patentee should not pay, but should be discharged by the said statute; and said, the like matter was in the Chancery, Trin. 30 Eliz. The Abbot of Tewkesbury having the rectory impropriate of Tewkesbury, 11 H. 7. purchased lands within the said parish to him and his successors, after the dissolution the King granted to G. the rectory, and to W. the lands; and if W. should pay tythes, was referred to Manwood and Periam, who gave their resolution, that tythes were payable.

Cook, The books are, if the defendant in the appeal of robbery be attainted by verdict, the fresh-suit shall be enquired of: but here he was attainted by outlary, and not by verdict, and so the fresh-suit could not be enquired of; and here the indictment is within a week, and the appeal within a month after the robbery, is a fresh-suit. In ejectione firmæ by Piers against Leversuch. It was found by verdict that one Robert Leversuch, grandfather of the defendant, was tenant in tail of the land whereof, &c. and made lease for years to Purn, who assigned it over to Piers the plaintiffs father. Robert Leversuch died, W. his son entred upon Piers, who re-entred; W. demised the lands without other words to P. for life, the remainder to Joan his wife for life, the remainder to the son of P. for life, with warranty, and made a letter of attorney to re-enter and deliver seisin accordingly. P. died before that the livery was executed, and afterwards the attorney made livery to Joan, W. died, Edward his son and heir entred upon his wife, she re-entred and let the land to the plaintiff, who upon an oustor brought the action. Heal Serjeant, When P. entred upon W. Leversuch, the issue in tail, he was a disseisor, and by his death the land descending to his heir, the entry was taken away of W. Leversuch. Cook contrary, P. by his entry was not a disseisor, but at the election of W. for when P. accepted such a deed of W. it appeared that his intent was not to enter as a disseisor; and it is not found that the said P. had any son and heir at the time of his death, and if not, then no descent, and there is not any disseisor found that P. expulit Leversuch out of the land, and judgment was given against the plaintiff. And Cook cited a case which was adjudged in the Common Pleas; it was Skipwiths case. Grandfather tenant in tail, father, and son, the grandfather died, the father entred and paid the rent to the lessor, and died in possession, and it was adjudged the same was not any descent, for the paying of the rent explained by what title he entred, and so shall not be a disseisor, but at the election of another.

It was moved, if it should not bee a good indictment for the assault, so as he should be fined for the same: by Sands Clerk of the Crown, and the whole Court, the indictment is void in Another exception was, because they had not any addition; but it was not allowed, for it appeared to the Court. And after it was moved upon the statute of 31 Eliz. cap. 11. that no restitution upon such indictment should be granted, if the party indeed had had the occupation, or had been in quiet possession for three years next before the day of the indictment, and in the case at Bar the master hath been in possession by three years, but the parties indicted being his servants, had been with him but for one year; it was thereby holden by the Court, that upon the matter restitution should not be granted, for the possession of the master in this case, takes away all restitution, and that by the statute.

And upon non dimiserunt, the jury found, that the husband and wife dimiserunt by indenture, and that after the husband died, and the wife entred and within the term died: now upon this matter, Anderson Justice, conceived clearly that the jury have found for the defendant, scil. non dimiserunt, for it is now no lease ab initio, because the plaintiff hath not declared upon a deed, and also the wife by her disagreement to it, and occupation of the land after the death of her husband, had made it to be the lease of her husband only.

Leases within 32 H. 8.

In a writ of second deliverance by Acton against Pitcher, it was moved if a lease made by a prebendary were within the statute of 32 H. 8. cap. 28. because the said statute speaks of men seized in the right of their churches, and a prebendary is seized in right of his prebend, and not in right of the church: but it is the opinion of the whole Court that he was within the equity of the statute.

CXXXV. TERRETS AND THE HUNDRED OF &C. CASE.

Action upon Statute of Huy and Cry. Oaths.

In an action upon the Statute of Huy and Cry against the hundred of, &c. the defendants pleaded not guilty: and in evidence, the plaintiff to prove that he was robbed, offered to the jury his oath in verifying his declaration, which Anderson and Periam utterly refused to accept of; but Windham Justice affirmed, that such an oath had been accepted of in the case of one Harrington, where the plaintiff could not have other evidence to prove the cause in respect of secresie, for those who have occasion to travel about their occasions, would not acquaint [52] another, what monies or other things, which they have in their journey: and we see that the law doth admit of the oath of the party in his own cause where the oath shall make an end of the cause, as in debt, where the defendant wageth his law. Periam, That's an ancient law; but we will not make new presidents, for if such an oath be accepted of us in this case, by the same reason in all causes where is secrecy and no external proof, whereupon would follow great inconvenience; and although such an oath hath been accepted of, and allowed here, yet the same doth not move us, and we do not see any reason to multiply such presidents. The declaration is, that the plaintiff was robbed of 10l. de denariis ipsius querentis, and upon the evidence it appeareth that the plaintiff was receivor of the lady Rich, and had received the said mony for the use of the said lady: and exception was taken to the same by Shuttleworth, but it was not allowed of, for the plaintiff is accomptable to the Lady Rich for the said mony. And it was agreed, that if he which was robbed after he had made huy and cry, doth not further pursue the felons, yet his action lyeth.

CXXXVII. BULWER AND SMITHS CASE.

Bulwer brought an action upon the case against Smith, and declared, how that H. H. had recovered against the plaintiff in the Common Pleas 20l. and before execution died, and that the defendant knowing that, at D. in the county of Norfolk, malitiose & deceptive machinans, to outlaw the plaintiff upon the said judgment, in the name of the said H. H. &c. in performance of his said purpose, at W. in the county of Middlesex, took out a capias ad satisfaciend. in the name of the said H. H. against the now plaintiff upon the said judgment directed to the Sheriff of London, and non est inventus being returned upon that, took out an exigent, in the name of the said H. H. which writ by the procurement of the defendant was retorned, and [53] then the plaintiff was outlawed, and afterwards the defendant in the name of the said H. H. took out a capias utlagatum against the plaintiff directed to the Sheriff of Norfolk; by force of which the plaintiff was arrested and imprisoned for two months, until he had gotten his charter of pardon, by reason of which outlawries the plaintiff had forfeited all his goods and chattels: and upon the said declaration, the defendant did demur in law, and the principal cause of the demurrer was because that the action might have been laid in Middlesex, where the wrong began, scil. the capias ad satisfaciend. the outlawry for this imagination at D. in the county of Norfolk, set forth in the declaration, cannot give to the plaintiff this action: but if divers conspire in one county for to indite one, and they put the same in execution in another county, the party aggrieved may lay his action in which of the said two counties he pleaseth 22 E. 4. 14. for a conspiracy is more notorious, than an imagination, imaginatio est unius, conspiratio plurimorum: and in this case the deliverance of the capias at D. in Norfolk is but accessary, and the suing of the process aforesaid at Westminster is the principal: upon the part of the plaintiff it was said, that such an action might be laid in the county, where the plaintiff was wronged, and the plaintiff is not tied to lay his action in the county where the original matter, which was but conveyance to the said wrong, was done. A. imprisoned upon a capias ad satisfaciend. in Middlesex escapes into Surrey, the action upon the escape shall be laid in Surrey. Reteiner of a servant in one county, who departs in another county, the master shall lay his action in which of the said counties he will, 15 E. 4. 18, 19. 41 E. 3. 1. A writ of disceit was brought in the county of York, and the case was, that in a præcipe quod reddat of land, the tenant shewed forth a protection at Westminster, the which was allowed for a year, and within the year the tenant stayed in the county of York upon his own occasions, the said writ of disceit was holden to be well laid, for there the wrong began, notwithstanding that the original: i.e. the casting of the protection was in Middlesex; for the disceit is, that the tenant contrary to the pretence of the protection continued at York, for the protection was quia moraturus. And always where the cause of the action consists of two things, whereof the one is matter of record, and the other is matter of fact: there the action shall be laid in such county, where the matter in fact may be more properly tried, vide 11 R. 2. Fitz. action sur le case 36 Br. lieu. 84. in the principal case at Bar, the Court was of opinion, that the action was well brought in the county of Norfolk. Another exception was taken to the declaration, because the plaintiff hath there set forth whereas his true name is John Bulwer, by which name he now sues, he was sued and outlawed by the name of John Buller, and then [54] the now plaintiff upon that matter was never sued, nor outlawed, and then is not grieved by the defendant, but John Buller; for here in his declaration there is not any averment that John Bulwer and John Buller are one and the same, and not divers persons: but the exception was disallowed, for the whole Court held, that for as much as the plaintiff hath declared that he, by the name of John Buller, was sued and outlawed, the same is an averment in law, &c. and amounts to so much. Another matter was objected, because it appeareth in the declaration that H. H. was dead before this process was sued, and then the outlawry was erronious, and so the plaintiff is not at any mischief, but that he may reverse the outlawry by error; as in conspiracy, the defendant pleads, that the indictment upon which the plaintiff is arraigned is vitious and erroneous, and so his life was never in jeopardy. But as to that, it was said by the Court, that the erronious proceedings of the defendant shall not give advantage to himself, but because the plaintiff was vexed by colour and reason of the outlawry, and put to his writ of error, which cannot recompence the loss and damage by him sustained by reason of the outlawry aforesaid, it is reason that the plaintiff have his action; wherefore Wray Chief Justice, ex assensu sociorum, gave judgment for the plaintiff.

Action for words.

An action upon the case was brought for speaking these scandalous words of the plaintiff, scil. the plaintiff did conspire the death of the defendant; it was found for the plaintiff, and moved in arrest of judgment, that upon the matter the action did not lye; for the bare conspiring of the death [55] of a man is not punishable by the law of the land, no more than if many conspire to indict one, but do not put it in execution it is not punishable; but if A. saith that B. lyeth in wait to kill him, or rob him, there an action lyeth, for insidiatores viarum are punishable. But the opinion of the whole Court was, that because these words sound in great discredit of the plaintiff, it is reason he have his action, and so judgment was given for the plaintiff.

CXLII. ROBINSONS CASE.

Jurors, where bound by confession of the parties, where not.

George Robinson lessee for years of the manor of Drayton Basset, the reversion to the King, devised his term to his wife, as long as she should keep her self a widow, with the remainder over, if she married or died, and made his wife and his son William his executors, the said William being within age, and therefore the administration was committed to the wife alone, and she only proved the will, and afterwards the wife granted all her interest to the said William and dyed; and by Cook nothing passed by this grant, for William had the same before, for every executor hath the whole interest. Popham contrary; for at the time of the grant the son was within age, and [56] had not administred nor proved the will, therefore in effect the wife was sole executrix; and by Egerton Solicitor, if during the said executorship by the wife, one doth trespass upon the lands, the wife only shall have the action of trespass without naming her co-executor, which Cook denied; and he cited the case 10 H. 7. 4 where two executors are, and the one only is possessed of goods of the testator and a stranger takes them out of his possession, to whom the other executor releaseth, and after the executor, out of whose possession the goods were taken, brings an action of trespass against the trespasser, who pleads the release of the other executor, and it was holden a good plea, for the possession of the plaintiff was also the possession of his companion: the case was further, that Thomas Robinson in pleading, shewing that G. Robinson was possessed, and the same devised to his wife, who granted to William Robinson, who devised it to the defendant: and the other side shewed, that the said Thomas granted the said term to Paramour, and upon that grant they were at issue; if now against his own pleading Thomas might give in evidence, that Thomas could not grant, for that he had not any thing to grant; for if the gift made by the wife to William was void, and he had the term as executor, then he could not devise it, but his devise to Thomas was void, and then Thomas could not grant it, and so ne grant pas. It was also shewed, that the said Thomas granted the same to Paramour by indenture; if now against that indenture he might give in evidence such special matter, ut supra; and if the party shall be concluded, if the jury shall be concluded to give the verdict secundum veritatem facti, for they are sworn to say the truth, and by Popham and Egerton, as well the jurors, as the parties, are bound and concluded by the confession of the parties on the record; and here all confess that William devised to him, virtute cujus he was possessed. The Queens Attorney to that said, that true it is that Thomas Robinson was possessed; but further said, that the said Thomas granted it to Paramour, and so the interest of Thomas is confessed on both sides. Therefore the jury shall not be received to say the contrary. And by Manwood Chief Baron, if the parties admit a thing by not gainsaying it, the jury is not bound by it; but where upon the pleading a special matter is confessed, the jury shall be bound thereby. And afterwards the issue was found against Robinson the defendant.

It was moved by Cook in stay of judgment, that the declaration is vitious because there is not set forth the place and time, when the request was made, for the assumpsit being general, it is by law to be paid upon request. Fenner, If the promise was expresly to be paid upon request, the declaration was not good. And afterwards judgment was given for the plaintiff.

And that return was shewed to the Court, and all the justices but Periam held, that the sheriff should be amerced for that return, being contrary & repugnant in it self; but Periam said, it may be that the acre of which no seisin is had was so distant from the other acre whereof the seisin was had, that the sheriff in time could not make execution of both being so remote the one from the other. To which it was answered that if the truth of the case [58] was such, then might the sheriff make execution in one acre in the name of both acres. CXLVI. Lees and Lord Staffords Case.

Compton made conusans as bayliff to Edward Lord Stafford, and shewed that Henry Lord Stafford, father of the said Edward, and Ursula his wife, were seized of the place where, and let the same for years to Edward Lees the plaintiff, Robert Lees, and Elizabeth Atwood, upon condition they, nor any of them, should alien the said term, nor any part of the same without the leave of the lord or his heirs. Henry Lord Stafford and Ursula died, and that the reversion thereof descended to Edward Lord Stafford; and shewed further, that the said Edward Lees the plaintiff had aliened: to which the plaintiff in bar of the conusans said, that the said Edward now Lord Stafford gave license, that the said Edward Lees, Robert, or Elizabeth might alien, and that was without deed. It was conceived by some, that this licence was not of any force to dispense with the condition, because it is uncertain and doubtful in the disjunctive; and it was resembled to the case of 11 H. 7. 13. where a man gives a thing to J. S. or A. B. it is void for the incertainty: but all the Court was to the contrary. For here the thing which is given is but a liberty, and is not to be resembled to a gift or interest; and the intent of the Lord Stafford was, that one of them might alien, but not all of them, and afterward judgment was given for the plaintiff.

To which exception it was said by the justices, that the declaration as to that was good enough, for it shall be intended to be delivered at the day of the date. Another exception was taken to the visne, because that the visne ought to have been from the parish, and not from Tithingham, 11 H. 7. 23, 24. CXLIX. TRIN. 28 ELIZ. IN THE COMMON PLEAS. ROT. 1027.

Milbourn brought an action upon the Statute of Winchester, against the inhabitants within the hundred of Dunmow in the county of Essex, it was found by special verdict that the plaintiff was robbed 23 Aprilis, inter horam secundam & matutinam tempore nocturno, & ante lucem ejusdem diei: and the opinion of the Court was clear, that the plaintiff should be barred, for the said statute provided for ordinary travel: as in the case of Archpool, who came to his inn post sunset, & ante noctem in tempore diurno, which is an usual time for travelling to come to his inn; but the law doth not receive any in protection of this stat. who travel in extraordinary hours, for it is the folly of the traveller to take his journy so out of season, and the inhabitants are not bound to leave their houses, and to attend the ways tempore nocturno: and another reason was alledged [60] by the justices, because the said statute appoints watch to be kept in the time of night, à Festo Ascensionis usque ad Festum Sancti Michaelis, and this robbery was done the 23 of April, so as it was out of that time; and afterwards judgment was given against the plaintiff.

CLVI. MANSOR'S CASE.

A man bound himself in an obligation to make an assurance of lands the first day of Jan. and the last day of December, he to whom the assurance was to be made, scil. the obligee, the said last day before sun-setting, came to the obligor with a deed ready to be sealed, and prayed him to seal it; who said to him that he was a man unlearned, and said he would shew the same to his counsel, and then he would seal it. And if the obligation was forfeited or not, because he did not seal it presently, was the question: and Fenner argued that it was not; for when a thing is to be done upon request, then he who makes the request, ought to give sufficient and convenient time to perform the condition. I agree, that where the condition is absolute, there if the condition be not performed, he shall not be excused by the default of another. As if a man be bounden to marry A. S. and she will not marry him; or to enfeoff J. S. and he refuseth, as 3 H. 6. is, the obligation is forfeited; yet in these cases if the obligee himself be the cause that J. S. will not take the feoffment, or he will not marry A. S. the obligation is not forfeited: so in our case, for by his late request it is impossible for me to perform the condition; for before my counsel shall have perused it, the time will be past. If a man be bound to enfeoff one of lands in Barwick, request ought to be made so long time before, that after that he may go to Barwick. So if one be bounden to pay 1000l. to J. S. he ought to make his tender so long time before the last instant of the last day, that the mony may conveniently be told. This case was in question, A man made a feoffment of the manor of D. with the appurtenances, to which an advowson was appendant, and covenanted that the manor upon request should be discharged of all manner of incumbrances, and before that the feoffor had granted the next avoidance to J. S. the incumbent died, the clark of the grantee was instituted and inducted, the feoffee requested the feoffor to discharge the incumbrance. The opinion of many sages of the law was, that he had not made his request within convenient time. So if a man be bounden to infeoff the obligee to have and to hold to him and his heirs as long as J. S. shall have issue of his body; if the obligee demand assurance after the death of J. S. without issue, yet [63] the obligation is not forfeited. In 22 E. 4. if lessee for the life of another continues possession for two or three weeks after the death of cestuy que use, where he could not have more speedy notice of his death, he shall not be a trespassor. In 15 Eliz. it was holden in Wottons case. that where he was bound to make a feoffment to J. B. and J. B. came to him in Westminster Hall, and tendred to him a writing, and prayed him to seal it. And Wotton said that he would not, that the obligation was forfeited; contrary if he had not denied to seal it, but had shewed the same to his counsel, as in our case. But the opinion of the justices was, that the obligation was forfeited. For when he knew the last instant of the time, he ought to have had his counsel there ready with him. Vide the case of arbitrement 18 E. 4. 21. At another day the case was argued again by Andrews, and he said that the obligation was not forfeited; for he said it is a rule in law, sic utere tuo, ut alienum non lædas, and in E. 4. a man was bound upon request to relinquish and renounce administration; and there it was holden, that after the request he ought to have convenient time to go to the Ordinary, before it shall be said that he had forfeited his obligation. In 33 E. 3. it is said that if J. S. be bound, that if A. B. infeoff C. that then he shall pay to the obligee 10l. Now if the feoffment be made after sun-setting as it well may be, yet it is sufficient to save his obligation, if he pay the mony the next day: and 19 H. 6. an annuity was granted to an infant until he was promoted to a benefice, if a benefice be offered unto him before he be of sufficient age, and he refuseth it, the obligation is not forfeited. If a man be bound to enfeoff and make livery and seisin of the manor of D. to one upon request, and afterwards the party is made King, in which case he cannot take livery, now if upon request the party refuseth, yet it is no forfeiture: and it hath been holden here by you all, that if a man unlearned seals a deed which is written contrary to the intent of the parties, the same not being read unto him, by that he shall not be bound for ever. But the opinion of the Court was as before. That the obligation was forfeited.

Trecarram made a demise by these words: This indenture between Trecarram, &c. of the one part, and Friendship his wife, and their children lawfully begotten, at the assignment of the said Friendship of the other part. The question was, if L. the daughter, which the husband and wife had at the time of the lease made, was party to the said indenture, and so took by it. Or if another son of Friendship, which after he made his executor, should have the term. Hamon, 30 E. 3. If a gift be made to infants of such a man, it is a good name of purchase, and if he hath but one infant it is good to him: and so in our case, where Friendship had issue a daughter, at the time of the lease, that she should take only;

otherwise where he had many. And the words, viz. at the assignment of Friendship, are mere surplusage, as 20 Ass. where a man gave twenty loads of wood in such a wood (whereof fourteen he hath of the gift of such a one,) these words (whereof he hath of the gift of such a one,) are surplusage. Cook conceived that the daughter, who was in esse at the time of the demise, should have the term: for if a man make a grant to two, as the one of them is not capax, he who is capable shall have the whole. As a feoffment to J. S. and the right heirs of J. D. J. D. being alive, J. S. shall have the whole. So Ass. a gift to a man, and to such a wife which he shall have, he shall have the whole, and the wife nothing: the words At the assignment, &c., are void, for there is not a person able to take at the time of the grant, therefore he shall not take afterwards; and because the daughter is able, she shall. Wray Justice, conceived that these words, At the assignment of Friendship, were not void, but that he had reserved to him liberty to make his son party, or not; and because he had not assigned him, that he took nothing. Ayliffe, If lands be leased to me, my wife, and William my son, whereas his name is John, it is void as to the son for the misnomer, but if he had said son, without more, it had been good to the [65] son: and so here if he had not mentioned any assignment, then the daughter should have had it; but contrary by the words of the assignment. Clench, The intent of the parties is to be considered: as if I grant to you common within my manor of D. it shall be construed to be within my lands commonable, and not in my orchard: and here it shall be intended those children which he shall name when the sealing was; and if he name others after, it shall be void; as a lease to you, and to her who you shall take to wife, is void, for there ought to be such a person at the time of the commencement of the deed, which might take. And the opinion of the whole Court was, that the defendant, who claimed by the executor, should have the term, and not the plaintiff who claimed by the daughter, and therefore judgment was entred, that the plaintiff nihil capiat per billam.

CLIX. The Countess of Sussex and Worths Case.

Leases by spiritual persons, as Bishops, &c. Leases.

In 4 and 5 Phil. and Mary, a private statute was made by which the manor of Barnham was assured to the Countess of Sussex for her joynture. Proviso that it should be lawful for the Earl of Sussex to make a lease, or leases for 21 years. The earl made a lease for 21 years, and afterwards he made another lease for 21 years, within a year before the first lease ended, and the second lease was to begin at the end of the first lease, and if the second lease was good, and within the intent of the Act, was the question. Popham Attorney, that it was not: 1. Because it is to begin at a day to come. 2. Because it is made during the first lease. But it may be objected, that it is said (lease or leases): it is not in the sense of the Act, for by it he might only make leases in possession, and not in futuro, and so he might make a lease for 21 years, to begin after his death, which should be a great prejudice to the countess, and against the intent of the Act, which was made for her advantage. The Lord Treasurer and W. Mildmay had a commission to make leases for 21 years of the lands of the Queen, because the Queen should not be troubled with it: they could not make leases but in possession only by virtue of their commission; but all others which exceed 21 years, and in reversion passed by the hands of the attorney of the Queen, and not by them only by their commission. 2. Because he cannot make a lease upon a lease, for by the same reason that he might make one future lease, he might also make 20 leases in futuro, and so make void the Act: it was Marshals case upon the statute of 1 Eliz. of leases to be made by bishops. The Bishop of Canterbury made a lease for one and twenty years, and afterwards he [66] made another lease for 21 years to begin at the end of the first lease. It was holden that the second lease was not good. But in the great case upon that point in the Exchequer Chamber, there the second lease was in possession, and to begin presently, and ran with the other; and therefore it was adjudged a good lease, because the land was not charged with more than with 21 years in the whole; and if it had been so done here, it had been good. Wray said that if the second lease had been made two or three years before the expiration of the first lease, then clearly it had been void, but because, but one, two, or three days, or a month before, he doubted if it should be void, or not. The statute of 32 H. 8. leases made for one and twenty years to be good from the day of the date thereof, and one makes a lease to begin at a day to come, and by two of the justices of the Common Pleas it is good; but the two other justices held the contrary. Clench Justice, There is no difference, if it be by one deed or several deeds; and therefore he held, that if the earl had made a lease for one and twenty years, and within a year another, it is a void lease, whether it be by one deed or two deeds, for he exceeds his authority: and so in the principal case; if there had been no proviso, he could not have made any lease, therefore the proviso which gave him authority ought precisely to be performed. At another day it was argued by Daniel for the lessee in reversion to begin at a day to come, and by him words only are not to be taken or considered in a statute, but the meaning of them, and they are not to be severed: also statute law is to be expounded by the common law, and by the common law if one give authority to another to make leases of his lands, he may make leases in reversion, because an authority shall be taken most beneficially for them for whom it was given. So if one grant an authority to make estates of his lands, by that general word, he may make leases for years or life, or gifts in tail, feoffments, or other estates whatsoever. If one gives a commission to another to make leases for one and twenty years of his lands, he may make a lease in reversion: and that case was in the duchy between Alcock and Hicks. 2. It is good by statute law: for the statute of Richard 2. which gives authority to cestuy que use, to make leases, he may thereby make leases in reversion. The statute of 27 H. 8. which gives authority to the chief officer of the court of surveyors to make leases, if it had stayed there he might have made leases in reversion, but the said statute goes further, and says, proviso that he shall not make a lease in reversion, vide 19 H. 8. Dyer 357. The statute of 32 H. 8. of leases to be made by husbands of the lands of their wives by the general words of the said statute, they might [67] make leases in reversion. But the statute goes further proviso, that there shall not be any former lease in being above 21 years before the making of the said leases. In all cases of statutes which are with provisoes, the law upon them shall be taken generally, if not in such particulars which are restrained by the proviso, as here, the proviso goes to the ancient rent to be reserved, that the countess shall have remedy against the lessees for the said rent, &c. therefore it is at large in all other points but in these: as if the wife be within age, and she and her husband joyn in a lease, yet this lease is good by the statute of 32 H. 8. because the law is general, and doth not restrain these imperfections expresly: so a feoffment in fee with warranty, proviso that he shall not vouch; yet that is a restraint as to the voucher only, and he is at large to rebutt or have warrantia chartæ: a lease for life, proviso he shall not do voluntary waste, he is at large to do other waste, but otherwise it were if there were no proviso. Therefore a proviso makes the words precedent to be expounded more liberally. The words of the Statute of 33 H. 8. cap. 39. of Surveyors, which gives authority to the chief officer to devise, set, or let for 21 years, he might have made a lease for 21 years in reversion, if the proviso had not been. But the words of the Act in our case are demise; demises therefore shall be taken most liberally. 3. As to the intent of the Act, this lease is within it, for the intent is to be collected out of the words, and shall not be drawn to any private intent against the words which should be done here; for by such exposition the earl, his heirs, executors, &c. should be prejudiced, and the countess only should be benefited; also remedy is given to the countess by this Act against such lessees, that she should have the rent by debt or distress, as if she had been party or privy, therefore it is reason via versa, that they have remedy against her for their leases: also he said that the same remedy should be for them as against the earl himself if he had lived, therefore they shall have remedy against her, who might have had it against the earl in his life. Also the statute is to be expounded according to the words, where such exposition is not rigorous nor mischievous. Also private laws are to be expounded by the letter and strictly, as the deed of the party, as 14 E. 4. 1. Br. Parliament 16. a particular Act was made that the Chancellor, calling to him one of the justices, might award a subpœna between A. and B. and end the matter between them; there, by all the justices but Littleton, he shall not award a subpœna general but a subpœna making mention of the Act, for he shall pursue the particular Act strictly, and a common Act for the common profit shall be construed largely. Also a [68] statute shall not be construed largely by equity to the overthrow of an estate; as the statute which gives, that if a woman consent to a ravisher, that the next heir shall enter, if the daughter entreth, and afterward a son is born, he shall not put out the daughter, because the statute shall not be drawn to a private intent to the overthrow of an estate vested before lawfully in the daughter: therefore neither in our case the Act shall not be drawn to a private sense for the benefit of the countess to overthrow the lease for years; and it is not like to the case which hath been put: if he make a lease for twenty years, and for other twenty years, the same is not good by the Act, which case I agree, for that is a lease for forty years. Egerton Solicitor contrary: 1. As to the word demise from dismission, the same is nothing else but a letting of the land. So lease is from (laiser) a French word, and such a demise at a day to come is an interest of a lease, and not a lease it self, for he hath not let the land: as if I say, I let you my land for 21 years: when shall you have my land? Shall you have my land at a day to come, or presently? If I sell you land, and covenant that it is discharged of all other incumbrances than leases for 21 years, and there is a lease to begin afterwards for 21 years, I have broken my covenant. If I am bound to make you a lease for 21 years, and I say to you, I make a lease to you to begin 200 years after, I have forfeited my obligation. If the custom of a manor be that dominus pro tempore may make leases for 21 years, may he make a lease to begin 20 years after? Truly not, if there be not a special custom to make it good. If I give authority to my steward to make leases of my lands for 21 years, he cannot make a lease to begin at 100 years hereafter. As to the case of the duchy, there the condition is that he shall make leases according to his discretion, therefore there he may make such leases as he pleaseth. As to the statute of Richard 2. which enables cestuy que use, it is not like to our Act or statute, for that is, that feoffments, estates, &c. therefore he may make such leases without doubt. If I devise that my executor shall make leases of my lands for 21 years, he cannot make a lease for to commence 100 years after; and if they do not make them within convenient time, the heir shall avoid their authority: so the statute law hath such exposition that the precise time ought to be observed, as the statute of 14 E. 3. cap. 18. 1. Receit to Voucher, 8. If the tenant vouch to warranty a dead man, and the demandant will aver that the vouchee is dead, or that there is none such, there the averment shall be received without more delay. Upon that statute the case in 21 E. 3. where one vouched to warranty, and a summoneas ad warrantizan-[69]-dum issued, and then came the demandant, and would have averred that the vouchee is dead, the tenant said he ought to aver the same upon the voucher to warranty, and that now he had surceased his time to take advantage of the time; and the demandant said, that the statute did not bind him to that, nor prescribed any time, but left the same generally, yet by the Court it was awarded that he should have the averment the time of the voucher, or not at all. So the statute of 11 H. 7. cap. 20. if a woman who hath a joynture for life or in tail, and suffers a common recovery according to the statute of 11 H. 7. cap. 20. and afterwards the issue in tail, releaseth all his right by fine and dieth, his issue may enter, for the assent ought to be by voucher in the same action, and the like, for if there be a mean instance between the recovery and the assent, then any assent after is nothing to the purpose; for the recovery being once void by the statute, it cannot be made good by assent afterwards, vide Dr. & Student 54. and yet the statute saith, provided that the Act shall not extend to any such recovery, discontinuance, &c. if the next heir be assenting to the same recovery, &c. so as the same assent or agreement is of record or enrolled; and doth not say, if the assent ought to be at one time, or at another. But to come to leases upon statutes. Before the statute of 2 E. 6. cap. 8. if leases were not found by offices, they should be ousted and put to their traverse. But put case that after that statute a lease to begin at a day to come is not found by office, shall it be aided by that statute: No truly, and so it is holden in the Court of Wards at this day. And the Lord Chief Justice of England so held in his reading at Lincolns Inn: The Statute of 1 Eliz. of Leases to be made by bishops is, that leases other than for 21 years from the time that they begin, that is, when they take effect as a deed, and when they take effect not to be executed; for so they might make infinite leases: quære the further part of Egertons argument in this case; and vide in Cooks 1 part of his Reports, where this case is reported to be adjudged; that the lease made in reversion by the earl was a void lease.

MICH. 29 ELIZ. IN THE COMMON PLEAS.

Debt brought upon an escape in L. the defendant said, that he suffered him to escape in C. by the commandment of the plaintiff, without that; that he escaped in L. It was holden to be no plea. But in an action upon a false imprisonment in L. he may justifie, that he was Sheriff of C. and took him by force of a writ, without that, that he imprisoned him in L. Rhodes Justice, One brings an action upon an escape in L. and in truth he never was in L. after the escape, in an action he shall [70] recover. Periam and Rhodes, Where the matter of justification is tied to a place, there the place is traversable. And Rhodes said, there was a case adjudged, in an action, by Davage, against the Mayor of Lynn, where the defendant justified as a special justice within the town, and traversed the place alledged by the plaintiff.

MICH. 29 & 30 ELIZ. IN THE KINGS BENCH.

CLXI. SCOT AND SCOTS CASE.

Common Recovery. Conditions. Proviso Condition.

George Scot the elder sued a replevin against George Scot the younger: the case was this, One Georgo Scot 20 H. 8. being tenant in tail of certain lands, suffered a recovery to the use of his last will, and 25 H. 8. by his will declared, that he willed that the recoverers make a good and favourable lease to Hugh Scot his younger brother, and 25 H. 8. they make a lease to Hugh Scot for ninety nine years, reserving 11l. 5s. 8d. rent payable at the Annunciation and Michaelmas by equal portions, and that to the recoverers, their heirs and assigns. And further it was covenanted, that after the death of the recoverers, the rent should be paid to cestuy que use, and his heirs and assigns, any thing in the indenture to the contrary notwithstanding, proviso that if the lessee make his heir-male his assignee of the term, that then he pay the rent to the recoverers, their heirs and assigns, and he did not pay the rent to the heirs of cestuy que use, and thereupon was a distress and a replevin. Drew argued for the plaintiff; and first he spake to the performance of the condition, and when a condition is created, the law says it shall be taken favourable for him who is to perform it, as 3 H. 7. One is to make appropriation of such a church, and he grants a rent out of it, and then makes the appropriation, it was holden that he had performed the condition. So 27 H. 8. a lease upon condition to scowre the ditches; if he once doth it, it is sufficient, and he cited another case out of 37 H. 6. As to the creating of a condition, there are some words which are conditional of themselves, as in Litt. Ita quod, sub conditione, ad effectum, 38 H. 6. 34. in case of the King: in some case (pro) makes a condition, in some cases not. Proviso also sometimes makes a condition, sometimes it is taken for the enlargement of an estate, 45 E. 3. 8. One had the ward of land, and of the body, and granted the same to W. P. his servant, pro bono servitio, and he departed from his service, the other may enter in the wardship and land therefore, (pro) makes a condition. 41 Eliz. One granted an annuity to another pro concilio impendendo, if he doth not give counsel, the annuity is forfeited, for he hath no means to compel him to give counsel, and therefore it is a condition: but in some cases [71]

(pro) doth not make a condition, as if before the Statute of Quia Emptores Terrarum, one makes a feoffment of lands pro homagio suo, there if the homage be not done, he may distrain for it. 9 E. 4. 21. Where tythes are exchanged for annuity, or annuity for tythes, there it is not a condition. (Si) in the case of Colthirst is a condition, in some other cases no condition. (Proviso) in our case doth not make a condition. 7. H. 6. 44. A man made a feoffment with warranty, proviso semper, that he should not vouch him nor his heirs. So a grant of a rent, proviso that he shall not charge his person: these are not conditions but foreprises. 9 H. 6. A lease was made without impeachment, proviso that he should not do voluntary waste; this proviso went to a covenant, and not to the overthrowing of the estate. So if one granted a manor, proviso that his grant shall not extend to a wood upon the manor, the same is not a condition but a foreprise or exception. 35 H. 8. Br. Conditions 195. Note for law, that proviso semper put on the part of the lessee, upon the words of the habendum, makes a condition, but contrary of a proviso on the part of the lessor; as it is covenanted after the habendum and after the reddendum, that the lessee shall scowre the ditches, proviso that the lessee carry the dung to such a place or field, the same is not a condition to forfeit the lease for not doing of it. Contrary if the proviso be put immediately upon the habendum, which makes the estate, or after the reddendum. The case 27 H. 8. of Martin Dockery is left at large. In 5 Eliz. there was a case of one Etherel, where the Bishop of York made a lease for years reserving rent to him and his successors, proviso that during the time of every vacation, the rent should be paid to the Dean and Chapter of York, and it was not paid to them after the death of the bishop, during the vacation: it was holden to be no condition, but a limitation. Also if the proviso here shall be a condition, then it is a favourable lease according to the will, for a conditional lease is not a favourable lease. 2. Point. If it be a condition; yet the plaintiff ought to recover the rent for which the demand shall be, where the entry is only the moiety of an annual rent, and he demands the whole, therefore his demand is not good; for if a feoffment be pleaded made by one, and the deed is shewed, by which it appeareth that it was made by many, although he was one of them, yet it is not good, nor warranted by it. Also the conclusion which they make doth destroy the whole, for it is, et quia prædict. redditus was not payed, &c. Which was that? the rent of the whole year, scil. 11l. 6s. 8d. and that is false; for if the moiety was paid, he had no cause to enter; but by their conclusion, if all was paid but a penny, yet they might enter, and therefore the rejoynder is not good. Cook contrary, for the avowant: he said, It is a condition, and he put this as a gene-[72]-ral rule, that where a proviso is parcel of the sentence which contains covenant, or abridgeth parcel of the covenant, that it doth not make a condition, but an exception. As Litt. a rent granted, proviso that he shall not charge his person, the same is not a condition, because it abridgeth parcel of the grant, and controuls the sentence precedent. So 9 H. 6. proviso that he shall not do voluntary waste, for it abridgeth the first impeachment of waste. So a feoffment with warranty, proviso that he shall not vouch, abridgeth parcel of the force of the warranty; for by warranty he may rebut, vouch, or have warrantia chartæ: therefore there where it is parcel of the sentence which contains covenant, it is not a condition: and that difference was holden and agreed in the Lord Mountjoyes case. But in our case there is not a qualification of the sentence, or covenant contained in the sentence, nor participant at all with the sentence, but it stands substantivè, for there was a full sentence before, and therefore it is not parcel of it. Also it varies from the sentence precedent in the person who shall pay the rent, and to whom it shall be paid, and therefore it is a new sentence, and strange to the first: and it is not like to the case of 9 H. 6 before, Br. warranty, he shall not vouch, for there it controuls the precedent sentence: but if I make a feoffment in fee with warranty, that he shall not vouch J. S. who is a stranger, there it is a condition: but if it is that he shall not vouch the feoffor, there it is not a condition. And the case of the Bishop of York, was Pasc. 4 Eliz. Rot. 460. Com. banc. he conceived, that during the vacation, the rent should go to the King, and therefore perhaps he especially limited it to be paid to the Dean and Chapter of York, and there the proviso did not make a condition: for although it was limited to be paid to the dean and chapter in the time of the vacation, with a proviso, or by way of promise, yet there it is a condition, for all is one corporation; for the dean and chapter are part of the corporation to whom it was reserved before, for it was reserved before to the bishop and his successors. But 15 and 16 Eliz. Andrews and Cromwells case, where John Blunt sold a manor to Andrews, and his heirs, and Blunt covenanted to suffer a common recovery for the better assurance thereof, and afterwards there was a proviso, provided always, that Andrews re-grant the advowson which was appendant to the manor to Blunt for his life; and because there it stands substantivè by it self, therefore it was holden to be a condition; and yet truly it was not the meaning, that for not granting of a pelting advowson, that the whole former estate of the manor being of great value, should be defeated; yet notwithstanding, it was holden to be a condition: and there also the opinion of Br. 35 H. 8. is controuled, that where [73] also the opinion of Br. 35 H. 8 is controuled; that where a proviso is jumbled amongst covenants, that it doth not make a condition: proviso never makes a covenant, therefore either the sentence shall be void, or it shall be a condition. As if a lease for years be made, proviso that the lessee for years do not commit waste, it is no covenant. He said as to the second point, that the same was adjudged between Andrews and Cromwel, where a rent was payable every half year, and there, as here, the whole rent was demanded, and it was good, for he is not to pay the one moiety; and he is at his peril to pay the one moiety; and he who denies the whole, denies every part; et quicquid dicitur de toto, dicitur de partibus. It was adjourned.

Hil. 29 Eliz. In the Common Pleas.

CLXII. The Lord Mountjoyes and Barkers Case.

In an ejectione firmæ upon a special verdict, the case was this, King Ed. 6. granted the manor and hundred of Tremington in fee, rendring rent, to hold of the manor of East Greenwich in socage, reddendo annuatim 136l. Queen Mary reciting the first grant; in the first year of her reign, granted the rent and fealty and the manors of Cauford, D. S. et etiam manerium nostrum, & hundredum de Tremington (although she had not the manor) to the Marquess of Exceter; after which the marchioness being seized of the manor of Cauford holden in capite, and of other lands 4 and 5 Philip and Mary, devised the manors of Cauford, D. S. and whereas she had nothing in the manor of Tremington, but the rent and fealty out of it; she devised the same with the others to the Lord Mountjoy: and also she devised divers legacies and annuities to her servants and others. And devised by the same will, that they should be levied of the manor of Tremington, and of the manors of D. S. whereas D. S. were not manors but farms. And one Barker was found heir to the devisor, who claimed to have the third part: the rst question was, if the rent and fealty here holden in capite, passed by the name of the manor, or not; and if they passed, what quantity passed. Walmsley, They do not pass by that name; for this rent, nec in rei veritate, nec in reputatione, was ever taken for a manor. Also she hath named it in her will, between those which are very manors, by which it appeareth, that her intent was not to pass it, unless it was a manor, as the other, which sense is also fortified, that they shall be levied, parcelled, and taken; by which I conceive her meaning was, that there should be some place to which the devisees might resort to levy it. Further, it is taken for law in wills; that a thing implyed shall not destroy a thing expressed: but if by implication, [74] the rent should pass, then the manor of Cauford should not pass, which was her express will to pass. As 16 Eliz. Dyer 330. where a man deviseth his lands to one and his heirs males, and if he dye without heir of his body, &c. Here he shall not have tail general to the heirs of his body, but to the heirs males of his body, for that was the express limitation, and the other after but implication. So 16 Eliz. Dyer 333. in Chapmans case: but our case is better, for that there are not words sufficient to warrant any implication, for nec in veritate, nor in common speech was it ever taken for a manor. 27 H. 6. 2. 22 H. 6. 39. Green Acre may pass by the name of a manor, although it be but an acre of land, because it is known by such name. In 27 H. 8. a man having suffered a common recovery to his use, willed that his feoffees should sell, &c. So in Chapmans case; a man in his will limited a remainder to his family, there it is taken, the same is a remainder to those which are his next of blood. So 41 E. 3. a man deviseth land to A. his daughter, in truth she being a bastard, she shall have it because she is known by the name of daughter. So if there be grandfather, father, and son, the father dyeth and the son gives lands to his father and his heirs, the grandfather shall have it, for that the son so called him. 19 H. 8. Lands are devised to the right heirs of J. S. who is attainted, having issue a son, the son shall not have the land, for the word (heir) intends one who may inherit, but he cannot, because a man attainted cannot have an heir; and that is a stronger case than our case, in which there is not any affinity with a manor, for it is but a sum in gross, but if it had been an acre of land, peradventure it should have passed, but being rent, common estrovers, or other profits, they cannot pass, for they have not any resemblance to the mannor; but peradventure a man having a manor parcel in demesn, and parcel in services if he alieneth his demesns, and afterwards deviseth his manor, the services will pass. Gawdy, All the difficulty of the case is this, if by the devise, the rent out of Tremington shall pass, for if not, then the third part thereof cometh to Barker. And I conceive clearly, that the rent shall pass; for wills shall have a favourable construction according to the intent of the devisor, and no part thereof shall be void, if by any means it may be made good; for intent then appeareth that something should pass out of the manor of Tremington, for otherwise a clause in her will would be frivolous. For it is precisely found by the jury, that neither at the time of the will, nor at the time of her death, she had nothing of the said manor of Tremington, but the said rent of one hundred thirty and six pounds. Also it may be taken, that she who devised was ignorant of the law, and conceived that it was a manor when she had rents and services out thereof, notwithstanding that, those who are learned in the law know, that a ma-[75]-nor could not pass without there was two suitors at the least, 21 R. 2. Devise 27. Lands are devised to one for life, the remainder Ecclesiæ Sancti Andreæ in Holborn, there it is holden in an ex gravi querela, that the parson should recover, for otherwise the devise should be void, if the parson should not have the lands; and in wills, shall subserve and give place to the intent of the party; and therefore if a man deviseth, that his lands shall be sold for the payment of his debts, his executors shall sell them, and to that intent the naming of them executors is sufficient. Plow. Com. 523. in Weldens case it is vouched to be adjudged: that if one after the statute of 27 H. 8 deviseth that his feoffees shall be seized to the use of A. in fee, that it was a good devise of the lands to A. and yet then he had not, nor could have any feoffees, &c. But the party was ignorant of the statute, and his intent to pass the land was apparent, in that case the words were as much impertinent to the matter, as in our case, for there he had not any feoffees, as here she hath not any manor. Br. recites, that in 38 H. 8. it was holden by Baldwin, Shelly, and Morgan, that if a man who had feoffees to his use would, after the statute of 27 H. 8. that his feoffees should make an estate to J. S. that the land should pass to J. S. 26 H. 8. Feoffments & Faits 12. Land cannot pass by the deed of an house, for it cannot be parcel of an house; but an acre of land may be given by the name of a carve, and a carve of land by the name of a manor; and yet a carve can be no more a manor, than this rent: yea, rents and services more resemble a manor, than a carve of land. It cannot be intended that her will was here to pass the manor it self, which was not in her, but in another. Also she by four years before had the rent, and therefore it shall be intended, that it was her meaning to pass the same, which she her self received, and no other thing: and although in the devise the rent be specially named, and the manor also; yet the same shall not alter the case; for if a man grant the reversion upon an estate for life, and by the said deed grants the land, and the tenant attorns, and the grantee deviseth all his land, the reversion shall pass without all question. If a man grant the advowson of D. and in the same deed, the church and rectory of D. and the grantee deviseth the rectory of D. the advowson shall pass. In Adams case, Plow. Com. 195. a man leaseth his capital messuage rendring rent, there the question is, if the reversion or rent shall pass: it was adjudged, that all which he had passed. As to that, that it cannot be levied out of the rent, for that no place is therein of distress; I say, that she did not know whether a lesser rent might be paid out of a greater rent, and 1 H. 4. mul-[76]-ture was granted reserving rent, and the grant was good. The words of the will are, All which manors, lands, and tenements, &c. she devised to the Lord Mountjoy, and these words expound her meaning, for although the word (rent) be not within the word (manor) yet the words (lands and tenements) do comprehend it, and words subsequent in wills may express the premisses. As 16 Eliz. Dyer 333. Chapman seized in fee of two houses, having three brothers, devised the house in which A. inhabited to his three brethren, and A. to dwell there, and they not to raise the rent, and devised the house in which B. his brother dwelt to him, and that he pay to C. his brother 3l. for to find him at school, and otherwise to remain to the house; proviso that the houses shall not be sold, but shall go to the next of the name and blood which are male, and dyed. B. his brother dyed without issue, the eldest of the two middle brothers entred, and had issue a son and dyed. It was a question, if the son or the middle brother should have the house: and it was holden that the son of the eldest should have it in tail, which exposition was by reason of the words in the proviso, that it should not be sold, and that it should go to the heirs males. Shuttleworth, The rent shall not pass by the devise, for the construction of a will ought to be according to the words, or according to the intent collected out of the words, and not by a thing out of the will: for then a stranger shall be the maker of the will of another: and 19 H. 8. if a will be doubtful it ought to be expounded for the heir at the common law. And if the rent ought to pass, it ought to have apt words, and not the name of a manor. And thereupon he put the case, that where one deviseth certain lands to one, and afterwards his goods, leases, and other things to another: all his goods and terms shall pass, but not his lands, for that there wanteth apt words to pass them, for the word (other things) shall not pass them; and this set order ought to be observed, for the avoiding of confusion: and the rent and services shall not pass for the two parts, admitting the words sufficient, for they cannot be divided: but Periam said, that the rent might be divided. Anderson said, that it should be but a rent-seck: Periam said it was a rent distrainable of common right, but Anderson doubted of it; but they all agreed that it might be divided, but there should not be two tenures. Fenner, The rent should pass by the devise of the manor, for there is no difference betwixt a manor and a seigniory in gross amongst lay-men; and then their intent shall be taken, although it was not written by apt words; for in grants a reversion shall be taken for a remainder, and à fortiori a devise. And 7 E. 3. a manor shall pass by the name of a knights fee; and 19 H. 8. a wood shall pass by the name [77] of land, and 38 E. 3. by grant of totam terram which A. held in dower, the reversion shall pass. Afterwards in Mich. term the plaintiff discontinued his ation. And Periam told me, I being at his house, that the opinion of the Court was against the plaintiff, and if it had not been discontinued, they would have given judgment accordingly: now this was the intent of the Lord Mountjoy. The marchioness had devised all her lands, and had not left any thing to her heir, for which case the heir of the marchioness entred into the third part of the manor of Cauford (of which the lease upon which the ejectione firmæ was brought, was made by the Lord Mountjoy to Insley) and into the third part of the residue of the whole land; now his meaning was, that if the rent was not well passed by the name of the manor, then the same descended to the heir, which was sufficient for him: for the special verdict found also, that the rent was the third part of the value of the whole land of the marquess: so that thereupon it may be collected, that if a man hath three manors, some of them holden in capite, and of equal value, and he deviseth two of them, and suffereth the third to descend, that the devise is good for every part of the two manors, and the heir shall not have the third part of each manor.

CLXIII. Spring and Lawsons Case.

One recovered in an ejectione firmæ, and afterwards the defendant made a new lease for years, and he who recovered ousted him, and he brought an ejectione firmæ: and the other pleaded the former recovery. It was holden a good bar by all the justices, but Windham and Periam, and by them the same is no estoppel, for the conclusion shall be judgment if action, and not judgment if he shall be answered; and although that it be an action personal, and in the nature of a trespass, yet the judgment is quod habeat possessionem termini sui, during which term the judgment is in force, it is not reason that he should be ousted by him against whom he recovered, for so suits should be infinite; and by Rhodes an entry pendent the writ shall abate it.

CLXIV. Hil. 29 Eliz. In the Kings Bench.

An action of covenant was brought against one who had been his apprentice; the defendant pleaded that he was within age: the plaintiff maintained his action by the custom of London, where one by covenant may bind himself within age: exception was taken to it, that that was a departure: for 18 R. 2. an infant brought an action against his [78] guardian in socage, who pleaded that the plaintiff was within age. The plaintiff did maintain his declaration, that by the custom of such a place an infant of 18 years might bring accompt against his guardian in soccage, and it was there holden to be no departure. Wray Chief Justice was of opinion, that it was no departure; for he said, it should be frivolous, to shew the whole matter in his declaration; viz. that he was an infant, and that by the custom he might make a covenant which should bind him. But quære of the matter, and of his opinion, for that many learned lawyers doubted much of it. And vide the case in 19 R. 2. of the guardian in soccage.

CLXV. Savage and Knights Case.

Error was brought upon a judgment given in Leicester in debt; Tanfeild assigned error, because in that suit there was not any plaint, for in all inferior Courts the plaint is as the original at the common law, and without it no process can issue forth, and here upon this record nothing is entred; but only that the defendant summonitus fuit, &c. and because the first entry ought to be A. B. queritur versus C. Clench, a plaint ought to be before any process issueth; and the summons which is entred here is not a plaint, and for that cause the judgment was reversed: it was said, that after the defendant appeared, a plaint was entred: but it was answered, that that did not help the matter, for there ought to be a plaint out of which process shall issue, as in the Soveraign Courts out of the original writs.

CLXVI. Grindal Bishop of Yorks Case.

Grindal Archbishop of York made a lease for one and twenty years, another lease for years of the same land being in being, not expired by four years, and dyed; and in time of vacation, the dean and chapter confirmed it. Clench, It is a good confirmation: a bishop makes a lease for years reserving the ancient rent, but where it was payable at four feasts of the year, it is now reserved payable once in the year, the same is within the letter of the statute, but not within the intent; the same law, if the rent before was usually reserved to be paid upon the land, now it is reserved to be paid at any far remote place. And he said, that although his lease was in possession, yet not to take effect before the four years of the former lease are expired, [79] cannot be said an estate within the statute of 1 Eliz. whereby any estate may pass before the commencement of it; for he to whom it was made, had but a right to have the land; and he could not surrender. And he held that the second lessee should pay the rent as well by the contract as by the estoppel. Periam, At the common law a bishop, with the confirmation of the dean and chapter, might have made a feoffment gift in tail, and a lease for any term of years; and he spake much. What shall be said the possessions of a bishop: and therefore, if a bishop disseiseth another of certain lands, and makes a lease thereof under the seal of his bishoprick, it shall be now his seal, and it shall be his election in what capacity he will take, and then this land is to be reputed parcel of the possession of his bishoprick.

CLXVII. HOO AND HOES CASE.

John Hoo brought a writ of intrusion against Richard Hoo, depending which writ, the demandant prayed estrepement, and had it, and declared upon it, scil. that the tenant after the prohibition fecit vastum, estrepementum, in prosternendo, &c. To which the tenant pleaded, not guilty: but the plea was not allowed by the Court, for there is no issue in this case: but he ought to plead quod non fecit vastum, &c. after the prohibition.

CLXVIII. CLINTON AND BRIDGES CASE.

Debt; the condition was for performance of an award, which was to pay 10l. to the plaintiff, and to do divers other things: the defendant pleaded quod perimplevit arbitrium, and shewed how the plaintiff assigned for a breach, that the defendant had not paid the 10l. The defendant rejoyned that he tendred it to the plaintiff, and he refused it. It was the opinion of Dyer, that the same is a departure, for in the Bar, the defendant pleads that he hath performed the award, and shews how; and now in the rejoynder a tender and refusal which is not a performance of the award, although it is not any breach of it.

CLXIX. THE BISHOP OF L'S CASE.

Tenures.

The case of the Bishop of L. the King Lord, mesne and tenant, the mesnalty is holden in chief, and the tenancy by knights service; the manor escheats by attainder: if the tenancy should be holden in chief was the question. Manwood, It hath been holden, that no tenure in capite may be, if not by the creation of the King: and he said, that if before the statute of Westminster 3. the Kings tenant in capite had made a feoffment to hold of him, so as now there is lord mesne and tenant; and afterwards the mesnalty came to the Crown by attainder, &c. If by the coming of the mesnalty to the Crown the seignory paramount be extinct, then the tenancy is not holden in capite; but they have taken a difference where the mesnalty comes to the seignory, and where the seignory comes to the mesnalty. But he said it was a good case.

CLXX. PIGOTTS CASE.

Assignment of Debts to the King.

Pigott Collector of the Subsidy granted by Parliament holden 28 Eliz. and by reason thereof endebted to the Queen (one B. being indebted to him) assigned the said debt to the Queen for parcel of her debt: upon which progress issued out against B. and now, at the return of the process, Cooper Serjeant, moved in the behalf of B. that the assignment was not good. 1. There was no such Parliament holden 28 Eliz. 2. No assignment of debt to the Queen is effectual, where the goods and lands of the Queens debtor are sufficient, but here constat de claro, that Pigott is sufficient: as to the matter of the Parliament, the truth is, that the Parliament was begun in October 28. But no session was then holden, but it was adjourned to Newbury 29 Eliz. But if a session had been holden, one ought to say it was prorogued. Fenner, There is not any authority in our law for such assignments of debt to the Queen. Manwood, The Parliament is October 28 Eliz. and so is the roll, and the record of the Parliament: the writs of Parliament were returned in October 28 Eliz. but then the Queen adjourned, the Parliament; for there was no session: and although it was adjourned, yet the first day of the Parliament was in October: and such was the opinion of all the justices.

CLXXI. THE QUEEN AND PAYNES CASE.

Priviledge.

An information was exhibited against Payne Treasurer of the Records in the Kings Bench, upon the statute made against the buying of cattle, and he came and demanded priviledge. Manwood, It hath never been seen, that such priviledge hath been granted against the Queen, vide 21 H. 6. 22. in a decies tantum, by the better opinion the party shall have the priviledge. Some said that this is not like to the case where the Queen only is party, for in such case attaint doth not lye against the jury which have found for the Queen; contrary where the suit is tam pro Domina Regina quam, &c. Manwood, The law is not so, for an attaint lyeth where the Queen alone is party. Tanfield, who was of counsel with Payne, shewed to the Court a president 29 Eliz. where one tam pro Domina Regina quam, &c. prosecuted a suit in the City of Oxford, upon a penal statute, and the defendant claimed the priviledge of the Common Pleas, being an officer there, and by the award of the Court, the priviledge was allowed him. Manwood, The suit upon the penal statute was in an inferiour Court. But shew to us a president where the Courts are equal.

CLXXII. MICH. 30 ELIZ. IN THE COMMON PLEAS.

A poor man was ready at the Bar to wage his law; and upon examination it was found, that the defendant was indebted to the plaintiff ten pounds, to be paid at the Feast of Christmas; and that upon communication between them it was agreed, that the defendant should pay to the plaintiff at the said feast 5l. in satisfaction of all the debt due to the plaintiff; and as to the other 5l. that he should be acquitted of it: upon this matter the justices were clear of opinion, that the defendant ought not to be admitted to wage his law, for notwithstanding that bare communication, the whole debt remained due not extinguished by the communication; for 5l. cannot be a satisfaction for 10l. but contrary of a collateral thing in recompence of it, &c. and satisfaction and agreement to pay 5l. before the said Feast of Christmas in satisfaction of the whole 10l. Upon such matter shewed, the Court was of opinion, that the defendant might be admitted to wage his law.

Withernam. Fine for Contempt.

In a replevin, the defendant avowed for damage feasant: upon which issue was joyned and found for the advowant: and damages assessed, and a retorno [82] habendo issued, upon which the sheriff returned elongata: upon which a withernam was awarded. And now the plaintiff came into Court, and tendred in Court the damages assessed by the jury, and prayed a stay of the withernam, and cast the mony into Court. But the whole Court was clear of opinion for the stay of the withernam upon that matter only: because in this case the plaintiff ought to be fined, because he had esloigned his cattel, which is a contempt, wherefore the Court assessed a fine upon him of 3s. 4d. and then the plaintiff had his prayer and request.

CLXXIV. Germies Case.

Assets.

In debt upon an obligation against A. as executor, the case was, that the testator of A. by his will appointed certain lands, and named which should be sold by his executors, and that the mony thereof arising should be distributed amongst his daughters, when they had accomplished the age of one and twenty years; the lands are sold accordingly, and if the monies thereof coming being in the hands of the executor, should be assets to pay the debts of the testator, was the question. It was the clear opinion of the whole Court, that it was not assets, for that that mony is limited to a special use.

CLXXV. Mich. 29 Eliz. In the Common Pleas.

Alien Purchaser.

This case was moved to the Court; An alien purchased lands in fee, the Queen confirmed them to the alien, &c. Office is found, if the confirmation should bind the Queen was the question. Some conceived it should; for by Anderson Chief Justice, when an alien is enfeoffed, he takes by the livery the fee-simple, of which he shall be seized until office found, and a præcipe quod reddat lyeth against him. Fenner, An alien and denizen joyntenants are disseized, they shall both joyn in an assize, vide 11 H. 4. 26. And he said that the wife of the King takes a husband being an inheretrix, they have issue, office is found, the husband shall be tenant by the courtesie, which see 33 E. 3. Fitz. Traverse 36. It was argued on the other side, that the estate of the alien is so weak, that a confirmation cannot enure upon it, for an alien cannot take, but to the use of the King, and cannot be infeoffed to anothers use, and if he be, such use is void. For there is not a sufficient seisin in an alien to carry an use. And it hath been adjudged on Forsets case: where an alien and the said Forset were joynt-purchasers, and the alien dyed, that [83] Forset should not have the whole by survivour, but that upon office found the Queen should have the moiety, vide 11 Eliz. CLXXVI. JERMINE AND ARSCOTS CASE.

The case between Jermine and Arscot was this: A. seized of lands in fee, had issue six sons and one daughter, and devised the manor of, &c. parcel of his said lands to J. S. for ninety years, if the said J. S. and G. his wife, or any of them should so long live, the remainder to P. his eldest son, and the heirs males of his body, the remainder to his other sons in tail, the remainder to his daughter. Provided, that if the said P. his son, or any of the sons of the devisor, or any of the heirs males of their bodies, should endeavour by any act or thing to alien, bargain, or discontinue, &c. that then after such attempt or endeavour, and before such bargain and sale, &c. were executed, that the estate of such person attempting, should cease, as if he were naturally dead, and that then the premises should remain and come to such person to whom the same ought to come, remain, or be by the intent and meaning of his will, and died: P. levied a fine of the manor, he in the next remainder entred, and claimed the land by force of the devise. This case was this term argued by Walmesly Serjeant, that an estate tail cannot cease, for it is an estate of inheritance; and here is not any limitation, for the estate tail by the meaning of the devisor shall remain revivable upon the death of the offender, but a limitation determines the estate utterly, which is not here: but here it appeareth as well by the meaning of the devisor, as by the words of the devise, that the estate tail upon such act should be suspended, and it cannot be resembled to the case cited on the other side 22 E. 3. A rent granted to one in fee, and that it shall cease during the nonage of every heir; the rent is but suspended between the parties and privies to the gift; as in the case of Littleton of re-entry and retainer quousque; but that a stranger should re-enter and retain quousque, that cannot be: and in the case of Scholastica reported by Plowden, the estate tail by such offence is determined by the limitation; but in our case by the meaning of the devisor only suspended, so our case is not like to that case. Shuttleworth to the contrary; the purpose of the devisor appeareth to be, the continuance of the land in the name and family of the Caries; and as to the difference of ceasing and suspending of an estate tail, the same is not to the purpose, for the tenant in tail himself may suspend his estate tail, therefore à fortiori the donor upon the creation of the estate tail: [84] as by Littleton: Tenant in tail grants totum statum suum, the estate tail is thereby suspended: and by Anderson, If in such a case, after such a grant, tenant in tail levy a fine in our case, if tenant in tail offend: and the party to whom the next interest is limited enters, and after the offender levies a fine to a stranger, there, although his estate was determined by the offence, yet the estate tail is bound by the fine. Ad quod cæteri justiciarii murmurabant. Tenant in tail hath issue two sons, the eldest in the life of his father levieth a fine, and after the father dieth, the estate tail is bound; contrary if the father had survived his eldest son: and afterwards in the end of this term judgment was given against the plaintiff, for by the will here is a good limitation, and an estate to cease upon an act, and upon another contingent to be revived, is good enough, vide 30 E. 3. 7. A lease for life rendring rent, and if the rent be behind, that the lessor shall return quousque agreement be made; so as a freehold may cease and rise again according as the same is limited: and all this was agreed by Rhodes, Periam, and Windham; and afterwards Walmsley for the plaintiff, took an exception to the bar, for that the defendant pleaded quod Petrus Cary tempore levationis finis prædict. non habet exitum, and doth not say, that tempore quo ipse Henricus clamabat reversionem prædict. the said Peter had not issue; for he said if Peter had issue, when Henry claimed the reversion, nothing had vested on him by the said claim: but all the Court besides Anderson, said, that needed not be, but if the matter had been such, the same should come on the part of the plaintiff. Also, they said, that the estate was vested in Henry without claim, and although after the offence committed, and before claim Peter have issue, yet Henry should retain the land during the life of the offender against such issue born after the fine levied: for by the fine levied the reversion vested in Henry without any claim by force of the said limitation.

Alien suffers a common Recovery.

Land was given to an alien in tail, the remainder over to another in fee, the alien suffered a common recovery, and died without issue: all this matter was found by office. It was shewed in stay of judgment, that the venire facias was not well awarded, for it ought to have been De vicineto de Knolton & Woodland, which was granted by the Court: and that that defect was not relieved by any statute, for it is a mis-trial, and for that cause judgment was stayed, and a venire facias de novo granted.

CLXXIX. THE PROVOST OF QUEENS COLLEDGE IN OXFORDS CASE.

The provost, fellows, and scholars of Queens Colledge in Oxford, are guardians of the hospital, and Meason de Dieu in Southampton, and they make a lease of lands parcel of the possession of the said hospital to one Hagel for term of years by the name of Præpositus Socii & Scholares Collegii Reginalis in Oxonia Gardianus Hospitalis, &c. And in an ejectione firmæ upon that lease, it was found for the plaintiff. It was objected in arrest of judgment, that this word (gardianus) ought to be in the plural number (gardiani) for the colledge doth consist of many persons, and every one of them capable; and not like to abbot and covent: the Court was all of opinion that the exception is not to be allowed, but that as well the lease as the declaration were both good, for the colledge is a body, and as one person, and so it is as well gardianus.

CLXXX. GREENS CASE.

Upon Statute of Hue and Cry.

An action upon the Statute of Huy and Cry was brought by Green: the case was, that the plaintiff delivered to his servant certain monies to carry the same from Bristol to London, in which journey the servant was robbed: upon which matter the master brought his action. It was moved, that the plaintiff by the statute of 27 Eliz. c. 13. is not a person able to bring this action, because he was not examined twenty days before the action was brought, but the exception was disallowed, for the Court was clear of opinion, that the master should not be examined, but the servant.

[86] CLXXXI. 30 ELIZ. IN THE COMMON PLEAS.

This case was moved upon the statute of 1 and 2 Phil. and Mary, cap 12. The town of Coventry was within the hundred of Offley in the county of Stafford; and Queen Mary by her letters patents made the said town a county. And now a distress was taken in the residue of the said hundred, and brought into the town of Coventry, and if that be within the statute was the question. It was holden by the Court clearly, that now the town of Coventry is exempted out of the hundred aforesaid, and is a thing by it self, and it is a good challenge for the hundred of Offley, that the juror challenged dwells in the town of Coventry, for now it is not parcel of Offley as to the King: but as to the lord of the hundred, the said town remains parcel of it, notwithstanding the Queens grant. And the citizens of Coventry shall do suit at the Court of the hundred; but in an action upon the Statute of Hue and Cry of a robbery committed in the residue of the hundred, the citizens shall not be charged.

Posse Manerii & Comitatus differ.

One recovered certain copyhold lands in the court of the lord of the manor by plaint, in the nature of writ of right: it was moved in the Common Bench, if a precept may be made and awarded out of the said Court for the execution of the said recovery, and to put him who recovered in possession with the posse manerii, as in such case at the Common Law with posse comitatus; it was resolved clearly that force in such cases is not justifiable, but by mandate out of the Kings Courts.

HIL. 29 ELIZ. IN THE COMMON PLEAS.

CLXXXIV. ANNE BEDINGFIELDS CASE.

Dower was brought by Anne Bedingfield against Thomas Bedingfield; the tenant brought out of Chancery a writ de circumspecte agatis containing this matter, that it was found by office in the county of Norfolk, that the husband of the demandant was seized of the manor of D. in the county of Norfolk, and held the same of the Queen in chief by knight service, and thereof died seized, the tenant being his son and heir apparent, and of full age, by reason of which the Queen seized as well the said manor as other manors, and because the Queen was to restore the tenements tam integre as they came to her hands, it was commanded them to surcease Domina Regina inconsulta: it was resolved, that although the Queen be intituled to have primer seisin of all the lands whereof the husband died seized, yet this writ cannot extend to any manors not found in the office, for by the law the Queen cannot seize more lands than those which are found in the office, and therefore as to the land found in the office, the Court gave day to the tenant to plead in chief. And it was argued by Gawdy Serjeant for the tenant, that the demandant ought to sue in the Chancery because the Queen is seized to have her primer seisin. And cited the case 11 H. 4. 193. And after many motions, the Court clearly agreed, that the tenant ought to answer over, for the Statute of Bigamis, cap. 3. pretends that in such case the justices shall proceed notwithstanding such seisin of the King, and where the King grants the custody of the land it self 1 H. 7, 18, 19. 4 H. 7. 1. à multo fortiori against the heir himself, where he is of full age, notwithstanding the possession of the King for his primer seisin, by the Statute of Bigamis, where the heir was of full age, there the wife could not be endowed in the Chancery: but now per Prerogativa Regis, cap. 4. such women may be there endowed, si viduæ illæ voluerint. CLXXXVII. Chomley and Conges Case.

Chomley brought trespass of assault and battery made to his wife against Cony, and upon the general issue it was found for the plaintiff: it was moved in arrest of judgment, that the action was not well brought, for the same being an action of trespass done to the person of the wife, the writ ought to be brought and prosecuted in both their names; for now, if judgment be given for the husband, and he dye before execution, the wife to whom the wrong was done should not have execution, but the executors of the husband; and afterwards upon advice the plaintiff had judgment to recover, vide Cont. 9 E. 4. 51. 38 H. 6. 25.

PASC. 28 ELIZ. IN THE COMMON PLEAS.

CLXXXVIII. BLITHE AND COLEGATES CASE.

Vide this Case reported by Cook 2 Part of his Reports.

Replevin by Blithe and Colegate, who made conusans as bayliff to Roger Beckwith son and heir of Elizabeth Beckwith for damage feasant, and upon a special verdict the case was, that the said Eliz. was seized, and took to husband Chri-[89]-stopher Kenne, and by an indenture made by the said Eliz. without the assent of her said husband, by the name of Elizabeth Beckwith, bearing date 14 March, 14 Eliz. declareth the uses of a fine to be levied &c. 1. To the use of the said Elizabeth for life, without impeachment of waste, and after to the use of the conusees for their lives, and after to the use of the said Elizabeth and her heirs; and that afterwards the said Christopher Kenne, before any fine levied in Feb. 20 Eliz. by indenture between himself and the said Elizabeth, his wife of the one part, and R. W. of the other part, without the consent of the said Elizabeth declared that the uses of the said fine so to be levied, should be to the use of the said Christopher and Elizabeth for life, &c. And afterwards the said fine was levied by the husband and wife; and the only question upon the matter was, if the uses declared by the wife, or the uses declared by the husband should stand. It was argued by Shuttleworth Serjeant, that the uses declared by the husband should stand, and that the declaration by the wife should be rejected, for a feme covert is not sui juris, but is sub potestate viri. And therefore 17 Ass. 17. a feme covert without her husband acknowledgeth a fine, the husband shall avoid it; and as to the declaration of the uses, it is no other thing but the shewing of the meaning of the parties to the fine, how and in what manner the land of which the fine is levied, shall be disposed of by the fine, but such a power cannot be in a feme covert: for if an infant levy a fine, and declare the uses by indenture, the declaration is void, and the fine shall be to his own use, and that was adjudged in the Court of Wards: the same law in case of a man of non sanæ memoriæ: and if an ideot levy a fine, and declare uses upon it, the declaration is void, and the fine shall be to his own use, and that case also hath been adjudged in the Court of Wards: and by intendment of the law, every wife is at the disposition of her husband, as in a præcipe quod reddat against the husband and wife, the wife makes default, it shall be accounted the default of the husband, for the law intends that the wife is ameanable by the husband. 21 Ass. the husband seized in the right of the wife, made a feoffment in fee, and in making of livery his wife interrupts him, it was not any interruption or impediment quo minus the livery operetur, for cui ipsa in vita contradicere non potuit, &c. So in a præcipe quod reddat against the husband and wife, the husband pleads one plea, and the wife another, the plea of the husband shall be admitted, 33 H. 6. 43. 89 Ass. 1. And the husband may in some case prejudice his wife in point of inheritance, as by cession, vide E. 4. 2. Fitz. Cui in Vita 22. And he argued much upon the ground, where it shall be said the folly of the wife to take such a husband: if the husband be seized in the right of his wife, they sell the said land, and for assurance levy a fine to the vendee, now [90] the husband alone shall have an action of debt for the mony upon the sale which proves that it is the sale of the husband alone, which see 48 E. 3. 18. Fenner Serjeant contrary: and first he confessed that the declaration by the wife is utterly void and also the declaration by the husband; and therefore when the husband and wife levy a fine the conusee in judgment of law is in by the wife, and not by the husband, so as the husband as to the right is a stranger to the land, and to the estate which passeth by the fine, although he be party to the fine, for that is not for any interest which he hath in the land, but for the conformity of law, which disables a wife to levy a fine without her husband, and therefore it is not any reason that the husband alone shall be received to declare the uses, for he is no proprietor of the land in right especially, forasmuch as in account of the law, the whole passeth from the wife: and the law in divers cases frames its judgment according to the possession of the wife, and that in acts done by the husband 14 H. 8. 6. where A. seized of a rent-charge in fee issuing out of the land of the wife, A. releases the rent to the husband and his heirs, the same shall enure to the wife, vide 38 E. 3. 10. from such cases the law respects the nature of the seisin and the manner of the possession. And as to the case vouched out of Dyer 12 Eliz. where the husband and wife were seized of a messuage to them, and to the heirs of the husband, they suffer a common recovery, and the husband alone declareth the uses, the same is good, for in that case the fee was in the husband, and always he who hath the fee ought and may declare the use, if all who have interest will not joyn, and therefore if lands be given to two, and to the heirs of one of them, if they both joyn in a fine he which hath the fee may by himself declare the uses: but if there be two joyntenants in fee, they both ought to joyn in the declaration of the uses, or otherwise make several declarations of their several moieties. So if cestuy que use and his feoffees joyn in a fine, and make several declarations, the declaration of the feoffees shall stand, for that the land passeth from them. So if cestuy que use and his feoffees make a feoffment in fee 21 H. 7. And to that purpose he put the case reported by Plowden 15 Eliz. 464. Husband and wife seized in right of the wife, they levy a fine sur conusans de droit come ceo, &c. and the conusee renders the land to the husband and wife, and to the heirs of the husband, the husband dieth, the wife discontinues the land, the same is not within the penalty of the statute of 11 H. 7. For notwithstanding the wife be now in by the purchase of her husband, yet that purchase is not within the meaning of that statute, because the law respects the original seisin which was in the wife, and so it was adjudged. Vide Term. Mich. 30 Eliz.

CLXXXVIII. THE EARL OF NORTHUMBERLANDS CASE.

The Earl of Northumberland brought debt for arrearages upon account. The defendant shewed, that before the said account, the plaintiff of his own wrong imprisoned the defendant, and he so imprisoned, assigned auditors, and so the account was made by duress. It was holden a good plea by the justices of both Benches.

Payment of Rents.

In ejectione firmæ the case was, the defendant leased for years to the plaintiff. rendring rent, payable at Michaelmas, and the Annunciation, or fourteen days after. Et si contingat the said rent to be behind post aliquod terminorum vel festorum prædictorum in quo solvi debet by the space of 14 days, post aliquod festum prædict. that then, &c. It was adjudged in this case, that the lessee had fourteen days after the said fourteen days mentioned in the reservation without danger of the penalty of the condition, and the last words post aliquod festorum prædict. for the contrariety shall be rejected.

CXC. HARRIS AND WHITINGS CASE.

Debt upon an obligation by Harris and his wife, as executors of Giles Capel against Whiting, the condition was that if the obligor before the Feast of Pentecost pay such a sum, so as the obligee be ready at the payment thereof to enter into a bond of 200l.

with sureties to purchase such land, &c. that then, &c. The defendant pleaded that he was ready to pay, &c. and that the obligee was not ready to enter into such bond ut supra. The plaintiff replicando said, that he was ready absque hoc, that the defendant was ready to pay. It was moved that the traverse was not good, for the first act here was to be done by the obligee, viz. to enter into the bond, ut supra, for otherwise the obligor had not any means to compel the obligee to enter into it. But by Wray, Chief Justice, the first act is to be done by the obligor, and at the payment the other party is to do that which to him belongs to do.

CXC. RALPH MORRIS CASE.

Ralph Morris and his wife libelled against one in the Ecclesiastical Court, for that the defendant called the wife of the plaintiff veneficam, sortilegam, & incantatricem dæmoniorum. And now came the defendant into the Kings Bench, surmising that the matter of the libel is determinable by the law of the land, and thereupon prayed a prohibition: and it was holden, that although the offence of witchcraft be in some cases punishable in our law, yet the same doth not take away the jurisdiction of the ecclesiastical law; and to call one witch generally, an action doth not lye in our law, as it hath been adjudged. But to say He hath bewitched such a one, an action doth lye: and by Wray, Witchcraft, which is made felony by any statute is not punishable by the ecclesiasical law; but in case of slander upon such a witchcraft, such slanderous words are of ecclesiastical jurisdiction; and for witchcraft which is not felony, the Ecclesiastical Court shall punish the party; and afterwards in the principal case a consultation was awarded.

CXCI. TYRRELS CASE.

Tyrrel warden of the Fleet of an estate of inheritance, let the said office for years and afterwards is condemned in London in many actions of debt, and is there detained in execution for the sum of fourteen hundred pounds, and now one Iden sued the said Tyrrel in the Common Pleas, in an action of debt for 50l. and had judgment to recover, and thereupon the said Tyrrel is brought to the Bar, and Iden prays he be committed to the Fleet in execution for his debt. It was first moved by the Court, if there was not a practize between Iden and Tyrrel for to deliver him out of the Compter in London to a more easie prison, &c. But it was moved by Fenner, who was of counsel with the creditors in London, that it should be very dangerous to commit Tyrrel prisoner to the Fleet, because he had the inheritance of custody of the said prison, and if the lessee under whose guard he shall be, surrenders his interest, or if he doth not pay his rent, so as in default thereof Tyrrel re-enter, or if that the term expire before that the creditors of Tyrrel be satisfied, then here is an escape and discharge of execution, and we are without remedy. But as to that it was said by Rhodes, Windham, and Anderson, that if the lessee surrender it shall be an escape in him, and he shall answer for the same. Afterwards [93] by order of the Court Tyrrel was committed to the Fleet in execution, and the Sheriffs of London discharged.

MICH. 29 ELIZ. IN THE COMMON PLEAS.

CXCII. OWEN AND MORGANS CASE.

The case between Owen and Morgan which was agreed Trin. 29 Eliz. was this, Richard Owen was seised of, &c. and levied a fine to Owen and Morgan, and to the heirs of Owen, and they granted and rendred the said land to the said Richard and Lettice his wife (not party to the said writ of covenant, nor to the conusans) and to the heirs of the body of the said Richard, the remainder over to the said Owen now demandant in fee: the husband alone without the wife suffered a common recovery, the wife died, the husband died without issue. If this recovery by the husband only should bind the remainder, was the question: and now the Lord Anderson declared openly in Court for himself, and in the name of his companions, the other justices, that the demandant ought to have judgment, & that the said recovery should not bind the remainder: but first he spake to the fine itself, for the wife is not named in the writ of covenant, nor the conusans but in the render, the land is rendred to the husband and wife, and the heirs of the body of the husband, and he said a scire facias did lye upon the fine well enough, for the fine is not void, but only erroneous, and being in its force, this writ doth well lye. And he cited to this purpose 7 E. 3. Fitz. Sc. fac. 136. where upon such a fine levied, and such exception ut supra taken to it: to which it was said by Herle, that forasmuch as the fine is excepted and yet in its force, we ought to grant execution, and also 30 H. 6. none can take the first estate in the fine, but he who is named in the writ of covenant, but every stranger may take by way of remainder, and such was the opinion of the whole Court: as to the matter in law all the Court agreed, that notwithstanding the recovery the demandant should have execution, for here the land which by pretence of the said recovery, shall be recoverd in value, cannot go to the estate which is given, for the estate given was to the husband and wife, and the heirs of the body of the husband, and then the tenant against whom the recovery was had was impleaded as sole tenant, in which case the vouchee, when he comes in, is to warrant a sole estate, but not another, but now the land to be recovered in value shall go to the husband alone, and the wife shall have nothing, so as the true estate is not warranted and so not answered: and he cited the case of 38 E. 3. 5. in a formedon, the tenant vouched himself for to save the tail, and shewed that one A. was seized, and gave the land in demand, to the now tenant, [94] and to E. his wife in tail, which E. is now alive, and by award the voucher was disallowed. Because it was there said by Knevyt, the recovery in value cannot be according to the gift, 45 E. 3. 18. Tenant in tail discontinues, and takes back an estate in fee, is impleaded, and voucheth the donor, he shall be ousted of the voucher, for that he is in of another estate, and afterwards the plaintiff had judgment to have execution.

In debt upon an obligation upon condition to perform the arbitrament: (the ligation was laid to be made in the parish of Bow in London) and the submission s of all things depending between them; so that they made an award of the emisses before such a day: and said further, that no arbitrament was made. The aintiff replicando said, that the arbitrators made an award in the parish of Pancras Warda prædict. and layed a breach, &c. The defendant rejoyned, that 3000l. was pending in controversie between them for a certain thing of which no arbitrament s made: upon which they were at issue, and tryed by a visne of the parish of Bow ly, which passed for the plaintiff. It was moved in stay of judgment, that the al was not good, for no place is alledged where the controversie of 300l. is pending; for which cause it shall be tried where the bond and arbitrament was ade; to which it was said, that the alledging the place where the arbitrament s made is superfluous; for which cause the trial is good: and also the submission ing conditional, the award ought to be of all things submitted, or else it is void; ntrary if it be no condition, vide Cook 8 Part, Baspoles case.

CXCV. THE QUEEN AND THE BISHOP OF LINCOLNS CASE.

The Queen brought a quare impedit against the Bishop of Lincoln and others; d the case was, that F. Bishop of Lincoln, predecessor of the defendant, was patron the Church, and presented to the same, being void, one Garth, who being inducted, ok another benefice, by which, by reason of the statute of 21 H. 8. the first benefice came void, and remained void by the space of seventeen years, whereupon the ueen was entituled to present to the same by lapse. The said F. then bishop esented to the same, and afterwards was translated to Winchester, and the defen- nt, now bishop, was suffectus. And he certified into the Exchequer, that the cumbent presented by the said F. refused to pay his subsidy, upon which he was prived; and if now the Queen shall present by reason of her title by lapse, not- thstanding the plenarty after, or if the title by lapse of that presentment of the shop was, &c. was a great question: and the case late adjudged between Beverly d Cornwel was cited; but there the case was, that the clark presented (where the esentment appertained to the Queen by lapse) died, but here he is deprived, which ay be the covin betwixt the Ordinary and him. Fenner argued to the contrary, d put divers cases to prove that the prerogative of the Queen did not alter the right the parties; as the Queen hath a seignory consisting of homage, fealty, and rent, d the Queen grants the seignory to a stranger, reserving the rent, and afterwards e tenancy escheats, the rent is gone: the Queen leases for years, rendring rent to stranger upon condition, who enters upon the lessee, the condition of the Queen is spended. The Queen purchaseth lands in borough English hath issue a son, and 'eth seized he hath the land now by descent; afterwards a younger son is born, at land shall be divested out of the possession of the King, and the royalty of his rson doth not alter the right of descent: and afterwards forasmuch as the same privation is the act of the incumbent, the refusal the act of the Ordinary himself, e sentence and not the act of God in the case before cited. It was the opinion of e Court, that judgment should be given for the Queen.

[96] CXCVI. WINDHAM AND MEADS CASE.

Windham brought an action upon the case upon the common law of England ncerning hostlers: the case was, that the servant of Windham brought his masters

To which the defendant said, that the said servant brought the said horse to the said inn to be put to pasture, and thereupon the said horse was put to grass, and was there stollen; it was ruled in that case that the inn-keeper should be excused; but if the inn-keeper of his own head, without direction of the owner, or his servant, had put the horse to grass, and afterward the horse is stollen, there an action upon the case doth lye.

Sed non allocatur, for the sheriffs are parcel of the corporation, as it is to see by the name by which they of Norwich are incorporated. Sir John Brome 33 H. 8. acknowledged a fine of certain lands, the Kings silver was entred, and the conusans taken; but the fine was never engrossed, and now he who claimed under the fine came in Court, and prayed that the fine might be engrossed, and the Court examined them upon their oaths, to what use the fine was levied, and in the seisin and possession of what persons the lands whereof the fine was levied, had been after the fine? Upon which examination it appeared fully to the Court, that the party to whom the fine was levied, was seized after the fine, and suffered a common recovery of the land, and that the said land had been enjoyed according to the said fine at all such times since, &c. whereupon the Court commanded that the fine be ingrossed. CXCIX. THE LORD DACRES AND PHILIP FINES CASE.

The case between the Lord Dacres and Fines was tenant in tail in remainder upon an estate for life of lands holden in capite, levied a fine thereof without licence; and process issued against the tenants for life; it was holden by all the barons, that by plea he should be discharged; it was holden, that if the conusor had any other lands ubicunque in Anglia, the fine for alienation should be levied upon them. But it was moved, if the tenant should be driven to plead it, because it appears upon record that the conusor was but tenant in tail in remainder, and that was in an office containing such matter which was pleaded by another in another cause before, by which office it appeared, that the Lord Dacres was tenant in tail, the remainder in tail to Philip Fines; and now Fines had levied a fine sur conusans de droit, &c. and because the same appeared on record, Manwood awarded that the process against the tenants of the Lord Dacres should be stayed.

CC. PASTON AND TOWNSENDS CASE.

In trespass by Paston against Townsend, the defendant pleaded that Tindal was seized in fee, by protestation and dyed seized, and the land descended: to which the plaintiff replyed, and said, &c. absque hoc that Tindal was seized in fee, upon which they were at issue. On the part of the defendant to prove the issue, it was given in evidence to prove the issue in his right, that the said Tindal long time before his death was seized, and aliened, and never after was seized: it was said that that evidence did not prove the issue for the defendant, for the seisin in fee intended in the issue is in the nature of a dying seized; and so Periam conceived that the defendants plea did not intend any other seisin, a dying seized, and the dying seized is taken by protestation to avoid the doubleness. So as the seisin upon which the issue is taken ought to be intended a seisin continuing until the time of the death of Tindal, and seisin at large, or a general seisin at any time during the life of Tindal, quod Anderson concessit.

CCII. HARRIS AND CAVERLEYS CASE.

A judgment was given in London between Harris and Caverley upon the statute of 5 E. 6. for buying of woolls; and upon that error was brought in the Kings Bench, quod nota, for this writ of error upon a judgment given in London ought to be sued before the maior, vide F. N. B. 22, 23. And Wray asked, wherefore the writ of error was brought here. To which it was answered by Dodding clark, that the record was removed by certiorari out of the Kings Bench at the suit of the defendant, to the purpose to bring a writ of error, quod coram vobis residet. And the error was assigned in this, that by the statute of 18 Eliz. cap. 5. it is enacted, that upon every information that shall be exhibited, a special note shall be made of the day, month and year of the exhibiting of the same into any office, or to any officer, who lawfully may receive the same: and here upon this information there is not any such note, according to the said statute: and in truth, no information may be exhibited, for there is not any officer there appointed for that matter, for the entry in such cases in that Court is, talis venit & deliberavit hic in Curia Miloni Sands, &c. But in the case at Bar, the entry is, talis venit & deliberavit in Curia, but without shewing to whom. (But note that the words of the said statute of 18 Eliz. are in the disjunctive, into any office, or to any officer) and that such information shall not be of record but from that time forwards, and not before, wherefore here this information is not upon record, and then no judgment can be given upon it. Cook, This information may be well sued in London, for the words of the said statute of 5 E. 6. give suit in any Court of Record of the King: and the Court in London is a Court of Record of the King, and every Court of Record [99] hath an officer to receive declarations and pleas, and if it be delivered into the office, it is good enough. 2. The offence is laid in the parish of Bow in Warda de Cheap, & alibi in civitate London, and so there is not any place laid where the offence shall be tryed. Cook, This alibi is a nugation.

CCIII. PENSON AND HIGBEDS CASE.

In assumpsit, the plaintiff declared, that in consideration that he by his servant had delivered to the defendant two bills of debt amounting to the sum of 80l. solubiles eidem querenti to be received by the defendant at Roan in Normandy, to his own use, the defendant promised to pay to the plaintiff 60l. and upon this matter judgment was given; and now a writ of error was brought and assigned for error, because it is not shewed in the declaration that the bills were sealed, or that they were made to the plaintiff, and here is not any consideration, for the defendant hath not any remedy to compel the parties to pay the said debts if they refuse. Godfrey, If the mony be not paid at Roan to the defendant, he shall have an action upon the case, for this is an assumpsit in law, which Wray concessit, for it is a mutual promise and agreement: and it was argued to the contrary, that here is not any sufficient consideration, for it doth not appear that the defendant hath any remedy for to recover the mony. And 13 Eliz. it was holden, that where the plaintiff declared in an action upon the case, that in consideration that he had delivered a bill of debt to the defendant, and hath made a letter of attorney upon it, &c. the defendant promised to pay to the plaintiff 20l. and because that the plaintiff (notwithstanding that) might release the debt, or revoke the letter of attorney, and so defeat the defendant of the whole profit, &c. that the action upon the matter did not lye: also for another cause the consideration is not sufficient, for it is illegal because maintenance; but if it was upon the consideration precedent, it had been good enough: as if J. be indebted to A. and B. is indebted to me, J. may assign to A. the debt which B. oweth me. Golding, Although the consideration be but of small value, yet it is good enough. And if A. in consideration B. will assure to him the manor of D. promise to pay to B. 100l. although the party hath not any interest or title to it, yet it is good, and also though the consideration be executory, yet it is valuable, for if the mony be not paid at Roan, the defendant shall have an action upon the case against the plaintiff: it was also objected that upon the declaration it doth not appear that the defend. if the [100] two bills be not paid, may have an action upon the case against the plaintiff, for there is not any express assumpsit on the plaintiffs part, that the monies due by the bills to the plaintiff shall be paid to the defendant, for if it had been so, then it had been good, for then there had been a reciprocal promise which is not here, nor can be collected by any words in the declaration. Cook, It doth not appear upon the declaration by whom, nor to whom the mony due by the two bills shall be paid, for it may be that they are due to the defendant, and then the delivery of the two bills is not any consideration, quod Clench & Gawdy concesserunt. The case was adjourned.

CCIV. TEMPS ROIGN ELIZ.

The case was, A. enfeoffed B. upon condition that if he pay ten pound to the feoffee, his executors and assigns, within three years next ensuing, that then, &c. The feoffee hath issue three sons, whom he makes his executors, and dyeth before the day of payment. The Ordinary commits letters of administration to J. S. during the minority of the executors. It was the opinion of Dyer, that it was the surest way for A. to pay the monies to the executors, notwithstanding the administration committed to another, for the administrator in such case is but a bailiff or receiver to the executors and shall be accountable to them; which Harper concessit: and Manwood said, that if in that case, the monies be paid to one of the executors, it is sufficient; and the monies to be paid upon that conditional feoffment, are as a sum in gross, and not in the nature of a debt, quod cæteri justiciarii concesserunt.

CCV. Temps Roign Eliz.

A lease is made of certain lands for years, proviso that the lessee shall not put his cattel upon the land from Michaelmas to St. Andrews tide, the question was, If this proviso and restraint shall reach for the whole term, or but to the first year. Dyer, Conditions are stricti juris, and ought not to have liberal constructions; therefore he conceived that the condition should be restrained to the first year, and should not further extend. Manwood, If I be bound that I will not go to London between Easter and Michaelmas, it shall not extend only to the first year after the date of the obligation, but for my whole life.

CCVI. Doughty and Prideaux Case.

Action upon the case by Doughty against Prideaux upon these words, Thou art a wicked and perjured fellow, and art forsworn in the Court of Star-Chamber, as it appeareth by an exemplification here under the seal of that Court: the defendant justified by reason of a bill exhibited in the said Court, by one Brooks against the now plaintiff, for conspiring with another to endite the said Brook of certain felonies, and the defendant, now plaintiff in his answer to his said bill, denied upon oath the said conspiracy, and sentence was given in the said Court against the now plaintiff, ubi revera, such conspiracy was. The plaintiff by replication said, that the said Brook was arraigned and endicted upon the said indictment, and prayed his clergy, whereupon it appeared, that the said Brook was not legitimo modo acquiet'; and the same can be no conspiracy in the now plaintiff, to prove the said Brook to be indicted: and by Walmsley and Periam, the replication is not good, for it may be that Brook was acquitted, and yet that the plaintiff conspired, upon which a writ of conspiracy perhaps will not lye, but an action upon the case without doubt, for the replication doth not prove that the plaintiff did not conspire, but that the plaintiff was not punishable for such conspiracy.

CCVII. Pasc. 33 Eliz. In the Common Pleas.

An abbot made a lease to three men for eighty years, and in the end of the said lease there was a clause, proviso, that if they dyed within the said term, that then the lessor might enter. The possessions of the abby came to the King, who granted the reversion to J. S. who made a new lease to J. D. for twenty and one years, to begin after the expiration, determination, or surrender of the former lease: the three lessees dyed within the term, if J. D. might enter before J. S. had entred, was the question. It was the opinion of the justices, that he could not, for it is in the election of J. S. if he will take advantage of the condition, and defeat the lease, but that ought to be by entry, and none can make such entry but the lessor himself, or by his express direction.

CCVIII. Barlow and Piersons Case.

Barlow brought a plaint of debt in London against Edward Pierson, which was his very name, and he caused himself to be removed into the Kings Bench by the name of Edmund Pierson, and in Easter last he put in bail Edmund Pierson, and we declared against him by the name of Edward, his true name, and judgment was given for us; and now when we are to resort to the bail we cannot find any such person, wherefore all our labour is lost, and now we would declare de novo upon that bail, and we pray that the Court will give way to answer. Kemp, The ancient use was, when any removed himself hither by habeas corpus, the plaintiff might declare against him at any time within a year after; but of late time the justices, to avoid overlong delays, have taken this order, that the plaintiff in such case declare within two terms; and this is the second term in your case, wherefore you may declare: and it was said, that because that the defendant had removed himself by the name of Edmund, he is estopped to say the contrary: but if it were upon an original writ here, it is otherwise. And afterwards the plaintiff declared against him by the name of Edmund.

CCIX. KIGHTLEY AND KIGHTLEYS CASE.

Debt by Eustace Kightley against Charles Kightley executors of the last will of Francis Kightley: the defendant pleaded that they had fully administred. The case was this, Francis Kightley made the defendants his executors, who being within age administration was committed to another until they came of full age, and after they were of full age, the jury found, that in the hands of the administrator, fuerunt bona & debita testatoris amounting to the value of 4000l. To which administrator the executors did release at their full age all manner of demands; and if that release were assets in the hands of the executors was the question. Puckering Serjeant argued, it was not assets, for a release of a thing, which is not assets in the hands of an executor, cannot be assets, and things in action, before they come in possession, cannot be assets: but a gift of goods in possession is assets. And there is a difference betwixt a certain thing released, and a thing incertain, of a certain it is assets, for by such means he hath given a thing which is assets, but contrary of an incertain. And this difference is proved by [103] 13 E. 3. Execut. 91. where it is holden, that if executors release to the debtor, he shall account for such sum before the Ordinary by Parn, but Trew said he shall not account. The whole Court was against Puckering: and Anderson said, it is a clear case, that this release is assets, for he hath thereby given away that which might have been assets. And the law doth intend, that when he releases he hath recompence and satisfaction from the party to whom the release is made: and it is not requisite, that every assets be a thing in possession, or in the hands of the testator, for a thing may be assets which never was in the hands of a testator, as monies for lands or other goods sold. So if they come by reason of another thing, which was in the testators hands: as the encrease of goods by the executors in their hands by merchandizing with the goods of the testator or goods purchased by the villein of the testator after his death, shall be assets. So monies received by the executors of the bailiff of the testator after his death shall be said assets. Windam Justice, So it is if the testator hath sheep, corn, or swine, and dyeth, and they have young lambs, pigs, or calves, they are assets for the reason aforesaid: and he agreed that the release is assets, and he said it had been so adjudged, and he denied the difference taken by Puckering. Periam agreed with the rest in all; and also denied the difference. And he said, the incertainty must be such that the same cannot be proved to the Court, or unto a jury; that the thing released might not by possibility have been assets. For if trespass be done to the testator by taking his goods, and he dyeth, and the executors release all actions, the same is assets, because it might be proved to the jury, that had they not released, but brought their action of trespass de bonis asportatis in vita testatoris, that they might have recovered damages which should have satisfied the debts or legacies of the testator, and therefore it shall be assets: and yet the thing recovered cannot be in the testator, or a thing in possession, or certain in the hands of the executors. With whom Rhodes agreed. And Periam conceived that such administrators made durante minori ætate of the executor, could not by our law neither sue or be sued: for as he conceived, the infant was the executor, and an infant executor may either sue or be sued, and may release if there be a sufficient consideration given him; wherefore he said, if an administrator doth release where he hath no cause nor good consideration, he shall be answerable of his own goods when he cometh of full age, for the wasting of the estate, and such a release shall be assets: and it was holden, that a release before probate of the will is good, and it is assets also. And the same term judgment was given, that the release of the executor was assets.

[104] CCX. Temps Eliz. In the Common Pleas.

Note by Dyer upon the words of the statute of 32 H. 8. cap. 28. that a feoffment of the lands of his wife, it shall not be a discontinuance (mes que) but that the wife may enter after the death of her husband, is an abridgment of the words precedent, for in some cases such a feoffment is a discontinuance; as if, after the feoffment they be divorced, she cannot enter, but is put to her writ cui ante divortium.

CCXI. Pasc. 29 Eliz. In the Kings Bench.

Note by the opinion of the whole Court: a man made his will in this manner, I will and bequeath my land to A. And the name of the devisor was not in all the will: that yet the devise was good by averment of the name of the devisor, and proof that it was his will; and if a man lying sick, having an intent to make his will by words makes such a devise, but doth not command it to be put in writing, but another without his knowledge or command puts the same in writing in the life of the devisor, it is a good devise, for it is sufficient if the devise be reduced into writing.

Note, it was agreed by all the justices, and affirmed by the prothonotaries, that if the disponee levieth a fine, and the disseisee in preservation of his right against the said fine, enter his claim in the record at the foot of the said fine, that the same is not any claim to avoid the said fine upon the statute of 4 H. 7.

CCXIII. The Queen and Sir John Savells Case.

A bill of intrusion was exhibited by the Queen in the Exchequer against Sir Robert Savell kt. who pleaded in bar her pretence, and upon issue joyned, the matter was tryed by the records, and thereupon judgment was given for the Queen, and an injunction for the possession awarded accordingly. Sir Robert dyed, and now Sir John Savell, son and heir of the said Sir Robert brought a writ of error in the Exchequer Chamber upon the statute of 31 E. 3. the perclose of which writ was, ad grave damnum ipsius Johannis Savell filii & hæredis dicti Roberti. [105] It was objected against the writ, that no writ of error upon the said statute of 31 E. 3. lay upon such proceedings which at the time of the making of the said statute was not in force: for tryal of an issue in the Exchequer by record, was enacted by the statute of 33 H. 8. and the statute of 31 E. 3. extended to give a writ of error upon such judgments which were given by verdict, confession, or demurrer, and not upon tryal by records, which was given but of late times. But to this objection it was answered by the Lord Chancellor, and the other Judges, that long time before the said stat. of 33 H. 8. issues joyned in the Exchequer have been tryed by the records; and he, when he was the Queens Solicitor, had seen divers presidents to that intent in the time of Hen 6.

CCXIV. HOUTIERS CASE.

Debt was brought upon a concessit solvere according to the law of merchants and custom of the City of Bristol. Exception was taken, because he did not mention the custom in his declaration: and because in the end of his plea, he saith, Protestando se sequi querelam secundum consuetudinem civitatis Bristol, the plea was awarded good, and the exception disallowed.

CCXV. MICH. 29 ELIZ. IN THE KINGS BENCH.

A man was indicted upon the Statute of 4 Eliz. of Perjury in a Court-leet: and the indictment was, that he at the leet of the Earl of Bath, super sacramentum suum coram senescallo, &c. Exception was taken to it, because it saith at the leet of the Earl of Bath, whereas every leet is the Kings Court, although that another hath the profit or commodity of it: and it was said that the steward of a leet is not an officer of record; and also his oath was, if he had done a rescous, or not, with which he was charged. And by Drew, It is not within the statute; for it ought to be either before a jury in giving evidence, or upon some article. But the justices in that were of opinion against him.

CCXVII. STRANGDER AND BURNELLS CASE.

An action upon the case of trover of goods, and converting them to his own use in Ipswich. The defendant pleaded, that the goods came to his hands in Dunwich in the same county, and that the plaintiff gave to him all goods which came to his hands in Dunwich, absque hoc that he is guilty of any trover or conversion in Ipswich. It was holden to be a good manner of pleading by reason of the special justification. Vide 27 H. 6. But where a justification is general, the county is not traversable at this day, vide 19 H. 6, 7.

CCXVIII. HODGES CASE.

If one enfeoffeth his son and heir apparent, and no use is expressed, nor consideration, it was said, it should be to the use of the son, and so hath the law been taken; and so it is in case of a covenant to stand seized to the use of the son. The Court said that there was a difference betwixt the cases; for in the case of feoffment they seemed to be of opinion, that the deed should have no operation; but in the other case it may be otherwise upon construction of the result of the use to the father.

CCXX. VERNEY AND VERNEYS CASE.

In dower by Verney against Verney: the case was, That lessee for years by fine to whom the land was rendred by fine for years upon the default of the tenant, prayed to be received, and it was counter-pleaded, because the Statute of Gloucester gave no receit, but where the termor might have recovery by writ of covenant, but where the lease, as in our case, doth commence by render by fine, there cannot be any recovery by covenant. But it was the opinion of the Lord Anderson, that such a termor shall be received.

CCXXI. MICH. 32 ELIZ. IN THE EXCHEQUER CHAMBER.

In the Exchequer Chamber before the Chancellor, Treasurer, &c. a writ of error was cast upon the statute of 31 E. 3. cap. 12. It was moved by Egerton Solicitor to the Queen, for the defendant, that the writ of error ought to abate for false Latine, for the writ is pertenet, where it ought to be pertinet. But by Manwood, Anderson, and Wray, the same is no exception, but notwithstanding that, the Court may proceed to the examination of the errors; for the same is not properly a writ, but rather a commission to the Chancellor, Treasurer, &c. and therefore it was ordered that the party should proceed to the assignment of the errors.

CCXXII. THE QUEENS, FANES, AND THE ARCHBISHOP OF CANTERBURIES CASE.

The Queen brought a quare impedit against Fane, the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Bishop of Chichester, and Hudson incumbent; and counted that John Ashburnham was seized of the advowson of Burwash, and was outlawed in an action of debt, during which outlawry in force, the church voided, by which it did appertain to the Queen to present. The archbishop and bishop pleaded that they claimed nothing but as metropolitan and Ordinary. Fane pleaded, that King E. 4. ex gratia sua speciali, &c. and in consideration fidelis servic. &c. granted to the Lord Hastings the castle and barony of Hastings, and hundred, &c. Et quod ipse haberet omnia bona & catal. tenentium, residentium & non residentium, [108] & aliorum resident. quorumcunq; hominum de & in castro, baronia &c. seu infra eadem pro numero debit. &c. tam ad sectam Regis, &c. quam &c. utlagatorum. Et quod ipsi liceret per se, vel ministros suos, &c. and from him derived to the now Earl of Huntington as heir, &c. and the said earl being so seized, and the said Ashburnham seized of the said advowson as appendant to the mannor of Ashburnham, holden of the said barony, the said church during the outlary in force became void: for which cause the said Thomas Fane ad ecclesiam prædict. usurpando præsentavit the said J. H. who was admitted, and instituted, and demanded judgment. If, &c. with this that the said Tho. Fane will aver that the said church of B. is, and at the time of the said grant was infra præcinct. libertatis & franchesiæ prædict. & quod prædict. manerium de Ashburnham tempore concessionis prædict. was holden of the said barony. And the incumbent pleaded the same plea: and if by that grant of King E. 4. to the Lord Hastings, scil. bona & catalla, the presentment to the church passed or not, was the question. Shuttleworth of counsel for the Queen, he said and confessed, that the Queen might grant such a presentment, but it ought to be by special and sufficient words, or such words so as it might appear to the Court by them, that the intent of the Queen was to grant such a thing, for the general words omnia bona & catalla, would not pass such a special chattel in the Kings grant. And he said he conceived, that by the words subsequent, that no goods and chattels should pass by such grant, but such which might be seized, the which the advowson of a church could not be: Et quod ipsi liceret per se vel ministros suos ponere se in seisinam, 8 H. 4. 114, 115. The King granted to the Bishop of London that he should have catalla felonum & fugitivorum de omnibus hominibus, & tenent. de & in terris & feodis prædict. & de omnibus residentibus infra terr. & feoda prædict. ita quod si prædicti homines, tenentes & resident. de & in terris & feodis prædict. seu aliqui eorundem, seu aliquis alius infra eadem terras & feoda pro aliqua transgressione sua, seu quocunque alio delicto vitam, vel membrum debeat, vel fugerit & judicio stare noluerit, seu aliquam aliam transgressionem fecerit pro qua ipse catalla sua perdere debeat, in quocunque loco justitia de ea fieri debeat. Ipsa catalla sint ipsius Episc. & per ministros Episc. in manus ipsius Episc. sesiri possint. Tirwhit, The goods of those that are put to penance do not pass, so the goods of a felo de se, vide 42 Ass. 5. where one being impanelled upon the grand inquest before the Justices of Oyer and Terminer, pleaded the Kings Charter of Exception from Inquests; and because in the said charter there was not this clause (licet tangit nos & hæredes nostros) without challenge it was rejected, and he charged, and sworn. And if the King grant to me to appropriate an advowson, which in truth is holden of the King, such a grant is void. So if there be not special words, by which it may appear that the King [109] hath notice of it, and that his intent was, that the grant should extend to the same, it doth not pass, 16 E. 2. Fitz. Grants 58 and 33 E. 3. Grants 103. So here this presentment is a special chattel: and it is not usually intended, or thought upon when a man speaks generally of goods and chattels, but that it passeth, yet the presentment doth not lye for the defendants, for they do not derive any interest under that grant, but are meer strangers to it, and therefore they shall not take any advantage in laying this grant in the Queens way; for the Queen hath good title against all persons, but those which claim under the said grant, but that is nothing to the defendants. For one cannot cross the title of the King, if he doth not make a title to himself. As 39 Ass. 18. 17 Ass. 11. if the title of the King be found by a false office, the party grieved cannot traverse the title of the King, without making a title to himself, and then the King may choose whether he will maintain his own title found by the office, or traverse the title of the other. Walmesley to the contrary: This title of presentment is a chattel, rex habebit omnia catalla felonum, &c. Terminus annorum is a chattel, so exitus & proficua terrarum utlagatorum pro felonia; so a right of action for goods; so it is of an obligation made to the party delinquent, therefore also a title to present; therefore if a title to present shall accrue to the King by such general words, it shall pass also from the King by such words; and as to that which hath been objected, that the grant of King E. 4. extends only to such goods and chattels which may be seized. He cited the case 39 H. 6. 35. where the grantee of a rent-charge, for a term of years granted omnia bona & catalla sua tam viva, quam mortua, the rent passed, and yet the grantee could not put him in seisin of it when he would, but ought to expect the day of payment. And this title to present is not a thing in action, for if no disturbance be made, the party may have the benefit of it without any action. Anderson held that this title to present could not pass by these general words, bona & catalla, for they do not extend to a right, or things in action, but to such things only which are commonly known and understood by such words. By grant of goods, chattels real do not pass. For when men speak of goods, houshold-stuff, mony, and the like, personal things only are understood. So a man cannot be said to have a chattel but where he is possessed of it, and here this interest is but jus præsentandi. Periam, This interest is a chattel; for if the church became void and before presentment the patron dyeth, his executors shall have the presentment, for that it was a chattel vested in their testator, &c.

It was further given in evidence, that the said Nicholas was attainted of treason in the time of Henry 8. and afterwards went beyond sea, ut supra, and returned in the time of Queen Mary, and was restored by Act of Parliament: and upon all that matter it was holden that the said Francis was inheritable.

It was objected, here was not any consideration for to induce the assumpsit; for the defendant by this letter of attorney gets nothing but his labour and travel. But the exception was not allowed of. For in this case not so much the profit which redounds to the defendant, as the labour of the plaintiff in procuring of the letter of attorney, is to be respected.

Copyholder. Surrender by Attorney.

In trespass, the case was, A copyholder surrendred to the use of his wife for life, and after to the use of his daughter in fee the wife is admitted: it was holden that the daughter, after the death of the wife, might without any admittance surrender the same land, for the first admittance was sufficient. And Manwood said that Roper was steward of a mannor, and one of the copyholders of the said manor being in Ireland, he made a commission to one to receive a surrender from him there, and it was holden a good surrender.

CCXXVII. TRIN. 32 ELIZ. IN THE EXCHEQUER.

Note by Manwood Chief Baron, for a rule to all counsellors, that they do not advise any collectors of subsidies or fifteens to exhibite any bills in the Exchequer Chamber for the not payment of subsidies; for such bills shall not be allowed hereafter, because they have remedy by distress. Also it was, that if any be assessed for the fifteens which he ought to pay, or if two towns ought to pay together, and one town be taxed more than it ought to be, or hath been accustomed, those who are grieved by such assessment, may have a commission out of the Exchequer, which is called ad æqualiter taxand. and that was put in practice in a case between Bartace and Hind, where one of these was Lord of Little Marlow, and the other of Hedfore. It was also holden, that fifteens are to be levied of goods and chattels properly, and a township is sometimes richer than at other times, and therefore it is not reasonable they pay their fifteens always according to the same proportion. But Clark Baron held, where the custom hath always been that the fifteens shall be taxed according to the quantity of acres, then the rate and proportion shall be always on whosoever holdeth the land. And as to the commission ad æqualiter taxand. Manwood and Fanshaw said, that they could shew twenty presidents of it.

CCXXVIII. HARRIS CASE.

The case of Harris of the Middle Temple, was, Tenant in tail in remainder upon an estate for life is attainted of felony, if he hath forfeited his remainder during his life. Popham Attorney General, He hath forfeited it to the Queen; for after his attainder, the law will not suffer it to remain in him, and it cannot vest in the lord of whom the land is holden; for the person attainted being tenant in tail in remainder, was not very tenant to the lord, therefore, if in none of them, the Queen shall have it, and the law shall punish the offence so sharply, that it suffer nothing to remain in him. So tenant in dower and by the courtesie: and it is a maxim, What a man hath in his own right he may forfeit, but it is not a certain rule, whatsoever a man may grant he may forfeit; as guardian in socage and executors may grant that which they cannot forfeit. A man seized in the right of his wife is attainted of felony, the Queen shall have but the profits of the land during the life of the husband, vide Register 292. Where the husband seized in the right of his wife of certain lands is outlawed of felony, the King seizeth, and hath the lands during the life of the husband, after the death of whom, issued a diem clausit extremum, vide F. N. B. 254. D. Cook, Tenant in tail in possession is attainted of felony, the King shall have but the profits, but as our case is, being tenant in tail in remainder upon an estate for life, nothing shall be forfeited during his life, and after the death of the tenant in tail, so attainted of felony, the issue in tail may enter, for the King hath not the freehold; for if the King had the freehold, the issue in tail could not enter without office, vide Old Natura Brevium in the writ of escheat, that the King shall have only the profits. At another day it was argued by Egerton Solicitor, that the Queen hath the interest of him in the remainder during his life; for a man so attainted cannot be receiv'd against the Queen; and if a man attainted of felony purchaseth land and dyeth, his wife shall not be endowed of it: and he said that this remainder vested in the Queen without office, then not pardoned by 23 Eliz. It hath been objected, that if the remainder be in the Queen without office, by this attainder of felony by the common law, then also in case of attainder for treason, and then what need was there that the statute of 33 H. 8. should be made, which enacteth, that in cases of treason it shall vest in the King without office. As to that, I answer, that that statute was made in affirmance of the common law, and also for other things given to the King by the statute, which were not given by the [113] common law, as conditions, rights, &c. So as the King might grant over without office, and also the subject have a petition of right before office, which was not at the common law, 33 H. 8. 20. in the saving in the end of it: and as to the statute of 18 H. 6 cap. 6. such things were in the King without office, for by the common law before office, the King might grant them, but he could not grant them if they were not vested in him; and the said statute was made to such intent, that the Queen should be fully informed of her title, &c. by the office. Vide Stanford Prerogat. 54, 55. and vide 20 E. 4. 11. A. seized of a mannor with an advowson appendant, is attainted of treason, the church void, the King without any office shall have the presentment. But admitting that it is not in the King without office, yet the pardon of 23 Eliz. doth not extend to it: for the words of the pardon are, treasons, felonies, offences, contempts, trespasses, entries, wrongs, deceits, misdemeanors, forfeitures, penalties, and sums of moneys, and if by any of these words the matter be helped, is to be considered; and if any thing shall help it, it is the word forfeiture: but I conceive that the same doth not extend to this matter; for although it be an ample word, yet it shall be construed to extend beyond the words accompanied with it, which concern only personal things, as contempts, wrongs, trespasses, as the statute of 13 Eliz. cap. 10. which is penned by general words, as colledges, deans and chapters, parsons, vicars, and others having spiritual promotions, that statute doth not extend by construction to bishops, and they have spiritual promotion; yet the statute shall be construed to extend to the parties named, and other inferiour orders and degrees, and shall not be extended higher. So in the commission of the peace, ad diversas felonias, & alia malafacta, &c. those general words do not extend to treason, &c. Vide for the residue of this case, Venable and Harris's case, which was the same case, and is reported in Leonard 2 Part, fol. 122. Placito 169.

CCXIV. OGNELL AND UNDERHILLS CASE.

In replevin, the case was, as appeared upon the pleading, that Rob. Bouchier was seized of a certain farm called Cruchefield Grange, and leased the same to Sir William Raynsford for thirty years, who dyed thereof possessed, by reason of which the interest thereof came to Raynsford, as executor of the said Sir William Raynsford, who assigned the said farm, except a parcel of it called Hobbes, to Sir Henry Bear for parcel of the term, and afterwards assigned the said parcel called Hobbes for part of the term to Frekington and others, and afterwards granted the residue of the said term, not expired, to the said Bear and Frekington, and afterwards the said Rob. Bouchier granted a rent-charge of 40l. per annum percipiendum de omnibus terris & tenementis quibuscunque vocat. the Grange of Cruchefield, in the parish of Stoneleigh in the county of Warwick nuper in tenura, & occupatione William Raynsford milit. & nunc in tenura, & occupatione Hen. Bear. Bouchier granted the reversion of Hobbes to Lewknor in fee, to whom Scarre releaseth all his right, estate, and demand in the said land called Hobbes; the lease expired, the rent behind, Lewknor leased at will to R. the first question was, if the said rent-charge shall be said issuing out of the said lands called Hobbes; for if &c. then by that release the rent is gone: but the whole Court was clear of opinion, that the rent was not issuing out of Hobbes, but out of the lands then in the possession of Bear, and not out of the lands in the possession of Frekington: although it was objected by Walmesley Serjeant, that the words in the grant of the rent, (in tenura & occupatione Bear) shall be construed in the disjuncive, quasi sive; and then the close called Hobbes, although it was not in the occupation, yet it was in tenura of Bear. The matter was at another day argued by Fenner Serjeant for the plaintiff, and he much relyed upon the word quibuscunque in the grant of the rent de omnibus terris quibuscunque, commonly called Cruchefield Grange: as if I grant to you all my trees, my apple-trees shall not pass; but if the grant was omnes arbores meas quascunque they pass, and that by the emphasis of this word quibuscunque: so if I grant you common for your cattel in such a place, none shall have common but those which are commonable, shall have common there; contrary where the grant is pro averiis quibuscunque: and it was adjudged in the Chancery in the case of the Bishop of Ely, that where the said bishop leased all the demeasns of a manor for years, that by the said lease the [116] park within the said manor should not pass. But perhaps if such a lease had been omnes & singulas terras dominicales quascunque, the park would have passed. And afterwards the counsel of the plaintiff seeing that the Court was of opinion with the defendant, took exception to the pleading: the defendant made conusans ut ballivus administratoris of the grantee of the rent, and doth not shew the letters of administration. And as to that, it was agreed by the Court that that had been a good exception if the matter had not been relieved by the Statute of 27 Eliz. of Demurrers. Another matter was objected upon the statute of 32 H. 8. cap. 37. upon the words of the said statute, so long as the lands remain in the possession of the tenant in demeasn, who ought immediately to have paid the said rent. And it was said by Anderson and Rhodes, that the conusans was good enough, and within the relief of that statute: for Lewknor was the immediate purchaser, and although he had let the lands to another at will, that did not make any thing, for yet the estate of the land is within the words of the statute, for the land remains in the seisin of the first purchaser. And note that in this case Bouchier dyed before the lease expired, so as the rent was not determined in his life. And afterwards judgment was given for the defendant.

CCXXXV. RAWLINS AND SOMERFORDS CASE.

In ejectione firmæ, the case was, Cartwright possessed of a house for the term of 30 years, demised a stall parcel of it to Wartow for two years, and afterwards assigned the whole house to Rawlins for all the years; Rawlins redemised the same stall to Cartwright for twenty years, but Wartow did not attorn; but before the said redemise, Cartwright by deed indented, demised the said stall to Wartow for six years after the said two years ended, and afterwards Rawlins redemised all the house to Cartwright for 21 years, rendring rent, with clause of re-entry, and upon the indenture of the said redemise was endorsed that before the sealing and delivery, &c. it was agreed between the parties, that Wartow should have the said stall according to the lease for six years to him made: and afterwards Cartwright redemised the said stall to Rawlins for ten years, and afterwards the rent was behind, and if the rent reserved by Rawlins upon his demise to Cartwright, was suspended, or not, was moved a question. Cook argued it was not suspended, for Rawlins had in the estate but an interest in futuro, which cannot suspend the rent before in possession, and he put the case [117] 31 E. 1. Fitz. Discent. 17. Lord and tenant, the tenant is attainted of felony, and dyeth, now the seignory is not presently extinct: for if the lord takes fealty of the son, the seignory doth continue in esse, and vide Acc. Fitz. N. B. 144. 26 E. 3. 72. Houghton, The rent is suspended, as if I lease land and an advowson, rendring rent, and I take back an estate in the advowson, now the rent is suspended. But as to that it was answered, that there the party hath a present interest in the advowson, but so it is not in the case at Bar. And by Cook, A. seized in fee of three acres makes a lease of two of them for 21 years rendring rent, and afterwards the lessee leaseth one of the said acres for years to the lessor to begin two years after, it is not a present suspension of the rent until the lease come into possession, &c. And afterwards it was adjudged, that by the lease in futuro the rent was not suspended, Pasch. 28 Eliz. Rot. 255.

CCXXXVI. THE GUARDIANS OF THE MONASTERY OF OTLERIES CASE.

In the Exchequer, it was found by special verdict, that the Guardian and Chanons Regular of Otlery were seized of the manor of O., &c. and that 22 H. 7. at a court holden, granted the lands in question to W. and W. his son, for their lives, by copy, according to the custom of the said manor, and afterwards 30 H. 8. they leased the same land by indenture to H. rendring the ancient and accustomed rent, and afterwards surrendred their colledge, &c. and afterwards W. and W. dyed. And if the said lease so made, during the estate customary notwithstanding the statute of 31 H. 8. were good or not, that was the question, being within a year before the surrender, &c. And it was argued by Egerton Solicitor, that the said lease was void by the statute, the words of which are, Whereof, or in the which any estate or interest for term of life, year or years, at the time of the making of any such lease, had his being or continuance, and was not then determined, finished, or expired. And therefore we are to see, if this right or possession which W. and W. had at the time of the making of the said lease was an interest, or estate for life: and as to the word estate est nihil aliud, than measure of time; for an estate of fee-simple, is as much as to say, an interest in the lands for ever, and so of the rest, and therefore W. and W. had at the time of the making of the lease an estate for the thing demised. And although such customary tenants are termed in law, tenants at will, yet they are not simply so, nor meer tenants at will, but tenants at will secundum consuetudinem manerii: which [118] custom warrants his possession here for life, and therefore it is a more certain estate, than an estate at will, for the copyholder may justifie against his lord, and so cannot a tenant at will, whose estate is determinable at the will and pleasure of his lessor; and although this estate is but by custom, and by no conveyance, yet it is such an estate which the said statute intends, & non refert by what conveyance the estate is raised, so it be an estate; and this estate being supported by custom, is acknowledged in law to be an estate, and so accounted in our law; and the law hath notably distinguished copyhold tenancies by the custom, and tenancies at will at the common law, for a copyholder shall do fealty, and have aid of his lord in an action of trespass; he shall have and maintain an action of trespass against his lord; his wife shall be endowed; the husband shall be tenant by the curtesie without a new admittance: so customary tenancies are within the rules and maxims of our law: as in the case of Horewood, there shall be a possessio fratris of it without admittance; and it was adjudged 8 Eliz. in the Kings Bench, that if a copyholder surrender to the use of another for years, and the lessee dyeth, his executors shall have the residue of the term without any admittance. M. 14, 15 Eliz. A copyholder made a lease for years by indenture warranted by the custom, the lessee brought ejectione firmæ, it was adjudged maintainable in the Common Pleas; although it was objected, that if it be so, then if the plaintiff recover, he should have an habere facias possessionem, and there copyholds should be ordered by the common laws of the land. 10 Eliz. Lord and copyholder for life, the lord grants a rent-charge out of the manor whereof the copyhold is parcel, the copyholder surrendreth to the use of A. who is admitted, he shall not hold the land charged; and so it was adjudged in the Court of Common Pleas. 1 Leon. 4.

CCXXXVII. Mich. 23 Eliz. In the Common Pleas.

It was holden by all the Justices in the Common Pleas, that the Queen might be put out of possession of an advowson by two usurpations, and shall be put to her writ of right of advowson, as a common person shall be, for it is a thing transitory; and if the Queen after such usurpations grant the advowson, the grant is void, and so it was adjudged.

CCXXXVIII. Mich. 23 Eliz. In the Common Pleas.

The case was, Tenant in tail, the remainder over to another in fee, makes a lease for life according to the statute, and afterwards dyes without issue; and afterwards he in the remainder grants his remainder by fine before any entry, [119] and by Fenner, the conusee cannot now enter upon tenant for life, nor avoid his lease, for by the livery to the tenant for life, a freehold passeth, which cannot be avoided without an entry. As if a parson makes a lease for life, rendring rent, and dyeth, the successor accepteth the rent, now the lease is affirmed, vide 18. E. 4. 25. and then when before any entry, he in the remainder grants his remainder, the grantee shall have it but as a remainder, and so the estate of the tenant for life, which before was voidable, is now made good; and so it was holden by Windham and Periam: but by Mead and Dyer, by the death of tenant in tail without issue, the lease for life is become void, for the estate out of which the estate for life is derived, is determined by the dying without issue, ergo &c. Vide 21 H. 7. 12. A lease for life is made upon condition, that if the lessor pay to the lessee at such a day 20l. that his estate shall cease, now by the performance of the condition the estate is determined without any entry.

CCXXXIX. 32 H. 8. In the Common Pleas.

Note by all the Justices of the Common Pleas, that if a man holds of the King in chief by knights service, and also holds of another lord by knights service, and dyeth, his heir within age, and the King seizeth the wardship of the body and land, and afterwards the heir cometh of full age; and before livery sued, the other lord grants over his seignory to another, and the heir attorns, it is a good attornment; and also seisin of the services had by such lord by the hands of such an heir before livery sued, is good enough, and shall bind him afterwards in an avowry, &c.

CCXL. Sir William Hollis Case.

Sir William Hollis brought a quære impedit against the Bishop of Coventry, Godfrey Fuliamb Kt. and William Waltham clark; the case was, Sir Ralph Langford Kt. was seized of the manor of D. to which the advowson was appendant, and presented to the same church one A. his clark, who was admitted, &c. And afterwards the said Sir Ralph granted the next avoidance of the same church to Sir Godfrey Fuliamb, James Fuliamb, George Fuliamb and William Walton, & eorum uni conjunctim & divisim, afterwards the said Sir Ralph granted by fine the said manor with the advowson to Sir William Hollis in fee; the church became void, the said Sir Godfrey Fuliamb presented the said Waltham his clark, who was admitted, &c. And upon argument at the Bar and Bench, it was adjudged against the plaintiff, and the presentment of Sir Godfrey sole [120] without the others, was good; notwithstanding also that Waltham the presentee was one of the grantees of the next avoidance, Tr. 31 H. 8. CCXLI. Temps Roign Eliz.

Note by Hind and Hales the Kings Attorney, Justices of Assize in the county of Essex, in the case of the Bishop of London and one Heron keeper of Cronden Park: if the keeper of my park or any of his servants without his assent, of their own heads, and without my commandment kill my deers within the said park, being within his keeping, or abateth, or pulleth down any house within the park, or barn for to lay hay for the deer there, or cutteth any trees, wood or underwoods there growing, and sells the same, or gives it to another, that in all these cases the keeper of the park shall forfeit his office; and it was agreed by them that such a keeper hath not any estate or possession in the park, or in the lodge, but the possession remains always in the owner of the soil of the park, and the keeper hath but the occupation, and keeping, and the surveying of the same; for such a keeper cannot justifie the holding of the lodge with force in a writ brought upon the statute of 8 H. 6. by the owner of the park, but it was agreed that he who hath the inheritance in such an office, shall not forfeit his office for the causes aforesaid.

CCXLII. Fitz and Pierces Case.

Fish, Plowd. Com. 266. Rhodes and Periam were of a contrary opinion, and said the case cited is not like to the case at Bar, for there it appeareth to the Court, as Judges, when every term beginneth and endeth; but it is otherwise in our case, si 30 die Januarii be Dies Dominicus necne, for it shall be tryed by the country, &c.

CCXLIII. KEENES CASE.

Indictment. Nusance. Addition.

Ralph Keene Vicar of B. was indicted for stopping quandam viam valde necessariam, for all the Kings subjects there passing: exception was taken to it, because it wanted the word Regiam; and the word necessariam doth not imply any matter, for a foot way is necessary: also here the party hath not any addition: it is R. CCXLIV. PEAKE AND POLLORTS CASE.

Words.

Action upon the case by Peake against Pollort, upon these words, Thou art a malicious and sedicious man, and movest the Queens subjects to sedition: it was the opinion of the Court, that the words were not actionable, for they were too general; for it may be that the defendant hath stirred up the tenants of a manor to tumults and sedition, which is not any great scandal. And the statute of 23 Eliz. is, If any person do any thing to move the people to sedition, the same is felony; but then it must be sedition against the Queen: and of that opinion was the whole Court.

CCXLV. RATCLIFFE AND SHIRLEYS CASE.

Words.

The Lady Ratcliffe brought an action upon the case against Shirley, for these words, My Lady Ratcliffe is a beggerly lady, and giveth thread-bare coats; she bought sheep, and cosen'd men of their money, and she is as very a thief as he that robbeth by the high-way. Upon not guilty, the jury found that the defendant spake these words, She is a worse thief than he that robbeth by the high-way: it was holden that the words found by the verdict were actionable, as well as if the defendant had called the plaintiff thief generally. But it seemed to the Court, that upon that verdict the plaintiff should not have judgment; for it may be that the defendant dixit utrumque at several times, and so several causes of action. And it is not like to the case 3 Ma. 118. where part of the words is found, & quoad alia verba non dixit, and so expressly acquit him of the remnant, so it is not here, for this verdict doth not acquit him of the other words; and for that cause judgment was stayed.

CCXLVI. HERNE AND CROWES CASE.

In an action upon the case by Herne against Crowe, and declared, that whereas certain Irish merchants had imported furs here into England, which were offered to be sold in London; which furs the defendant desired to buy, but because he was a foreigner he could not buy them without peril of forfeiture, and then the plaintiff was in communication with the merchants to have bought them, that the defendant in consideration that the plaintiff promised to the defendant, that when he had bought the said furs, the defendant should have such a quantity of the said furs as he pleased upon equal price, assumed and promised that he would speak no more with the said merchants for the buying of the said furs; yet, that notwithstanding he proceeded in the said bargain, and offered to the said merchants sixty pound more than any other, by reason of which the plaintiff could not have them for such reasonable price, as he might have had them before. It was holden by Wray Chief Justice, that the declaration here was insufficient, upon which the defendant might have well demurred.

CCXLVII. BAKERS CASE.

Estrepement.

A writ of partition by Baker heir of Gertrudi Marquess of Exeter, who devised all his lands to Blunt, by which the third part descend to the plaintiff, and prayed a writ of estrepement; and it was the opinion of the Court, that the writ is not to be granted, for the plaintiff may have a more proper remedy upon the statute, cum duo, vel tres, and in a writ of partition no land is demanded.

CCXLVIII. MICH. ELIZ. IN THE COMMON PLEAS.

Conditions.

A man was bound in an obligation that he should release all his right in Black Acre to the obligor, and in the performance of the said condition, he made such a lease, and delivered the same to C. to the use of the obligor. The opinion of the whole Court was, that the condition was not performed, because the obligor had not the lease in his own hands to plead, but is put to his writ of detinue against C. which was not the intent of the condition.

That the said Marshall had entred upon them, and cut down five elms there, upon which they were at issue: and it was found that a servant of the said Marshall had entred and cut them, and that in the presence of the said Marshall his master, and by his commandment: it was the opinion of the Court, that the condition was broken, and that the master was the principal trespasser.

CCL. BABINGTONS CASE.

Amendment.

Humphrey Babington brought a writ of disceit, and counted that T. S. was seized of land, and held the same of the manor of Rodely, which manor is ancient demeasn; and that the said T. S. being so seised, a writ of entre sur disseisin was brought against him, in which T. S. pleaded and lost, and judgment was given against him. Et quod ipse Humphridus extitit dominus manerii prædicti, and concluded, ad exhæredationis ipsius Humphridi periculum manifestum. Exception was taken to the count, because the words are, quod cum ipse existit dominus manerii prædicti: where he ought to say further, Et tempore Judicii prædicti existebat; for if the recovery was before he purchased the said manor, his action doth not lye, which Rhodes and Anderson concesserunt, wherefore day was given to the plaintiff to amend his count.

32 ELIZ. IN THE EXCHEQUER.

CCLI. SIR WILLIAM PELHAMS CASE.

The case was, A. tenant for life, the remainder in tail to B. &c. A. by deed indented and inrolled, bargained and sold the messuage so conveyed to W. P. in fee, who suffered a common recovery, in which A. is vouched; and so a common recovery had and executed; and this was before the statute of 14 Eliz. And if the recovery should bind B. and [124] his remainder in tail was the question, or if it be a forfeiture. Altham argued that here is a forfeiture: 1. It is to see if a common recovery suffered by tenant for life (which here is the bargainee) be a forfeiture or no by the common law, if no execution be sued upon the same recovery. 2. If it be executed, then, if he in the remainder may enter for the forfeiture. When the tenant for life bargains and sells the messuage, although upon it an estate in fee be limited, yet nothing passeth from him, but what he may lawfully pass, and that was the estate for life of the bargainor, for such an estate only he might lawfully pass; and here the vendee is but tenant for the life of another, and when of his own assent he suffers a common recovery, and that without right, it is a forfeiture: by matter in fait a particular tenant may commit a forfeiture, as well as by matter of record: by matter in fait he cannot commit a forfeiture, if not thereby the reversion be not pulled out of him in the reversion: as if a lessee for 10 years make a lease for 1000 years, it is not a forfeiture, for by that the reversion is not touched; but if he by matter of record do any thing which sounds to the disinheriting of him in the reversion, although in truth the same doth not touch the inheritance, yet it is a forfeiture, vid. 39. E. 3. 16. If tenant for life pleads any thing against the right of him in the reversion, it is a forfeiture, and by Finchden and Belknap, he cannot plead in the right, 5 Ass. 3. Tenant for life is impleaded in a præcipe by a stranger, and confesseth the action, upon which the demandant hath judgment, the lessor enters, against whom the demandant sueth execution: the lessor brought an assise, and had judgment to recover, for it is a forfeiture, because the tenant for life hath admitted the reversion in another, because it is an alienation to the disinheriting of the plaintiff and of the lessor: 12 E. 3. Fitz. Resceipt 14. Where tenant for life pleaded in chief, or cannot deny or gainsay the action of the demandant, or makes default by covin, he shall forfeit his estate: but if a rent be demanded against tenant for life, and he rendreth the same, it is no forfeiture, 12 Ass. 31. Tenant for life is impleaded by covin, between him and the demandant, and pleads in chief without aid prayer, upon which judgment is given, he in the reversion enters in a juris utram against tenant for life, who pleads feintly, traversing the point of the action, he in the reversion shall not be received; for in as much as the tenant hath traversed the action, he is not within the Statute of West.

2, 3, 5. Default, reddition, but he in the reversion may enter by the common law, 22 E. 3. 2. In scire facias to execute a fine against tenant for life, who pleaded to the inquest, whereas in truth the land in demand was not comprised within the fine, judgment is given for the demandant [125] in the scire facias, he in the reversion may enter: in our principal case, here is apparent and manifest covin; for the tenant for life voucheth without cause, and this recovery is by assent, and is to the use of the vendee, who is tenant for the life of another, and therefore, by the common law, he in the remainder may enter before execution sued: and it is well known that these common recoveries are used for to dock remainders in tail, and that was the scope of this recovery. And as to the case of 5 E. 4. 2. tenant for life is impleaded in a præcipe quod reddat, who voucheth a stranger, the demandant counterpleads the voucher, and it is found for him, he in the reversion hath no remedy but by a writ of right, and if the vouchee entreth, and loseth by action tryed, or default ut supra; that book is to be intended of a recovery executed; for there in such case he in the reversion hath not an entry, but is put to his writ of entry by the common law, vide Br. Title Forfeiture 87. 24 H. 8. Tenant for life is impleaded, and prays in the aid of a stranger, he in the reversion may enter; but if he doth not enter until the other hath recovered, then he cannot enter, but is put to his writ of entry, ad terminum qui præteriit, vel de ingressu ad communem legem, and therein he shall falsifie the recovery; and there, by Brook, voucher of a stranger is not cause of forfeiture, for it doth not disaffirm the reversion in the lessor: and he vouched 24 E. 3. 68. where tenant for life pleaded in the right with aid prayer: and so he argued, that before execution he in the remainder might enter, but after execution is put to his action: but in our case, although that execution be good, yet he in the remainder may enter, for it is found by verdict, that at the time of the recovery he was within age, and that when he dyed, that he in the next remainder was within age, and then no entry shall be imputed, and then he shall not be driven to his action: as if tenant by the courtesie makes a feoffment with warranty, and dyeth; and the same descends to his heir within age, yet he shall enter, although he hath not avoided the warranty in the life of his ancestors: also he said that the statute of 32 H. 8. extended to this case; for Sir William Pelham the vendee was but tenant for life, and although that he be but tenant for the life of another, yet he is tenant for life as fully as if he were tenant for his own life, (or otherwise tenant for life or lives.) Note this, the words of the statute. As upon the statute of 20 E. 1. which gives resceipt, de defensione juris, the words are, cum quis aliquod breve Domini Regis impetret versus tenentem per legem Anglæ, vel feod' taliat' vel sub nomine dotis, vel alio modo, ad terminum vitæ; upon these words it is holden 11 H. 4. that where land was given to one and his heirs for the life of another, that [126] upon such an estate, he in the reversion should be received, by reason of these words, vel alio modo ad terminum vitæ, &c. And although he who enters at the time of the recovery, was not next in remainder to the particular estate, yet he is within the statute of 32 H. 8. For he was in remainder at the time of the recovery, and at the time of the entry he in the immediate remainder was dead, and then he the next in remainder. Vide 15 E. 4. 9. by Litt. If I grant my services to one for life, and he in a præcipe brought against him, pleads in the right, or grants to another the said services in fee, it is not a forfeiture, for it is no discontinuance. It will be objected, that the words of the statute of 32 H. 8. are, that such recoveries shall be utterly void, and if so, then he in the reversion cannot be damnified, and then no cause of forfeiture. So that it may be easily answered, that where tenant for life doth any thing which sounds to the disinheriting of him in the reversion, by matter of record, although the same doth not devest, or otherwise prejudice the inheritance, yet it is a forfeiture. Cook, to the contrary. Here in our case is not any covin in Sir William Pelham the bargainee, he was deceived by the bargainor; for he did not know but that the bargainor was seized in tail according to the covenant in the indenture, by which the bargainor covenanted that he was seized in tail at the time of the bargain; and also to do any other act for assurance of the estate of the bargainee; and it was lawful for him to vouch his bargainor, and although he voucheth a stranger, it is not a forfeiture. 39 E. 3. 16. Aid prayer of a stranger is a forfeiture, and the reason of that is, because he acknowledgeth the reversion to be in a stranger, and that is the cause of a forfeiture. Vide Book of Entries 254. where upon aid prayer, the party to have aid shewed such special matter: but in our case the tenant for life hath vouched his bargainor, and not without cause, for he hath a warranty from him, and the demandant cannot counterplead it, for he had a seisin, whereof he might make a feoffment. As to the case 14 E. 3. Fitz. Resceit 135. Lessee for life in a præcipe against him without aid prayer pleadeth to the enquest the first day, he in reversion may enter: it is true, he may enter, and enter into the resceit, but not into the land for a forfeiture; for then Fitzherbert would have abridged that case in the title of entre congeable, and not in the title of resceit: and the book in 5 Ass. 3. is good law, for there the tenant doth confess the reversion to be in another; but in our case the tenant voucheth, which is a lawful act, and according to the covenants of his purchase. And although the recovery was by agreement, yet it is not for that a forfeiture; for if the tenant for life voucheth truly, it is not a forfeiture. Before the statute [127] of West. 2. cap. 3. which gave resceit to a woman, and to those in reversion, where the particular tenant is impleaded, and made default, & reddere noluerit, no remedy for these cases, but a writ of right, but no entry; and that was for the credit which the law gave to recoveries, car si puissoit, then is resceit given, but that only in the two cases aforesaid: but afterward, because it was found that many particular tenants being impleaded, would plead faintly: the statute of 13 R. 2. gave resceit in such case. And upon what reasons were these Acts made, if in such cases the entry was lawful? But after these two statutes, another practise was devised; for such particular tenants would suffer recoveries secretly in such sort that those in the reversion could not have notice of it, so as they could not ante judicium, and prayer to be received; for the remedy of which mischief the statute of 32 H. 8. was made; by which, all recoveries had against the tenant by the curtesie, or otherwise for life or lives, by agreement of the parties, of any land whereof such particular tenant is seized, should be void as tenant by the curtesie, &c. should be void against him in the reversion: and yet an evasion was found out of that statute; for such particular tenant would make a feoffment with warranty, and then the feoffor should be impleaded in a writ of entry, and he vouch the tenant for life, who should vouch over, and such a recovery was out of the statute of 32 H. 8. for the recovery was not against such particular tenant, &c. For the remedy of which mischief the statute of 14 Eliz. was made; by which, it was provided that such recoveries had, where such particular tenant shall be vouched, should be void, if such recovery be had between them by covin. And he conceived, that the forfeiture is not in respect of the recovery it self, but of the plea pleaded by the tenant: and here in our case there is not any covin found, or that Sir William Pelham knew that he was but tenant for life; but it was found that the recovery was with their assent, and that was lawful, as this case is, for they may agree to have such recovery for further assurance; and so Sir William Pelham hath not vouched any but his bargainor, and that according to their covenants, and this bargainor was not a bare tenant for life, but had also a remainder in tail, although not immediately depending upon the estate for life, which he cut off; therefore it was not meerly a feigned recovery: and vide 5 E. 4. 2. & Br. Forfeiture 87. where tenant for life being impleaded in a præcipe voucheth a stranger, it is not a forfeiture, for it doth not disaffirm the reversion, &c. contra of aid prayer, for a stranger may release with warranty to tenant for life, upon which he may vouch: and he reported in his argument, that Bromley Chancellor of England sent him to [128] the two Chief Justices to know their opinions upon these points, and they were of opinion, that the voucher of a stranger was not any forfeiture, and also that after the recovery was executed, he in the remainder could not enter; but they conceived that the right of him in the remainder was not bound: and he said, that after the recovery executed, he in the remainder could not enter, which see Br. Forfeiture 87. 24 H. 8. For if entry in such case had been lawful, infiniteness of suits would follow, which would be a thing against the credit of recoveries. As to the objection of the infancy the same will not help the matter, 6 H. 8. Br. Saver default 30. Recovery had against an infant in which he voucheth, and loseth, is not erronious; contrary upon default: and if an infant tenant in tail suffereth a recovery, it is discontinuance, for in such recovery infancy is not respected. And in a scire facias upon a judgment had against the father, the heir shall not have his age. And he cited a case out of

Bendlowes Reports, 5 Eliz. tenant for life, the remainder over to a stranger in fee, tenant for life is disseized by covin, in a præcipe quod reddat against the disseisor he voucheth the tenant for life, who entreth into the warranty generally, and voucheth over the common vouchee, it was adjudged that that recovery was out of 32 H. 8. for the recovery was not had against the particular tenant, but he was but tenant in law quia vouchee; and also the recovery is a good bar to him in the remainder, notwithstanding that he was within age at the time of the recovery. And at another time it was argued by the barons, and Clark said, that he conceived that the entry of him in the remainder was lawful: it hath been objected that Pelham did not know that the bargainor had but for life, or that any other person had any remainder in the land, that is to no purpose to excuse him; for 42 E. 3. every purchasor ought at his own peril to take notice of the estates and charges upon the lands which he purchaseth: for the law presumes that none will purchase without advice of counsel, and without knowing the titles of the land. And although statutes have been made to provide against the practises of particular tenants, yet that is no argument that no other remedy was before. And by Littleton, If tenant for life joyneth the mise upon the meer right, it is a forfeiture. And he held strongly, that the judgment did not take away the entry, a cause of forfeiture being given before the judgment. 5 Ass. 3. He in the reversion after judgment and execution may enter. See also 22 Ass. 31 to the same purpose. For where tenant for life is impleaded, he ought to wait upon him in the reversion, and expect instructions from him in defence, &c. and therefore if he maketh default, or confesseth the action, it is a forfeiture. And as to [129] the supposed recompence, the same doth not help the case, for this common recovery is no other but an assurance, and recoverors are but assignees, and they shall take advantage of conditions by 32 H. 8. and a recoveror shall be seized to the use of him who suffers the recovery, if no other use be expressed. And he also held, that when tenant for life bargains and sells his land by deed inrolled, although no fee passeth, yet it is a forfeiture; and that by reason of the inrollment, which is matter of record: and he said, that if an infant tenant for life be disseised, the disseisor dyeth seized, and afterwards the infant dyeth, that he in the remainder may enter: Gent. to the same intent: If tenant for life, &c. the same is not simply a forfeiture; for he may have a warranty, or a release, or a confirmation made to him: attornment doth not give a right, but is only a consent, yet if he who hath nothing in the reversion will levy a fine of it to another, and afterwards the conusee bringeth a quid juris clamat against the tenant of the land, and he attorns, it is a forfeiture. Manwood to the same intent: this is a new case, and I have not read the case in any book, nor seen any president of it: and it is a great case, and a general case, and worthy to be argued; and I conceive clearly, that here is a direct and express forfeiture at the common law, without any aid or restraint of any statute to make it a forfeiture: the dignity of judgment in the repute of law hath been urged, which ought to stand in force until they be reversed by error, or attaint; and also Littleton hath been urged 481. where upon the Statute of West. 2. cap. 3. he saith, that before the statute aforesaid, if a lease had been made to one for life, the remainder to a stranger, and afterwards a stranger by feigned action had recovered against the tenant for life by default, and also the tenant for life dyed, that he in the remainder had not any remedy: but there Littleton doth not report the same as his own opinion, but as an opinion conceived by a remainder upon the said statute; and it is in truth but a meer conceit. And as to the main point he took this diversity: such recoveries, in which the title of the demandant stands indifferently to the Court, and non constat, if it be good or not, being suffered by tenant for life by default or confession without aid prayer of him in the reversion, do not make any forfeiture, although the tenant for life hath not dealt well with him in the reversion, not having prayed in aid of him: and in such case, if a lease be made for life, the remainder over in fee upon such a recovery, he in the remainder shall have a formedon in the remainder, or a writ of right, and shall not oust him who recovered without action, and that by the common law. Then came the Statute of West. 2. cap. 3. which gave to the wife cui in vita upon a recovery against the husband by default, whereas before she [130] had not any recovery but a writ of right, and notwithstanding her former recovery, ulterius necesse habet ostendere jus suum secundum formam brevis quod prius impetraverat, and if his right be not better than the right of him in the reversion, he shall lose the land, notwithstanding the judgment given before for him: and that statute gave resceit or entry ad terminum qui præteriit, and that statute is to be intended of such recoveries where a good, or at least an indifferent title is so as non constat Curiæ, if it be good or not: after that, tenant for life was driven to a near shift, and would not make default, or lose by nient dedire, but would plead, but yet faintly; for the remedy of which mischief the statute of 13 R. 2. was made, which gave resceit in such case; the particular tenant being restrained by that statute: he jugled yet, and practised to suffer a recover secretly, without notice of him in the reversion: to remedy which mischief the statute of 32 H. 8. was made, and that made such recovery had against such particular tenant void against him in the reversion. It hath been objected, that the statute of 32 H. 8. doth not give any forfeiture in that case, but makes that the recovery be void, therefore he in the reversion ought to tarry till after the death of the particular tenant: to that I shall speak after. But how our case is a common recovery, and constat Curiæ, that the demandant hath not any right, for the tenant might have barred him, and in truth he who recovereth is but a purchasor: also this recovery is not to the use of the recoverer, but to the use of him who was tenant in it, and not paramount, as in the case of a recovery upon a good title, a lease for years made by him who after suffers a recovery, is good, and shall not be defeated by the recoveree; otherwise it is where the recovery is upon a good title. Vide Statute of Gloucest, cap. 11. Where upon default of the tenant, resceipt is given for lessee for years, yet if the tenant vouch upon default of the vouchee, the lessee for years shall be received; and now resceipt of lessee for years is out of the book, for by the statute of 21 H. 8. he may falsifie: but no resceipt lyeth in the case of a common recovery, for he who recovereth cannot oust the termor. As to that which my brother clark hath said, that the bargain and sale in this case is not any forfeiture, but when the deed of bargain and sale is inrolled it is a forfeiture. I am not of that opinion; for although that the inrollment be of record, yet the deed is not of record; for against the deed inrolled a man may plead infancy, although none can plead non est factum to it. Also he held, that although by the bargain and sale, and the inrollment of it, the bargainee had not fee; for by such act the reversion is not removed; yet by the recovery, and the execution of it, the bargainee had gained the fee out of the lessor; for the re-[131]-covery is to the use of the bargainee against whom it was had &c. It hath been objected, that he is only a voucher, which peradventure was lawful in this case, by reason of the warranty paramount, or of a release or confirmation with warranty, and two cases have been vouched to such purpose, viz. 5 E. 4. 2. tenant for life being impleaded in a præcipe, vouched a stranger, the demandant counterpleaded the voucher, which was found for him, he in the reversion had no remedy but by a writ of right: so if the vouchee had entred and lost, &c. As to that case we ought to consider, that every book reported in our law is not law: but let us observe of what authority the case is, truly it is the conceit of the reporter himself, for he puts the case, and resolves it, but there is no Judge or serjeant named in the case, &c. The other case is 5 E. 4. 2. Note by Hendon clearly; If my tenant for life voucheth a stranger who entreth into the warranty generally, and doth not know how to bar the demandant, the tenant shall recover in value, and the reversion of him who hath in value shall be to me in lieu of my former reversion, as release to tenant for life shall enure to him in the reversion: but that is but the opinion of one serjeant, &c. But I answer to these books, if the demandant in such recovery have a good title, so as the tenant or the voucher, as Hendon saith, know not how to bar the demandant, there such a voucher of a stranger is not a forfeiture, nor such recovery suffered thereupon; for against his will and volens nolens he suffered it: but if the tenant had good matter to bar the demandant, and no good cause of voucher, that the vouching of a stranger, or suffering of a recovery is a forfeiture of his estate: and here in our case, the defendant had not any title, the tenant or vouchee had not any warranty, or cause of voucher. But the tenant might have barred the demandant if he pleased. And he said, that the voucher only doth not make the forfeiture; but much rather the recovery; for when judgment is given, and execution had, then is the fee plucked out of him in the reversion. 6 R. 2. If tenant for life claimeth a fee it is a forfeiture; but here Pelham hath done more, for he hath gained fee by the judgment, therefore à fortiori it shall be a forfeiture. But let us a little see, what medlings or attempts by the particular tenant, are causes of a forfeiture, and what not, 5 Ass. 3. Where A. brings an entry against tenant for life by collusion to oust B. of his reversion, supposing that the tenant for life held of his lease: the tenant confesseth the action, upon which judgment is given, B. enters, and his entry adjudged lawful; for that recovery is adjudged in law but an alienation to the disinherisin of him in the reversion; and here it appears that such recovery by covin, is but an alienation, and without any strength of a recovery. And he cited many other cases cited [132] before by Altham, 14 E. 3. Resceit 135. where tenant for life pleads in chief, or prays in aid of a stranger where he might bar the demandant, and will not, it is a forfeiture: and also 22 E. 3. 2. & 27 E. 3. where tenant for life in a quid juris clamat attorns unto the conusee upon a fine levyed by him who hath not any thing in the land, the same is a forfeiture, and yet that attornment doth not divert the reversion out of the lessor. 50 E. 3. 7. & 8. land was given by fine in tail, the remainder over to a stranger in fee, the donee took a wife, and dyed without issue, the wife accepted dower assigned by a stranger, he in the remainder brought a scire facias against the wife, that she is tenant in dower of the assignment of a stranger, and pleaded to the title, the demandant recovered, she hath lost her dower, for she hath not pleaded dutifully as she ought, being a particular tenant. Temps H. 4. tenant for life loseth his land in a recovery against him against his will, and thereupon brings quod ei deforceat, and declares upon an estate tail, and recovers, the same is a forfeiture, because he hath challenged a higher estate, &c. 5 H. 7. tenant for life joyns the wife upon the meer right. 2 H. 6. lessee for years being ousted, brings an assise and recovers. 1 H. 7. accepts a fine of a stranger sur conusans, &c. come ceo que il ad de son done. All these are forfeitures. In our principal case here, the tenant who suffered the recovery did not plead at all to defend the right; but where he might have barred the demandant, he gave strength to his pretended title, and made it a perfect title, and by suffering the recovery and judgment to pass, had taken away the reversion out of the lessor to whom he owed fealty, and therefore it is a forfeiture: and without doubt it is apparent to the Court, that the demandant in this recovery hath not any title; for the recoverers in such cases are but assignees and purchasors: which appeareth by the statute of 7 H. 8. cap. 4. which gives distress and avowry to recoverers, &c. As to the inventing of recoveries, it was a necessary device; for it was to take away estate tails which were the causes of grand mischiefs and inconveniencies in this realm; and it was great reason, for tenant in tail might by the common law alien his land post prolem suscitat', and then he had an inheritance and might commit waste: but he was so restrained by the statute of Westm. 2. all the realm, and the subjects of it, were inveigled thereby; joyntures of wives, leases of farmers, mortgages to creditors, statutes, and other assurances defeated by their deaths, which was against the common law and all conscience: these matters tending to the knowledge of the justices, and the mischiefs thereupon ensuing very frequent, and that tenant in tail was become a perillous fellow, and there was no safe dealing with him; then they taking into consideration that several war-[133]-ranties and assets, and collateral warranty without assets, for that in it self implyed assets did bar him, scil. the entail upon that consideration they grounded the practice and usage of common recoveries; so that by that means tenant in tail has potestatem alienandi, as he had at the common law, because his authority was restored to him, and injury done to no man: but as to tenant for life, he never had potestatem alienandi: and as to that which had been said, that the recovery shall stand in force till after the death of the tenant for life; and in our case here, tenant in tail is living; certainly if the law should be such, great mischief would follow, for then greater joyntresses, the widows of great persons, having allowed unto them great and sumptuous houses, and lands furnished with timber of great value, might suffer such recoveries, and so having plucked the fee out of the heirs, might commit waste, and the same should be dispunishable, &c. which should be an intolerable mischief. And so he concluded that this suffering of a recovery was a forfeiture, and judgment was given accordingly.

1 Leon. 264 its not forfeited. 2 Leon. 60, 65. 3 Inst. 251. b. Mores r. 212.

CCLII. Grendon and Albanies Case.

John Grendon brought trespass for breaking of his close against Tho. Albany: and upon the pleading, the case was, that Francis Bunny was seized, and 1 May, 20 Eliz. by deed indented enfeoffed N. H. to the use of the said Fr. Bunny for term of his life, the remainder to D. in tail, the remainder to E. in tail, the remainder over to F. in fee: in which deed of feoffment a proviso was, that if it should happen one P. P. to dye without issue male of his body, that then it should be lawful for the said Fr. Bunny at any time during his life, by his deed indented to be sealed and delivered in the presence of three credible witnesses, to alter, change, diminish or amplifie any use or uses limited by the said deed, & aliquem usum vel usus inde alicui personæ, &c. Limitare post mortem ipsius Fr. to begin: after which the said Fr. Bunny 1 Aprilis, 23 Eliz. by his deed indented, did renounce, relinquish, and surrender to the said N. H. D. E. & F. all such liberty, power and authority which he had after the death of the said P. P. without issue, ut supra: and further remised, released, and quit-claimed to them the said condition, promise, covenant and agreement, and all his said power, liberty and authority, and further granted to them and their heirs, that at all times then after, as well the said condition, promise, covenant and agreement, as the said power, liberty and authority should cease, and to all purposes should be void; after which P. P. dyed without issue, 1 Maij 23 Eliz. after which 20 March 24 Eliz. the said Fr. Bunny, by indenture between him and the said D. [134] sealed and delivered, ut supra, altered the former uses, and covenanted and agreed with the said D. that from thenceforth the said N. H. and his heirs should be seized to the use of the plaintiff and his heirs, &c. And note, that in this case Fr. Bunny being but tenant for life, enfeoffed one Tomson, upon whom the said D. entred for a forfeiture. And it was argued by Altham, that by the feoffment by Fr. Bunny to Tomson, the liberty and power aforesaid was not extinct or lost, for this liberty and power was not then a thing in esse, for then was P. P. alive; and also the liberty is meerly collateral to the land whereof the feoffment was made, 39 E. 3. 43. Fitz. The son and heir apparent disseised his father, and thereof made a feoffment to a stranger, the father dyed, now against his own livery the son shall not enter; but if the son dyeth, then his son shall enter, which proves that the livery is not so violent to determine a future right, but that afterwards it may be revived, à fortiori in our case where the thing pretended to be extinct is meerly collateral. 36 E. 3. Fitz. garr. 69. In an Assise of Common, the release of the father with warranty is not a bar, because it is of another thing. 15 H. 7. 11. Cestuy que use, wills by his will, that his feoffees shall sell his lands, and dyes, the feoffees make a feoffment to the same use, yet they may well sell, so as against their livery, the authority to sell remains to them: and he put Brents case, Dyer 340. A future use limited to a wife which shall be, shall not be prevented by a fine or feoffment; and so by the Statute of Fraudulent Conveyances, 27 Eliz. cap. 4. where a conveyance is made with clause of revocation, if afterwards the party who made such a conveyance, shall bargain, sell or grant the said land to another for money, or other good consideration paid or given (the first conveyance not being revoked) that then such former conveyance against the latter purchasor shall be void &c. The other matter was, admitting that the said power and liberty be not extinct by the said feoffment, if by the indenture of renunciation, relinquishment, release, &c. it be destroyed; and he said that a thing which is not in esse, cannot be released, Litt. 105. & 4 H. 7. 10. A lease for years to begin at a day to come, cannot be released before it comes in esse, 11 H. 6. 29. Br. Damages 138. In detinue, the defendant would confess the action, if the plaintiff would release the damages, and the plaintiff would have so done, but could not before judgment; for before judgment the plaintiff had not interest in the damages, but he is intituled to them by the judgment: so lands in ancient demesne are recovered at the common law, and execution had accordingly, and afterwards the tenant releases to him who recovers; and afterwards the Lord reverseth the judgment; the tenant notwithstanding his release may enter, for his title which accrued to him by the reversal [135] was not in esse, at the time of the release, vide 98. contr. And it was adjudged 23 Eliz. in the case of one Falsor, that where lessee for years devised his term to his wife if she should so long live, and if she dyed within the term, that then the residue of his term should go unto his daughter, which should be then unpreferred, and dyed, his daughter unpreferred, released to her mother all her right in the said land, the mother dyed within the said term, the release shall not bind the daughter, for that at the time of that release she had no title. Cook to the contrary: and he said, that by the feoffment the said power and liberty is extinct: and he agreed the case cited before 15 H. 7. for in such case the vendee of the feoffees shall be in by the devise, and not by the feoffees. 9 H. 7. 1. The husband makes discontinuance of the lands of his wife, and takes back an estate to him and his wife by which the wife is remitted they have issue, the wife dyeth the husband shall not be tenant by the curtesie; for he hath extinguished his future right by his livery. 12 Ass. P. ultimo. A præcipe against A. who loseth the land by an erronious judgment, and after execution had, enters upon the demandant, and makes a feoffment, his writ of error is gone, 38 E. 3. 16. In a scire facias to execute a fine, the plaintiff recovers, and makes a feoffment in fee, and afterwards the tenant by scire facias by writ of disceit reverseth the judgment, now the plaintiff in the scire facias shall not have a new scire facias, 34 H. 6. 44. A. recovers against B. by false oath, and after execution had, B. enters and makes a feoffment to a stranger, who enfeoffs him who recovers, it is a good bar in an attaint. 27 H. 8. 29. The feoffees to an use are disseised, the disseisor enfeoffs cestuy que use, who enfeoffs a stranger, now by that feoffment his right to the use is gone. And as to the release, the same is not properly a release, but rather a defeasance to determine the power and authority aforesaid, as if A. enfeoffed B. with warranty, and afterwards B. covenants with A. that the said warranty shall be void, the covenant shall enure to defeat and determine the warranty. And afterward judgment was given against the plaintiff.

CCLXXIII. Sir Francis Englefields Case.

Vide this Case Reported by Cook in Rep. 7. and by Popham 18.

The case to recite at large was this: Sir Francis Englefield kt. being seized in fee of the manor of Englefield in the county of Berks, and of divers other lands in the first year of Queen Eliz. departed out of the realm by licence of the Queen for a time, and remained out of the realm in the parts beyond the seas above the time of his licence, whereby [136] the Queen by her warranty under her Privy Seal required him to return, upon which he was warned, but did not come; whereupon the Queen seized his lands for his contempt. After which the Statute of Fugitives was made 13 Eliz. upon which by commissions found upon this statute, all his lands were newly seized; and afterwards 17 Eliz. by indenture made between him and his nephew, and sealed by the said Sir Francis at Rome, the said Sir Francis covenanted with his said nephew, upon consideration of advancement of his nephew, and after consideration to raise an use, that he and his heirs, and all others seized of the said manor, &c. shall hereafter stand and be seized of them, to the use of himself for the term of his life, without impeachment of waste, and afterwards to the use of his nephew, and of the heirs males of his body, and for default of such issue, to the use of the right heirs and assigns of the nephew for ever, with a proviso, that if the said Sir Francis shall have any issue male of his body, that then all the said uses and limitations shall be void, and that the said manors, &c. shall be as before. Afterwards the said Sir Francis was attainted of treason, supposed to be committed by him, 18 Eliz. at L. in partibus transmarinis; and the attainder was first by outlary, and afterwards by Act of Parliament 28 Eliz. by which the forfeiture of the said condition was given to the Queen; and at the same Parliament it was enacted, that all and every person and persons, which had, or claimed to have any estate of inheritance, lease, or rent, they not entred of record, or certified into the Court of Exchequer, of, into, or out of any manors, lands, &c. by or under any grant, assurance, or conveyance whatsoever had or made at any time after the beginning of Her Majesty by any persons attainted of any treasons mentioned in the said Act, after the 8 day of Feb. 18 Eliz. or within two years next ensuing the last day of the section of the said Parliament, shall openly shew in the Court of the said Exchequer, or cause to be openly shewn the same, his or their grant, conveyance or assurance, and there in the term time, in open Court, the same shall offer, and exhibit, upon his or their oath, affirming that they have not the same, nor can come by it, or that it was never put in writing, then the effect thereof to be entred and inrolled of record, or else every such assurance should be void, and of none effect to all intents and purposes, saving to every person and persons, (other than the parties and privies to such conveyance, and such as shall not exhibit the said conveyance according to the true meaning of this Act) all such rights, &c. Whereupon the said Francis the nephew, the 20 day of November, 30 Eliz. in his own person affirmed upon his oath, that he had not the said conveyance, nor knew not how to come by it, but delivered the effect of the assurance, omitting the time when it was made, otherwise than that it was [137] made after the beginning of the Queens reign, and before the treason committed by Sir Francis, and before the statute of 13 Eliz. against fugitives, and omitting also the last clause of the tender of the King; and this he offered openly in the Court of the Exchequer the same day: after which the Queen being moved with the said condition, made a warrant by letters patents under the Great Seal, dated 17 Martii, 13 Eliz. to Rich. Broughton and Henry Bourcher esquires for her, and in her place and stead, to deliver or tender to the said Francis the nephew a ring of gold, to the intent to make void the uses and limitations limited by the said indenture, and to return their proceedings upon it into the Court of Exchequer; whereupon they made a tender of a ring of gold to the said Francis the nephew the 18 day of November, 31 Eliz. which he refused to receive. And the two years after the said session of Parliament was the 13 day of March 31 Eliz. and the said Broughton and Bourcher returned all this that they had done as before, with their commission out of the Exchequer: and this case being a great case, and consisting of many doubts and questions, was often argued. And this term, scil. 33 Eliz. it was argued by Moor of counsel on the part of Francis Englefield; and he said, when Sir Francis Englefield covenanted to stand seized to the use of himself for life, &c. this was not any new use, but part of the ancient use which was in Sir Francis before, for there was no consideration to raise a new use to himself; for a consideration is a cause, or an occasion meritorial requiring a mutual recompence in fait, or in law, Dyer 16 Eliz. 33. b. mutual. 1. of each part, and here this ancient use remaineth. For Sir Francis cannot simul & semel agree and suffer, and here is a bare covenant without any consideration on the part of Sir Francis, which see Dr. and Student, 100. cited by Br. Feoffments to Uses 46. A man cannot limit an use to himself to be a new use upon an estate executed, as upon a feoffment, but it shall be the ancient use; much less upon a covenant. And that was Milfords case, Pasch. 31 Eliz. Rot. 154 in the Kings Bench, where an use limited to the right heirs of the feoffor was holden the ancient use, quod vide also in the case of the Earl of Bedford, and there is no difference between our case and the said cases, unless in the said cases the use is limited in the end, and in our case in the beginning of the conveyance. But perhaps it will be objected, that the particular estate shall be good for necessity for to support the estate limited in the remainder, which is limited upon good consideration, for otherwise the remainder shall be distrained: that is not any reason, for that conceit in Bayntons case in Plow. Com. 307. 8 Eliz. hath been over-voted to be no law in the case of the Lord Paget in this Court very lately. And he said, that the condition conceived in the proviso is not given to the [138] King. By the common law in case of escheat, the party comes in the post; but a condition runs in privity: and although the statute of 33 H. 8. gives to the King conditions, yet it doth not give the performance of them, or ability to the King to perform them. And there are three reasons wherefore this condition cannot pass to the King: 1. There is a condition in the proviso which precedes the condition of the tender, viz. If the said Francis my nephew be given to intolerable vices, then if the said Sir Frances deliver or offer, &c. and in the whole pleading it is not averred, that the nephew was given to intolerable vices; therefore the precedent condition not being performed, the second condition is not ripened, nor in season. 2. The substance of this condition consists in the will and pleasure of Sir Fr. Englefield, therefore it cannot be given to the Queen. 3. The prejudice which should come to Francis the nephew if this condition should come to the Queen, vide Br. Temps H. 8. A foundership cannot escheat, or be forfeited by attainder of felony or treason, for it is a thing annexed to the blood which cannot be separated; and he said also that the condition was gon before that tender, for the conveyance by which the condition was granted, was made void by the Act of 29 H. 8. cap. 3 by which it is enacted, that every person within two years after the last day of this session shall openly shew and bring forth into the Exchequer his conveyance, and there in the term time, in open Court shall exhibit the same to be entred and inrolled of record; and here the end of the session was such, that all the terms of the said two years were passed before the tender made by the Queen; and although the two years were not past, yet all the terms were past, and the conveyance ought to be shewed in term time, therefore the true time is incurred before the tender, and then the conveyance is void, and by that the condition gon. When the Queen was tenant for the life of Sir Francis, and makes a lease for years, and afterwards by the condition hath the inheritance, if now she shall avoid the lease made by her when she was tenant for life? A disseisor makes a lease, or grants a rent-charge, and afterwards the disseisee releases unto him, he shall not avoid his own act. A man seized in the right of his wife makes a lease for years, hath issue, and so is intitled to be tenant by the curtesie; the wife dyeth, he shall not avoid his lease: feoffor and feoffee upon condition joyn in a lease for years, the condition is performed on the part of the feoffor, he shall not avoid his lease: and the prerogative of the Queen shall not alter the matter against æquum & bonum: as to the statute of 29 Eliz. it was not the intent of that to avoid estates claimed for, or by the Queen; for the estate was made for the benefit of the Queen. As to the words of the statute, every person or persons which hath, or claimeth to have, &c. the Queen is not [139] within the words. If a statute ordains attendance, or restraint of any liberty which was before at the common law, there the Queen shall not be within it: as to attendance, the Queen is not bound to make claim upon a fine levied: as to re-grant, the Queen is not bound by the Statute of Westm. 3. Quia Emptores Terrarum: also where matter of penalty is imposed. Also here is an oath to be taken, &c. the Queen being tenant for the life of another, leaseth the woods, and grants to the lessee power to cut the woods, and convert them to his own use. Now, if after the inheritance cometh to the Queen, if the Queen may impeach her grantee; truly the property of the woods and trees was in the Queen at the time of the grant, and although the inheritance came to the Queen afterwards, yet the same shall not overthrow the first interest of the grantee. Lessee for life, or for years, before the Statute of Gloucester, could not be impeached for waste; therefore, as I conceive, the property of the trees was in him, for there was no remedy for them against him. See the reason of that in Dr and Student, quasi, the property of the trees pass to the lessee with the demise, which shall be taken strongly against the lessor. If the lessee cutteth the trees, the lessor shall not have trespass against him, nor detinue for the trees. Lessee without impeachment of waste cutteth the trees, and leaves them upon the land, and dyes, his executors shall have them, and not the lessor. The lessor grants omnes boscos, & arbores suas, nothing passeth, for they pass to the lessee, if they be not excepted. The lessor against his own lease cuts the trees without the agreement of the lessee, trespass lyeth, 5 H. 4. 56. The heir being in ward, cut trees in his lands in the possession of his guardian, who brought an action against the heir, it was adjudged maintainable, although the free-hold was in the heir. Egerton Solicitor to the contrary. Admit the use in Sir Francis be the ancient use, yet it is but for life; and then when the Queen, having the estate of Sir Francis, makes a lease for 40 years, with the grant of the woods, the said lease was void, for the Queen was deceived in her grant: Sir Francis was punishable for waste; therefore the Queen having his interest, ought not in justice to have cut the great wood. And it is to be presumed, that if the Queen had known the smallness of her estate, she would not have made so great a lease, nor such a grant of the wood. The King seized of land in his own right, reciting by his letters patents, that he hath it by attainder of J. S. gives the same to another, the gift is void. The King licenceth one to appropriate an advowson, without being informed that the same is holden in chief, it is void. A licence to alien, whereas in truth the land is holden in tail, the reversion or remainder in the King, is also void; and here in our case, the Queen hath but a particular estate for the life of another, [140] and here out of that petty estate is drawn a lease for 40 years, where lessee for life was 60 years of age at the least, and also a grant of all the trees: if the Queen hath a particular estate, and grants totum statum suum, without reciting of such particular estate, the grant is void; the Queen hath the profits of the lands of one who is outlawed in a personal action, and grants to another the land it self, it is void, for it is a wrong to a third person, which the King cannot do. But here, the special interest of the Queen ought to be recited; now when the Queen being tenant for the life of another, makes leases ut supra, and afterwards the fee cometh to the Queen, the estate out of which the leases are derived being determined, the leases also are determined, scil. the estate for the life of another by the accession of the fee-simple, and the Queen is in by a new right: it was adjudged 29 Eliz. here, that where the Queen had the land of a fugitive for the life of another, and leased the same to another quam diu in manibus nostris fore contigerit, and after the fee-simple of the fugitive came to the Queen by his attainder, the same lease was void. King E. 6. gave to his sister Mary manerium de B. for her life, secundum tenorem & effectum testamenti sive ultimæ voluntatis of King Hen. 8. whose will was, that she should have it as long as she remained unmarried; she granted a rent-charge, King E. 6. dyed, by which the fee descended to the said Mary, being Queen of England: and afterwards she married. He made it a quære, if the rent be not gone. Dyer 3 & 4 Phil. & Mary 240. But Bendloes reports the same case to be adjudged, that the rent was gone. Sir Francis Englefield 1 Eliz. with leave of the Queen went beyond sea, his licence expired, the Queen directed to him a privy seal with her commandment to return, which he received, but did not return, but adhered to the Queens enemies there, upon which the Queen seized his lands and 8 Eliz. granted a manor parcel thereof, and all profits thereof, quam diu in manibus nostris fore contigerit, afterwards by Act 14 Eliz. (for there was some doubt if the Queen might make leases, grant copyholds or usual woodfalls of such lands, or only take the ordinary profits thereof, as vesturam terræ) it is explained, that during the interest of the Queen, she might do, ut supra, as tenant for the life of another might do, upon which a new seizure was made for the Queen, and a steward appointed by the Queens letters patents, who held a court, and took surrenders in the hand of the Queen, and granted admittances, &c. And it was resolved by the two Chief Justices, that the two seizures gave not the Queen any other or better seisin in the said manor than she had before, by the first seizure at the common law, notwithstanding both the said statutes, and so the Courts holden by the Queen void, and all surrenders and admittances also: and so it is adjudged 23 Eliz. Dyer 375. upon [141] which it may be concluded, that if by the said statute, or any of them had had a new right, the last copy had been good, notwithstanding the grant of the manor before: also for 8 Ass. the King grants custodiam terræ & hæredis quam diu in manibus nostris fore contigerit, the heir being a daughter, and after a son is born, now the grant of the King is void; tenant in tail, the reversion in the King discontinues, the discontinuee is attainted, the King seizeth, and leaseth for years, tenant in tail is attainted of treason; now the Queen shall avoid her own lease. So if the disseisor be attainted, upon which the Queen seiseth, and leaseth, and afterwards the disseisee is attainted: and he cited the case of the Abbot of Colchester, 13 Eliz. The abbot committed treason, and afterwards by the statute, or by surrender, the abby came to the Crown, who leased the land for years, the abbot is attainted of the said treason: now the King shall be seized by force of the attainder, and shall avoid his lease. As to the leases made to the defendant by the Queen, one was made after the statute of 29 Eliz. and the same is not saved by the saving there; for the words are, of estates then in esse. 1. Such estate as they had before the making of the Act: as to leases made before they are drowned in the fee-simple, which accrued to the King by the attainder &c. and here by this statute, the estate of the Queen for the life of another is not saved by the statute, and then the leases derived out of it are not saved. The Queen is not bound by the said statute to exhibit any conveyance, for she shall not take any oath, according to the statute; and if the Queen be not within the body of the Act, she is not within the saving. Now as to the condition, the statute of 33 H. 8. gives to the Queen uses, rights, conditions. It hath been objected, that such conditions are intended to be given to the King, which are to be performed on the part of the donee, lessee, grantee, covenantee, but not on the part of the grantor, &c. For it was in the will of the grantor if he would perform them or not, and a will cannot be transferred over. But as to that it may be answered, that a will by Parliament may be transferred over, for Parliamentum omnia potest. It hath been objected, if that shall be said the will of Sir Francis, which now is the will of the Queen, it shall be a great prejudice to Francis Englefield the nephew; for now he shall be doubly bridled by his uncle, and by the Queen. It hath been objected, that here is a conditional condition, 1 If the nephew shall be given to intolerable vices, and it is not added to enable the Queen to take advantage of the condition, that he is otherwise than of good behavior and conversation, but the words of the proviso clear the matter, 1. Lest he should be given to intolerable vices, and not if he be given, &c. So as it is not a condition to a condition, but a motive to a condition. And [142] the statute of 29 Eliz. by which Sir Francis was attainted, gives to the King all conditions. It hath been objected, that in the said statute of 29 Eliz. is a saving, by which leases made by the Queen are preserved: but if that proviso be well observed, it doth not extend to our case. 1. That Act extends to make void any grant, lease, &c. made by the Queen after the treason committed, &c. but that shall be of such force, as if the said Act had not been made. As to that I say, that this statute doth not add or detract from such leases, but leaves them as it found them; for the statute gives to the Queen the condition, which condition avoids the said leases: for it avoids the estate of the Queen out of which the said leases are derived: and although that the conveyance, as to the benefit of Sir Francis or his nephew, be void by the statute for not inrollment of them, yet it is not utterly void as to the Queen also. The statute of 1 Eliz. enacts, that leases made by bishops against the form of the statute, shall be void: yet they shall not be void against the bishop himself or against the lessor: exception hath been taken, for that the tender of the King is not found by office: but he needs no office, for the tender is the act of the Queen her self, there she ought not to be informed of it; for to what purpose shall the Queen be certified of that which she her self hath done: the Queen makes a lease for years, upon condition that the lessee surrender to her the manor of B. here for the not doing of it, no office is requisite. Tenant of the King in capite aliens by fine, that needs no office, for that appears upon record; so here. And although the condition be returned in the Exchequer after the term; yet it is well enough, for the Exchequer is never shut, as to take and receive money, certificates made to be inrolled; although it be shut as to all judicial acts. And although no tender at all be certified, it is not to the purpose, for the tender makes the estate void without any other thing: and it is not like to a capias ad satisfaciendum, for that is ita quod habeas corpus, &c. therefore the arrest is not sufficient by it self; but the same ought to be remembered with an ita quod, &c. But as to that which hath been said, that the Queen shall not avoid her own lease, the same is not so, nor in case of a common person: as if tenant in tail enfeoffeth his heir within age, who makes a lease for years at his full age, tenant in tail dyes, now the issue shall avoid his own lease, for he is remitted: a disseisor levies a fine to a stranger, the disseisee enters upon the conusee, and enfeoffs the disseisor, now he shall avoid his own fine, à multo fortiori in the case of the King. Now it is to see, if the grant of the wood by the Queen, being tenant for the term of anothers life, be good, or not. He conceived it was not; for she was deceived in her grant, not knowing that she was but a particular tenant: it [143] was objected, that the Queen hath property and right in the trees and woods, forasmuch as no waste or trespass lyeth against her if she cast them down: certainly the lessee, if the trees and woods be not excepted, hath the property in them, but not the absolute property, for the writ of waste shall say, ad exhæred' querentis, for he cannot cut them, id enim tantum possumus, quod de jure possumus, perhaps the lessee shall have the wind-falls, because they are severed from the inheritance by the act of God, not of the lessee himself; and see 27 H. 6. Waste 8. and also in Statham titulo Waste. A. leaseth to B. for life, without impeachment of waste, a stranger cuts trees, and the lessee brings trespass, he shall not recover damages for the value of the trees; for the property of the body and the tree is in him who hath the reversion, he may give it, by which it appeareth, that the lessee is not to recover, but only for the cropping and the breaking of his close, à fortiori in case where the lease is made without the clause absque impetitione vasti, as the case at Bar is: and therefore when the Queen having so feeble an estate, makes such a grant, scil. grants all the woods, &c. the grant is void, for she was deceived in her grant; by which (if it should be good) she should wrong her subject: a grant to the Queen shall have a reasonable construction, as the grant of a common person. A. grants to the Queen common in all his lands, the Queen by that grant shall not have common, but in lands commonable, not in his land where his corn is growing, or in his orchard, or gardens: tenant for life grants all the wood upon his land, nothing passeth but that which he may lawfully grant. So in cases of grants of the King, 22 Ass. 49. the King grants to one bona & catalla tenent' suorum, fugitivorum & qualitercunque dampnorum; the grantee shall not have the goods and chattels of one who hath killed the Kings messenger. So in grants of amercements, the grantee shall not have a special amercement, &c. So here, the grant of all woods ought to be intended of such woods (as underwoods) which the Queen might lawfully grant without wrong to another. And he said, that when the Queen hath granted the land and the woods for 40 years, that grant cannot be divided; and the words of the grant are, that it shall be lawful to cut the woods during the space of 43 years: now forasmuch as the lease is surrendred ut supra, the liberty of cutting the woods is gon also. A man bargains and sells his manor with all woods upon it growing, the deed is not inrolled, so as the manor doth not pass, the woods shall not pass in gross, for the grant shall not be divided. CCLIV. BROWN AND PETERS CASE.

Philip Brown executor of Eliz. Brown, brought an action upon the case against John Peter, as executor of W. Brown, and declared, that the said William Brown was indebted to the said Eliz. in 80l. Cumque ad specialem instantiam of the said William Brown, it was agreed, that the said William Brown should retain the said sum in his hands until the said Eliz. should come of full age: in consideration thereof he promised to give her 100l. It was found for the plaintiff, who had judgment to recover, and now the defendant brought error, and assigned for error, because the place of the agreement was not shewed, sed non allocatur; for that is the consideration which is not traversable; also it is not shewed certain, that Brown retained the 80l. for so long time, sed non allocatur, for he shews in his declaration, that the said sum was in the hands of the said William Brown, and it shall be intended that so it there continued.

CCLV. HIGHAM AND COOKES CASE.

Ejectment.

Ejectione firmæ by Higham against Cooke, the plaintiff declared upon a lease for years, to have and to hold to him from the sealing and delivery of it; and declared that the sealing and delivery was 1 Maij, and the ejectment the same day: and this matter was moved in arrest of judgment, that the ejectment could not be supposed the same day, for the lease did not begin till the next day ensuing the sealing, &c. But the exception was not allowed by the Court; for where the lease is to begin from the time of the sealing and delivery, or by these words for 21 years next following, the ejectment may be well supposed to be the same day; for the beginning of the lease is presently upon the sealing and delivery, and such a lease shall end the same time and hour as it began.

CCLVI. Trin. 28 Eliz. In the Kings Bench.

In an action upon the case upon assumpsit, the case was; Land was devised to a feme sole for term of her life, and she let the same to the plaintiff for 5 years, to begin after the death of the said woman, and afterwards by deed bearing [145] date 18 October, leased the same land to the same plaintiff for 21 years to begin at Michaelmas before, and in pleading, it was shewed, that virtute cujus dimissionis (posterioris) the plaintiff entred, & fuit possess. crastino Michaelis. which was before the making of the lease, and the plaintiff in his declaration declared, that the defendant in consideration that the plaintiff had assigned to him the said leases, had promised to pay to him 630l. It was found for the plaintiff. Cook, For where the plaintiff in an action upon the case declares upon two considerations, in such case although the one be void, yet if the other be good and sufficient, the action is maintainable, but the damages shall be given without respect had to the consideration insufficient, and the plaintiff was to declare upon both considerations; for the assumpsit upon which the action is conceived, was in consideration that both the leases were assigned to the defendant, and our declaration ought to be according to the assumpsit, and it was not material, although that one of the considerations was utterly void. Another exception was taken, because the lease is set forth to be made 18 October, and that by virtue thereof the plaintiff entred, Cro. Mich. Then the plaintiff entring Cro. Mich. was a disseisor, and then being in by disseisin, he could not assign his interest to another, and that appears clearly to the Court upon the whole matter. But Cook said, That shall not hurt us, for it is but matter of surplusage to say, virtute cujus, &c. As 20 H. 6. 15. the plaintiff in trespass supposed by his declaration, that the trespass for which the action was brought, commenced 10 H. 6. with a continuando until the day of the action brought, viz. idem 14 Febr. 17 H. 6. where the writ bore date 12 die Octobris, anno 17 H. 6. And exception was taken to the declaration, because the continuance of the time was not put in certainty. But the exception was not allowed, for it is certain enough before the viz. the day of writ brought, and so the viz. is void, and all that which follows upon it. And so here, this clause virtute cujus est, totum sequitur est omnino void, 7 H. 4. 44. Br. action upon the Case 37. The writ was quare toloniam asportavit, & illud solvere recusavit. Exception was taken to the repugnancy, for it would not be carried away, if it were not paid before; yet the writ was awarded good, and the first word toloniam asportavit holden void: so here in the principal case. As to the other exception, it is clear, that here is not any disseisin upon this entry of the plaintiff before the making of the said lease; for there was a communication betwixt the parties of such a lease to be made, or of such an assignment, and peradventure the entry was by assent of the other part, and then no disseisin. And posito, it should [146] be a disseisin, yet the plaintiff hath assigned all the interest quod ipse tunc habuit, according to the consideration, and delivered to the defendant both the indentures of demises, and so he hath granted all that which he might grant: and if it be a void assignment or not, is not material, for quacunque via data, the consideration is good, and then the assumpsit good also. Egerton Solicitor contrary: In every action upon the case upon assumpsit, three things ought to concur, consideration, promise, and breach of promise; and in this case the assignment of the lease to begin after the death of the lessor, is void, being but tenant for life, and no consideration upon the confession of the plaintiff himself. And upon the second consideration it appeareth, the lessor, viz. the wife who held for life, had but a right to the land demised, for she was disseised; for he to whom the land was after let, entred before the lease was made; for it doth not appear that he entred by force of any agreement made before the lease; therefore by his entry he was a disseisor. It was also moved, that here was not any sufficient consideration, for by a bare or naked delivery nihil operatur; and here is not any word of give or grant. To which it was answered, that the delivery of the indenture was not a bare bailment, but a delivery to the use in the indenture, and so it is pleaded, and therefore thereby an interest passed, for such a delivery cannot be countermanded. An indenture with an averment shall never make an estoppel. Clench

Justice, If I deliver any thing to one for his proper use, an interest passeth; but if it be to the use of another, no interest passeth: the party may have usum, but not proprietatem.

CCLVII. MICH. 18 ELIZ. IN THE KINGS BENCH.

Contract.

If a contract be made betwixt two here in England, scil. that one of them shall carry certain goods of the others to Burdeux in France, and sell them there, and with the mony thereof coming, shall buy other goods for the use of him who was the owner of the first goods, and safely them deliver to him in London: if now the party sell them in Burdeux, and buyeth others with the monies thereof, and brings them into England, and there converts them to his own use; upon this matter an action lyeth at the common law for the contract, and the conversion being the cause of the action, was made in England: but if the contract only was in England, and the conversion beyond the seas, the party at his election may sue at the common law, or in the Court of Admiralty: and if a merchant here write to his factor in France to receive certain merchandizes which he hath sent to him, and to merchandize [147] with them for his use: if the factor receiveth them, and converts them to his own use, the father [? factor] shall be sued in the Admiralty.

CCLVIII. THE EARL OF HUNTINGTON AND THE LORD MOUNTJOYES CASE.

It was agreed by the two Lord Chief Justices, upon conference had with the other justices in the case between the Earl of Huntington and the Lord Mountjoy, that where the Lord Mountjoy by deed indented and inrolled, bargained and sold the manor of Camford to Brown in fee, in which indenture a clause was proviso semper, and the said Brown covenants and grants cum and with them the Lord Mountjoy, his heirs and assigns, that the said lord, his heirs and assigns, might dig for ore in the wasts of Camford. And also to dig turf there to make allom and copperice, without any contradiction of Brown, his heirs and assigns; that now here is a new grant of an interest to dig, to the said lord and his heirs in the lands aforesaid, and not a bare covenant; and it was holden also, that the said lord could not divide the interest granted to him in form aforesaid, viz. to grant to another to dig one part of the said waste, &c. But they were of opinion, that Brown, his heirs and assigns, notwithstanding the said grant to the said lord, owners of the soil there might dig there. It was further moved in this case, that the said lord had demised the said interest to one Laycott, who assigned it over to A. and B. and if the said assignment to two were good or not, was a further question; for if to two, so he might do to twenty, and so a surcharge might be to the tenant of the soil. And as to that, the said justices were of opinion, that the said assignment to two was good: but the two assignees ought not to work severally, but together, with one stock, and with such workmen as belonged to them two. And note, it was holden in this case, that this word (proviso) being coupled with other words of covenant and grant, did not create a condition, but should be of the same nature as other words of grant.

1 And. 308.

[148] CCLIX. PASC. 25 ELIZ. IN THE COMMON PLEAS.

It was found upon a special verdict in trespass, that the place where, &c. was copyhold land, and that the custom there is, that every feme covert there might devise her customary lands to her husband, and surrender the same in the presence of the reeve, and six other persons; and it was further found, that A. was seized of certain copy land, having issue B. and C. his daughters, and dyed, they both took husbands, and B. devised her part by her will to her husband in the presence of the reeve and six other persons, and afterwards at another day she surrendred to the use of her husband, who was admitted accordingly: the wife dyed, the husband continued the possession, and the husband of the other daughter brought trespass. Rhodes, Serjeant, The custom is not good, neither for the surrender, nor for the will; for it is not certain what estate she might devise by the custom, and also it is against reason that a feme covert surrender to the use of her husband: and he cited the case in Fitz. 13 E. 3. Dum fuit infra Ætatem 3. where custom is pleaded in the City of Gloucest. that every person might alien his land when he knew how to tell 12d. and to measure an ell of cloath, and that custom was disallowed for the incertainty, for he ought to have shewed the certainty of the time, scil. at what age, and the certain number of years. Vide also 19 E. 2. Fitz. Gard. 127. that an infant should be out of ward when he could do as aforesaid. And as to the surrender, it is against reason that a feme covert should give to her husband, for the wife hath not any will but the will of her husband; and the Statute of Wills utterly excepts feme coverts as an unreasonable thing to suffer them to make devises: and although the statute doth not extend to customary lands, yet the like reason, the like law. But by Anderson, the equity of that Act extends to copyholds as also doth the Statute of Limitations: and it was said by some of the serjeants, that because the husband was admitted, trespass did not lye against him, for his entry was continued with a lawful ceremony. In this case, it was moved by Anderson, if a copyholder maketh a lease for years by word, if the lessee might maintain ejectione firmæ, and he conceived not, for that ought to be a title in facto, and not by conclusion; for neither the Judge nor the jury are estopped: and he said, that if the tenant at will makes a lease for years, that it is not a good lease between the parties to it, but that the lessee might well say that he had nothing, &c. Mead contrary: and Anderson said, the Book of 12 E. 4. 12. is not law, scil. [149] if tenant at will makes a lease for years it is not disseisin, but the said book is contrary: also Anderson said, that in the principal case the prescription is not well laid, quod quælibet fœmina cooperta viro poterit, &c. whereas there should be also words, scil. et usæ fuerunt, &c. And it was said, that if the devise be good, then the plaintiff and defendant are tenants in common, and the action not maintainable.

Pasc. 30 Eliz. In the Kings Bench.

CCLX. Jeroms Case.

Customs. Justice of Peace not by Prescription.

Jerome made an affray, of which complaint being made to the mayor, the said mayor sent the defendant, being constable, to bring the said Jerome to him, by virtue of which they went to the house of the plaintiff, and signified to him the command of the mayor, and would have brought the plaintiff to him, and the plaintiffs wife assaulted them, and they gently lay their hands upon the wife, which is the said assault, battery and wounding, &c. upon which it was demurred. Cooke for the plaintiff; The custom is not good nor reasonable, vide Magna Charta 29. Nullus liber homo capiatur, nec imprisonetur, &c. nisi, &c. per legale judicium parium suorum vel per legem terræ; ergo, shall not be taken and imprisoned upon a bare suggestion. Vide 24 E. 3; Br. Commissions 3. That where a commission issued to apprehend all who were notoriously suspected for felons and trespassors, although they were not indicted, it was holden against law, and therefore was revoked. Vide the statute of 1 E. 3. cap. 9. 25 E. 3. 4. 28 E. 3. 3. 37 E. 3. 18. & 42 E. 3. 33. 2. To be a justice of peace doth not lye in prescription; for no justice of peace was before the statute of 1 E. 3. and the beginning of them being known, prescription cannot be. 3. Admit that the mayor was a justice of the peace, yet he cannot determine any thing out of sessions. 4. The prescription is, that the mayor may send for him, and doth not say within the city; and it shall be an unreasonable prescription to say that the mayor may send for him; for in such case in any place within England may he send. 5. It is not shewed that they had a corporation which might prescribe. 6. The wounding is not answered, for molliter injicere manus cannot be taken for a wounding, nor for an answer to the battery. Fleetwood Serjeant and Recorder of London. If the Statute of Magna Charta should be observed, no felon is duly handled at Newgate; and here we have not pleaded by way of prescription, but of usage. Consuetudo and usage are all one: and afterwards judgment was given for the plaintiff; for the plea in bar was holden to be [150] naught, because the wounding was not answered, and the custom is too general; and also for the fourth exception.

CCLXI. GORAM AND FOWKS CASE.

Prohibition.

The case was, The defendant libelled in the Spiritual Court, that whereas he was administrator to one A. and was bound in the Spiritual Court to bring in a true inventory of all the goods of the intestate, that the plaintiff detained jura & credita, by reason of which he could not put in a true inventory; and upon that the plaintiff prayed a prohibition, surmising that he himself claimed property in the said goods; and the Ecclesiastical Court would not allow of it; and the trial of the said goods did belong to the common law: and a prohibition was granted.

CCLXII. MOUNTJOYES AND ANDREWS CASE.

Execution. Return of Writ.

In scire facias upon a judgment in debt; the defendant pleaded, that heretofore a fieri facias at the suit of the now plaintiff issued, directed to the Sheriff of Leicester, by force of which the said sheriff took divers sheep of the defendant, & adhuc doth detain them: it was holden by the Court a good plea, although he doth not say that the writ was returned; for the execution is lawful notwithstanding that, and the plaintiff hath remedy against the sheriff.

CCLXIII. Vide this Case reported by Cook 1 Part, by the Name of CAPELL'S CASE.

The case between Hunt and Gately in the Exchequer Chamber, was now argued by Fenne, that the rent granted by him in the remainder upon an estate tail is good, and shall bind the land after the estate tail determined, notwithstanding the common recovery suffered by the tenant in tail in possession. Before the Statute of Westm. 2. of Donis Condic', &c. no remainder could be limited upon an estate tail, for that which remained in the donor was but a possibility, and therefore then a formedon in remainder did not lye: but the said statute which provided a [151] formedon in the descender, provided also by equity a formedon in the remainder; for a formedon in the reverter, as appeareth by the said statute, was in use in Cancellaria. And now here in our case is a remainder lawfully vested in the grantor, which he may dispose of as he sees good; and therefore when he grants a rent-charge out of it, the same is a thing vested in the grantee, and by no subsequent act can be divested, and although the estate which was charged be now charged by the recovery, yet it is the same land which was charged, and therefore the charge shall continue; as if a gift in tail be rendring rent, and the donee levieth a fine, yet the rent remaineth, and the donor shall distrain. 48 E. 3. 3, 9. So here, if after the grant of this rent, tenant in tail in possession levies a fine, by which the remainder which was charged is discontinued, and afterwards the conusor dyes without issue, the grantee shall distrain upon such possession which passed by the fine. As if A. lease to B. for life, and afterwards grants a rent out of the same land to C. B. aliens in fee and dyes, although that A. cannot re-enter, but suffers the said torcious estate, gained de novo by wrong, to continue; yet B. upon such possession shall distrain for the rent, for it is the same land which was charged; and by law a thing in abeyance may be charged: as if a parson grant a rent-charge to begin after his death, and the patron and Ordinary confirm it, it shall bind, although the grant doth not take effect in the life of the grantor, but when the freehold is in abeyance: so if the patron and Ordinary in the time of vacation grant a rent-charge out of the parsonage, the same is good, and shall bind the successor, and yet at the time of the grant the freehold of the thing granted is in abeyance. Vide 5 E. 6. Dyer 69. that a rent which is not in esse shall be bound by a judgment. 22 E. 3. 19. 5 E. 3. Fitz. Dower 343. By Bracton, jus, concerning a real thing, is threefold: 1. Jus terræ, scil. the ownership of the land. 2. Jus in terra, as a rent, common &c. 3. Jus ad terram, scil. right permanent. And by this common recovery in our case jus terræ shall be bound, but not jus in terra: and he said, that if land be given to A. in tail, the remainder to the Kings villain in fee, and before any claim by the King, A. suffers a common recovery and dyes without issue, this recovery shall not bind the King. And as to the case of 26 H. 8. 2. which hath been objected against the falsifying of the recovery, where a parson made a lease for years, and afterwards in a quare impedit brought against him and the patron, they pleaded faintly, to the intent to make the lessee lose his term, now such a lessee cannot falsifie; in such case the parson by another way might have defeated the lease as by resignation; but in our case the grantor of this rent by [152] no way might defeat his grant: and he said, a common recovery did not bind dower, therefore nor this rent. And if tenant in tail in possession grants such a rent, and after suffers a common recovery, the rent shall stand, why not also in the case of a remainder; for upon them both, as well the remainder, as the possession, the recovery operatur: and recoveries shall always bind the possession, and no farther, and shall not disprove the right, but the possession. And the recovery by itself doth not bind the possession, but in respect of the voucher, without which no recovery shall bar, and that in respect of the recompence which the law presumes, &c. which recompence cannot extend to this rent-charge, and then there is no reason that he to whom it was granted should be prejudiced by this recovery; and always in case of recompence the law is very precise. As if I grant unto you an annuity of 30l. per annum until you be presented to a competent benefice, a litigious benefice is not a recompence intended, nor shall determine the annuity, nor a benefice of 15l. If two make an exchange for their lives, and one of them dyeth, the exchange is not determined, but the heir of him who dyeth shall enter and retain the land as long as the other shall live. Ad quod Manwod Chief Baron subsidebat: and there is a great difference between a lease for years and a rent-charge; for at the common law upon such recovery the lessee for years was bound, contrary of a rent-charge; for it was unreasonable that a thing not demanded by the recovery should be bound by it, especially because that the land rendred in value shall not be charged with the rent. Walmesley Serjeant contrary: A remainder upon an estate tail is debile fundamentum, and cannot uphold with assurance a rent-charge against a common recovery; and it cannot be found in any book but in 5 E. 4. 2. That a remainder upon an estate-tail expectant may be charged, for an estate tail is in law presumed to be perpetual, and therefore, what lands are entailed by fee, the words of the fine are, sibi & hæredibus de corpore suo exeuntibus imperpetuum. And it is the common learning in our books that every estate of inheritance, be it fee-simple or fee-tail, shall be intended to be continued till the contrary be shewed. And the authority which the owner of a remainder hath upon it is but conditional, scil. if the tenant in tail in possession doth not countermand it by a recovery, &c. And also the possession upon which the avowry is made, is not the same possession which was charged, but is a foreign possession gained by the recovery, and therefore, before the proper possession be recontinued there can be no distress nor avowry, for the land is not reduced in the privity of estate which was charged; and if he in reversion upon such estate tail would [153]

grant his reversion rendring rent, and afterwards the tenant in tail in possession suffers a common recovery, and dyeth without issue; now the reversion being destroyed, the rent is gone. And he put this case: Tenant in tail grants a rent-charge to begin after his death without issue, and afterwards suffers a common recovery, and dyes without issue, it is a good rent, and shall bind the recoveror, &c. At another day in the Exchequer Chamber, the case was argued again by Snagg Serjeant for the defendant; and he was very long in proving that a remainder might be charged, as in this case: but the Court discharged him of that, and directed him to argue to this point, if this recovery did discharge the rent, &c. wherefore he argued, that these common recoveries are false and feigned things, false in the title, and covenous in the proceedings, and all in prejudice of a third person. And vide 14 H. 8. 3. such common recoveries are holden fraudulent, and therefore by fraud and covin being so odious in our law, we ought not to give and allow unto them so much force as is due to unfeigned recoveries; for these common recoveries do not go in disaffirmance of the former possession, nor in any eviction of it, but for the most part in affirmance; and the estate gained by this recovery is under the estate of him against whom the recovery was had, and he is in by him; for common recoveries are no other but common assurances: and in our case the imagined recompence cannot come to him who hath by the recovery lost his rent, and therefore it is not reason that the recovery should bind as to this rent. Vide 12 E. 4. 19, 20. Tenant in tail discontinueth, and takes back an estate to him in fee, and afterwards a common recovery is had against him, it shall not bind the tail, for the presumed recompence shall go to the estate which he hath lost, scil. the estate in fee, and not to the estate tail, whereof at the time of the recovery he was seized: so in our case, the land which by fiction of law is to be yielded in value upon this voucher, shall not extend to the benefit or recompence of the grantee of the rent-charge, but only to H. who hath lost his remainder, and his new remainder, which comes in lieu of the former, shall not be charged with this rent: and therefore the remainder, which by this recovery is drawn out of H. transit cum suo onere, & cum acciderit shall answer, and shall yield the rent according to the purport of the grant. As 33 H. 6. 4 & 5. two joyntenants are, the one grants a rent-charge, and afterwards releases to his companion, he shall hold the land charged, notwithstanding that he be now fully in by the feoffor. And if there be lord and tenant, and the tenant grants a rent-charge in fee, and dyeth without heir, so as the land goes to the lord in point of escheat, yet the lord shall hold the land charged. And as to the Statute of Fraudulent Con-[154]-veyances, 27 Eliz. cap. 4. the same cannot extend to this grant; for here, this grant is upon consideration of nature made to his own son for his advancement. Popham Attorney General to the contrary: and that neither the grantee of this rent, nor he who makes conusans in his right shall falsifie this recovery. And he put a difference where the party who leaseth or chargeth a remainder, is bound by the recovery voluntarily, and where involuntarily; for where the recovery is suffered voluntarily, there the grantee or lessee shall not be bound by that recovery, but they shall falsifie: but where as our case is, there the party who chargeth or leaseth is bound involuntarily by such recovery, there all interests are bound, and the charge is subject to the same mischief as the remainder it self, out of which it is issuing, vide 7 H. 7. 12. He in the remainder in fee shall not satisfie a recovery had against the tenant for life, but he is put to his writ of entry, ad terminum qui præteriit, in which he shall falsifie, and not by entry, much less he in the remainder upon an estate tail shall not falsifie; and falsifier lyes properly where the party who grants or leaseth against his grant or lease, practiseth by such recovery to avoid or defeat his own estate, and by consequence the interest of his grantee or lessee: but in our case there is not any such matter; for the grantor H. was not party or privy to this recovery, nor tenant, nor vouchee, and therefore no covin, and then no voucher; and all the cases in our law of falsifying of recoveries are upon such matter. And he put the case of 19 E. 2. Fitz. Title Assise 82. where the conusee of a statute merchant, having sued execution, one who had no right impleaded the conusor, and by covin recovered against him, and by execution upon that recovery ousted the conusee, it was holden he should have an assise and falsifie; for here he who party to the recovery: donee in tail, the remainder over in fee upon condition suffers a common recovery, the condition is gone. And as to the statute of 21 H.

8. cap. 15. falsifying is not given in our case by the said statute, the words of which are, Where divers men have leased their land to farm, and afterwards, after such leases made, the lessors, their heirs and assigns have suffered recoveries: within which words our case is not; for he against whom the recovery was had was not our grantor, his heir or assign: so if there be tenant in tail, the remainder over to another in fee, he in the remainder makes a lease for years, and afterwards tenant in tail in possession suffers a common recovery, the lessee shall not falsifie; for that lease was not made by him against whom the recovery was had. And it is clear, that by the common law, the grantee of a rent-charge cannot falsifie against the grantor, his heirs or assigns: but it was a doubt as it appeareth. 7 H. 7. 11. If upon a faint pleader, the lessee [155] for years might be received, for the Statute of Gloucester extends but to default or re-disseisin; but now by the statute of 21 H. 8. cap. 11. in three cases, default, reddition, and faint pleading, such resceipt lyes, which proves that in case of rent, as the statute of 11 H. 8. hath ordained in case of a lease for years, where the lessor, his heirs or assigns, have suffered the recovery, and not otherwise. And afterwards he argued very much upon the reputation and dignity of common recoveries, that they are the strongest and most effectual assurances in the law, and therefore they ought to be countenanced rather by the Judges, than in any part diminished or disabled, and we ought to consider of them non ex rigore juris, rigida disquisitione, but according to the common use and practice, what is the ground and foundation of these recoveries: and so Judges have used heretofore to examine matters, which peradventure, according to the strict rules of the common law, drew them away. But they perceiving that a dangerous consequence thereby would follow to an infinite number of the Kings subjects, the law having been otherwise practised before, have framed their judgments, not according to the exact rules of law, but to avoid the inconvenience aforesaid, according to the common and received practice, &c. Nam communis error facit jus: and to that purpose he cited a case very lately adjudged in B. R. viz. A writ of error was brought in B. R. upon a judgment given in Wales, and the error was in this, that the writ was returnable coram justiciariis Domini Regis comitatus, &c. where it should have been coram justiciariis Magnæ Sessionis Dominæ Reginæ, &c. and such are the words of the statute of 34 H. 8. cap. 26. the which sessions shall be called the Kings Great Sessions in Wales; and notwithstanding that the justices in strict consideration of the law thought the same to be error (for the said statute had given to the said Court such name; yet because it was well known to the justices, that that was the common course in the said Court ever after the erection thereof; and also, if the said judgment should be reversed, for that cause many judgments should be also reversed, which should be a great disquietness and vexation to the whole country there, they in there discretion thought it convenient to qualifie the law in that point, and so to avoid the said inconvenience, affirmed the said judgment: so in the case at Bar, if this rent-charge should stand against the said recovery, no inconvenience should be so firm, but it should be impeached, no title so clear, but should be incumbred, and therefore for the common repulse of many the strict rules of the law ought to yield to common practice for the avoiding of a common inconvenience; it hath been holden for law, when tenant in tail maketh a feoffment in fee, the feoffee is impleaded, & voucheth the tenant in tail, now forasmuch as he cometh in as vouchee, it is now said that he cometh in of all his estates, I do not see [156] any reason for that, but common allowance, practice, and experience, &c. It was adjourned, &c.

MICH. 27 ELIZ. IN THE KINGS BENCH.

CCLXIV. BAXTER AND BARTLETS CASE.

In assise of freshforce by Baxter against Bartlet upon null tort, null disseisin pleaded, it was found for the plaintiff, who had judgment; upon which the tenant brought error, for that the assize have generally found the disseisin, but have not enquired of the force: and after many motions the judgment was affirmed.

CCLXV. Sir Henry Gilfords Case.

It was found upon a special verdict, that Henry Gilford citizen and freeman of London, 7 Feb. 6 E. 2. seized of a capital messuage, devised the same by these words: Lego, & volo, quod omnes domus & reddit' quæ habeo in villa de London, ordinentur & assignentur per executores meos ad sustentationem trium capellanorum qui pro vita celebrabunt in ecclesia Sancti Pauli, London: et ad hoc faciend' do eis plenam potestatem; and made his executors William Staunton and others, and dyed, the will was proved and inrolled according to the custom. Afterwards the executors by their deed bearing date 7 E. 2. granted and assigned the said capital messuage, and his other tenements in London to the Dean and Chapter of Pauls in London, and their successors, habend' & tenend' in forma sequenti. Hæc est finalis concordia, &c. That the dean and chapter shall have the said lands for ever, to find yearly a competent sustenance of 10 marks to a priest to celebrate mass for the said Henry Gilford, and all souls, and that the said priest at all hours of Divine obsequies should give his attendance in the said church, and faithfully do his office to say mass and prayers according to the degrees and customs of the said church, and that the dean and chapter should find bread and wine, and massing-cloaths, and torch-light, and granted the residue of the profits of the lands to celebrate an yearly obit, and for the perpetual security of the said chauntry, the said executors granted to the Mayor and Commonalty of London 20s. yearly rent for ever: ita quod, the mayor and chamberlain for the time being presented a meet and convenient chaplain to the said chauntry, to the said dean and chapter, within 15 days after the avoidance, the which chaplain the dean and chapter are bound to admit. And the form of the said conveyance was such; We the executors H. G. do grant and assign to the Dean and [157] Chapter of Pauls all the lands, tenements, and rents aforesaid, to have and to hold to them and their successors for the sustentation of a chaplain perpetual, and his clark for the said H. G. and all souls, receiving from the said dean and chapter 10 marks for the celebrating of the said obit of the said H. G. and that the grant and assignment of the said 20s. to the commonalty in the relief of the said chauntry, is such, scil. To have and receive of one shop in Cheap maintenance of the said chauntry aforesaid: and that the said dean and chapter oblige themselves and their successors, and the church, to pay the same to the said priest and clark and that it shall be lawful for the mayor and commonalty aforesaid to distrain for the said rents: by virtue of which will and indenture the dean and chapter enter, and were thereof seized in their demesne, &c. and that at all times after they had taken the profits thereof until 2 E. 6. and that the dean and chapter of the profits of the premises had yearly paid 10 marks for the stipend of the said priest. And further, the 27 July 16 H. 8. the dean and chapter demised the same to F. Cole for 40 years; and that afterwards 15 Maij 36 H. 8. the said dean and chapter leased the same to Nicholas Wilford for 50 years rendring 9l. rent with clause of distress if the rent was behind by half a year, being demanded, the lease should be void which N. W. 1 E. 6. devised the same to his wife, who devised the same to Tho. Wilford the defendant: and further found, that as it appeared by an exemplification out of the Exchequer, that it was a chauntry of H. G. and that Tho. was then a chauntry priest there, and that the said chauntry, with all the profits and obits were 6l. 13s. 4d. the tenth of which is a mark, which was payable to the King 26 H. 8. and that by another exemplification in 2 E. 6. it appeared that the Dean and Chapter of Pauls certified to the Commissioners of the said King, Cantaria H. G. A. & B. executores testamenti H. Gilford by force of the said will 7 E. 2. granted and assigned to the dean and chapter aforesaid, and their successors, the said lands and tenements, to the intent that they should maintain for ever a chaplain to pray for the soul of the said H. G. and all souls: and the incumbent of the said chauntry is one G. and that the said executors granted to the Mayor and Commonalty of London the rent of 20s. out of a shop in Cheap, with the patronage of the said chauntry, to the intent that they should maintain the chauntry accordingly; and recited all the said lands and rents assigned, and that the rent of them was 14l. 1s. (the salary of the priest, 6l. 13s. 4d. for bread and wine 3s. 4d. the Chamberlain of London 20s. being deducted) and so there remaineth 4l. 3s. 4d. and that the said chaplain received above his wages yearly by reason of the said obit, other profits, as procession pence, and feeding days 33s. 4d. And found further, the Act of 1 E. 6. [158] and further said, that the church of St. Paul at the time of the said Act was a Cathedral Church, and the fee of the Bishop of London, and that the profits and rents devised and ordained to the said dean and chapter were in the said certificate of 2 E. 6. and that the said lands, at the time of the making of the said Act, and for five years before, were not in the actual possession of the said King H. 8. nor E. 6. and that by force of the statute of 1 E. 6. the said lands came to the possession of the said King as chauntry land, and that the said King granted it to Tho. Butcher in fee, who bargained and sold the same to Dobson, who thereof enfeoffed Thoragill, upon whom the said Nicholas Wilford entred, claiming his lease: and further found, that 45s. parcel of the said rent of 9l. due at the Feast of St. John Baptist 11 Eliz. for the said capital messuage was arrear by half a year after the said feast, and was lawfully demanded by the said Rich. Thoragill, and for not payment he re-entred, and let the same to Tho. Buttell, &c. Bell. The executors by this devise have not a bare authority, but an interest; for if one seised of lands in fee deviseth, that his executors grant a rent-charge to one in fee out of his said lands, by that devise the executors have a fee-simple in the land, otherwise they could not make such a grant: so here in the case in question: and also by the same reason the executors have a fee-simple in the land, for otherwise they could not grant a rent in fee, nor the land to the dean and chapter in fee, by which the chaplain in perpetuity ought to be found: and although but one chauntry was erected where three were intended, but the land devised was not sufficient for all three, so that now by the erecting of one chauntry only, the executors performed the truth as near to the intent of the devisor as it could be, and as the land devised might extend unto; it is not material, if here be a condition, or a confidence in the words of the grant to the dean and chapter ad inveniendum, &c. for if it be a condition, and broken, no advantage shall be taken of it, for it is out of the statute; and if it be a confidence, then it is performed as near the intent of the devisor as it might be, and the condition being performed, although not exactly yet so near as it may be, it is well enough performed: as a feoffment upon condition, that the feoffee shall make a gift in tail to husband and wife, and the heirs of the body of the husband, the husband dyeth, now the gift cannot be modo & forma, and therefore if it be, it may be, scil. as near the intent of the parties as it may be, it is good; and therefore if the land be given to the wife for life without impeachment of waste, the remainder over, it is sufficient in case of a trust and confidence. 1. It was moved, if here be any chauntry in the case: and a chauntry is nothing else but a sustentation for a priest that chaunts in a place certain for the souls of the dead: [159] and chauntries are in two sorts; the one incorporated, as by the King by his letters patents; the other not incorporated, as our case is: and truly the greatest number of chauntries were not corporal, but were chauntries but in reputation, and not revera; but yet such chauntries in reputation are within the statute, which see by the words of it, accepted, taken or reputed, as part or member of any chauntry. It hath been objected, that nothing passeth to the King by that statute, but that which is parcel or belonging to the chauntry, but this land is not parcel nor belonging to any chauntry, for all the land is in the dean and chapter. As to that, we ought to have regard unto the intent of the devisor, which was to make the land a chauntry: and so in the time of Hen. 8. it was retorned in the Exchequer for the first-fruits of the chauntry of Hen. Gilford, and we ought not to respect the conveyance it self, which was made by the executors to the dean and chapter, but also the disposition of the devisor so as both ought to be put together, if they be not contrary one to the other and if they be then, the last shall be taken. And when the intent of the debtor may stand with the act of the executors, to construe, that the land shall make the chauntry according to the intent of the devisor; for the executors have given all the land to the dean and chapter to find a priest, and things belonging to a chauntry; and the executors have given the said land to the said intent, and the assignment of the special portion out of it, is but a shewing how the profits of the lands shall be bestowed: for I conceive, that the land at the time of the disposition aforesaid, was not of any better value, than it was appointed to be imployed as aforesaid; and if the dean and chapter by their industry have made and improved it to a greater value, they shall take advantage thereof till it be given to the King by the statute, and it shall not be said properly a rent, but rather a portion of the profits, &c. and therefore the land shall be said the chauntry, and not the sum; and here the intent of the statute extends to the intent of the founder: so that if the intent of the founder was to give the land to superstitious uses, the same is within the statute: if cestuy que use wills that his feoffees have the profits of his lands ut supra, to the sustentation of a chauntry priest, and the feoffees imploy but 20l. per annum, whereas the land is of the value of 100l. per annum, by this statute the King shall have all; for the intent of the founder was, that all should be imployed: and so here; for upon the matter the dean and chapter are but as feoffees; and see that this Statute of Chauntries makes a great difference between obits and lights, and chauntries; for in the case of obits and lights, the King shall not have but that which was imployed. Whetstones case was, that Whetstone seized of the manor of [160] Cocke, made a feoffment thereof to certain feoffees to find two obits in such a chappel, and with the residue of the profits to maintain the chappel; and judgment was given for the Queen. Here the condition knit to the reversion upon a lease made by the dean and chapter to Nicholas Wilford passeth to the King by the Act of Parliament; for a condition is an hereditament, and when the King grants over the reversion to Butcher, the condition also passeth by 32 H. 8. Bromley Solicitor, The statute extends to chauntries in existence only, and not to chauntries in reputation. Chauntry hath divers significations in law; 1. For the service which the chauntry priest is to do, as cessavit de cantaria. 2. Sometimes for the advowson of the chauntry, scil. quod permittat præsentare ad cantariam. 3. Sometimes for the body of the chauntry, scil. the land of which it is endowed, and in that sense it is taken by the statute. I will agree, if the same had been an ancient chauntry time out of mind, &c. and the incumbents thereof had taken the profits, and made leases of it, that then it should be a chauntry within this statute, for it might be corporated by prescription: but the chauntry here in question is not a chauntry by prescription, for the beginning of it is known, so it is a chauntry in reputation only and not in facto. And he said, that in that case the rent limited to the sustentation of the priest shall go to the King and not to the land, for the land was not given for the sustentation of a priest, but the rent only; so as the land was not immediately imployed for the finding of the priest: and he resembled this case to the case lately in question upon the statute of 31 H. 8. An abbot was seized of a great wood, which was never imployed in kind to the use of the house, being seven miles distant from the house, but was never in lease, but was yearly sold by parcels, and the woodward rendred an account of the same to the auditor: and the opinion was, that a lease for years made of it within a year before the dissolution, was not within the said statute, for it was not immediately imployed for hospitality. But see the same reported by the Lord Dyer to the contrary, 3 & 4 Eliz. 207. that such a demise was void, although that the wood was not immediately imployed, &c. And see also the words of the statute, scil. that the land shall be in the actual possession of the King in as ample manner as the priest had it, and the priest had nothing in the land but only in the rent: it was adjorned to be further argued, &c.

[161] TEMPS ROIGN ELIZ.

CCLXVI. HARVEYS CASE.

Harvey seized of a manor, made a feoffment thereof to divers persons to the use of himself for life, and after to the use of his son and the heirs males of his body, and if the said son, or any of the heirs males of his body discontinue or alien (otherwise than for 21 years, or three lives) that then his feoffees should be seized to the use of Nic. Harvey his brother in fee: the feoffor dyed, the son made a lease for 21 years and afterwards discontinued against the proviso, if that lease should bind Nic. Harvey who came in by the latter use, &c. Dyer, It is hard to avoid the lease, for at the time of the making of it, the lessor had a good interest and authority to make the lease, and the act which impeacheth the estate of the lessor commenceth after the lease by the discontinuance, and therefore shall not avoid the lease. Manwood, The second use doth determine the first use, and all estates derived out of it. Mounson contr', For here this word (otherwise than for 21 years, &c) so as such a lease is excepted: as if a man makes a feoffment in fee to the use of J. S. and his heirs, until J. D. shall pay to him 20l. and then to the use of J. D. and his heirs, here if J. S. makes a lease for years, and afterwards the monies are paid to J. D. now J. D. shall hold the land discharged of the lease, for there is no word (otherwise) &c. for these words (otherwise) qualifie the second use. Dyer, The word (otherwise) amounts to an exception. Manwood doubted of it, and moved and demanded if the wife of the cestuy que use should have dower or not. Barham conceived that she should, &c.

CCLXVII. MICH. 31 ELIZ. IN THE COMMON PLEAS.

Tenant in socage made a lease for four years, and dyed, his heir within age of 8 years, the mother being guardian in socage, leased by indenture to the same lessee for 14 years; it was holden, that in this case the first lease is surrendred, but otherwise it is of a lease made by guardian in nurture.

[162] CCLXVIII. MICH. 29 ELIZ. IN THE COMMON PLEAS.

A Release pleaded after Judgment and Verdict. Audita Querela pleaded.

In debt it was found for the plaintiff 20 Eliz. and 21 Eliz. the plaintiff released to the defendant, and the continuance was made until this term, scil. Mich. 29 Eliz. per Curiam advisare vult: and now the plaintiff against his own release prayed, and had judgment without any knowledge to the defendant, and process of execution issued; and now Walter, a Clerk of the Court, on the behalf of the defendant, shewed the release to the Court, and also the whole special matter, and prayed the release of the Court against this practice. Anderson presently granted a supersedeas: but afterwards, before the process issued forth, he and the other justices were of opinion, that the defendant could not plead the said release, nor any further matter after verdict, and demanded the question of Nelson chief prothonatory, who advertised the Court, that he could shew a president where an arbitrement had been pleaded after a verdict, and issue joyned upon it, and that was 100 years since: quod mirum videbatur Curiæ hic: and afterwards the Court said to Walter, Sue your audita querela, and upon that you shall have a supersedeas.

MICH. 29 ELIZ. IN THE COMMON PLEAS.

CCLXIX. SIR RICHARD LEWKNORS CASE.

Sir Richard Lewknor seized of Willingford Park, leased the same for years, and dyed; the lessee assigned over his term, excepting the woods and underwoods standing growing, and being in and upon the premises, the assignee committed waste, the term expired, the daughters and heir of Sir Rich. and the husband of the third daughter coparceners, being dead, as tenant by the curtesie, brought an action of waste against the assignee, and the opinion of the Court was, that the husband ought not to joyn in that action, for he can recover nothing, for damages he cannot have, for the waste was not done to his disinheresin, and the land he cannot have, because the term is expired. Snag Serjeant, I conceive that the exception in the assignment is good; for an exception of trees by the lessor himself in his lease is good, and by reason thereof the lessee shall not have fire-bote, hey-bote, &c. which otherwise he should have, and the property of the trees is in the lessor, and also the soil, 14 H. 8. 1 & 2. 28 H. 8. Dyer 19 & vide 46 E. 3. 22. a lease for years was made with such exception, and the lessor brought an action for the trees cut, quare clausum fregit, and that proves that the soil also is excepted, and then the action of waste lyes against the lessee, who hath excepted to himself the wood and the soil, and not against his assignee. Walmsley Serjeant to the contrary. And he said, where land is demised the absolute property of the great [163] trees is in the lessor, and the lessee hath in such case, a qualified property: and he cited 2 H. 7. 14. the lessor commands the lessee to dig gravel in the land demised, or licenseth him so to do, such commandment or licence is not good for the lessor hath nothing to do with the gravel, nor hath any property in it, but such licence to cut trees had been good; and vide 10 H. 7. 2 & 3. Waste is assigned in the breaking de uno muro lapideo; the defendant pleaded the licence of the plaintiff to break it, and upon that they were at issue: and he said, if the lessor cutteth trees, upon which the lessee brings an action of trespass, he shall not recover damages according to the value of the trees cut down; but for the trespass to the soil, and for the loss of the shadow, and the acorns, &c. and if the lessee cutteth down trees, the lessor cannot take them, because he hath other remedy. Where a reversion is granted to A. and B. and to the heirs of B. waste is done. A. and B. bring an action of waste, B. shall recover all the damages, and A. nothing; which proves that all the interest in the land demised is in B. and not in A. therefore here in the principal case the exception is void, for that which the law allows to the former, is only house-bote, hedge-bote, plough-bote, fire-bote: and he said that the lessee sells the trees and the vendee cuts them down, that waste lyeth against the lessee, which proves that in that case the soil doth not pass with the trees, by the exception of the trees, the soil is also excepted as a servant to the trees, viz. to nourish the trees; and if he who excepts the trees cuts them down, or roots them up, the lessee shall have the soil. And he said, that for the property that the lessor hath in the trees, if he cuts them down, the rent shall not be apportioned: and if the lessor granteth the trees to one, and his heirs, there shall be no attornment, which had been requisite if the soil had passed. At another day it was argued by Shuttleworth Serjeant, and exception taken, because it is too general, scil. quod fecit vastum in terris quas Sir R. Lewknor pater duarum querentium cujus hæredes ipsæ sunt præfato, Ford dimisit, &c. And the plaintiffs counted the reversion was entailed by Act of Parliament to the said Sir R. Lewknor; and so the writ ought to be special, scil. cujus hæredes de corpore ipsæ sunt; for although there be not any such form in the register, yet that is to no purpose; for in novo casu novum est remedium apponendum. And he compared it to the case in F. N. B. 57. where land is given to husband and wife, and the heirs of the body of the wife, the wife dyeth, the husband commits waste, the writ shall be, Idem A. de domibus in B. quas tenet ad vitam suam ex dimissione quam inde fecit præfato A. & M. quondam uxori ejus, & hæredibus de corpore ipsius M. matris dicti R. cujus hæres ipse est exeuntibus. And vide 26 H. 8. 6. cestuy que use leaseth for years, the lessee commits waste, the feoffees bring an action of waste, the writ containeth the special matter, [164] although there was not any such writ in the register. Fenner and Walmsley contrary; for there is not any such form in the register, cujus hæredes de corpore, &c. and we are not to devise a new form in this case, but it is sufficient to shew the special matter in the count; also the words in the writ are true, for the plaintiffs are heirs to Sir R. Lewknor, and the count is well, pursuant and agreeing to the writ; for they are heirs, although they are but heirs special of his body. And the Court awarded the writ good, and said that the case is not like the case in Fitz. N. B. 57. nor to 26 H. 8. before cited; for in the first case the plaintiffs cannot shew of whose demise the tenant holdeth, unless that he also shew the special conveyance, scil. that the land was given to the husband and wife, and to the heirs of the body of the wife, for always the demise to the tenant ought to be shewed certain, which cannot be in both these cases, if not by disclosing also the title to the inheritance and the estate in it. Another exception was taken to the count, that where the two defendants were tenants in common of the said lands demised, the writ is tenuerunt, which is intended a joynt-tenure. But this exception was not allowed: and vide 44 E. 3. in waste the plaintiff counted upon divers leases, and Fitz. N. B. 60. F. and the writ shall suppose one tenet, and not divers tenets. Another exception was taken to the writ because the two coparceners, and the heir of the third joyned in the writ, whereas the husband of the third sister, being tenant by the curtesie, was alive. Vide 22 H. 6. 21, 22. But that exception for the tenant by the curtesie joyns to no purpose; for he is not to have damages, because the waste was not to his disinheresin, and the land he shall not recover against the defendant, for the term is not determined; and such was the opinion of the Court. As to the matter in law, Shuttleworth said, that the action of waste ought to be brought against the lessee himself, and not against the assignee, for when he grants over his term, excepting the trees, it is a good exception; for when the land upon which the trees grow is leased to another, the trees pass by the lease as well as the land, and the property of them is in the lessee during the term; by which when he grants his land, he may well except them, as the first lessor might have done; and if the lessee for years cutteth down the trees, the lessor cannot take them for that he hath other sufficient remedy, scil. an action of waste. Fenner and Walmsley contrary: and they conceived that the lessee had but a special property in the trees, scil. for fire-bote, plough-bote, house-bote, &c. But if he demiseth the land, or granteth his interest in it, he cannot except the trees, nor his special property in them, no more than he who hath common appendant may grant the land, excepting the common: and in such [165] case, the general property in the trees remains in the lessor, as parcel of his inheritance. And this appeareth by many cases: 27 H. 8. 13. Lessee for life and he in the remainder joyn in a lease for life, the lessee commits waste, the tenant for life, and he in the remainder joyn in an action of waste, the tenant for life shall recover the place wasted, and he in the reversion all the damages. Vide 2 H. 7. & 10 H. 7. cited before, that the lessor may licence the lessee to cut the trees, which proves that the property is in him. And vide 40 Ass. 22. the lessor shall have the windfalls. And as to that which hath been said, that by the exception of the trees, the soil it self is also excepted that is true, as to the trees for nourishment, and not otherwise; for if the lessor cutteth down the trees, or roots them up, he shall not after meddle with the land where, &c. but the soil shall be entirely to the lessee: the lessor during the term may grant the trees, so cannot the lessee; therefore the greater and better property in the trees is in the lessor and not in the lessee, and the trees proprie loquendo, are not parcel of the thing demised. If this exception of the trees or woods should hold place, inconvenience would follow; for as it is holden in 15 H. 7. 11. If the termor of wood commits waste in one corner of the wood, he should not lose all the wood, but that place only: but if in the said wood there are divers plats of land in divers places of the wood, if the termor commits waste in that wood he shall lose all the said plats, although he hath not done waste in them, for they are parcel of the wood. Vide temps E. 1. Fitz. Waste 127. and vide ibidem Waste 112. 8 E. 2. Waste done in parcel of an house, the whole house shall be recovered. Vide also 30 E. 3. Fitz. Amendment 67. and 4 E. 3. Waste 10. Now if that be law, and the exception be good, how shall the place wasted be recovered here, and against whom? It seemed to the Lord Anderson, that the exception was void, and that the action was brought against the assignee; and he said it was a knavish and foolish demise, and if it should be effectual in law, some mischiefs would follow which he would not remember. Windham was of the same opinion, and that the lessee could not assign his estate with such exception, for he hath but a special interest in the trees, scil, for fire-bote, plough-bote, &c. which should go with the land. Periam conceived, that as to such special property, that none could have it but he who hath the land, and therefore the exception is void; but as to the fruit-trees, such an exception might be good; and although that the trees are not expresly demised, yet quodam modo, and after a sort, they may be said demised, as annexed to the land, and if waste be brought against him who made the exception, scil. the lessee, he cannot say they were not let to him; and therefore he doubted of the exception: and Rhodes doubted also of the exception; [166] and Anderson said, that he was clear of opinion that the lessor should have the windfalls; and afterwards the case was adjorned to be further argued, &c.

CCLXX. AUDLEYS CASE.

Uses.

The Lord Audley 12 H. 7. enfeoffed Hoddy and others of certain lands in the county of Somerset, and afterwards by indenture reciting the said feoffment, and the date of it, and also that it was to the intent that his feoffees should perform his will, as followeth in effect, viz. My will is that my said feoffees shall stand seized to the use that the said Hoddy shall receive of the said lands 100l. which he had lent to the said Lord Audley, and also to stand seized to pay all his debts upon bills signed with his hand, and after the debts paid, that the feoffees shall make an estate of the said lands to him the said Lord Audley and Joan his wife, and to the heirs of their bodies, &c. with divers remainders over. The said Lord Audley had issue by the said Joan, and also having issue by a former wife a daughter, the feoffees never made any estate to the said lord and his wife, and by the opinion of divers justices and sages of the law upon this matter no use was changed, for it is not a last will, but an intent; and although that the feoffees shall be seized to the use of the feoffor and his heirs, because no consideration was wherefore they should be seized to their own uses; yet the same could not make a new use to the said lord and his wife in tail, without conveying an estate, &c. for the wife is a stranger to the land, and the same cannot be a will or testament: for the estate mentioned in the said writing ought to be made to the said lord and his wife, who could not take by his own will; and this matter was depending in the Chancery. And the advise of the justices being there required, they delivered their opinions, that by that writing no use was changed, nor any use vested in the said lord and his wife, and a decree was made accordingly, until proof was made that such an estate was made, &c.

CCLXXI. WALGRAVE AND SOMERSETS CASE.

In trespass by Walgrave against Somerset, the case was, that tenant at will cut down trees, and the lessor brought trespass vi & armis: and the Court was clear of opinion, that the action was well maintainable modo & forma, and judgment was given accordingly. Vide Litt. 25. that trespass lyeth, but he doth not speak of vi & armis. See for that 12 E. 4. 8. by Fairfax and Genny, 22 E. 4. 5.

CCLXXII. MICH. 30 ELIZ. IN THE COMMON PLEAS.

Trial.

In debt upon an obligation, the defendant said that the obligation was endorced with a condition for the performance of covenants contained in an indenture, &c. The plaintiff assigned the breach in this, that the defendant himself by the same indenture, that the said house was discharged of all former estates and incumbrances, &c. And further shewed, that the defendant had made a former lease of the said house to one A. B. in the county of Warwick; to which the defendant said, that tempore dimissionis he was within age; upon which they were at issue, and it was tryed in the county of Warwick, where it ought to be tryed where the writ was brought; but the whole Court held the contrary, that the tryal was well enough; as if in an assise the tenant pleadeth a release of the plaintiff in a foreign county; to which the plaintiff pleads, that at the time of the release he was within age, upon which they are at issue; the issue shall be tryed in the country where the release is pleaded to be made, and not where the writ is brought.

Nusance, Obstupavit. Action upon the Case. Prescription.

Action upon the case was brought for stopping a way: the plaintiff declared that the Duke of Suffolk was seized of a house in D. and let the same to the plaintiff for life, and that the said duke, and all those whose estate, &c. had used time out of mind, &c. to have a way over the land of the defendant to the park of D. to carry and re-carry necessary wood for the said house, from the said park to the said house: and further declared, that the defendant obstupavit viam: it was moved, that upon the matter no action upon the case did lye, but an assise, because that the freehold of the house is in the plaintiff, and also the freehold of the land over which, &c. is [168] in the defendant: but if the plaintiff had had but an estate for years, then an action upon the case would lye, and not an assise: and it is not material if the plaintiff have but an estate for years in the park, quod fuit concessum per totam Curiam. It was holden also that this word obstupavit was good enough without any more, scil. without shewing any special matter of disturbance, as the erection of some gate, hedge, ditch, &c. for obstupavit implyeth a nusance continued, and not a personal disturbance, as forestaller, or saying upon the land, &c. that he shall not go over, or use that way: but as to a local and real nusance, the word obstupavit amounts to obstruxit: and although in the declaration is set down the day and year of the stopping, yet it shall not be intended that it continued but the same day; for the words of the declaration are further, that he was disturbed in the way, and yet is; and so the continuance of the disturbance is alledged; and of that opinion was the whole Court. Leonard Prothonotary, He hath declared of a prescription habere viam tam pedestrem, quam equestrem pro omnibus & omnimodis cariagiis; and by that prescription he cannot have a cart-way, for every prescription is stricti juris. Dyer, That is well observed; and I conceive that the law is so; and therefore it is good to prescribe habere viam pro omnibus cariagiis, without speaking of horse or foot-way.

CCLXXIV. The Archbishop of Yorks Case.

Toll.

The King granted to the Archbishop of York the toll of corn sold in the market of Rippon: and afterwards the King granted to the Mayor and Citizens of York to be discharged of toll through all the realm, and afterwards the archbishop exchanged his manor of Rippon with the King for another manor: it was moved, if now the citizens of York should be discharged of toll within the manor of Rippon. Dyer said that they are not discharged of toll, for the grant to the archbishop was eigne to the grant made to the citizens, and by the exchange the King had new right: and when the King grants over the manor of Rippon, the grantee shall have the toll, notwithstanding the grant made to the citizens, for the grant made to them was void as to discharge them of toll at Rippon, and the grant of the King to the citizens shall not take effect after the exchange; for the grant was void ab initio. But if the grant of the King to the archbishop had been made for life, then the grant of the King made to the citizens should take effect after the estate for life determined: and the better opinion was, that toll should be paid.

Waller entred, and was seized by force of the statute 27 H. 8. and afterwards 2 E. 6. by his deed in consideration of a marriage to be had between him and one Eliz. A. enfeoffed Worsley and others to the use of himself and the said Eliz. for their lives, and after the use of the said Rich. Waller, and his heirs, and dyed: Eliz. took to wife Clavell, they both by fine granted the said mannor to Tho. Lamb: habend' eidem Thomæ & hæredibus suis tota vita ipsius Eliz. Tho. Lamb entred, and dyed seized, Tho. his son and heir entred, against whom Thomas Waller, son and heir of Rich. brought a formedon, the said Eliz. being alive, the tenant said, he is within age, and prayed that the paroll might demur; but non allocatur, for he was but as an occupant during the life of Eliz.

CCLXXVI. RESIDUUM OF SIR FRANCIS ENGLEFIELDS CASE.

The case of Sir Francis Englefield was argued by Popham; and he said, that this condition was not such a private condition, or so running in privity, but that it might be transferred by 33 H. 8. or 29 Eliz. to the Queen; for although that the consideration which moved and induced Sir Francis to create the condition be private and particular, yet that notwithstanding the condition it self is general; for the private cause of the condition doth not make the condition private, but as in other cases, and he put the cases before of ransom: but if the condition had been conceived in these terms, scil. If my nephew shall be given to intollerable vices, then if I tender, &c. there it had been otherwise. Vide the statute of 33 H. 8. cap. 20. by which it is enacted, that if any subject is attainted of high treason by the course of the common law, the king by such attainder shall have such benefit and advantage as well of uses, rights, entries, conditions, &c. as of possessions, reversions, &c. as if it had been done and declared by authority of Parliament, that is as much as to say, as if the condition in its proper terms had been given to the King by Act of Parliament, &c. and vouched Dacres case 17 Eliz. cited by him before, where, upon a grant of all his goods and chattels revokable upon tender of 5s. it was resolved, that such a condition was given to the King, and by special grace [170] of the Queen Sir Tho. Gorge had the benefit of it: and here, although the cause of the proviso be private and special, yet the condition is not tyed in the cause, and the statute gives to the Queen all conditions which are usual, and for the benefit of the Queen; and at the time of the making of this statute such conditions were usual, & tunc temporis, the condition was pen'd, not by way of re-entry, but that the use should be void; and that such conditions were usual at the time of the making of the statute of 29 Eliz. appeareth by the statute made two years before, scil. 27 Eliz. for the repressing of fraudulent conveyances: by which it is provided by an express branch of it against such conditions containing power of revocation; and laws are for the most part made to give order for things which may happen: and I conceive, that this tender for the Queen is well enough for the time, notwithstanding all the terms are past, yet the two years are not incurred: I covenant within a year to suffer a common recovery, all the terms are past without any recovery suffered, yet no action lyeth upon that covenant before the year be fully expired, although that the terms be past, it being impossible to suffer a recovery within the time prefixed: A. covenants with B. in consideration of marriage to suffer a recovery before the Feast of St. Michael, and if A. before the said feast doth not suffer such recovery, that then he shall be seized to the use of C. Trinity Term passeth without any recovery had, yet no use shall rise before the said feast: and I conceive that there needs not here any office; but if the condition be to be performed on the part of the patentee, then the breaking of the condition ought to be found by office; contrary where the condition is to be performed on the part of the King: for acts which subjects do, are matters in pais, therefore an office is requisite to make them of record; but where the Queen doth any thing, there needs not any office to make it of record; the Queen her self might tender the ring, but by commission under the Great Seal she hath authorized another to do it, and she hath taken sufficient notice that there was such a condition: and when the certificate is made and retorned, the same is sufficient to inform her that the condition is performed, for the certificate being retorned, is of record as well as the commission, as the retorn of the writ; and he cited the case before cited, Bartues case, 2 Eliz. Dyer. The King leased the manor of D. for years to A. upon condition, that if the King at any time during the term shall make a lease to the said A. of the manor of S. for life, then the lease for years shall cease and be void; the King makes the lease for life, the lease for years is void without any office, for the lease for life is upon record: the case of Auditor, 3 Eliz. Dyer 197. where the forfeiture of the office appears of record: and Baron Plags case 15 H. 8. ibidem, the determination of [171] the Office of Remembrancer by acceptance of the Baron shall bind in the Exchequer, void without a scire facias or office. Vide etiam Dyer (5 Ma. 159) he being Justice of the Common Pleas, was made Justice of the Kings Bench his first office was gone and determined: also he said, that the condition (being performed ut supra) sua vi & virtute, without any office shall make void the conveyance to which it was annexed. And if Sir Francis, being attainted, had tendred the ring, ipso facto as it worked to him, so ipso facto it should work to the Queen. When the Act of 29 Eliz. had made the assurance void, the land is in the Queen presently, by means of Sir Francis, to whom the land returned, and from him in the same instant vested in the Queen. Cook to the contrary: The condition is not given to the Queen: words make the plea; therefore the words of the condition are to be considered, in which it is to be seen if this condition be annexed to the privity of nature, or be general. The form of the condition is, Sir Francis being a man of great living, and having a great manor of his own name, in consideration of the preservation of his name and blood, &c. covenanted to stand seized, &c. And further, pro eo quod, his said nephew was of tender age, and his proof could not now appear, and it might be that in time to come he might be given to intolerable vices; therefore the said Sir Francis did not think it convenient to settle the said inheritance in his said nephew absolutely without a bridle to restrain him, therefore it was provided, that if the uncle delivered a ring of gold to his nephew, to the intent to make void, &c. And this is a special condition, private and peculiar to the person of Sir Francis incident to him, and to no other, and incommunicable; and therefore it is not given to the Queen: but such condition which the heir, lord by escheat, or executors may have, the Queen shall have by the statute 10 H. 7. 18. Lessee for years of a house covenants to repair it within six years, within which term he dyeth, no reparation being made, covenant lyeth against the executors; contrary if the covenant had been that he should repair during his life. It hath been said, that the things which are matters of privity are the considerations which caused Sir Francis to make this proviso, but they are not any part of the condition or proviso: truly the consideration raises the use, and precedes the proviso which is tyed to the consideration with an ideo, and all is but one sentence knit together with the ideo. And although consideration of blood be not parcel of the proviso, yet that which follows is, scil. for that his nephew, &c. And in this conveyance Sir Francis præstitit utrumque munus nutricis, ubera, & verbera. And Acts of Parliament do not give away things knit to nature, by the general words all things. Vide the Lord Brays case, 2 Eliz. Dyer 90. The father having the wardship of his son and heir ap-[172]-parent, if he outlawed shall not forfeit the same, for it is inseparable to him, notwithstanding that the land be holden of the Queen, and so nature cannot be transferred, therefore neither this proviso. And so is the tenure of frankalmoigne 35 H. 6. 58. and it should be a great rigour to take the bridle out of the hands of the natural uncle, into the hands of justice, which is manus Regia: and he cited the case of the Lord Norris, where it was rul'd, that where the act of attainder of Norris gave to the King all rights, titles, &c. yet a writ of error was not given thereby. (Manwood, Actions are not expresly given by the said act of attainder.) As to the second point, I conceive that the coveyance is become void when the terms within the two years are passed, and shall not expect until the two years be expired, for the inrollment ought to be within the term; so that if all the terms of the two years be past, it is now impossible for to inroll the deed within the time limited by the statute, and then, by 29 H. 8. the conveyance is void, and then is the Queen seized in fee at the time of the making of the lease by the attainder of Sir Francis: as to the certificate, without office it is not sufficient to entitle the Queen to the land; and I deny the difference put by Popham between a condition to be performed on the part of the patentee, and on the part of the King: I confess that a certificate to inform the Queen, or her councel, of the quantity, quality, value, &c. of the land, is good without office, but not to entitle the Queen de novo to the inheritance of another; I grant that the commission is of record, but the tender of the ring is matter in pais, and not of record. Three things ought to be observed in every certificate, to make it a good and lawful certificate according to the course of the common law, unless it be in cases of necessity, as in case of ouster le mere, &c. 1. It ought not to be in the absence of the party. 2. It ought to be pendente placito convocatis in ea parte convocandis. 3. It ought to be directed to a known officer; but a thing certified by a private person, being no officer, cannot be good. Also a certificate according to the course of the common law, being good, is not traversable. At another day, the case was argued by Egerton Solicitor for the Queen: the condition is given to the Queen by 33 H. 8. and also by 29 Eliz. and this condition in it self is a general and ordinary condition, and rests not in privity, and such an act as may be made by any stranger as well as by Sir Francis himself, scil. the tender of the ring. The reasons which moved Sir Francis to knit this condition to the conveyance were natural, but the proviso and the performance of it not tyed to nature, and therefore all the cases of privity are here out of seisin. As to the Lord Brays case, the same was not any wardship, but only an order for the government of his son and heir; for the wardship of [173] the father in the son is not a chattel in him. As to the case of the Lord Norris, the writ of error could not accrue to the Queen, for by the act of attainder no actions were given to the King: and here is not any such privity as hath been pretended, for by the words of the proviso the ring might be tendred to his executors or administrators, therefore the condition might be tendred when he is dead, therefore without privity. Title for alienation in mortmain of lands purchased by a villain of the King, or for a condition broken, are not in the King before office: but here the condition is to be performed on the part of the Queen, which Her Royal Majesty cannot perform, and therefore commissioners are appointed to do it, which they have done, and upon the commission retorned, have informed the Queen of all the performance of it, and all is now upon record. And there is a great difference between certificates, as in our case, and certificates which have been cited on the other side, which are used to make tryals upon issues joyned betwixt party and party, and in such certificates I confess the law, as Cook hath argued: the sheriff is not known to be such an officer, but by his commission under the Great Seal, he upon a writ of the King to him directed, summons, disseisins, attaches, &c. these are matters in fait; but when the sheriff hath retorned his service, then it is become matter of record: so in our case, the retorn of the tender, &c. where the Queen is to be informed of the lands of the subject which she is to have, there ought to be an office; but here the Queen is to do an act, and that she hath done under the Great Seal by commission, by the retorn of which she is in the whole matter, therefore there needs not an office to inform her of that which she her self hath done by another authorized by her to do it: and he said that the leases made by the Queen, being tenant pur auter vie, were not void ab initio, but from the time of the two years, but now the estate of the Queen for life is determined, therefore also the leases derived out of it. Exception hath been taken to the information, scil. prædictus Franc' per indenturam suam factam inter, &c. without saying sigillo suo sigillat', that is good enough; for facta esse non potuit, nisi etiam sit sigillat', therefore facta includes sigillat': and afterwards Trin. 33. Eliz. this case was argued by the Barons. Clark puisne Baron said, that judgment ought to be given for the Queen. And first he said, I conceive that here upon this indenture is no use created in Sir Francis, for he shall pay for a licence of alienation if the lands be holden in chief; and they themselves in pleading the uses, say virtute cujus the said Sir Francis was seized in his demesne as of freehold for his life, the remainder thereof, &c. Although this condition be tyed to nature, and rests in privity, as hath been objected, and so inseparable, yet by Act of Parliament it may be transferred. Impropria-[174]-tions, frankalmoign, frankmarriage, guardianship in socage cannot be given away regularly, but by Act of Parliament they may; which vide for impropriations by the statute of 31 H. 8. Impropriations of abbies and priories dissolved, nam Parliamentum omnia potest: it may alter the nature of lands, make gavelkind discendable according to the course of the common law, and so of borough-English: attaint, error, disceit, &c. are actions which lye in privity, yet by Act of Parliament they may be transferred: and in the case of the Lord Norris, if the act of attainder had given to the Queen all actions, she might have had a writ of error: and we see by experience, that the King and his assigns have advantage of conditions annexed by abbots to their leases, and that by 31 H. 8. and our condition is not so proper or peculiar to Sir Francis, for by the words of it any other person might have tendred the ring for Sir Francis, so as it is not tyed to his person. If the proviso had been, Because it may be my son will marry without my consent, or it may be I shall have more children provided therefore, that if I tender, &c. that pretence of marriage without assent, or plurality of children, is not any parcel of the condition. And he vouched the case between Clovell and Moulton; A. sold lands to B. and it was covenanted betwixt them, that A. upon request made unto him, or his heirs, should make further assurance to B. of the said land; A. is attainted, now the covenant is suspended, for A. hath not any heir, afterwards the heir of A. is restored by Parliament, with a saving to others of all their rights, &c. B. is not aided by that saving, so as he can make request to the heir of A. &c. And he said, that the tender of the ring is well enough for time; for although all the terms were past, yet the two years were not expired: A. covenants with B. that if A. doth not levy a fine to B. of the manor of C. within two years, that then A. shall be seized of the manor of D. to the use of the said B. Now although that all the terms be past so that no fine can be levied according to the covenant, yet no use shall rise out of the said manor of D. before that the two years are fully expired: and here needs not any office by which the tender ought to be found, the commission authorizing the tender, and the return of the certificate by the commissioners is sufficient; for the whole matter in fait is become matter of record; as the execution of a writ once by the sheriff being returned, and the party grieved by the certificate shall have a traverse to it; but where a certificate is in lieu of a tryal, as of bastardy by the bishop; in case of reddition or diminution certified in a writ of error, there no traverse lyeth to it; but upon certificate of not payment of tythes, the party grieved may have a traverse: in our case here, if the subject continues possession after such certificate made, he is an intruder. The Queen [175] when she made the lease was tenant for the life of another, and afterwards by the tender of the ring, according to the proviso all the conveyance, and the estates limited by it, are dissolved, and the fee-simple vested in Sir Francis, quasi ab initio, and immediately also in the Queen by the attainder, whose estate is paramount the conveyance made by Sir Francis, which is now, as if it had never been made, and so are all the estates created by it, and then the lease made ut supra is void. As to the exception which hath been taken to the information, (indentura sua) without saying, sigillo suo sigillat', it is well enough, for so much is said in effect; for non est indentura sua, if it be not sealed, and all necessary circumstances are not to be pleaded, as the delivery of the deed, or livery upon a feoffment, for a feoffment includes livery, and a deed delivery. Gent, Baron to the same intent: Here the words of the proviso are, Tender to Sir Francis, his executors or assigns, no words of heirs, and on the part of Sir Francis, if he, or any for him: but in Dacres case, if the said John Dacres himself, and yet the Queen took advantage of such a tender. Manwood Chief Baron to the same intent. As to the exception to the information, scil. per indenturam suam, without saying sigillo suo sigillat'; for if the indenture was not sealed, then it was not any deed, and then no covenant, and then no use, and then no condition, &c. But I conceive, that the information is good enough, for covenants by indenture include sealing and delivery, and other things which are of the essence of an indenture, which need not to be pleaded, because in law presumed: but for a clear answer to it, sealing and delivery are matters in pais, therefore confessed by the demurrer: and here the defendants have pleaded quod bene & verum est, that the said Sir Francis by the said indenture, &c. covenanted, &c. and if any imperfection be in the pleading, it is now saved by the demurrer. An exception hath been taken to the Bar, because the defendants have pleaded three several leases of several parcels of the lands in question, and concluded, virtute quarum quidem concessionum, they were possessed and entred, &c. which cannot be good, because several interests and estates, but ought to have pleaded severally, scil. one lease of such land in which the intrusion is supposed, and so concluded virtute cujus, they were possessed, & sic de cæteris. and so to each interest one several conclusion: A. hath an annual rent of 10l. out of Bl. Acre, and another rent of 20l. out of, &c. and another rent of 30l. out of the same acre and takes a distress in Bl. Acre aforesaid, and avows for all the rents together, the avowry is not good, for how can the avowant have a retorn? when non constat Curiæ, how many of the cattel he took for one rent, and how many for another: as to the matter in law, first, if this condition doth extend to the estate of Sir Francis, nihil habet quæstionis; for by [176] the performance of the condition Sir Francis is in statu quo prius, and so all the estates limited by the said indenture quite plucked up by the root. As to the condition, I conceive that it is not knit in privity to Sir Francis, and doth not depend upon his liking or disliking: the act it self, in which is the performance of the condition, doth consist in the tender of the ring, the words preceding purporting the doubt of the proof of his son, and the bridle, &c. are his motives by which he was induced to make the condition, not to perform the condition, nor any part or parcel of the condition, or word of condition. The words of the condition are, If he himself, or any other by his appointment shall tender, &c. What privity is here? who knows who shall be his deputy to make the tender? It may be any person in the world, therefore no privity in the person who is to tender; and as to the person to whom the tender is to be made, there is no privity there, for it may be made to the nephew, his executors or administrators. Also no precise place is set down in the condition where the tender shall be, it may be in Ireland, Scotland, or in any other country, therefore the condition in all points general, and so free as an ordinary condition: but if the condition was to be performed by Sir Francis in his proper person, or by subscribing his name with his hand, or such like act, then it had been otherwise. The case of Littleton 76. A feoffment in fee is made upon condition, that if the feoffee pay to the feoffor such a day 10l. then the feoffee shall have the land to him and his heirs for ever, and before the day the feoffee makes a feoffment over upon a condition, the second feoffee tenders the mony, it is a good tender, and yet the words of the condition do not extend so far, but only to the first feoffee, who was privy to the condition; so where the payment is to be made on the part of the feoffor, and he dyes before the day, tender by the heir is good; and here this is a general condition, and therefore may be performed generally without being restrained to any person for the performance of it: and here, we are in an Act of Parliament, quod omnia potest, 32 H. 8. gave to assigns of the reversion which always before were fixed in privity. Monks dead persons in law, by Act of Parliament made capable of purchase and inheritance; gavelkind and borough-English made discendable at the common law, which the King could not do: an alien born is made denizen by the King, by which he may purchase, but yet not inherit: but an Act of Parliament may make him heritable; corruption of blood the King cannot take off, but it ought to be purged by Act of Parliament. As to the statute of 29 Eliz. it hath made the conveyance void as hath been objected; for the terms within the two years limited by the statute are past, and then the condition is gone, as against intail upon con-[177]-dition, if the intail be spent the condition is gone: but I conceive, that until the two years be fully expired, the estates limited by the conveyance continue, and the condition also. The words of the said statute are (shall within two years after the last day of this session, &c. openly shew and bring forth into the Queens Court of Exchequer, his conveyance, and there in the term time in open Court, shall offer and exhibit the same;) these words shew that the parties ought to shew the conveyance within two years, but doth not speak of any term, and in the other clause it speaks of term, but not of two years; so the time in which it ought to be shewed is two years, but the time of the inrollment might be in the term after the two years well enough? for there are two two times in the statute, the one to shew the conveyance, the other for the inrollment of it, and two things are to be done, shewing and inrollment, and two times answerable to them, two years, and term-time. And he took it for a general rule, that time once expressed, shall not be afterwards by implication abridged. And if by your construction you make the time to end with the term, you abridge the time by a month at least, which was expressed before, two years. And for the reasonable construction of times, vide 28 H. 8. Dyer 44 Boulds case. If it fortune Joan Moll' to decease before the feast of, &c. without issue male of her body then living, &c. this word (then) shall be referred to the feast, and not to the time of the death of the party: for (as the reason of the case is) where the intent of the parties is to have continuance in the thing, the thing which they would have continue to the most extream time as may be: and if lands be given to one and the heirs males of his body begotten, and if he dye without heirs of his body, then it shall remain over; by this implication (if he dyes without heirs of his body) the donee shall not have general tail, but it shall be intended such heirs to whom it was limited before. And in our case here, there are some weeks between the ends of the terms, and the end of the two years, and those weeks shall not be utterly void, for in these weeks after the end of the terms, those of the Chancery shall take conusance of deeds: and here in our case, the party was only to shew the deed, which might have been done at any time after the terms, so as it be within the two years; if one be bound with condition, that if within two years he pays the Queens silver upon a fine to be levied, and then and there in term time ingross the same, if he pay the Queens silver within the two years, he hath saved his bond, although that the fine be not ingrossed until a term after the two years: so if one be bound to acknowledge a deed in the Chancery within two years, and there in the term-time to inroll the same, if he do ac-[178]-knowledge it within two years, it is sufficient, and he may inroll it afterwards: so in our case, the estates continuing, and the condition also till the two years are fully expired, therefore the condition is well performed; for the estate continues defeazable by the condition, because within the two years, and to abridge time is a violent thing. And now Sir Francis is alive, so as the power of the tender of the power of the King continueth: and I conceive, that the certificate is sufficient without any office, and the party grieved may have traverse to it: and I hold clearly, that as this case is office cannot be found, office properly is to be found of things in pais which happen before the office, as the nonage of an heir, or of an alien born, or of a villain; here to entitle the King an office is necessary to find things which have hapned before; and without doubt this certificate is traversable, as the certificate of the Bishop of Recusancy; and also the certificate of the Commissioners of Sewers, and here those who are to certifie, are to certifie a thing done by themselves, and therefore there needs not any office, because they do it virtute commissionis. If a commission be awarded to take a surrender of the bishoprick of N. or of a pentioner &c. there needs not any office to find it; and in the time of King Hen. 8 divers abbots surrendred their possessions to him, of which no office was found. And now for conclusion; the Queen comes in paramount her first estate which she had pur auter voy, scil. by attainder, and now she hath it by the condition, and so paramount the title under which the defendants claim: and afterwards judgment was given for the Queen.

CCLXXVII. The Scholars of All Souls and Tamworths Case.

This Case is Reported in the first Part of Leonard.

In a writ of right by the Colledge of All Souls in Oxon against Tamworth, the writ was, Quod clamat tenere de nobis in liberam, puram & perpetuam elemosinam. And exception was taken to it, because it ought to be liberam elemosinam, without puram & perpetuam. Also it ought to be with a double ee, and not elemosinam, sed non allocatur; for as to the first exception it is but surplusage, and as to the other, it is the common course. Another exception was taken to the writ, because that the words are, Quod clamat esse jus & hæreditat' sua, without saying in jure collegij. Anderson, The writ is good enough. If a parson pleads that he is seized, he shall say in jure ecclesiæ, for he hath two capacities, and without those words he shall be intended to be seized in his [179] own right: but if an abbot plead that he was seized he needs not such words, for that he hath not any other capacity: and so of dean and chapter, mayor and commonalty, and afterwards the writ was awarded good, and that the tenant should answer over, vide Liber Entries, 236, 237. It was also moved, if the colledge should count of his seisin within 30 years, because that the corporation never dyes, and then if he count upon his own possession: and it was holden, that if the warden of the colledge that now is, was ever seised, he ought to count upon a seisin within 30 years: but upon the seisin of his predecessor he ought to count of a seisin within 60 years, as another common person: for the change of the head, if such seisin, is as the dying seized, and descent of a common person.

CCLXXVIII. WOOD AND CHIVERS CASE.

In ejectione firmæ between Wood and Chivers, the case was, that the Bishop of Salisbury let the same Chivers the manor of Lanington for 80 years for 40l. rent, payable at four usual feasts, upon condition that if the rent be behind by the space of three months after any of the feasts in which, &c., then a re-entry: the bishop dyed, after confirmation, J. S. was created bishop, who granted to R. the office of receiver of all his revenues, &c. exercend' per se vel deputat. suum; and afterwards the bishop made a special letter of attorney to the said R. to demand the rent, and if it were behind to re-enter: R. at the last day of the three months came to the capital messuage of the said manor, an hour before the setting of the sun; for to demand the rent due at midsummer then last past, but none was there on the part of Chivers the lessee to pay the rent, for which R. left his servant in the hall of the said messuage, commanding him to stay there, and if any came to pay the said rent, that he give to him notice thereof, and afterwards he went out of the same house, and walked in a lane which was within the gate of the house, and did not return into the house until the sun was set, and then he returned, and because the rent had not been paid, he digged a clod of the land in the name of the bishop, and so re-entred: and afterwards the bishop let the said manor to W. for three years by deed, signed and sealed; and because Chivers continued his possession notwithstanding the re-entry, he made also a letter of attorney to M. to enter into the said manor in the name of the bishop, and to deliver the said deed of the said lease to the said W. upon [180] the land, as his deed and these two deeds the bishop in his chamber delivered to the said W. but not as his deed: but he said unto him, Here is the lease, and a letter of attorney to M. and he shall enter in my name, and deliver to you the deed of his upon the land, as my deed upon the land: whereupon he took the two deeds, and delivered them over to M. who by force thereof entred upon the land, &c. An exception was made, because it doth not appear here that the bishop delivered the letter of attorney to M. himself, nor to the use of M. and then it may be taken, that the deed of letter of attorney was delivered to M. to keep only, and not as his deed. But that exception was now allowed: for it was holden that the livery in the manor was good enough, and so the letter of attorney sufficient; for in all deeds of feoffments in which letters of attorney are contained, the livery of the deed is to the feoffee only, and no mention made of any delivery to the attorney, for by such letter of attorney no interest is to pass, but only an authority. And note, it was resolved by all the justices, that in the computation of these three months there ought to be allowed to every month 28 days: and now we are to see if this rent be well demanded, because the demand was made an hour before sun-setting, and then the party went out, and walked in the lane till the setting of the sun, without any other demand: and it was moved that this walking in the lane, which was not a common high-way, but a private way, and that the house of the said farm was of the one side of the lane, and the farm-land on the other, and so the land parcel of the farm, and then his walking there is a continuance of the demand; quod Catlin concessit, was the lane a high-way, or not, for the manor is on both side. And it was agreed by all the justices, that if the lessor cometh to the land before the last hour, viz. in the morning, or in the afternoon, and demands the rent, and afterwards goes off the land, and is not there at the last instant of the day, the same is not a sufficient demand, although that return be presently after the sun is set: and by Gerrard Attorney-General, If the lessor cometh upon the land at the last day before the last instant, as in the morning, &c. and demands the rent, and continues there upon the land till the sun be set, without making any other demand, yet the demand for the manor is good enough, for his presence there is the continuance of the demand, quod fuit concessum per totam Curiam. And by Catlin, If the lessor after his demand in the morning departeth off the land, and before the last instant returneth, and stays upon the land till sun-setting, there is the continuance of a demand, without any further demand, which Wray Chief Justice concessit. And it was holden in this case, that where R. left his servant in [181] the house to stay there, and to signifie to him that if any person came to pay the rent, that that was not any continuance of the demand, for R. himself was but a servant, and he in that business could not make a servant: and Catline said, that the bishop himself might by word command his servant to demand a rent, and to make a re-entry, quod fuit concessum, but in our case R. had not commanded his servant to make any demand: and so here upon the whole matter is not any sufficient demand; and so Wray Chief Justice said.

CCLXXVIII. TRIN. 29 ELIZ. IN THE COMMON PLEAS.

Action upon the case was brought for these words, Thou wouldst have stoln my cloak if J. S. had not come in the way; and thou art a thief, and I will prove it. After verdict it was found for the plaintiff. It was objected in arrest of judgment, that these words were not actionable: for the first words, thou wouldst have stoln my cloak, &c. do not by law give any cause of action, and when the words subsequent, thou art a thief, are depending upon the said former words, and to be construed as spoken in respect of them, and upon that intent. But the opinion of the whole Court was to the contrary, and that the said latter words should be taken and construed in abstracto by themselves, as in gross, and not as dependant upon the former words, and afterwards judgment was given that the plaintiff should recover.

CCLXXIX. HUNGERFORD AND WATTS CASE.

Words.

Hungerford brought an action upon the case against Watts, for that the defendant had said, that the plaintiff had caused the defendant to be arrested with forged writs. It was objected, that the words were not actionable; for it might be that the writs were forged by strangers without the privity of the plaintiff, and that the plaintiff not knowing them to be forged procured the arrest. But the opinion of the Court was, that the words were actionable; for the word (caused) extends as well to the forgery as to the arrest, and so amounts to the slander of forgery.

[182] CCLXXX. MICH. 19 ELIZ. IN THE COMMON PLEAS.

Costs.

In an action upon an escape the plaintiff is nonsuited: it was holden that the defendant should not have costs. Note, the words of the statute upon an action upon the statute of 23 H. 8. for any offence or tort personal to be supposed to be done immediately to the plaintiff. Notwithstanding this action is quodam modo, an action upon the statute 1. by equity of the statute of West. 2. cap. 11. which giveth it expresly against the warden of the Fleet: yet properly it is not an action upon the statute, for in the declaration in such an action no mention is made of the statute, which see in the Book of Entries, 169, 171. and also here is not supposed any immediate personal offence or wrong to the plaintiff: and an action upon the case it is not, for then the writ ought to make mention of the escape, and that it doth not here, and yet at the common law, before the statute of Westm. 2. an action upon the case lay for an escape, and so by Dyer, Manwood, and Mounson, costs are not given in this case. And by Dyer upon nonsuit in an action upon the statute of 8 H. 6. the defendant shall not have costs, for it is not a personal wrong; for the writ is quod disseisivit, which is a real wrong.

CCLXXXI. HOLLINGSHED AND KINGS CASE.

Hollingshed brought debt against King, and declared, that King was bound to him in a recognisance in 200l. before the Mayor and Aldermen of London in interiori camera of Guildhall in London: upon which recognizance the said Hollingshed before brought a scire facias before the said mayor, &c. in exteriori camera, and there had judgment to recover; upon which recovery he had brought this action; and upon the declaration the defendant did demur in law, because that the plaintiff in the setting forth of the recognizance had not alledged, that the Mayor of London had authority by prescription or grant to take recognizances, and if he had not, then is the recognizance taken coram non Judice, and so void; and as to the statute of Westm. 2. cap. 45. the same cannot extend to recognizances taken in London, which see by the words, de his quæ recordata sunt coram cancellario Domini Regis & ejus justiciariis, qui recordum habent & in rotulis eorum irrotulantur, &c. and also at the time of the making of that statute, the City of London had not any sheriffs [183] but only bayliffs: and the statute ordains, that upon recognizance process shall go to the sheriffs, &c. therefore not to them. But the whole Court was clear to the contrary; for we well know, that they of London have a Court of Record, and every Court of Record hath authority incident to it to take recognizances for all things which do concern the jurisdiction of that Court, and which arise by reason of the matters there depending. Another matter was objected, for that the recognizance was taken in interiori camera, but the Court was holden in exteriori camera, therefore it was not well taken. But as to that Anderson Chief Justice said, Admit that the recognizance was not well taken, yet because that in a scire facias sued upon it, the defendant shall not take any advantage, he shall be now bound by that admittance: as if one sues a scire facias, as upon a recognizance; whereas in truth there is not any such recognizance, and the party pleads admitting such record, and thereupon judgment is given against him, the same is not void, but voidable. And Fleetwood Recorder of London, alledged many cases to prove the Courts of the King ought to take notice, that those of London have a Court of Record; for if a quo warranto issueth to the justices in eyre, it doth not belong to them of London to claim their liberties; for all the Kings Courts have notice of them: and at the last, after many motions, the better opinion of the Court was, that the plaintiff should recover; Periam aliquantum hæsitavit: and it was said by Anderson, and in a manner agreed by them all, that if dependant this demurrer here, the judgment in London upon the scire facias is reversed, yet the Court here shall proceed, and take no notice of the reversal.

Demises.

A man seized of a barn in which the tythes of certain lands have used to be inned, let the same by these words, Demise and to farm-let the barn, with all tythes belonging to the same; it was holden, that by that demise the tythes did not pass, but tythes which had usually been demised with the barn, passed by such words, as by the demise of an house, cum omnibus terris eidem pertinent', all the lands pass which have used to be demised with the said house; for the demising usually of the tythes with the barn makes the tythes belonging to the barn, but not the inning.

CCLXXXIII. HALTONS CASE.

Recognisance. Inrollment. Chancery. Attornment.

A recognizance was acknowledged before J. S. who was one of the Masters of the Chancery, and before the same was inrolled, the conusee dyed; the point was, whether at the request of the executors of the conusee it might now be inrolled: it was the opinion of all the justices, that upon the request aforesaid it might be inrolled, like as it was of a conusance of a fine taken before a Judge, which may be removed out of his hands by a certiorari, although it be not a record before that it be certified, in the speaking of that case. It was made a question, whether the Court of Chancery might help a man who purchased lands for valuable consideration, where there wanted the words (heirs) in the deed of purchase, or not; but the point was not resolved. But in that case it was agreed by all the justices, that after a fine is levied of land, that the Chancery may compel the tenant of the land to attorn: and so where an annuity or rent is granted to one for life or in fee, and the deed is executed, sealed, and delivered, but no seisin is given to the party of the rent or annuity; the Court of Chancery may decree a seisin of the rent to be given and the rent to be paid to the grantee, and that was said to have been often times decreed in the said Court of Chancery.

CCLXXXIV. MICH. 30 ELIZ. IN THE COMMON PLEAS.

Intrusion. Trespass.

Note, by Anderson Chief Justice, if one intrude upon the possession of the King, and another man entreth upon him, that he shall not have an action of trespass for that entry, for that he who is to have and maintain trespass, ought to have a possession: but in such case he hath not a possession, for every intruder shall answer to the King for his whole time, and every intrusion supposeth the possession to be in the King, which all the other justices agreed, except Periam, who doubted of it. And Rhodes Justice said, and vouched 19 E. 4. to be that he cannot in such case say in an action of trespass. Quare clausum suum fregit.

[185] CCLXXXV. MICH. 29 ELIZ. IN THE COMMON PLEAS.

Remainder. Mortgage.

Note, it was holden by Popham Chief Justice, and so said by him to have been resolved upon a special verdict in the county of Somerset, 20 Eliz. that where a lease was made unto husband and wife for their lives, the remainder to the heirs of the survivor of them, that the same was a good remainder notwithstanding the incertainty, and that in that case, after the death of the wife, he should have judgment to recover the land. But if a man be possessed of a term for 20 years in the right of his wife, and he maketh a lease thereof for 10, rendring rent to him, his executors and assigns, and dyeth, that in such case, though the wife surviveth, yet he shall not have the rent, because that she cometh in paramount the lease: but if a man be possessed of a term in the right of his wife, and mortgageth for payment of a certain sum of money at a day certain, and before the day the wife dyeth, and the husband payeth the money at the day, and then dyeth; whether his executors, or the administrators of the wife, should have the term, was not then resolved: ideo quare that case.

TRIN. 32 ELIZ. IN THE EXCHEQUER.

CCLXXXVI. BARTASE AND HINDS CASE.

Note, Manwood Chief Baron gave it for a general rule for all counsellors at law, that they did not advise any collectors of subsidies or fifteens, to exhibit bills in the Exchequer Chamber for the non-payment of subsidies, &c. for such bills should not be allowed hereafter, because they had remedy by distress: also it was holden, that if any be assessed for the fifteen which he ought to pay, or if two towns are to pay together, and the one town be taxed more than it ought to be, or had been accustomed, those which are grieved by such sesment may have a commission out of the Exchequer, which is called ad æqualiter taxand'; and that was put in ure in a case between Bartase and Hind, where one of them was lord of the town of Little Marloe, and the other of Hedford: and it was also holden, that fifteens are to be levied of goods and chattels properly, and one township sometimes is richer than another, and therefore it is not reason that they pay their fifteen always according to the same proportion; but by Clark Baron, where the custom hath been that the fifteen should be taxed according to the quantity of acres, there the rate and purport shall be always one, whosoever holds the land, and as to the commission ad æqualiter taxand', Manwood and Fan-[186]-shaw said, that they could shew above twenty presidents of it.

Taylor was outlawed in debt, and a supersedeas of record was delivered to the sheriff before the awarding of the exigent: it was holden that the party should avoid the same by plea; then it was moved, if the plea should be pleaded by attorney, or in person: to which it was said by Manwood, that where matter in fait is pleaded in avoidance of an outlawry, it ought to be pleaded in person, but matter of record by attorney. Hill. 20 Eliz. Rot. 371. Giles Hill seized of a close of pasture called Pitmonde, and of Broome Acre, two other closes in his demesne as of fee; and so seized the said Giles, and Agatha his wife, and Robert their son, and B. his wife, by indenture leased the same Broome Acre, and the said other two closes to W. Hutchin and B. and his wife for 90 years, si quis eorum tam diu vixerit reddendo inde annuatim prædicto egidio, & uxori ejus, & hæredibus ipsius egidij, viz. pro Broome Acre 3s. 4d. & pro una clausura 10s. & pro altera 20s. ad quatuor anni terminos, with clause of re-entry, if any part or parcel of the said rent be behind, &c. Giles and Agatha dyed: the son sold the reversion of Broome Acre 12 Febr. 12 Eliz. by deed indented, rendring rent to Smith and Heale; the rent of Broome Acree is behind, Smith and Heale enter, and lease the same to Reynolds for three years, who being ejected, brings ejectione firmæ and judgment was given for him, for that they are several reservations, and several conditions: and a difference was taken between this and Winters case; for in Winters case [188] the rent reserved originally is entire; but in this case the rent is originally several; and also in Winters case the condition was, that if any part of the rent be behind, that the lessor should re-enter into the whole. Note that the rent reserved for Broome Acre was 3s. 4d. and the condition was, si contingat prædict' reddit', ou ascun parcel de ceo to be behind in part, or in all, by one month after any feast, &c. in quo solvi debuit, quod tunc bene licebit præfat' egidio, &c. in omnia & singula præmissa superius specificat' re-entrare; et nomine, that pro 10 denariis pro Broome Acre pro uno quarterio anni aretro existent, the vendees of the reversion did enter.

Leases.

Note by Dyer and Manwood Justices, A. leaseth to B. for years, the remainder to the right heirs of the said B. and makes livery accordingly, that the said remainder is void, because that there is not any person in esse who can take presently by the livery, and every livery ought to have its operation presently: but where a lease is made to B. for life, the remainder to his right heirs, that he hath a fee executed, and it shall not be in abeyance; and judgment was given accordingly.

CCXCIV. Hil. 23 Eliz. In the Common Pleas.

The case was, A man made a lease of a garden, containing three roods of land, the lessee is ousted, and he brought ejectione firmæ, and declared, that he was ejected of three roods of land: and by Rhodes Serjeant, The declaration shall not be intended that the plaintiff was ejected out of the garden of which the lease was made, which Dyer granted; for gardinum is a thing which ought to be demanded by the same name in all præcipes: and this action of ejectione firmæ is higher than an action of trespass; and the plaintiff if he recover shall be put into possession by it. Mead and Windham held the contrary; and they agreed, that in all real actions a garden shall be demanded by the name of gardinum. But this action of ejectione firmæ is in the nature of trespass, and it is in the election of the party to declare, as he doth, or for to declare of the ejectment of a garden: for a garden may at one time be used for a garden, and at another time for plough-land: but they conceived the better course to be, and the better order of pleading to have been, if the plaintiff had declared, that he was ejected of a garden containing three roods of land, as in the lease it is specified, vide 22 E. 4. 13. Assise of a garden, vide Cook 11 Part, Savells case. Ejectione firmæ of a close vocat' Leedes, containing three roods, a rule that such action lyeth not of a close, although it hath a certain name, but it [189] ought to be of so many acres, and of what nature every acre is.

CCXCV. Mich. 19 Eliz. In the Common Pleas.

An action of debt was brought by an administrator, who declared, that the administration was committed unto him by the Archbishop of Canterbury: it was holden, that in such case he needed not to declare ratione prærogativæ suæ; or that the intestate had bona notabilia in divers diocesses; for if the intestate had not goods in divers diocesses, the same shall come and be shewed on the other side; and then the plaintiff shall shew the same in certain, and to that purpose divers presidents were shewed to the Court by Sandbege and Best, principal Clerks of the Court; and the same was also affirmed by the Prothonotaries of the Court of Common Pleas.

CCXCVI. Mich. 19 Eliz. In the Kings Bench.

In an action upon the case, the plaintiff declared upon trover and conversion to his use; it was pleaded by Plowden, that the defendant before the action brought, had lawfully sold the goods, whereof, &c. and he demanded judgment of the action: as if one hath goods by trover, and bails them over before any action brought against him, detinue doth not lye against him, which Wray Chief Justice concessit, as to the detinue: but where such a person, who hath goods by trover, bails them quibusdam ignotis, such an action will lye against him.

Retorn of the Sheriff.

In a writ of dower the demandant recovered by default, and the sheriff took an enquest de officio, by which it was found that the husband did not dye seized prout eis constare poterit; and that inquisition is retorned by the sheriff, and filed: it was moved by Mead, that the office and inquisition was not good, for the office ought to have expresly found, that the husband dyed seized, or not, and not ambiguously as it doth here, prout eis constare poterit, and therefore by the award of the Court, the retorn was taken off the file because it was insufficient, and a writ de novo awarded.

A. is bound to B. upon condition to stand to the arbitrement of certain persons, who award that B. shall make a release to A. of all actions, debts, duties, and demands at the request of A. and afterwards A. comes to B. and requires him to make him a release; who said to him, that he was unlearned, and that he would go to one to make it, and the next day after the request he seals and delivers it to A. who accepts of it: it was holden by Windham and Mead, that notwithstanding that acceptance, the obligation was forfeited; for they said, that presently after request, he ought to have done it in the speediest manner that might be. Grants of the King.

Note in the Common Pleas in a case between the Dean and Chapter of Christ Church in Oxford and Parott; it was holden by the justices, that if the King grants lands unto a corporation by another name than that which they were named before, yet the land shall pass, and the letters patents shall be to them as a new incorporation, &c.

CCCI. Vernon and Sir Thomas Staveleys Case.

Discontinuance.

Tenant in tail made a lease for the life of the lessee according to the statute of 32 H. 8. and by Wray and Gawdy Justices, the same was not a discontinuance: but if tenant in tail levyeth a fine which bindeth his issue by the statute of 4 H. 7. 32 H. 8. that same is a discontinuance. Look upon the Statute of Leases, and of Fines; the words in the former are, scil. Such fines shall be good and effectual in the law; but in the other, scil. Such fines shall be a bar against the conusor and his heirs. And if tenant in tail after such a fine dyeth without issue, the donor cannot enter, but is put to his formedon: and as to the principal case, Dyer agreed in opinion with Wray and Gawdy.

CCCII. Milborne and the Inhabitants of Dunmowes Case.

Upon Statute of Hue and Cry.

Milborne brought an action upon the Statute of Winchester against the inhabitants within the hundred of Dunmow in the county of Essex: it was found by special verdict, that the plaintiff was robbed the 23 of April, inter horam secundam & matutinam tempore nocturno, & ante lucem ejusdem diei; and the opinion of the Court was clear, that the plaintiff should be barred, for the said statute provides for ordinary travel, as in the case of Archpole, who came to his inn after sun-set, and ante noctem in tempore diurno, which is an usual time for travellers to come to their inn; but the law doth not receive any in protection of this statute, which travel in extraordinary hours; for it is the folly of the traveller to take his journey so out of season; and the inhabitants are not bound to leave their houses, and attend the high-ways tempore nocturno: and another reason was alledged by the justices, because that the said statute appoints watch to be kept in the time of night à Festo Assensiones usq; Festum Sancti Mich. and this robbery was done the 23 of April, so out of the said time: and afterwards judgment was given against the plaintiff.

[192] CCCIII. Hil. 29 Eliz. In the Common Pleas.

Devises.

Serjeant Fenner demanded the opinion of the Court upon this case. A. devised lands to his wife for life, and afterwards to B. his son, and his heirs, when he should come to the age of 24 years, and if his wife dyed before that his said son should attain to the said age of 24 years, that then J. S. should have the said lands until the said age of the said son: A. dyed, J. S. dyed, the wife dyed, the son being within the age of 24 years; if the executors of J. S. should have the lands after the death of J. S. until the said age of the son, was the question. Anderson and Periam conceived that he should not; for this interest limited by the will to J. S. was but a possibility, which was never vested in him, and therefore could not by any means come to his executors. Rhodes and Windham doubted of it. And Fenner put the case 12 E. 2. Fitz. Condition 9. where land is mortgaged to J. S. upon payment of money to the said J. S. or his heirs, such a day, and before the said day J. S. by his will deviseth, that if the mortgagor pay the money, that then A. B. shall have them, that this devise of that possibility is good, which case all the justices denied. And Windham put the case between Welden and Elkington, 20 Eliz. Plowd. 519. where lessee for years devised his term to his wife for so many of the years of the said term as she should live; and if she dyed within the term, that then his son Francis should have the residue of the years not incurred, Francis dyed intestate, the wife dyed within the term the administrator of Francis had the residue of the term, and yet nothing was in Francis the intestate but a possibility. A lease was made to one Hayward, his wife, and one of his children, habendum to Hayward for 99 years if he so long live, and if he dye within the said term, that then the said wife should have the said term for so many of the years as should be to come at the time of the death of her husband, and if she dyed also within the said term, that then the child, party to the demise, should have the same for so many of the years of the said term as should be not expired at the time of the death of the wife. And the case of Cicell was cited Dyer 8 Eliz. 253. A lease was made to William Cecill pro termino 41 annorum si tam diu vixerit: et si obierit infra prædictum terminum, extunc Eliz. uxor prædict. Will. Cicell habebit, & tenebit omnia & singula præmissa pro residuo termini prædict. incompleti, si tam diu vixerit: et si prædict. Eliz. obierit infra terminum prædict. Tunc Willielmus Cicell the son, &c. shall have and hold it pro residuo termini prædict completi. And it was holden by Catlin and Dyer, that these remainders were void, for the term is determinable upon the death of William Cecill the father, and the residue of the [193] said term cannot remain: and by the Lord Anderson, the remainders of the term limited ut supra are utterly void; for every remainder ought to be certain, but here is no certainty; for it may be that the first possessioner of the term may live longer, so as he in the remainder cannot know what he shall have. And such was also the opinion of Rhodes. And he put the case between Gravenor and Parker, 3 & 4 Phil. & Ma. Dyer 150. A lease was made to A. for life by indenture, et provisum fuit by the same indenture, that if the lessee dyed within the term of sixty years then next ensuing, that then his executors should have in right of the lessee so many of the years as should amount to the number of sixty years, to be accounted from the date of the indenture; and it was holden, that that secondary interest to the executors was void, and that the words concerning the same did sound in covenant.

CCCIV. Trin. 31 Eliz. In the Common Pleas.

Executors Action.

The case was, A. made B. and C. his executors, they took upon them the charge of the administration, and afterwards B. dyed; and now an action of debt was brought against the surviving executor, and the executor of the other executor, and the writ was abated, because against the surviving executor it ought only to be brought.

CCCVIII. MOUNTNEY AND ANDREWS CASE.

In a scire facias by Mountney against Andrews of Grays-Inn, upon a judgment in debt, the defendant pleaded, that heretofore a fieri facias, at the suit of the now plaintiff, issued to the Sheriff of Leicester, by force of which the said sheriff took divers sheep of the defendants, and that as yet he doth detain and keep them. It was holden by the whole Court to be a good plea, although he did not say, that the writ was retorned; for the execution is lawful notwithstanding that, and the plaintiff hath his remedy against the sheriff.

HIL. 29 ELIZ. IN THE COMMON PLEAS.

CCCIX. DAWBNEY AND GORES CASE.

Between Dawbney plaintiff and Gore and Gon defendants, in a writ of disceit, in arrest of judgment it was moved, that two are accountable to one, and the one of them accounts without the other, that that is not any account, and then no account can be assigned in that. As to that, it was said by Popham Attorney General, that notwithstanding that one be not compellable to account without his companion, and by way of action of account, the one shall not account without the other, [195] unless the process be determined against him, and then he who appeareth hath accounted and the other against whom the process is determined, hath purchased his charter of pardon, the account made by his companion shall bind him. Vide inde 41 E. 3. 13. Yet if one of the accomptants will account willingly, the same is a good account: and in account, if one confesseth, and the other pleadeth in bar, the confession of the one shall bind the other; and such was the opinion of the Court. Another matter was moved in this case, because that one Tedcastell and Swinnerton, being accountable to the said Gores and Dawbney, they have accounted to Dawbney only, and he alone hath accepted of the account, and that is not any account, therefore no desceit, but the action of account doth remain. To which it was answered by Popham, that the same was a good account, being accepted by Dawbney, and should bind the Gores; for an account is a personal thing, as an obligation, which may be released by one of the obligees. Vide 14 E. 4. 2. Where one was accountable to two, and the one of them did assign auditors, before whom the accountant is found in arrearages, and thereupon both of them brought debt upon account, and well: and so none of the exceptions were allowed by the Court.

CCCX. TRIVILIANS CASE.

Devises. Tenances. Attorneys make Livery.

Tho. Trivilian tenant in tail of White Acre, Black Acre, and Green Acre, leased White Acre for years to B. and Black Acre to C. and afterwards made a feoffment of all three acres to F. and others by deed, in which deed was comprised a letter of attorney, in which he ordained Harris, and three others, his attorneys, joyntly and severally to enter in the premises, and every part thereof in the name of the whole, and possession in his name to receive, and afterwards to make livery, &c. with other ordinary and usual words; and it was expressed in the said deed of feoffment, that the feoffment should be to the intent to perform his last will: and afterwards one of the said attorneys entred into the land demised for life, and expelled the tenant for life, and made livery and seisin to the feoffees accordingly; and afterwards the said Harris, another of the attorneys, scil. one of the joynt lessees, being one of the three attorneys, made livery of the land demised for years; and after the feoffor in the time of Queen Eliz. by his last will devised, that the feoffees should be seized of the land, rents and reversion, until of the issues and profits thereof certain sums of mony should be paid to his younger sons, and dyed. And exception [196] was taken to the pleading, because it is not specially shewn, that the land devised was holden in socage. And that was holden a sufficient exception: and the Court was of opinion, that the opinion of Dyer, Whiddon, and Bendloes in 16 Eliz. was not law; for by the common law no land was devisable, but by custom, which ought to be pleaded where title is made by devise. And now by the statute all lands holden in socage are devisable, and but two parts of the land holden by knight service; and therefore he who would make title to himself by a devise, ought to shew the tenure of it, and so it was lately adjudged in the Kings Bench in Thompsons case. And by Anderson and Periam, This feoffment was well executed for the manner of it, for the letter of attorney is conjunctim & divisim ad intrandum in omnia & singula præmissa; and upon these words one attorney may make livery in one parcel of the land, and the other attorney in the other parcel, and in this case, if one of the said attorneys make livery in one part only, without medling with the residue by himself, or by any other, the same shall pass; for it is not necessary that all pass, or nothing at all.

CCCXI. THE DUTCHESS OF SUFFOLKS CASE.

Adrian Stokes and the Lady Francisca Dutchess of Suffolk his wife, brought a quare impedit against the Bishop of Exeter and others: the bishop pleaded, and demanded judgment of the writ, because he said, It appeareth by the writ, quod prædicta Francisca uxor præfati Adriani, nominatur in dicto brevi Domina Francisca Ducissa Suffolk, ubi per legem terræ eadem Francisca by her marriage betwixt the aforesaid Adrian, and her the said Frances, had lost her name of dignity, and ought to be named Francisca uxor præfati Adriani: wherefore, and because the said Frances is named Lady Dutchess of Suffolk in the said writ, therefore he demanded judgment of the writ. And afterwards the plaintiffs did discontinue their suit, and durst not proceed. Vide the case 7 E. 6. Dyer 79.

CCCXII. THE QUEEN, DUE, AND KIRBYS CASE.

The King and Queen brought a writ of disceit against Due and Kirby, and declared, that Colley was seized of certain lands in fee, and holden of the King and Queen as of their manor of Westbury, which manor is ancient demesne, and so seized, levied a fine to the said Due for conusans de droit &c. Due rendred unto Colley for life, the remainder over to Kirby in fee; Colley dyed, Kirby entred as in his remainder: Kirby pleaded, that the land is frank-fee, &c. upon which they are at issue; which issue depending, not tryed, Due dyed: it was moved that the writ should abate. But it was allowed; for this action is but trespass in its nature for to punish the said disceit: and Due had nothing in the land, but is named only because he was party to the disceit. And no land is to be recovered, but only the fine reversed.

CCCXIII. RUSSELS CASE.

Execution.

Russel was condemned in an action of debt, and after the year and day the plaintiff sued a capias ad satisfaciend' against him, and he was taken by force of it, and committed to the marshal as in execution: it was holden by the Court, that the same was a void execution, and not only avoidable by error, and therefore the defendant was discharged, for it is not at any execution; and the plaintiff may have a scire facias when he will.

PASC. 26 ELIZ. IN THE KINGS BENCH.

CCCXIV. WROTH AND CAPELLS CASE.

Between Wroth and Capell the case was, that A. was indicted upon the statute of 8 H. 6. and exception was taken to the indictment, because there were no words of freehold in it, or to prove that the party grieved had any freehold, whereof he might be disseised: but because the words of the indictment were expulit & disseisivit, which could not be true, [198] if the party expelled and disseised had not freehold, therefore the exception was not allowed, &c. Another exception was taken to the indictment, for that the words were in unum tenementum intravit, and this word tenementum is too general, and an incertain word; and therefore for that cause the party was discharged. But the indictment was further in unum tenementum, & 10 acras terræ eidem pertinent. and as to those acres he was put to answer.

CCCXV. PASC. 26 ELIZ. IN THE COMMON PLEAS.

Execution.

Note, it was agreed by the Court, and affirmed by the clarks, that if an action of debt be brought upon an obligation against two upon one joynt præcipe, and the plaintiff hath judgment to recover, that one joynt execution ought to be sued against them both; but if the suit were by original and several præcipe's, execution might be sued forth against any of them.

Uses.

Before the Statute of Uses a feoffment is made to the use of a man sole, and a woman sole, and their heirs, and afterwards they inter-marry, and afterwards the Statute of Uses came: it was the opinion of the justices, that they should hold the land in such sort as they held the use, scil. by several and divided moieties; for by the said statute the possession shall be executed to the use, in such nature, condition, and quality as it was before.

CCCXVIII. SIR GERVAISE CLYFTONS CASE.

Quo Warranto.

A quo warranto was brought against Sir Gervaise Clyfton, and shewed, that the said Sir Gervaise was seised of a manor and a messuage, within which he claimed to have a court with view of frank-pledge, and other liberties, and that without any grant or authority, usurpavit libertates prædictas: that the defendant pleaded quod non usurpavit libertates prædictas infra messuagium prædict' modo & forma; and thereupon it was demurred in law, for it was said, that the defendant ought to have said Non usurpavit libertates prædictas, nec eorum aliquam, for he ought to answer singulum; and also he ought to have pleaded as well to the manor as to the messuage, for if the defendant hath holden court within any place of the manor, it is sufficient. And the case 33 H. 8. Br. Travers sans ceo 367. was cited, an information was in the Exchequer, that the defendant had bought wools of A. B. contrary to the statute, the defendant pleaded, that he had not bought of A. B. and the plea was not allowed, for he ought to have said, that he had not bought modo & forma, for if he had bought of A. B. or J. S. the same is not any matter, nor traversable, which Cook denied to be law: and he conceived also that the information upon the quo warranto is not sufficient; for by the same the defendant is charged to hold a court, and it is not shewed what court, and it may be it was a court of pypowders, turn, &c. And vide 10 E. 4. 15, 16. a quo warranto contains two things, 1. claim, 2. usurpation. And here the defendant hath answered but to the usurpation, and it hath said nothing as to the claim: and it hath been holden here, heretofore, that he ought to make answer to both. And it hath been holden in a reading upon the Statute de Quo Warranto, which is supposed to be Frowicks reading, that a quo warranto doth not lye of such liberties which do not lye in claim, as goods of felons, &c. which lyeth only in point of charter.

CCCXIX. Temps Roign Eliz.

The Prior of Bath leased his manor of A. to C. for life, rendring rent, and afterwards the priory was dissolved, the King leased the whole manor, cum pertinenciis, to Sir Walter D. kt. Dyer, The matter depends upon this point, if the demesne be severed from the services during the life of the lessee: and he conceived, that the lord cannot hold a court, if such a power be not reserved to him upon the lease. Weston, The ma-[200]-nor is in suspence during the lease, for a reversion upon an estate for life, and services in possession cannot be united to make a manor, but contrary if but parcel had been leased, quod Curia concessit. Welch, The demesnes are severed from the services for ever, as if they had been granted in fee; but here having regard to the lessor, the demesnes and services are united and made one manor; but as to the lessee, and all others, the services are in gross; and of that opinion was also Dyer. And he said, If a bishop leaseth his demesnes of his manor for life, and dyeth, the reversion shall be in his successor, and was in himself for his life in the right of his church: and if husband and wife seized of a manor in the right of his wife, lease the demesnes of the said manor for life, yet he hath the reversion in the right of his wife, and in such case it doth remain a manor; but if the husband sole had made the lease, he had gained the reversion to him, and so severed it from the manor.

A. devised that his wife should take the profits of his lands, until his daughter should come to the full age of 25 years, and if the daughter dyed within the age of 18 years, then his wife should have the land for her life, the remainder over to J. S. The daughter became of the age of 18 years, and dyed before she came of the age of 20 years; and Dyer held clearly, that the remainder was gone; for the daughter accomplished, and survived the age of 18 years: and he said that the case late depending in the Kings Bench was this, The husband devised the profits of his lands to his wife for 25 years, and that then his son should have it in tail to him, and to the heirs of his body, &c. now before the 25 years expired he hath fee, and if he hath issue, then his estate is changed into tail: but by Carus he hath both estates, scil. fee-tail, and fee-expectant.

A woman tenant in tail made a lease not warranted by the statute, took a husband, had issue and dyed; the husband being tenant by the courtesie surrendred to the issue: it was holden that he should not avoid the lease during the life of the tenant by the courtesie: but yet some held, that the surrender ought to be by deed, as a lease to A. for life, the remainder to B. for life, the remainder to C. in fee; if B. surrenders to C. it must be by deed.

CCCXXIV. Hil. 25 Eliz. In the Kings Bench.

Traverse.

In an action upon the case, the plaintiff declared upon certain corn which came to the hands of the defendant, and that he converted it, and supposed the coming to be to his hands in London. The defendant said, that he was seized of certain lands in R. in Berks, and that the plaintiff did thereof him disseise, and sowed the lands, and before severance he himself re-entred, and took away the corn, as was lawful for him to do absque hoc, that any corn came to his hands in London; and by the opinion of the whole Court, the traverse was holden to be good.

CCCXXV. Wingate and Sands Case.

Ejectione firmæ by Wingate against Sands: it was moved upon evidence, that a fine was levied, and in one term three proclamations were made, and before that the fourth proclamation was made, the term was adjourned, so as the fourth proclamation could not be made the said term: it was agreed [203] by the whole Court, that by that adjournment the fourth proclamation was not executed, but should be supplyed the next term, in which the fifth proclamation was to be made.

Trin. 29 Eliz. In the Star-Chamber.

CCCXXVI. The Lord Cromwell and Townsends Case.

Hen. Lord Cromwell exhibited a bill in the Star-Chamber against Roger Townsend Esq; for that the said Townsend in an action between James Tavernor plaintiff, and Ja. Cromwell, firmor of the said Lord Cromwell defendant in trespass, in the favour or unlawful maintenance of the said Tavernor, did procure a partial jury to be retorned. And upon the hearing of the cause, the matter given in evidence was, that the said Tavernor was a copyholder of the said Lord Cromwell, and that the said lord, pretending that the said Tavernor had forfeited copyhold, caused the said Ja. Cromwell to make an entry in the right of the said lord upon the said Tavernor, upon which entry Tavernor brought an action of trespass against the said Ja. Cromwell, in which action the parties were at issue upon the forfeiture; and before any venire facias issued, Tavernor hearing that one Steward, who was bayliff of the liberty under the Earl of Arundel, and who ought to have made the pannel, &c. was purposed to have made the said pannel not duly, viz. to have retorned in the same great gentlemen of the country, who were lords of manors in favour of the said Lord Cromwell; that he went to the said Roger Townsend, who was then one of the principal servants and agents of the said earl, and shewed unto him, that if those great persons and lords of manors be returned for the trial of the said issue, peradventure they would not so easily appear for the expedition of the said parties as gentlemen of an under-condition; and also many of them being lords of manors, and having customary tenants, and therefore not indifferent to try that issue; and prayed his order to the said Steward for the making of an indifferent pannel: upon which said conference with the said Steward for the making of an indifferent pannel, and shewing unto him that in doing and making of the same there was not convenient, nor any equal course to retorn knights, esquires, or lords, but rather such sufficient persons for the greater expedition of justice, and indifference of tryal: and afterwards the said Tavernor exhibited a petition, shewing all the special matter, and prayed him to give order for the making of an indifferent pannel for the trial of that cause; which petition was delivered to the earl by the said Townsend, in the name of the said Tavernor; upon which the said earl referred [204] the said matter, and the ordering of the same to three of his chiefest agents and counsellors, viz. Dicksey, Townsend, and Chrell, and delivered to them the book of the freeholdry within the said liberty, who according to their commission made a pannel, which was retorned, and the jury passed with the said James Cromwell in the right of the said lord: and if that intermedling of Townsend with the matter, ut supra, &c. especially his conference with the bayliff, be maintenance or not, was the question: and by Anderson and Wray it was said for law, that because the said Townsend was in a manner a servant to the said earl, who had the retorn of the writs, and one of his principal counsellors and agents, and hearing ex insinuatione of the said Tavernor the misdemeanour of the bayliff of his lord, could not do better than admonish the said bayliff of his duty, for it concerned the honour of his master, and also his inheritance in the said liberty: but if the said Townsend had been a meer stranger to the said earl, so as no such privity had been betwixt them, the same had been clearly maintenance in Townsend, as it was lately adjudged in that Court in the case of one Gifford, where the parties being at issue, and a venire facias to the sheriff to retorn a jury, a stranger wrote to one of the jurors, who was retorned in the pannel, praying him to appear at the day, and to do in that cause according to his conscience, and the same was adjudged maintenance. And afterwards upon full hearing of the cause, the said Townsend by the sentence of the Court was acquitted of any maintenance, with great allowance and approbation of many lords of the counsel there present, Bromley Cancellario tantum exclamante.

CCCXXVII. Mich. 15 & 16 Eliz. In the Common Pleas.

In a writ of partition the defendant prayed in aid, the plaintiff counterpleaded the aid, upon which issue was joyned, and found for the plaintiff: it was the opinion of the Court that it was peremptory for the defendant. And the plaintiff shall have the partition, scil. quod fiat partitio, and the reason thereof is for the delay of the plaintiff, and for the vexation of the country who are to try it; otherwise it had been if it had been adjudged against the defendant upon a demurrer.

CCCXXVIII. Mich. 21 Eliz. In the Kings Bench.

In a formedon of a manor, the tenant pleaded joynt-tenancy by fine with J. S. The demandant averred the tenant sole tenant as the writ supposed, and upon that issue was joyned, and found for the demandant: upon which a writ of error was brought; and error assigned in this, that whereas [205] upon joyntenancy pleaded by fine, the writ ought to abate without any averment by the demandant against it; the averment hath been received against the law: and by Southcote at the common law, if the tenant plead joyntenancy by deed, the writ should abate without any averment, but that was remedied by the statute of 34 E. 1. but joyntenancy by fine doth remain as it was by the common law; for he hath punishment enough in that, because by that plea, if it be false, he hath by way of conclusion given away the moiety of the land in demand to him with whom he hath pleaded joyntenancy: and the law doth not intend that he will so slightly depart with his land for the abatement of a writ: else in a præcipe quod reddat the tenant confesseth himself to be villain to a stranger, the writ shall abate, without any averment of frank-estate; for the law intends that the tenant will not enthrawl himself without cause. Wray to the same intent: But the demandant may confess and avoid the fine, as to say, that he who levied the fine was his disseisor, upon whom he hath before entred, &c. And if tenant in fee-simple be impleaded, and he saith, he is tenant for life, the remainder over to A. in fee, and prayeth in aid of A. the demandant shall not take averment, that the tenant the day of the writ brought was seized in fee. Note, that in this fine joyntenancy was pleaded but for parcel; and it was holden by Wray and Southcote, that the whole writ should abate, as in a writ against many, the misnosmer of the one shall abate the whole writ against all the defendants; and so where the demandant enters into parcel of the land in demand, if the land in demand be one entire thing, it shall abate the writ in all. In this case the demandant ought to have in his writ a foreprise of the land, parcel of the land in demand, whereof the joynt-tenancy by fine is pleaded; for this dismembring of the manor, and destruction of the land whereof the joyntenancy is pleaded, is peravail and beneath the gift whereof the formedon is conceived; and therefore in respect of the title of the demandant, it remains in right parcel of the manor, and therefore it ought to be demanded accordingly with a foreprise: but if A. gives to B. a manor, except 13 acres in tail, there if after upon any discontinuance the issue in tail is to have a formedon, in such case there needs not any foreprise, for the said 10 acres were never severed from the manor upon the gift. But if land in demand be several as 20 acres but two, this foreprise is not good, vide temps E. 1. Fitz. Br. 866. Præcipe unam bovat' terræ; except a selion, and the writ was abated, for every demand ought to be certain, but a selion is a parcel of land uncertain as to the quantity, in some places it is an acre, in some more, and in some less. Another point was, that because that the tenant hath admitted and accepted this [206] averment, scil. sole tenant as the writ supposeth; if the Court notwithstanding the admittance of the tenant ought without exception of the party ex officio abate the writ: and Wray conceived that it might, for it is a positive law: as if a woman bring an appeal of murder upon the death of her brother, and the defendant doth admit it without challenge or exception, yet the Court shall abate the appeal, 10 E. 4. 7. And vide the principal case there, non ideo puniatur dominus: and if an action be brought against an hostler upon the common custom of the realm, and in the writ he is not named (common hostler) and the defendant doth accept of such a writ without any exception unto it, yet the Court shall abate the writ ex officio, vide 38 H. 6. 30.

CCCXXIX. Mich. 21 Eliz. In the Kings Bench.

Note this case: A. makes a feoffment in fee to B. and binds himself only to warranty, without more: B. is impleaded, and voucheth A. who enters into the warranty, and loseth, so as judgment is given against B. and also to recover in value against A. who before execution dyeth: it was the opinion of the Court, that B. should have execution in value against the heir of A.

CCCXXX. Mich. 21 Eliz. In the Common Pleas.

A. seized of lands in the right of his wife for the term of the life of the wife, made a feoffment in fee to the use of his said wife for her life: in that case the wife is remitted, and it is not like Townsends case, Plowd Com. 111. for in that case the entry of the wife was not congeable, for she was tenant in tail, which estate was discontinued by the feoffment of her husband. Periam Justice cited Sidenhams case. Baron seized in the right of his wife for the term of the life of the wife. They both surrendred, and took back the land to them and a third person: and it was holden that the wife was not presently remitted; but after the death of her husband she might disagree.

CCCXXXI. Mich. 21 Eliz. In the Common Pleas.

A. B. and C. three brothers: A. hath issue and dyeth, the middle brother purchaseth land, and deviseth the same to his son in tail, and if he die without issue, that the land shall remain to the King, and lineage of the father, sc. of the middle brother, and if the son of the eldest son or the youngest brother should have the land, was the question; and it was the opinion of the Lord Dyer, that the son of the eldest brother should have it.

[207] CCCXXXII. MICH. 21 ELIZ. IN THE COMMON PLEAS.

A lease for life was made to B. the remainder to C. and D. in tail: it was holden that in this case C. and D. cannot disagree to that remainder without matter of record, for they are tenants in common; but if the remainder had been limited to them in fee, so as they took joyntly, it had been otherwise, for then by the disagreement of the one, the other shall take the whole land.

MICH. 32 ELIZ. IN THE KINGS BENCH.

CCCXXXIII. WAITE AND COOPERS CASE.

In ejectione firmæ between Waite and Cooper: it was found by verdict, that Cranmer, late Archbishop of Canterbury, was seized of the manor and borough of Southwark in the right of his bishoprick, and that the prior of Morton was seized of the house in which the ejectment is supposed, and held the same of the said archbishop as of his said manor and borough; after which, 30 H. 8. the said archbishop gave to the King the said manor and borough, with confirmation of the dean and chapter; and that the same year the said prior surrendred, by which the said King was seized, as well of the said manor and borough, as of the said house, and afterwards the King by his letters patents gave the said house, and other lands in Middlesex and Essex to Curson and Pope in fee, tenend' in libero burgagio per fidelitatem tantum, & non in capite, pro omnibus serviciis & demandis: and afterwards King Edw. 6. gave the said manor and borough to the Mayor and Commonalty of London: Curson and Pope covey the said house to Welsh in fee, who dyed without heir: all the question was, what tenure is here reserved upon the words and grant made by King Hen. 8. to Curson and Pope. It was said, it could not be a tenure in burgage, because here is not any rent reserved, which see by Littleton 162, 163, 164. And the Lord Anderson at the first very strongly insisted upon that. Another matter was, because here is reserved for all the lands and tenements but one tenure; so that if the Court should adjudge the tenure reserved to be burgage, then lands at the common law out of boroughs should be holden in burgage: also a tenure in burgage cannot be created without these words, ut de burgagio: and to that purpose Shute Justice agreed, vide Br. Tenures 94.

CCCXXXIV. FULLERS CASE.

Note, it is holden by the whole Court in Fullers case, that if one give 300l. to another to have an annuity of 50l. assured to him for 100 years, if he, his wife, and four of his children so long shall live, that this is not within the Statute of Usury: so if there had not been any condition; but care is to be taken that there be no communication of borrowing of any money before.

TRIN. 30 ELIZ. IN THE KINGS BENCH.

CCCXXXV. GOORE AND WINKFIELDS CASE.

Debt upon an obligation by Goore against Winkfield, the obligation was written in this form; Know all by these presents, that I H. Winkfield am bound to William Goore in the sum of, &c. for the payment of which sum I give full power and authority to the said Goore to keep the said sum upon the profits of the bayliwick of Swinstall from year to year, until the same be paid: to which the defendant pleaded, that the plaintiff had levied parcel of the said sum &c. and did not shew how much, and therefore the pleading was holden not good. And it was clearly agreed by the whole Court, that the plaintiff was at liberty either to bring his action upon the said obligation, or to levy the debt according to the clause aforesaid.

PASC. 26 ELIZ. IN THE KINGS BENCH.

CCCXXXVI. POWLEY AND SIERS CASE.

Powley brought debt against Sier executor of the will of one A. The defendant demanded judgment of the writ: for he said, that one B. was executor of the said A. and that the said B. constituted the said defendant his executor, so as the writ ought to have been brought against the defendant as executor of an executor, and not as immediate executor of the said A. The plaintiff replyed, that the said B. before any probate of the will, or any administration, dyed, and so maintained his writ, upon which the defendant demurred. Wray was for the writ, for although here be not any probate of the [209] will of A. or any other administration; yet when B. makes his will, and the defendant his executor, it is an acceptation in law of the administration and execution of the first will. Gawdy and Ayliff Justices, that the writ was not good. Vide 23 Eliz. Dyer 372.

MICH. 19 ELIZ. IN THE KINGS BENCH.

CCCXXXVII. TAYLORS CASE.

Taylor was outlawed in debt, where a supersedeas upon record was delivered to the sheriff before the award of the exigent. It was holden that the party should avoid the same by plea: then it was moved, if the plea should be pleaded by attorney, or in person. To which it was said by the justices, that where matter in fact is pleaded in avoiding of an outlawry, he ought to plead it in person; but matter of record by attorney, and so Ford Prothonotary said it was agreed in the case of Sir Thomas Chamberlain, 7 Eliz. and so it ought to be in the principal case here.

CCCXXXVIII. MICH. 18 ELIZ. IN THE KINGS BENCH.

Note, it was agreed for law in the Kings Bench, if lessee for years grant all his estate and interest to A. rendring rent by indenture, and for default of payment a re-entry. And the grantor demandeth the rent, and A. demands an acquittance, but the lessee for years refuseth; in such case A. may refuse to pay such rent, for the rent is to be paid in this nature without an acquittance; but contrary if lessee for years had leased parcel of his estate, rendring rent with clause of re-entry, &c.

CCCXXXIX. MICH. 18 ELIZ. IN THE KINGS BENCH.

The King seized of a manor to which an advowson is appendant, a stranger presented, and his clerk in by 6 months: it was holden, that in such case the grantee may present, for the advowson was always appendant, and the inheritance thereof passed to the grantee for it was not made dis-appendant by the usurpation, as in the case of a common person; for the King cannot be put out of possession. But the patentee shall not have quare impedit of the first disturbance, for that presentment did not pass to him, being a thing in action without mention thereof in his grant. And if the patentee brings a quare impedit of a second avoidance, he shall make his presentment by the presentment of the King, not making men-[210]-tion of the usurpation: yet if a bishop present for lops in the case of a common person, he ought to make mention of it; for that is a title to the patron.

CCCXL. Trin. 28 Eliz. In the Kings Bench Adjudged.

Note, in the case of one Manning it was adjudged, that where an infant executor sold the goods of his testator for a lesser price than they were worth, and afterwards brought an action of detinue against the vendee, upon that detinue in retardatione executionis testamenti, that the said sale was good, and should bind the executor notwithstanding his nonage.

28 Eliz. In the Chancery.

CCCXLI. The Lord Awdleys Case.

The Lord Awdley, 12 H. 7. enfeoffed Hoddy and others of certain lands in the county of Somerset, and afterwards by indenture reciting the said feoffment, and the date of it; and also that it was to the intent that his feoffees should perform his will as followeth in effect, viz. My will is, that my said feoffees shall stand seized to the use, that the said Hoddy shall receive of the profits of the lands 100l. which he had sent to the said Lord Awdley; and also stand seized to pay all his debts upon bills signed with his hand; and after the debts paid, that the said feoffees shall make estate of the said lands unto him the said Lord Awdley and Jone his wife, and to the heirs of their two bodies, with divers remainders over. The said lord had issue by the said Jone, and also had issue by a former wife a daughter, the feoffees never made any estate to the said lord and his wife: and by the opinion of divers justices and sages of the laws, that upon that matter no use was changed; for it is not any last will, but an intent. And although that the feoffees shall be seized to the use of the feoffor and his heirs, because that no consideration was, by which they should be seized to their own uses, yet the same cannot make any use unto the said lord and his wife in tail without containing an estate, for the wife is a stranger to the land: and also it cannot be a will, for the estate mentioned in the said writing, ought to have been made to the said lord and his wife, who cannot take the same by his will. This matter depended in the Chancery: and the advice of the justices being there required, they delivered their opinions, that by the said writing no use was changed nor any estate vested in the said lord and his wife: and a decree was there made accordingly, until proof be made that such an estate was made.

[211] CCCXLII. Mich. 26 Eliz. In the Kings Bench.

The case was in the Kings Bench, in debt: it was found by special verdict, that the testator, being possessed of divers goods in London, where he dyed; and also at the time of his death, the Queen being indebted unto him in the sum of 4l. 10s. she then residing at Whitehall; the archbishop as metropolitan, granted licence of administration to the Queen; and the Bishop of London afterwards granted licence of administration to J. S. The Court sent to the civilians to appear in Court, and to deliver their opinions in this case. And thereupon Lloyd, Doctor of Law, appeared and argued to this effect, viz. that in ancient times in such cases, the several Ordinaries committed several administrations for the goods in their diocess respective: in which case, the mischief was very great, for the creditor was driven to bring several actions of the administrators of the several Ordinaries: vide H. 7. 13 R. 2. Administrators 21. But afterwards upon a decree, upon a composition in such cases, the metropolitan committed the administration: he further argued, that debts cannot be said bona notabilia, for they cannot be said within or without any county or diocess, and are things transitory; and therefore called æs alienum: and he said, that the administration granted by the archbishop was void, for as archbishop he had not to intermeddle within the diocess of another, but as legatus papæ: and in the time of Hen. 2. Becket Archbishop of Canterbury was stiled legatus natus, but now that power legantine is determined, and therefore the authority to commit licences of administration in another diocess, but in case of bona notabilia is determined: and he said, that by the civil law, if a man deviseth all his goods in such a county, by that debts do not pass; and yet by especial words a man may devise his debts. Awbrey Doctor argued to the contrary; and he confessed that in ancient times every Ordinary in such cases committed licences of administration: but he denied that the prerogative which is now practised in such cases by the metropolitan was given upon any composition, but that it began by prescription: if a man in his journey dyed in another diocess, notwithstanding that he had out with him but his necessary and ordinary apparel, in such case the metropolitan committed the administration; and he said, that as he conceived, debts are bona notabilia, & secundum fictionem legis, they are local and he said, to make bona notabilia it is sufficient if the intestate have 3l. in one diocess, and 2l. in another diocess: but he said, that posito, that bona notabilia are not in the case; yet the administration granted by the metropolitan is not void until it be revoked: for although that the metropoli-[212]-tan on the right of his bishoprick, hath not to intermeddle in another diocess; yet in this case, because the Archbishop of Canterbury is a patriarch: (for in Christendom there are four great patriarchs, and eight lesser patriarchs, whereof the Archbishop of Canterbury is one), and by reason thereof he hath general jurisdiction through all England, Ireland, &c. But now by the statute, his authority is restrained. For he cannot cite any other out of other diocess by any process: but notwithstanding, he may do many great acts by himself, or his chancellor in every diocese; and he argued very much upon the prerogative of the Archbishop of Canterbury. The justices did not then deliver any opinion in this case. Quære, if letters of administration of the goods of a common person be committed to the Queen, if good. The case was adjourned. Vide Cook 5 part, Ucre and Jeffreys case, and Cook 8 part, in Sir John Needhams case for the resolution of this case.

Jones Rep. 225.

CCCXLIII. Pasc. 17 Eliz. In the Common Pleas.

A man made a lease for life, and afterwards made a lease to another for years. The Ordinary committed licences of administration to A. the tenant for life, and A. joyned in the purchase of the fee-simple of the land demised. It was holden by the justices, that the fee was executed for a moiety; for the remainder for years was not any impediment unto the execution thereof. Manwood conceived that the term was not extinct; for it is not properly a term, but as an interest of a term, which cannot be surrendred. Mounson, He hath the term in auter droit, viz. as administrator, therefore it cannot be extinct. Dyer, If an executor hath a term, and purchaseth the fee-simple, the term is determined. A woman, tenant for years, taketh a husband, who purchaseth the fee, the term there is extinct. Manwood, True there, for the husband doth an act which destroyeth the term, viz. the purchase: but if a woman, being a termor, marrieth with him in the reversion, the term continueth; for here is no act of the husband, but the act of the law. Dyer was of opinion, that the tenant for life, and the administrators should be tenants in common of the fee. The case was adjourned.

CCCXLIV. Mich. 20 Eliz. In the Common Pleas.

The case was, the husband is seized in the right of his wife of certain customary lands in fee. He and his wife by licence of the lord makes a lease for years by indenture rendring rent, have issue two daughters, the husband [213] dyeth, the wife takes another husband, and they have issue a son and a daughter, the husband and wife dye, the son is admitted to the reversion, and dyes without issue: and by Manwood, the said reversion shall descend to all the daughters, notwithstanding the half blood; for the estate for years, which is by indenture, by licence of the lord, is a demise or lease according to the order of the common law and according to the nature of the demise, the possession shall be adjudged, which possession cannot be said the possession of the copyholder, for his possession is customary, and the other is contrary; and therefore the possession of the one, shall not be the possession of the other, and so no possessio fratris in this case: but if there had been a guardian by the custom, or this lease had been made by surrender, then the sister of the half blood should not inherit: and by Mead, the case of the guardian hath been so adjudged. Mounson to the same intent. And if a copyhold descend to the son, he is not a copyholder before admittance, but he may take the profits of the lands, and punish a trespasser.

CCCXLV. MICH. 15 ELIZ. IN THE COMMON PLEAS.

The case was, A man seized of lands in fee, devised that his wife should take the profits of his lands until Mary his daughter and heir should come to the age of 16 years, and if the said Mary shall dye, that J. S. should be his heir. Manwood, The daughter after she hath attained the age of 16 years, shall have the land in tail; for devises ought to be construed according to the intent of the devisor, as near as it may be collected, but no intent shall be taken against all reason and certainty. It is certain that the daughter shall not have the fee-simple, for the same should have descended to her without any devise; and these words (if she dyed) cannot be intended a condition, for it is certain that she shall dye: but if the words had been, before the age of 16 years, that after her death J. S. should be his heir, in such case it had been a condition. And when it is said, that J. S. should be his heir, it shall be intended his collateral heir, so as the estate tail remains in the daughter. Mounson and Harper contrary. And that she should have but for life: and by Mounson, if J. S. had been a stranger to the devisee, she should take nothing. And this case was put by Barham, Serjeant, A man devised 100l. to his youngest daughter, 100l. to his middle daughter, and 100l. to his eldest daughter, and that all these sums should be levied out of the profits of his lands: and it was the better opinion of the Court, that the youngest daughter should be first paid, and then the middle, and then the eldest daughter, and that was one Coniers case.

[214] MICH. 16 ELIZ. IN THE COMMON PLEAS.

CCCXLVI. THE ARCHBISHOP OF YORKS CASE.

The case was, the King granted to the Archbishop of York the toll of corn sold in the market of Rippon; and afterwards the King granted to the Mayor and citizens of York to be discharged of toll through the whole realm; and afterward the archbishop exchanged his manor of Ripon with the King for another manor: it was moved if now the citizens of York should be discharged of toll for the grant to the archbishop was eigne to the grant to the citizens of York, to be discharged of toll in Rippon. Dyer conceived that they should not be discharged, for the King had no right; and when the King grants over the manor of Rippon, the grantee shall have the toll notwithstanding the grant made to the citizens, for the grant made to them was void, as to discharge them of toll at Rippon; for the grant to the citizens shall not take effect after the exchange, for the grant was void ab initio: but if the grant of the King to the archbishop had been but for life, then the grant afterwards made to the citizens should have taken effect after the estate for life determined: and the better opinion of the Court was, that toll should be paid.

CCCXLVII. THE BISHOP OF LONDONS CASE.

The case was, The King lord, mesne and tenant, the mesnalty is holden in chief, and the tenancy by service, the mesnalty escheats by attainder, now if the tenancy shall be holden in chief. Manwood, It hath been holden, that no tenure in capite may be, if not by the making of the King: and he said, that if before the Statute of West. 3. the tenant of the King had made a feoffment to hold of him, so that now there is lord, mesne, and tenant, and afterwards the mesnalty comes to the King by attainder, and if by the said mesnalty to the Crown, the seigniory paramount be extinct, then the tenancy is not holden in chief; but if the mesnalty be drowned in the seignory, it is otherwise. Some held, that there was a difference where the mesnalty comes to the seigniory, and where the seigniory comes to the mesnalty. Quære.

CCCXLVIII. BURGESS AND FOSTERS CASE.

In ejectione firmæ the case was, that the Dean and Chapter of Ely were seized of the manor of Sutton, whereof the place &c. is parcel demised and demisable by copy according to the custom: and that the said dean and chapter by their deed granted the stewardship of the said manor to one Adams, to execute the said office per se vel legitimum suum deputat' eis acceptabilem: after which the said Adams made a letter of deputation to one Mariot ad capiend' unam sursam redditionem of one John Whettesley and Ann his wife, & examinand' Ann' prædict. ea intentione, that the said John and Ann should take back an estate thereof for their lives, the remainder to one John Buck in fee. (Note the surrender ought to be de duobus messuagiis.) Mariot, Two several surrenders of the said husband and wife of the said two messuages, and took an estate for their lives, the remainder over to the said John Buck in fee, upon condition to pay certain moneys, &c. It was moved, that the surrender is void, and without warrant; for the warrant was ad capiend' unam sursam redditionem, and here are two several surrenders, and so the warrant is not pursued and then the surrender is void. Another matter was, because the remainder to John Buck by the words of the letter of deputation should be absolute, and without condition, and now in the execution of it is conditional, so as the conditional estate is not warranted by the deputation. But the court was clear of opinion to the contrary in both the points, that the proceedings here are sufficient, and well warranted by the deputation. Another matter was objected, because the surrender and regrant is entred into the roll of a court dated to be holden 2 Maij, and the letter of deputation bears date the 3 of June after; but as to that the Court was clear, that the mis-entry of the date of the Court should not prejudice the party, for that entry is not any matter of record, but only an escroll; and if the parties had been at issue upon the time of the surrender made, or of the court holden, the same should not be tryed by the rolls of the manor, but by the country: and the party shall give in evidence to the truth of the matter, and shall not be bound by the rolls; and according to this resolution judgment was given.

CCCXLIX. LONG AND HEMMINGS CASE.

Giles Long brought a quare impedit against the Bishop of Gloucester, Hemmings and Hadnell, Hemmings pleaded, that one Tho. Long seized of the manor of F. to which the advowson was appendant, by his deed granted the advowson unto him 17 Eliz. The incumbent pleaded the same plea; to which the plaintiff replicando said, that before the said grant, viz. 6 Eliz. the said Tho. Long granted to him the said manor, &c. and upon issue joyned, the jury found this special matter, that the said feoffment was by word, and livery and seisin was made; and afterwards the said Tho. Long granted the said advowson to the defendant; and afterwards attornment was had; and if without attornment the advowson passed with the manor, was the question. Shuttleworth argued, that the advowson passed as appendant to the demesns, for an advowson shall be more properly appendant to the demesns than to the services, for the services may be determined many ways, so cannot the demesns; for if the services be determined by escheat, &c. yet the advowson remains appendant to the demesns, and an advowson may be appendant to an acre parcel of the manor, but not to the services; and so an advowson may well pass without deed, as upon a feoffment of a manor the services pass without deed. And if a man seized of a manor with an advowson appendant, makes a feoffment of one acre parcel thereof, with the advowson, the advowson is appendant to that acre, 33 H. 6. 5. although it be not by deed. Vide contra Temps E. 1. Faits & Feoffments 115. 17 E. 3. 4. It ought to be by deed, 43 E. 3. 24. Walmsley argued to the contrary. The verdict is, that Tho. Long give not the manor but the capital messuage of F. and all other lands and tenements of the same, which words (of the same) have relation to the messuage, and therefore neither the manor of F. nor the advowson pass: and admit that all the demesns pass, yet the advowson cannot pass as appendant, for that advowson shall pass as appendant to the whole manor, and not to such, or such part of it. And by Littleton, 7 E. 4. 27. if a man holds of me three acres by 12d. and I grant the services of the third acre, the same is void; so here, there is no advowson appendant to the demesns: and he said, that in this case the advowson is appendant to the services; and although services are inheritances incorporeal, yet an advowson may be appendant to them, as one office may be appendant to another office, and one advowson to another advowson, 33 H. 8. Dyer 48. A [217] man seized of a manor, to which an advowson is appendant, enfeoffeth one by deed of one acre, parcel thereof; and also by the same deed grants the advowson, the advowson shall pass as in gross, for they are several grants, although but one deed. Another matter was, that Thomas Long enfeoffed, and here the jury have found, that Thomas Long gave in tail, &c. And he conceived that the plaintiff upon that verdict should have judgment: as in waste, the plaintiff assigns the waste in cutting down of 20 oaks, and upon not guilty, it was found that he cut down but 10, the plaintiff shall have judgment upon that verdict. The case was adjourned.

CCCL. Trin. 19 Eliz. In the Kings Bench.

The case was, Lessee for life of another bargains and sells by deed indented and enrolled, and afterwards levies a fine to the conusee, sur conusans de droit come ceo, &c. It was holden by the whole Court, that it was a forfeiture of his estate; for when the bargainee, being now tenant for the life of another, accepts a fine of a stranger sur conusans de droit, &c. that he admit the fee in him by matter of record, otherwise it is of a fine sur release. And by Manwood, If lessee for life be disseised, and levies a fine to the disseisor, sur conusans de droit, &c. the lessor shall re-enter. Quod Dyer negavit, because that the lessor at the time of the fine levied, had not any thing in the reversion, but only a right. Manwood put this case, Land is given to A. and B. and to the heirs of B. they are disseized by two, A. releaseth to one of the disseisors, now they are joyntenants but for a moiety, and the estate in the other moiety is changed into an estate for life.

CCCLI. The Queen and the Bishop of Norwich's Case.

In a quare impedit, the case was, that the title to present to the church was devolved to the Queen by lapse; the patron himself presented, and his clerk was inducted, and afterwards deprived. It was the opinion of the whole Court, that if the deprivation was without any covin, that the title of the Queen by lapse was gone.

[218] TRIN. 29 ELIZ. IN THE COMMON PLEAS.

CCCLII. ASHPOOL AND THE INHABITANTS OF EVERINGHAMS CASE.

In an action upon the Statute of Winchester of Huy and Cry, by Ashpool against the inhabitants of the hundred of Everingham: it was argued by Serjeant Shuttleworth for the hundred, and he insisted upon this, that the robbery for which the suit was brought, was committed in the night: and vide Stamford 33 & 38. If a man be robbed in the day, and the thief escape, and be not taken, the town or hundred shall answer for it: as if he should have said, if the robbery was not done in the day, the town or hundred should not answer for it: and by 11 H. 7. 5. the lord cannot distrain in the night for rent arrear, for the tenant is not bound to tender his rent in the night time. And although there are no express words in the Statute of Winchester, that huy and cry shall be made by the party robbed, yet in reason it is to be presumed that the same was intended by the statute. Vide that by these words in the statute it may be implyed, viz. that no pain as yet hath been appointed for their concealments and lachess, which (lachess) imports, that none ought to be charged in such case, but here there was a defalt, and no defalt can be where there was not notice, and all the course is, hutesiam & clamorem fecit, & notitiam inhabitantibus dedit; and also this word (concealment) amounts to as much, for none can be said to conceal that whereof he had no notice. And vide Stamford 35, 36. if the felon escape, the hundred shall answer to the party robbed, who hath made huy and cry: but the whole Court was clear, that huy and cry, or notice to the inhabitants, was not requisite by the statute; for as it was said by the Lord Anderson, it might be that the party robbed was bound, so as he could not give notice, or make huy and cry, or it may be he was killed by the thieves; and b. 28 E. 3. 11. Fresh suit is to be made from town to town, and from country to country, and that fresh suit is to be made by the inhabitants of the hundred, and not by the party robbed, for no mention is made of such fresh suit: and that will more clearly appear, if we take to the common law before the Statute of Winchester; for before the said statute, the law was, that every town and city should be guarded by the inhabitants, &c. so that if any suspected persons did resort to such town or city, he should be stayed until the next sessions; in which case he should have deliverance according as he could acquit himself: and if any town or city failed therein, and then a robbery had been done, the county should answer for it; for at their [219] own peril they were bound to guard the country: but there was some difference betwixt robberies committed in the day time, and robberies done in the night, which see 3 E. 3. so Corone 293. where a man killed another in the day, and the felon was not taken, but escaped in the night, and the town was amerced for the same, because there the adventurers came in the day time, and the felon was not taken. And as to that which is found by the verdict, that the robbery was done post occasum solis, & per lucem diurnam, the opinion of all the Justices was, that with such a robbery the hundred should be charged, for that at such time of the day travellers are commonly drawing to their lodgings. And afterwards judgment was given for the plaintiff.

PASC. 29 ELIZ. IN THE KINGS BENCH.

CCCLIII. NEALS CASE.

In a false imprisonment by Neal against the Mayor, Sheriffs, and Commonalty of the City of Norwich: the writ was directed to the coroners of the said city; and exception was taken to the writ, because it was not directed to the sheriff of the same city, but to the coroners: but the exception was disallowed by the Court, for the sheriff was part of the corporation. And also it hath been adjudged, that a sheriff cannot summon himself: the writ was holden good.

CCCLIV.

Note that in this case Francis Bunney being but tenant for life, enfeoffed one T. upon whom the said D. entred for a forfeiture.

John Grendon brought trespass for breaking of his close against Thomas Albany: and upon the pleading, the case was, that Francis Bunney was seized, and 1 Maij 20 Eliz. by deed indented enfeoffed M. H. to the use of the said Francis Bunny for the term of his life, the remainder to D. in tail, the remainder to E. in tail, the remainder over to F. in fee: in which deed of feoffment there was a proviso, that if it should happen one P. P. to dye without issue male of his body, that then it should be lawful for the said Francis Bunney at all times, during his life, by his deed indented, to be sealed and delivered in the presence of three credible witnesses, to alter, change, diminish or amplifie any use or uses limited by the said deed, or any use or uses thereof to any person or persons, and to limit after the death of the said Francis to begin: after which the said Francis Bunney 1 Aprilis, 23 Eliz. by his deed indented, did renounce, relinquish, and surrender to the said M. H. D. E. & F. all such liberty, power, and authority of revocation, which he had after the death of the said P. P. with-[220]-out issue, &c. and further did remise, release, and quit-claim to them the said condition, promise, covenant, and agreement aforesaid, and all his said power, liberty, and authority, and further granted to them and their heirs, that at all times then after, the said power, liberty, and authority should cease, and to all intents and purposes should be void. After which P. P. dyed without issue, 1 Maij 23 Eliz. after which 20 Maij 24 Eliz. the said Francis Bunney by indenture between him and the said D. sealed and delivered as abovesaid, altered the former uses, and covenanted and agreed with the said D. that from thenceforth the said M. H. and his heirs should be seized to the use of the plaintiff and his heirs. It was argued by Altham, that by that feoffment made by the said Francis Bunney to the said F. the liberty and power aforesaid was not extinct or lost, for the liberty and power was not then a thing in esse, because then P. P. was alive; and also the liberty is collateral to the land whereof the feoffment is made. 39 H. 6. 43. The son and heir apparent disseiseth his father, and hereof enfeoffeth a stranger, the father dyeth, now against his own livery the son doth not enter; but if the father dyeth, then the son shall enter; which proveth that the livery is not so violent as to destroy a future right, but that afterwards it may be well revived à fortiori, in our case where the thing pretended to be extinct is meerly collateral. 34 E. 3. Fitz. Garr. 69. In assize of common, the release of the father with warranty of the land, is no bar, because it is of another thing. 15 H. 7. 11. Cestuy que use declares by his will, that his feoffees shall sell his lands, and dyeth, the feoffees make a feoffment to the same use, yet they may sell, so as against their livery, the authority to sell remains to them. And he cited Brents case, Dyer 340. where a future use is limited to his wife that shall be, shall not be prevented by a fine or feoffment. And vide the Statute of Fraudulent Conveyances 27 Eliz. where a conveyance is made with clause of revocation, if afterwards the party makes such a conveyance, bargain, sell, or grant the said lands for money, or other good consideration paid or given, (the first conveyance not being revoked) that then such former conveyance against the last purchasors shall be void. Another matter was, admitting that the said power and liberty be not extinct by the said feoffment, if by the said indenture or renunciation, relinquishment, release, &c. it be destroyed: and he said, that a thing in esse could not be released. Litt. 105. & 4 H. 7. 10. A lease for years to begin at a day to come cannot be released before that it come in esse. 11 H. 6. 29. Br. Damages 138. In detinue, the defendant would have confessed the action, if the plaintiff would have released the damages, and the plaintiff would have so done, but could not before judgment; for before judgment the plaintiff had not interest in the damages, but [221] he was intituled to them by the judgment; so lands in ancient demesne are recovered at the common law, and execution had accordingly, and afterwards the lord reverseth the judgment, the tenant notwithstanding that release may enter, for his title which accrued to him by the reversal, was not in esse at the time of the release. And it was adjudged 23 Eliz. that where lessee for years devised his term to his wife, if she should so long live, and if she dyed within the said term, that then the residue of his term should go unto his daughter, who then should be unpreferred, and dyed, the daughter released to her mother all her right in the said land, the mother dyed within the term, that that release did not bind the daughter, for that at the time of the release she had not any title. Cook contrary: and he said, that by the feoffment the said power and title was extinct; and he well agreed the case cited before of 15 H. 7. for in such case the vendee of the feoffees shall be in by the devise, and not by the feoffees. 9 H. 7. 1. The husband makes a discontinuance of the land of his wife, and takes back an estate to him and his wife, by which his wife is remitted, they have issue, the wife dyeth, the husband shall not be tenant by the courtesie, for he hath extinguished his future right by the livery. 12 Ass. ultimo. A præcipe brought against A. who loseth the land by erronious judgment, and after execution had, enters upon the demandant, and makes a feoffment, his writ of error is gone. 38 E. 3. 16. In a scire facias to execute a fine, the plaintiff recovers, and makes a feoffment in fee, and afterwards the tenant in the scire facias by writ of error, reverseth the judgment in the scire facias, now the plaintiff in the scire facias shall not have a new scire facias. 34 H. 6. 44. A recovery against B. by false oath, and after execution had, B. enters, and makes a feoffment to a stranger, who enfeoffs him who recovers, it is a good bar in an attaint. 27 H. 8. 29. The feoffees to an use are disseised, the disseisor enfeoffeth cestuy que use, who enfeoffs a stranger, now by that feoffment his right to the use is extinct: and as to the release, the same is not properly a release, but rather a defeasance to determine the power and authority aforesaid, as if A. enfeoffeth B. with warranty, and afterwards B. covenants with A. that the said warranty shall be void, that covenant shall enure, to defeat and determin the warranty: and afterwards in the principal case, judgment was given against the plaintiff. See more of this case in Cook 1. part.

[222] TRIN. 29 ELIZ. IN THE KINGS BENCH.

CCCLV. OWEN AND MORGANS CASE.

George Owen brought a scire facias against Morgan, to have execution of a fine levied 8 Eliz. by which fine the land was given to the conusee and his heirs, and the conusee rendred the same to husband and wife, (note that the husband was the conusor,) the remainder in fee to the now demandant; (and note that the writ of covenant was between the conusee plaintiff, and the husband deforceant, without naming of the wife) and afterwards, the husband suffered a common recovery, without naming of the wife: the husband and wife dyes without issue, and now Owen, to whom the remainder in fee was limited by the fine, brought the scire facias, in bar of which the recovery was pleaded: it was argued by Serjeant Shuttleworth, that the recovery had against the husband only, was a good bar, and should bind the remainder; and he said, that the wife ought not to be named in, or party to the recovery, for nothing accrued to her by the fine, because she was not party to the writ of covenant, nor party to the conusance, and none can take by the render, who was not party to the writ of covenant, and to the conusance. Vide 30 H. 8. Fines 108. None can take the first estate by the fine, but those who are named in the writ of covenant, &c. but every stranger may take by remainder. Vide 3 E. 3. Br. Fines 114. 6 E. 2. Fines 117. 7 E. 3. Scire Facias 136. It is said by Horton, if such a fine is accepted, it is good. The case was adjourned.

CCCLVI.

A. seized of a manor, to which two parts of the advowson were appendant presents, and afterwards aliens the mannor with the appurtenances; the alienee presents, and purchaseth the third part of the advowson, and presents again one A. who was chaplain to the Duke of Rutland, and had a dispensation from the Pope 1 Eliz. before the statute was repealed, and was instituted and inducted, and afterwards accepted of a plurality, viz. another benefice, and dyed 11 Eliz. The Queen presented for lapse, and her clerk was instituted and inducted; the said lord of the manor dyed seized inter alia, and that manor was allotted to the wife of D. for her part; and he brought a quare impedit, it was moved if D. should not joyn in the quare impedit with him who had the third part, and by Walmsley he is not to joyn in it. 22 E. 4. by Brian, If an advowson des-[223]-cends to four coparceners, and they make partition to present by turns, and the third doth present when the second ought, for that time the presentment is gone, but when it comes to his turn again, he shall present; which proves that they are as several tenants, and therefore ought not to joyn, &c. It was adjourned.

TEMPS ROIGN ELIZ. IN THE KINGS BENCH.

CCCLVII. THE PRESIDENT OF CORPUS CHRISTI COLLEDGE CASE.

Note, it was holden by Cholmley Serjeant, Plowden, and many others, in the case of the President of Corpus Christi Colledge in Oxford, that if the said master or president of any such colledge, by his will deviseth any land to his colledge, and dyeth, such devise is void: for at the time when the devise should take effect, the colledge is without a head, and so not capable of such devise; for it was then an imperfect body: and so it was holden by the justices upon good advice taken thereof.

CCCLVIII. TEMPS ROIGN ELIZ. IN THE KINGS BENCH.

In a warrantia chartæ, the defendant said that the plaintiff had not any thing in parcel of the land the day of the writ brought: if in a præcipe quod reddat the tenant aliens, and afterwards vouches, the vouchee is not bound to enter into the warranty: but here in this case it may be, that at the time that the plaintiff requested the defendant to warrant, he was tenant of the land, in which case the warranty is attached, and then if ever the land be recovered against him, he shall have this writ; and of this opinion was Brown Justice: for the land which the defendant had at the time of the request, is bound by the request, but if he alieneth after the request, he shall not have the warranty.

CCCLIX. MICH. 9 ELIZ. IN THE KINGS BENCH.

A man seized of a manor, in which there are divers copyholds, and the custom there is, that if any copyholder leaseth his land above the term of one year, that he shall forfeit his copyhold. A copyholder committed such a forfeiture, and afterwards the lord leased the manor for years, and the lessee entred for the forfeiture; and Weston said that his entry was not lawful; for although that the heir may enter for a condition broken in the time of his ancestor, because he is privy in blood; yet the lessee or feoffee cannot do so, for he is a stran-[224]-ger, such a one of whom an estranger shall not take advantage. Dyer, If this forfeiture be preserved by homage, and enrolled in the Court rolls, the lessee may well afterwards enter; for by the forfeiture the copyhold estate is void and determined, as if a lease for years be made, rendring rent upon condition to cease if the rent be not paid, here presently, by the not payment, the interest of the term is determined, and of that the grantee of the reversion shall have advantage.

CCCLX. MICH. 10 ELIZ. IN THE COMMON PLEAS.

An action upon the case was brought for stopping of a way: the plaintiff declared that the Duke of Suffolk was seized of a house in D. and let the same to the plaintiff for life, and that the said Duke, and all those whose estate, &c. have used time out of mind, &c. to have a way over the land of the defendant to the park of D. to carry and recarry wood necessary for the said house, from the said park to the same house; and further declared, that the defendant obstupavit the way. It was moved by Carus, that upon that matter no action upon the case lay, because the freehold of the house is in the plaintiff, and also the freehold of the land, over which, &c. is in the defendant: but if the plaintiff, or the defendant, had but an estate for years, then an action upon the case would lye, and not an assize, and it is not material, if the plaintiff had but an estate for years in the park quod fuit concessum per totam Curiam: it was also holden, that this word obstupavit is sufficient without any more, without shewing any special matter of the stopping, as the erecting of any gate, hedge, ditch, &c. for obstupavit implyes a nusance continued, and not a personal disturbance, as forestalling, or saying to the plaintiff upon the land where, &c. that he should not go over, or use the said way, for in such case, upon such a disturbance, an action upon the case lyeth: but as to a local and real disturbance, the word obstupavit amounts to obstruxit: and although in the declaration is set down the day and year of the stopping, yet it shall not be intended that it continued but the same day; for the words of the declaration are further, by which he was disturbed of his way, and yet is, and so the continuance of the disturbance is alledged; and of that opinion was the whole Court. Leonard Prothonotary, He hath declared of a prescription, habere viam tam pedestrem, quam equestrem, pro omnibus & omnimodis carriagiis, and upon that prescription he cannot have a cart-way, for every prescription est stricti juris. Dyer, That is well observed, and I confess that the law is so; and therefore it is good to prescribe habere viam pro omnibus carriagiis, without speaking either of a horse, or a foot-way.

[225] CCCLXI.

A. enfeoffed B. to the intent that B. should convey the said land to such person as A. should sell it. A. sold it to C. to whom B. refused to convey the land; and thereupon he brought an action upon the case against B. And by Wray Chief Justice, and Gawdy Justice, here is a good consideration, for here is a trust, and that which is a good consideration in the Chancery, is in this case sufficient. Shute Justice was of a contrary opinion. And afterwards judgment was given for the plaintiff.

MICH. 29 ELIZ. IN THE COMMON PLEAS.

CCCLXII. SIR RICHARD LEWKNORS CASE.

Sir Richard Lewknor seized of Wallingford Park, made a lease thereof for years, and dyed; the lessee granted over his term to another, excepting the wood; the term expired, and an action of waste was brought against the second lessee by the coparceners, and the husband of the third coparcener, being tenant by the courtesie. Shuttlewood and Snag Serjeants, did argue, that the action would not lye in the form it was brought; and the first exception which was taken by them was, because the action was general, viz. quod fecit vastum in terris, quas Sir Roger Lewknor, pater prædict' of the plaintiff cujus hæredes ipsæ sunt præfat' defendent. demisit; and the count was, that the reversion was entailed by Parliament unto the heirs of the body of Sir Richard Lewknor, and so they conceived that the writ ought to have been special, cujus hæredes de corpore, ipsæ sunt: for they said, that although there is not any such writ in the register, yet in novo casu, novum est apponendum remedium: and therefore they compared the case to the case in Fitz. N. B. 57. viz. If land be given to husband and wife, and to the heirs of the body of the wife, and the wife hath issue and dyeth, and the husband committeth waste, the writ in that case, and the like, shall be special, and shall make special recital of the estate. And so is the case 26 H. 8. 6. where cestuy que use makes a lease, and the lessee commits waste; there the action was brought by the feoffees, containing the special matter, and it was good, although there was not any such writ in the register cujus hæredes de corpore, and we are not to devise a new form in such case, but it is sufficient to shew the specia matter to the Court. And the words of the writ are true, for they are heirs to Sir Roger Lewknor; and the count is sufficient, pursuant and agreeing to their writ; for they are heirs, although they [226] are not special heirs of the body, and so the Court was of opinion, that the writ was good notwithstanding that exception. And Anderson and Periam Justices, said, that the case is not to be compared to the case in Fitz. Nat. Brevium 57. for there he cannot shew by whose demise the tenant holdeth if he doth not shew the special conveyance, viz. that the land was given to the husband and wife, and to the heirs of the body of the wife. Nor is it like to the case of 26 H. 8. for the same cause for always the demise of the tenant ought to be specially shewed, and certainly, which it cannot be in these two cases, but by the disclosing of the title also to the reversion. Another exception was taken, because that the writ doth suppose quod tenuerunt, which, as they conceived, is to be meant, that tenuerunt joyntly; whereas in truth they were tenants in common. Walmsley contrary, because there is not any other form of writ, for there is not any writ which doth contain two tenuerunts, and the words of the writ are true, quod tenuerunt, although tenuerunt in common; but although they were not true, yet because there is no other form of writ, it is good enough: as Littleton, If a lease be made for half a year, and the lessee doth waste, yet the writ shall suppose quod tenuit ad terminum annorum, and the count shall be special: 40 E. 3. 41 E. 3. 18. If the lessee doth commit waste and granteth over his term, the writ shall be brought against the grantor, and shall suppose, quod tenet, and yet in truth, he doth not hold the land, and the writ shall not contain two tenets, and such also was the opinion of the Court. The third exception was, because that the writ was brought by the two coparceners, and the heir of the third coparcener, without naming of tenant by the courtesie: and thereupon Snag cited the case of 4 E. 3. that where a lease is made for life, the remainder for life, and the tenant for life doth waste, he in the reversion cannot have an action of waste during the life of him in the remainder: so in the like case, the heir of the third coparcener cannot have waste, because there is a mean estate for life in the tenant by the courtesie. And to prove that the tenant by the courtesie ought to joyn in the writ, he cited the case of 3 E. 3. which he had seen in the book at large, where the reversion of a tenant in dower was granted to the husband, and to the heirs of the husband, and the tenant in dower did waste, and they did joyn in the action of waste, and holden good: and so is 17 E. 3. 37. & F. N. B. 59. & 22 H. 6. 25. Walmsley contrary; for here in our case, there is nothing to be recovered by the tenant by the courtesie, for he cannot recover damages, because the disinherisin is not to him, and the term is expired, and therefore no place wasted is to be recovered, and therefore it is not like to the books which have been vouched; for in all those the tenant was in posses-[227]-sion, and the place wasted was to be recovered, which ought to go to both, according to their estates in reversion, but so it is not here; for in as much as the term is expired, the land is in the tenant by courtesie, and so he hath no cause to complain; and such also was the opinion of the whole Court, that the writ was good notwithstanding the said exception. Then concerning the principal matter in law which was whether the writ was well brought against the second lessee, or whether it ought to have been brought against the first lessee: it was argued by Shuttleworth, that it ought to have been brought against the first lessee; for when he granted over his term, excepting the trees, the exception was good, ergo, &c. For when the land upon which the trees are growing is leased out to another, the trees pass with the lease as well as the land, and the profit of them is in the lessee during the term, and therefore when he grants his term, he may well except the trees as well as the lessor might have done. And that is proved by the Statute of Marlbridge, for before that statute the lessee was not punishable for cutting down the trees, and that statute doth not alter the property of the trees, but only that the lessee should render damages if he cut them down, &c. Also the words of the writ of waste proveth the same, which are, viz. in terris, domibus, &c. sibi dimissis. And the lessee might have cut them down for reparation, and for firewood, if there were not sufficient underwood, which he could not have done, if the trees had not been excepted: and in 23 H. 8. Br. it is holden, that the excepting of the trees, is the excepting of the soil. And so is 46 E. 3. 22. where one made a lease excepting the woods, and afterwards the lessee did cut them down, and the lessor brought an action of trespass, quare vi & armis clausum fregit, &c. and it was good, notwithstanding exception was taken to it: and it is holden 12 E. 4. 8. by Fairfax & Littleton, that if the lessee cut the trees, that the lessor cannot carry them away, but he is put to his action of waste. Fenner and Walmsley Serjeants contrary: and they conceived that the lessee hath but a special property in the trees, viz. for fire-boot, plough-boot, house-boot, &c. and if he pass over the lands unto another, that he cannot reserve to himself that special property in the trees, no more than he who hath common appendant, can grant the principal, excepting and reserving the common; or grant the land excepting and reserving the common; or grant the land, excepting the foldage. The grand property of the trees doth remain in the lessor, and it is proved by 10 H. 7. 30. & 27 H. 8. 13. if tenant for life, and he in the reversion joyn in a lease, and the lessee doth waste they shall joyn in an action of waste, and the tenant for life shall recover the free-hold, and the first lessor the damages, which proves that the property of the trees is in [228] him: as to that, that he was dispunishable at the common law, that was the folly of the lessor; and although it was so at the common law, yet it is otherwise at this day; for when the statute says, that the lessor shall recover damages for the waste, that the property of the trees is in him. As the Statute of Merton, cap. 4. enacts, that if the lessor do approve part of the waste having sufficient for the commoners, and they notwithstanding that bring an assize, they shall be barred in that case, and the lord may have an action of trespass against them if they break the hedges, by force of that statute, as it hath been adjudged; for the intent of the statute was to settle the inheritance of the land approved without interruption of the commoners, and so in this case: but note, that by the Statute of Marlbridge, the lessor shall recover damages for the houses, &c. which are wasted &c. and yet a man cannot infer thereupon, that therefore the lessee hath no interest nor property in them; and such interest hath he in the trees notwithstanding the words of the statute, which is contrary to the meaning, as it seems; and therefore quære, if there be any difference betwixt them and what shall be meant by this word (property.) But the damages are given by the statute in respect of the property which the lessor is to have in reversion after the lease determined. Anderson Chief Justice, The lessor hath no greater property in the trees, than the commoner hath in the soil. Walmsley 2 H. 7. 14. & 10 H. 7. 2. The lessor may give leave to the lessee to cut the trees, and the same shall be a good plea in an action of waste, and the reason of both the books is, because the property of them is in the lessor. And to this purpose the difference is taken in 2. H. 7. betwixt gravel and trees. 42 E. 3. If a prior licence the lessee to cut trees, the same shall discharge him in a writ of waste brought by the successor; but if the lessee cutteth down the trees, and then the prior doth release unto him, the same shall not bar the successor, and so is 21 H. 6. And he cited Culpeppers case 2 Eliz. and 44 E. 3. Statham, and 40 Ass. 22. to prove that the lessor shall have the windfalls. If a stranger cutteth down trees, and the lessee bringeth an action of trespass, he shall recover but only to his loss, viz. for lopping and topping. As to that which was said, that if the lessee cut down trees, that the lessor cannot take them away, that is true, for that there is a contract of the law, that if the lessee doth cut them down, that he shall have the trees, and the lessor have treble damages for them. Also he said, that the trees are no part of the thing demised, but are as servants, and shall be for reparations. As if one hath a piscary in the land of another man, the land adjoyning is as it were a servant, viz. to dry the nets. So if one hath conduit pipes lying in the land of another, he may dig the land to mend the [229] pipes, and yet he hath no interest nor freehold. To that which was said, that by the excepting of the trees upon the land, the land upon which they stood is excepted; it is true, as a servant to the trees for their nourishment, but not otherwise: for if the lessor selleth the trees, he afterwards shall not meddle with the land, but it will be wholly in the lessor, quia sublata causa, tollitur effectus; and if the lessee tyeth a horse upon the land where the trees stood, the lessor may distrain the same for his rent, and avow as upon land within his distress and fee, and holden of him: and he said that the lessor might grant the trees, but so cannot the lessee; and therefore he said that the property is in the lessor, and not in the lessee; and if the lessor granteth them, they pass without attornment, but contrary if the lessor had but a reversion in them; and if the lessor cutteth them down, the rent shall not be apportioned, and therefore they are no part of the thing demised. For 16 E. 7. & Temps E. 1. Fitz. Waste, in two or three places it is holden, that if the waste be done sparsim in a close or ground the lessor shall recover the whole; then admit that the trees are cut down, if the exception shall be good, how shall the thing wasted be recovered, and against whom: quod nota. Anderson Chief Justice, did conceive that the exception was void, and that the action was well brought; and he said, it was a knavish and a foolish demise, and if it should be good, many mischiefs would follow, which he would not remember. Windham was of the same opinion; and he said that the lessor might have accepted them, and so take from the lessee his fire-boot, plough-boot, &c. which shall go with the land. Periam Justice agreed, that as to such a special property, none can have it but such a one who hath the land, and therefore the exception of the wood by the lessee was void: but as to the other things, perhaps, if they were apple-trees, or other fruit-trees, the exception had been good: also although the trees were not let directly, yet they are after a sort, by a mean annexed to the land. And if the action were brought against him who made the exception, he cannot plead that they were let unto him, and therefore he doubted of the exception. Rhodes Justice also said, that he doubted of the exception; and he said, that the book of 44 E. 3. is, that the lessee should have the windfalls; and did not much regard the opinion of Statham. But Anderson was of opinion that the lessor should have the windfalls. Note, the case was not at this time adjudged, but adjourned.

[230] CCCLXIII. Hil. 29 Eliz. In the Common Pleas.

A copyholder with licence of the lord made a lease for years, and afterwards he surrendred the reversion, with the rent, to the use of a stranger, who was admitted accordingly. It was moved, if here there needed any attornment, either to settle the reversion, or to create a privity. It was the opinion of Rhodes and Windham Justices, that the surrender and admittance, (ut supra) are in the nature of an attornment, or at the least do supply the want of it.

CCCLXIV. Bell and Langleys Case.

In trespass, the case was thus, that A. was lord of a manor, of which B. held Black Acre by copy of court-roll in fee according to the custom: A. made a feoffment of the said Black Acre to a stranger; B. dyed. The point was, if now the customary interest be determined against the heir of B. For it was moved, because that the feoffee had not any court, the heir of B. could not be admitted, nor the death of his ancestor presented, because but one copyholder: but all the Court held the contrary, and that the copy should bind the feoffee, and the ceremony of admittance was not necessary; for otherwise every copyholder in England might be defeated by the sole act of the lord, viz. his feoffment. But the lord by his own act, which shall be accounted his folly, hath lost his advantages, viz. fines, heriots, and such other casualties.

CCCLXV. Boxe and Mounslowes Case.

Thomas Boxe brought an action upon the case against John Mounslowe, that the defendant slandred him, in saying, that the said Thomas Boxe is a perjured knave, and that he would prove the said Thomas Boxe had forsworn himself in the Exchequer,

&c. and supposed the said words to be spoken in London 4 Feb. 28 Eliz. Et prædict' Johannes Mounslowe per Johannem Lutrich Attornatum suum venit & defendit vim & injuriam quando, &c. Et dicit quod prædict' Tho. Boxe actionem suam versus eum habere non debet; quia dicit quod prædict, Thomas Boxe being one of the collectors of the subsidies, before the speaking of the said words, viz. 27 & 28 Eliz. in Curia Scacca-[231]-rij apud Westm', did exhibit a bill against the said John Mounslowe, containing, that the said John being assessed in ten pounds in goods, the said Thomas Boxe came to him, and demanded of him sixteen shillings eight pence, which the said John Mounslowe did refuse to pay; and that demand and refusal was supposed to be in London in Breadstreet; et pro verificatione præmissorum adtunc & ibid' sacramentum corporale per barones præfat' Thomæ Boxe præstitit: the said Thomax Boxe swore the said bill in substance was true, ubi revera, the said John Mounslowe did not refuse: per quod the said John Mounslowe, postea, viz. prædict. tempore quo, &c. dixit de præfat' Thoma Boxe prædict. verba, &c. prout ei bene licuit: the plaintiff replyed, that the defendant spake the words de injuria sua propria absque causa per præfat. Johannem Mounslowe superius allegata: et hoc petit quod inquiratur per Curiam, & prædict. defendens similiter. And a venire facias was awarded to the Sheriffs of London, and it was found for the plaintiff, and damages 400l. And now it was moved in arrest of judgment, that there was no good trial, nor the issue well joyned, for the issue doth consist upon 2 points triable in several counties, viz. the oath which was in the Exchequer, and that ought to have been tryed in Middlesex; and the matter which he affirmed by the oath viz. the demand, and the refusal to pay the subsidy, and that was alledged to be in London, and is there to be tried; and the issue, viz. de injuria sua propria goeth to both, for the ubi revera will not amend the case, as Periam Justice said; and both are material: for the defendant ought to prove that the plaintiff made such oath, and also that the substance and matter of the oath was not true, for otherwise the plaintiff cannot be proved perjured. And therefore the counties here, (if they might) should have joyned in the tryal: and the opinion of the Court was against the plaintiff; for Anderson and Windham said, that if this issue could have been tryed by any one of the counties without the other, it should most properly and naturally have been tried in Middlesex, where the oath was made, for the perjury, if any were, was in the Exchequer: but they said, the issue here was ill joyned, because it did arise upon two points triable in several counties, which could not joyn; whereas the plaintiff might have taken issue upon one of them well enough, for each of them did go to the whole, and if any of them were found for the plaintiff, that he had sufficient cause to recover. Gawdy moved that it should be helped by the Statute of Jeofails, which speaks of mis-joyning of issues. Anderson, The issue here is not mis-joyned; for if the counties could joyn, the issue were good, but because that the counties cannot joyn, it cannot be well tryed; but the issue it self is well enough. Windham and Rhodes were of the same opinion; but Periam doubted it. Anderson said, that [232] if an issue tryable in one Court, be tryed in another, and judgment given upon it, it is error. And afterwards Lutrich the Attorney said, that it was awarded that they should re-plead; nota, quod mirum: for first, the statute of 32 H. 8. cap. 30. speaks of mis-joyning of process, and not mis-joyning of issues; and admit that this case is not within any of those clauses, each of them being considered by it self, yet I conceive it is contained within the substance and effect of them, being considered together. Also I conceive, it is within the meaning of both statutes, viz. 32 H. 8. cap. 30. & 18. Eliz. cap. 14. for I conceive, the meaning of both statutes was to waste delays, circuits of actions and molestations, and that the party might have his judgment notwithstanding any defect, if it were so, that notwithstanding that defect, sufficient title and cause did appear to the Court. And here the plaintiff hath sufficient cause to recover, if any of the points of the issue be found for him: for if it be found that the matter and substance of the oath be found true, which (might be tryed well enough by those in London) the plaintiff had cause to recover: wherefore I conceive that the verdict in London is good enough and effectual: and note, that Rhodes said that he was of counsel in such a case in the Kings Bench, betwixt Nevi and Dent.

CCCLXVI. Mich. 19 Eliz. In the Common Pleas.

The case was, A. granted B. a rent-charge out of his lands to commence when J. S. dyes without issue of his body; J. S. dyes having issue, and the issue dyeth without issue; Dyer said, that the grant shall not take effect, for J. S. at the time of his death had issue, and therefore the grant shall not then commence, and if he dyeth, then not at all by Manwood. And Dyer and Manwood said, if the words had been to begin when J. S. is dead without issue of his body, then such a grant should take effect, when the issue of J. S. dyes without issue, &c. And they said, that if the donee in tail hath issue, which dyeth without issue, the formedon in reverter shall suppose that the donee himself dyed with issue, for there is an interest. And there is a difference betwixt an interest and a limitation: for if I give lands to A. and B. for the term of their lives, if either of them dyeth, the survivor shall hold the whole: but if I give lands to A. for the lives of B. and C. now if B. or C. dyeth, the whole estate is determined, because it is but a limitation, and B. and C. have not any interest.

[233] CCCLXVII. Temps Roign Eliz. In the Common Pleas.

The prior of Bath let his manor of A. to C. for life, rendrint rent; and after the priory dissolved, the King let the whole manor, with the appurtenances to J. S. Dyer, The matter depends upon this point; if the demesns be severed from the services during the life of the lessee. And he conceived that the lord could not hold a court if such power were not reserved upon the lease: contrary if but parcel had been leased, quod fuit concessum. Welch, The demesns are severed from the services for ever, as if they had been granted in fee; but here, having regard to the lessor, the demesns and services are united, and make one manor: but as unto the lessee, and all others, the services are in gross: and such also was the opinion of Dyer: and he said, that if a bishop leases the demesns of his manor for life, and dyeth, the reversion shall be in his successor, and was in him in his life time in the right of his church; and if husband and wife, seized of a manor in the right of the wife, let the demesns of the said manor for life, yet he hath the reversion in the right of his wife, and in such case it remains a manor; but if the husband alone had let it, he had gained the reversion to him, and severed it from the manor.

CCCLXVIII. Trin. 33 Eliz. In the Common Pleas.

The case was, A man 30 Eliz. made A feoffment in fee to the use of himself for life, and after to the use of his first son, and his heirs: the father and the feoffees before issue, for mony, by deed gave, granted, and enfeoffed J. S. and his heirs, who had no notice of the use: the tenant for life had issue, and dyed, the issue entred. Glanvill, The use limited to the first son is destroyed; for without regress of the feoffees it cannot rise, and it is gone by the livery. Vide Plow. Com. 347. And also he put the case of the Earl of Kent, who by the release of the surviving feoffees, a dormant use was destroyed, and could not afterwards be revived. Harris, The use might rise without the entry of the feoffees; and he put a difference betwixt an use created before the statute, and created after; for in the first case they ought to enter, and if they be disabled by any Act, as in the case of Gascoign and the Earl of Kent, it shall never rise; but in the latter case all the authority and confidence is by the statute taken out of the feoffees, and the use contingent shall rise without aid of the feoffees, by the operation of the law; for the land is bound to the uses, and charged with them; as upon a recovery in a warrantia chartæ, the land of the defendant is charged pro loco & tempore; and [234] according to the common experience in conveyances for payment of the Kings debts, as in the case of Bowden and Dennis, the debtor of the King made a feoffment in fee unto the use of himself and his heirs until he should make a default of payment of such a sum to the Queen at such a day, and for default to the use of the Queen and her heirs. Cooper, There needs no entry of the feoffees; and he put the difference before put by Harris, between an use created before, and an use created after the statute; and now the feoffees have not any power to revive or destroy such uses, but are only as instruments to convey the uses, for the use is created upon the livery, and is transferred by the statute, if the person to whom the use is limited be capable thereof at the time of the limitation; and he put the case of feoffments to uses, 30 H. 8. and there is a great difference betwixt uses limited before and after the statute: for they have not such a seisin whereof they may make a feoffment. And he put the case of Cheny and Oxenbridge; Cheny let to Oxenbridge for 60 years, and afterwards enfeoffed Oxenbridge to the use of Cheny himself and his wife, for their lives, with divers remainders over; and it was adjudged in the Court of Wards, that by that feoffment the term was not extinct: and he put the case of the Lord Paget, adjudged in the Kings Bench; a feoffment was made to the use of the feoffor for life, the remainder to him whom the feoffor should name at his death in fee; the feoffor and the feoffees for good consideration levy a fine to a stranger and afterwards the feoffor names one and dyes, the party named by the feoffor shall have the land notwithstanding the fine. Beaumont, The contingent use here is utterly destroyed; and it appears by the preamble of the Act of 27 H. 8. that the makers of the said Act did not favour uses, but their intent was utterly to root out uses; and if contingent uses, which are not, nor can be executed by the statute, should stand in force, the mischief would be, that no purchasor would be secured of his purchase, but should always be in danger of a new born use, not before known. And he grounded his further argument upon the reason of Manwood and Dyer, where a man makes a feoffment in fee to the use of himself and his wife that shall be and afterwards he and his feoffees, and those in remainder make a feoffment to divers new feoffees, and unto new uses, and afterwards takes another wife and dyes; it seemed to the said 2 justices that by that feoffment ut supra the contingent use was destroyed; for when the estate which the feoffees accepted of is taken away, which is the root and foundation of the uses, which are the branches and body of the said tree, it necessarily follows that they also be taken away. And forasmuch as the feoffees by their livery are barred to enter for to recontinue the estate which should yield the said uses, they also are gone and extinguished. Yelver-[235]-ton conceived that notwithstanding the feoffment, that the use did rise in its due time according to the limitation of it. Quære, the case was not resolved but adjourned.

3 Leon. 252.

CCCLXIX. Trin. 33 Eliz. In the Common Pleas.

In a replevin, the defendant avowed for damage feasant, the plaintiff in bar of the avowry shewed, that he is inhabitant of such a town, and shewed, that every inhabitant in every messuage in the said town had used to have common in the place where, &c. Glanvill, The prescription is not good for want of capacity in the party who pretends interest, for it is not certain, but applyed to a multitude; and he put divers cases to prove the same, as 22 H. 6. 21 H. 7. 1. Mariæ, Dyer 100. The King grants a rent probis hominibus de Islington, the same is void, for they are not capable. Harris, The prescription is good; and he agreed that a confused multitude could not prescribe in matter of interest, but in an easement or discharge, as in a way to the church, and that by reason of the custom of the land, and not in their person. Vide 7 E. 4. 26. Where it is pleaded, that all the inhabitants within such a town have used to have common there, and for a township to have a way to the church, and by Danby it is good; and Littleton said it ought to be pleaded by way of usage: and 18 E. 4. 3. All the inhabitants of such a town, time out of mind, have used to have common, &c. Where a difference was taken, where the prescription is in the person, and where in the land. 15 E. 4. 29. Cooper, Inhabitants of a town may well prescribe, and he vouched Bracton 222, 223. Quando acquiritur ex longo usu sive constitutione cum pacifica possessione continua, & non interrupta ex scientia negligentia & patientia dominorum, et etiam omitti potest per negligentiam: and he vouched Britton 144. Common is obtained by long sufferance, and also may be lost by long negligence, &c. The case was adjourned.

CCCLXX. MICH. 5 JAC. IN THE COMMON PLEAS.

Tenant for life of a rent acknowledgeth a statute, and releaseth to the terr-tenant, the statute is forfeited: it was holden by Cook, and two other of the justices in Communi Banco, that the rent as to the conusee was in esse.

CCCLXXI.

It was holden by Yelverton in his reading, that if a man makes a lease for two years, and confirms the estate of the lessee for 20 years, it is a good confirmation for 20 years, because that all is but a chattel.

[236] CCCLXXII.

If 2 joyntenants are for life, and the one grants his estate for the life of his companion, it was holden to be a forfeiture; for first it is a severance of the joynture, and then a lease for the use of another.

CCCLXXIII. MICH. 5 JAC. IN THE COMMON PLEAS.

Two men were joyntly bound in an obligation, the one is principal, the other is suerty, the principal dyed, the surety took administration, and the principal having forfeited his obligation, the surety made an agreement with the creditor, and took upon him by bond to discharge the debt; in debt brought by another creditor of the intestate, upon fully administred pleaded by the administrator, it was a question, if upon shewing of the obligation, and that he had satisfied it, and contended it in his proper debt he should be relieved upon that plea. It was adjudged he should not, because by the joyning with the principal, the debt became his own debt.

CCCLXXIV.

If land be given to A. and B. for the life of C. the remainder to the right heirs of A. or B. who shall survive: it was holden, that if A. do release to B. that the remainder was destroyed. And if land be given to one in tail, and if J. S. comes to Westminster such a day, the remainder to J. S. in fee, if the estate-tail descends to two coparceners who make partition; now if J. S. come to Westminster, the fee shall not accrue, because the particular estate is not in the same plight as it was before.

CCCLXXV. MICH. 5 JAC. IN THE COMMON PLEAS.

It was resolved, that a copyholder was not within the Statute of Wills.

CCCLXXVI. MICH. 5 JAC. IN THE COMMON PLEAS.

A man makes a feoffment with warranty; if the feoffee brings a warrantia chartæ against the heir, who pleads riens per discent at the time of the voucher, and it is found for the tenant: it was holden, that the plaintiff should never after have execution of lands which after descend, for that it is peremptory for the demandant.

[237] CCCLXXVII. MICH. 5 JAC. ADJUDGE ACC'.

The Queen hath the Isle of Garnsey, and cognisance of pleas within it, for her joynture: a man within Garnsey being disturbed to present to a church which is void, brings a quare impedit in Communi Banco; it was holden in this case, that Garnsey is an island where our law runneth not; but it is otherwise of the Isle of Man, &c. and it was said, that if the King grants cognisance of pleas, a man shall not have cognisance of quare impedit, assise, redisseisin, &c.

CCCLXXVIII. MICH. 5 JAC. IN THE COMMON PLEAS.

Note, It was resolved by the justices, that if a parson takes a benefice above the value of 8l. with a dispensation, and afterwards takes a 3l. benefice, that the first benefice is void by the statute of 21 H. 8. cap. 13.

CCCLXXIX. 44 ELIZ. IN THE KINGS BENCH.

Note, It was said that it was adjudged 44 Eliz. in Banco Regis, that if lessee for life granteth his interest to his lessor, that the same shall not enure as a surrender, because there wants words of surrender, but shall enure by way of grant only.

CCCLXXX. HIL. 5 JAC. IN THE KINGS BENCH BY COOK.

It was holden by Cook Chief Justice, if a man seized in fee deviseth, that after the death of his son without issue, that J. S. shall have his lands, that in that case the son hath an estate in fee determinable, and that the remainder is good.
1 Roll. 844. Syderf. 445.

MICH. 5 JAC. IN THE KINGS BENCH.

CCCLXXXI. BALLS CASE.

A copyholder pleaded, that the custom of the manor was, that every copyholder for life might appoint in the presence of two others, that such a man should have his copyhold after his death without any surrender to his use, and that the two tenants should assess for his fine what sum they pleased, so as it was not lesser than had used to be paid, where the lord would assess a reasonable fine; and it was adjudged that it was a good custom.

[238] PASC. 6 JAC. IN THE COMMON PLEAS.

CCCLXXXII. GLASCOCKS CASE.

A copyholder alledges the custom to be, that all the tenants within such a manor in Essex, had used to cut down trees to repair their copyhold and freehold tenements within the manor, and also to sell their trees at their pleasure: and adjudged a good custom.

MICH. 1 JAC. IN THE COMMON PLEAS. ROT. 854.

CCCLXXXIII. SAPLAND AND RIDLERS CASE.

It was adjudged after long argument, that where the custom of a copyhold manor was to admit for life, and in remainder for life at any time when there is but one copyholder for life in possession: and during the minority of the heir within the age of 14 years, his guardian in soccage in his own name admits a copyholder in remainder for life; that it was a good admittance according to the custom; and he was dominus pro tempore well enough as to that purpose; although it was objected by Walmsley, that the guardian is but a servant, and not dominus; but because it was agreed that he had a lawful interest, the admittance was good: and so it was adjudged.

PASC. 3 JAC. IN THE COMMON PLEAS.

CCCLXXXIV. DUKE AND SMITHS CASE.

It was agreed, that if he in the reversion suffereth a common recovery to uses, his heir cannot plead that his father had not any thing at the time of the recovery, for he is estopped to say that his father was not tenant to the præcipe, and therefore it is a good recovery against him by way of estoppel.

CCCLXXXV. MICH. 6 JAC. IN THE KINGS BENCH.

In a writ of error brought upon a judgment given in Communi Banco in an ejectione firmæ upon a lease of a running water, it was agreed by the Court, that no livery could be made of running water, because it is fugitive; but otherwise it is of water in a standing pool, for that is certain and peramount; and of that livery ought to be with a dish of part of the water.

[239] CCCLXXXVI. DUNCOMBS CASE. IN THE COMMON PLEAS.

The grantee of a rent-charge for life acknowledgeth a statute, and afterwards he released to the terr-tenant; it was the opinion of Cook Chief Justice in Communi Banco, that the rent after the release should be put in execution upon the statute.

CCCLXXXVII. THE OPINION OF POPHAM CHIEF JUSTICE. IN THE KINGS BENCH.

It was the opinion of Popham Chief Justice, that if a man covenant to stand seized to the use of himself for life, the remainder to the use of his executors, that in that case the executors shall take to the use of their testator: but if a man covenant upon good consideration to stand seized to the use of the executors of a stranger, that the word (executors) is a word of purchase, and they shall take to their own use.

CCCLXXXVIII. MICH. 7 JAC. IN THE COMMON PLEAS.

Cook Chief Justice put this case, If the custom of a manor is, that every tenant at his death shall pay his best beast for a heriot, if a feme sole, who is tenant for life of this manor, taketh a husband, and afterwards dyeth, if the lord shall have a heriot: Dodderidge the Kings Serjeant said that he should not, because that the wife had not goods.

MICH. 7 JAC. IN THE COMMON PLEAS.

CCCLXXXIX. WARDS CASE.

An information was against Ward and his wife, for his wives not coming to the church, upon the statute of 28 & 35 Eliz. It was said by Cook Chief Justice, that the husband is chargeable for the recusancy of his wife, and he said there needed no conviction; but before an information the husband shall not be chargeable for his wife, but where he is named with the wife; and he said, that the King had a fee-simple in their lands, for he hath it to him and his heirs and successors until conformity, with satisfaction of the arrearages. Vide statut. 28 Eliz. Rastal. Tit. Corone.

CCCXC. WHEELERS CASE.

A copyhold custom is, that a woman shall have a free bench, quam diu se bene gesserit, and live chast; and she is incontinent, of which the lord hath not notice, and the lord admits her tenant: it was holden it should bind the lord, although he had not notice of the incontinency.

MICH. 5 JAC. IN THE STAR-CHAMBER.

CCCXCI. EDWARDS AND WATTONS CASE.

Note for law in the Star-Chamber, if a man write a scandalous letter unto another, and put his name to it, if the party who writ it, publisheth the same either before or after the delivery, an action upon the case lyeth against him at the common law: but if the party who writes it doth not publish it, yet he may be sued for the same in the Star-Chamber: and it was said in this case, that he who receives books which are written against the religion established in the kingdom, and shews them to others, with comments of them, he runs into a præmunire by the statute of 4 Eliz.

CCCXCII.

The case was, A. made a lease of White Acre to B. upon condition he should do no waste, in which there was a fish-pond stored with carps, pikes, and their fry; C. destroys all the fish, B. being upon the land, for which A. enters; 1. If the destruction of all the fish, and their fry, be waste within the Statute of Gloucester: it was said that it was, for they are parcel of the inheritance, as are deer within a park enclosed: but it was adjudged 29 Eliz. in Communi Banco in Moyle and Ewers case, that where a lease of a manor was, in which was a warren of conies, and the lessee destroyed the conies, that it was not waste, for they were feræ naturæ, and the land bettered by them; and such was the opinion of Walmsley Justice, although the conies were in a warren paled and enclosed with a wall; but the destroying of doves in a dove-house is waste. And it was adjudged in Sir Francis Palmers case, 9 Jac. in B. R. that although the cutting of underwood was not waste, yet the eradicating of it was waste: the other matter was, if the destruction of the fish by a stranger, the lessee being upon [241] the land were waste; it was said it was waste, for qui non vetat peccare cum possit jubet: and it was said, that if a man commit waste, or suffer another to do it, he did incur the penalty in the statute. But in this case it was said, that a condition to defeat an estate should be taken strictly: as if a custom be, that if a copyholder for waste done shall forfeit his estate, if a stranger doth the waste it is no forfeiture, for three things in law shall be taken strictly, conditions, customs, penal laws. As if the custom be, that an infant at the age of 15 may make a feoffment, he cannot make it by attorney. And it was adjudged 1 Jac. in Communi Banco in Woodleys case. So the statute of 5 E. 6. a penal law is, that a man shall not buy any victual to sell the same again: yet it was adjudged, that where a man buys meal, and makes the same into starch, and sells it, he may well justifie the sale thereof, and it is out of the statute, because it is not the same thing.

CCCXCIII. WARDS CASE.

It was adjudged in this Court, that if a mill be set upon posts, that no waste lyeth for it, and that a copyhold might be of a mill, as it was adjudged in Green and Harris's case. Also it was said, that there is a real and personal forfeiture of copyhold lands; real is not necessary to be found by the homages, as was resolved in Brocks case; but otherwise it is of a personal forfeiture: and Hil. 8 Jac. a woman copyholder built a new house upon the land, and it was agreed to be a forfeiture.

CCCXCV. RATCLIFFE AND CHAPLINS CASE.

In an ejectione firmæ between Ratcliffe and Chaplin upon not guilty pleaded, it was given in evidence, that time out of mind a custom had been used, and that proved by witnesses, that the eldest heir, be it male or female, should inherit the land; and that it appeared in the court rolls of the said manor, of which the land in question was parcel; two presidents to prove that the eldest sister ought to inherit, and that the youngest sister should have nothing in the land; the one president was 8 Eliz. and the other 18 Eliz. In the other side in disaffirmance of the custom, it was given in evidence, divers court-rolls 6 H. 4. and especially one president, that both sisters should inherit as coparceners did by the common law; notwithstanding which, the jury found for the custom in regard they upon their own knowledge knew the usage of the country, and that in divers places it had been so used in the hundred within which this manor was. But in this case it was agreed by the Court, that if the custom had been that the eldest sister only should inherit, yet by that custom the eldest aunt, or the eldest neece should not inherit the land: and so it is in the case of borough English, where the custom is, that the youngest son shall have the land, it doth not give it to the youngest uncle, for customs shall be taken strictly: and Foster Justice said, that so it was adjudged in one Totnams case: and in the argument of this case, it was said by Cook Chief Justice, that there are two pillars of custom, one the common usage; the other, that it be time out of mind; and therefore upon the evidence given to the jury, the Court enforced the parties which maintained the custom to shew presidents in the court rolls to prove the usage, and he said, that without such proof, and that it had been put in ure, although it had been deemed and reported to have been the true custom; yet the Court could not give credit to the promise by witnesses.

CCCXCVI. ARDEN AND GOADS CASE.

In an action of trespass upon the case for divers goods, the declaration was of trover and conversion of them to the defendants use: upon not guilty pleaded, they were at issue, and there an inventory of the goods was given in evidence to the jury, as the goods were apprised by upholsterers: and in this evidence another point did arise. These goods were taken in execution, and delivered to the defendant by the sheriff; and afterwards the owner of the goods against whom the execution was awarded, made a deed of gift of them to the plaintiff by these words, scil. he granted all those goods which were late put in execution. Cook Chief Justice said, that quacunque via data, that deed could not entitle the plaintiff to the goods, for it is a dilemma; for posito, that the goods were put in execution, then they did not pass; and admit that they were not put in execution, he did not grant but only those goods which were in execution, and so there is an opposition; and afterward judgment was given for the defendant.

PASC. 8 JAC. IN THE COMMON PLEAS.

CCCXCVII. THE EARL OF RUTLAND AND SPENCERS CASE.

The case was, The late Queen Elizabeth granted to the Earl of Rutland the office of parkership and constable of, &c. Habendum from the time of his full age for life, and also by the same patent she granted him the stewardship of a manor, habend' prædict' officia pro termino vitæ per deputatum suum vel deputatos suos, &c. eidem officio pertinent' in tam amplis modo & forma, &c. Volentes quod subditi nostri sint auxiliantes & assistentes to him: and after that one as steward to that court came and made proclamations, and also did the deputy of the Earl of Rutland: and thereupon the Earl of Rutland brought an action upon the case against the other: in this case three points were moved by Nicholls Serjeant, 1. If a stewardship granted by the King might be exercised by a deputy without such authority given him in his patent: and he took a difference between an office of trust and other offices, as in 28 H. 8. of a carver, &c. and 11 E. 4. 1. the office of the Chancellor of the Exchequer, and such offices cannot without special authority be assigned over, 39 H. 6. 34. Of the office of marshal per se vel sufficient' deputatum, &c. Nevills case in [244] the Commentaries. Offices of trust which are inheritances may be executed by deputy. 8 Eliz. Dy. 248. A steward may be retained by word; and he said, there is a difference between a deputy and an assignee; for an assignee can forfeit but his own estate, but a deputy shall forfeit the estate of his master, and therefore if a steward grant his office for life who hath the office in fee, the grantee shall forfeit no more than his estate for life, 2 E. 6. Br. If the under steward make admittances, it is good, and yet he is but a deputy; but if it be out of court, then it ought to be by a special custom, vide 2 Eliz. Dyer. The office of chyrographer granted for life, and exercisable by a deputy: and he said, that in these letters patents the intent shall be taken beneficially for the subject, and that for the honour of the King, if the King be not deceived in his grant. Vide 6 E. 6. Dyer 77. Dodderidge to the contrary; and he took a difference between offices of trust granted for life, and those which are granted in fee, for he who hath it but for life cannot assign them over; for the grantor did not intend that another person should have the office, unless express mention were made in the grant of assignees: but when the office is granted in fee, there is no such confidence put in the person of the grantee, for his heir shall have it, who is a person not known to the grantor. But in all cases the grantee is elected for his skill: I agree 10 E. 4. 10. he may make a deputy by special words, but then that deputy by those words cannot make a deputy: that a steward is an officer of trust, is proved, for he enters plaints in the court, and surrenders, and although he hath not a judicial place, yet he hath a ministerial place, and the lord and tenants repose their trusts in him: and it is also an office of skill. Vide 21 E. 4. 20. that the office of the keeper of a park, steward, &c. cannot be assigned without special words of assignees. And as to the case which was put by Nicholls, 8 Eliz. that one may make a steward by word, and therefore an assignee for life by word, it is a non sequitur: and he said that for another cause in the patent it self, no deputy in this case could be made; for although the words are habendum & gaudendum, &c. offic' prædict' per deputatum suum, sive deputatos suos, the same had been good if there had been no habendum before: there was an habendum before in the patent: but here are three several habendums, which are as three several grants, and the defect of the one shall not be supplyed by the other. 22 H. 6. 11. 2. Assises are maintainable for two offices, although they be by one and the self same grant: and those words (volentes, &c.) in the patent, are nothing to the purpose, for the grant it self is determinable by the body of the grant, and the clause de assistantes shall not supply that. Vide 20 H. 6. 1. Land given to two & hæredibus, with warranty, hæredibus suis. Vide 13 E. 3. Grants 63. Throgmorton and Tracies case, Plow. [245] Com. 18 H. 8. Br. Lovels case; and so in our case; the clause of assistantes makes nothing to the matter; for reddendo singula singulis it extends to no more than passed, and was granted before in the body of the grant. The second point which Dodderidge argued was, if there was a sufficient disturbance: and he held that there was not, and therefore the finding of the jury not good: and the jury hath not found the vi & armis; and he said, that when the writ is vi & armis, there ought to be some violence, and taking of something, and some actual thing is to be done. Vide F. B. 86 & 92. 43 E. 3. 20. 8 R. 2. Title Office. 48 E. 3. 25. 16 E. 4. 11. & 2 E. 3. 40. But in this case there is but a threatning at the most, but no force is used; and there the writ is ill, and there is no sufficient disturbance to maintain this action. The case was adjourned.

CCCXCVIII. Cookes Case.

In a writ of intrusit maritagio non satisfacto, it was found for the plaintiff, but no damages were assessed by the jury, and the value of the marriage was found to 50l. and now the question was, if the same might be supplyed by a writ of enquiry of damages, and prima facie the Court seemed to be of opinion it could not; for where a man may have an attaint, there no damages shall be assessed by the Court, if they be not found by jury: and the Court would advise of it; but afterwards the same term it was adjudged, that no writ of enquiry should issue forth; but a venire facias de novo was granted. Vide 44 E. 3. Thorp. acc'.

CCCXCIX.

Mountague Serjeant demanded of the justices their opinions in a case upon the Statute of 3 Jacobi of Recusants, in the behalf of the University of Oxford: the case was, If a recusant convict, to avoid the said statute, grants his patronage for years to one of his friends in trust, if the grant was void, or not within the said statute. The justices refused to deliver their opinions in this case; for they said, that this point might judicially come in question before themselves, and such they said was the answer of Hussey in 1 H. 7. in Humphrey Staffords case: when King Hen. 7. came in Banco, and demanded a question of them; but yet tacite they seemed to agree, that such a lease of the patronage was void by the said statute; and they said, that they would not have the university to be discouraged in the case, which implyed their opinions to be [246] accordingly: and 21 H. 7. was vouched, that the patronage was only matter of favour, and not valuable. And in this case Cook said, quod apertus hæreticus melior est, quam fictus Catholicus.

CCCC. GRUBHAMS CASE.

The case was this, Grubham made a lease to one by deed-poll, habendum to him and his wife, and to his daughter successive sicut scribuntur & nominantur in ordine, and afterwards dyed, his wife dyed, and if it was a good remainder to the daughter, was the question. Harris Serjeant, It was void, and not a good remainder for the incertainty. Et vide Cook 1 part, Corbets case. In all contracts and bargains there ought to be certainty: and therefore in 22 H. 6. if a feoffment be made to two, & hæredibus, it is void, although it be with warranty to them and their heirs. Vide 9 H. 6. 35. Where renunciavit totam communiam, doth not amount to a release, because it is not shewed to whom he released: and so in 29 Eliz. in Banco Regis, in Windsmore and Halbards case, where an indenture was to one habendum to him and his wife, and a third person, and it was holden that it was void by way of remainder to any of them. But the Court was of opinion in the principal case, that the daughter had a good estate in remainder, and that the case did not differ from the case in the Lord Dyer; where a lease was made by indenture to one, habendum to him, and to another sicut nominat. in charta, and that those words made the grant certain enough; and so in this case, sicut scribuntur & nominantur in ordine, shall be sicut scribuntur & nominantur in eadem charta; but they agreed, that a lease made to three, habendum successive, was not good for the incertainty.

CCCCI. PRICE AND ATMORES CASE.

In an ejectione firmæ it was agreed by the justices, where a man possessed of a term for 60 years, by his will made his wife his executrix, and devised all his term and interest to her, and if she dyed before the term ended, that the same should remain to his son and the heirs males of his body the [247] son dyed, the executrix entred, and claimed as legatee, and assigned the term over, the executor of the son entred, that his entry was not lawful, for the son had but a possibility, and no interest; for by the devise of the whole term, the whole interest was in the wife, and when it was in her, it could not remain over; otherwise if the land had been granted to her for life, and if she dyed, that it should remain as before: and note, that 25 Eliz. it was adjudged in Communi Banco, that such a possibility could not be released: and 29 Eliz. in Hammingtons case, that it could not be granted.

CCCCII. THE BISHOP OF EXETER AND SIR HENRY WALLOPS CASE.

Note in this case it was adjudged, that the King by a special proviso in the Statute of 21 H. 8. of Plurality, might give to any of his chaplains as many benefices as he pleased. But otherwise it is of a common person, for they are stinted by the statute.

MICH. 12 JAC. IN THE KINGS BENCH.

CCCCIII. GLOVER AND ARCHERS CASE.

The case was, Tenant for life made a lease for 21 years, rendring rent at Mich. and the Annunciation, or within 13 weeks of any of the said feasts: after Mich. and before the 13 weeks past, the lessor dyed; and the plaintiff his executor brought debt for the rent: it was adjudged by Cook and the other justices, that the action did not lye for the rent; for the rent being to be paid at Mich. or within 13 weeks after, the lessee hath election to pay it at any of the days, and before the last day it is not due, and when the lessor dyeth before that day, his executors have not any right to the rent, but after the death of the lessor, having but an estate for life, the rent is gone: but, if the lessor had had a fee-simple in the land, and had dyed before the last day, the heir should have had the rent, as incident to the reversion: but if the lessor had survived both days, the rent had been a thing vested in him, and his executors should have had it; but if the rent had been reserved at Mich. and if it be behind by 13 weeks, that then it should be lawful for the lessor to enter; if the lessor survive Mich. his executors shall have debt for the rent, for then the rent is due, and the 13 weeks are but a dispensation of the entry of the lessor until that time: and in this case [248] as well as where the rent is reserved at two days in the disjunctive, it is sufficient that the rent be demanded at the latter day, without demanding of it at the first day.

CCCCIV. Sir Baptist Hix and Fleetwood and Gotts Case.

The case was, Fleetwood and Gotts bargained and sold Weston Park, being 300 acres of land, to Sir Baptist Hix for 11l. for every acre which did amount to 2530l. and in the premises of the indenture of bargain and sale, it was agreed by the parties, that the said park being wood-land should be measured by a pole of 18 foot and a half: and further it was covenanted, that Fleetwood and Gotts should appoint one surveyor, and Hix another, who should measure the said park: and if it by the measure should exceed the number of acres mentioned in the indenture, that then Hix should add to them according to the proportion of 11l. for every acre, and if it wanted of the measure, then the said Fleetwood and Gotts should repay to Hix the surplusage of that mony, according to the proportion of 11l. the acre: and upon the indenture Hix brought covenant, and assigned a breach, because upon measure it wanted 70 acres; and the defendants did demur upon the declaration, because the plaintiff had not therein shewed by what measure it was measured; for they said by Shirley, that although it was agreed in the first part of the indenture, that the measure should be by a pole of 18 foot and a half, yet when they come to the covenants, there they do not speak of any measure; for which cause it shall be taken for such a measure as the statute speaks of, scil. a measure of 16 foot and a half the pole; and by such measure there wants not any part of the acres. Dodderidge contr. And he put this ground, that if certainty once appeareth in a deed, and afterwards in the same deed it is spoken indifferently, reference shall be unto the certainty which appeareth: and therefore if by an indenture lands be given to a man, & hæredibus masculis, and afterwards in the same deed it appears, it is hæredibus de corpore suo: it shall be an estate-tail, because the first words were indefinite, and the last certain, by which it appeared that he passed but an estate in tail: and 4 E. 4. 9. b. the words of a declaration was, noverint universi per præsentes nos J. S. teneri, &c. W. B. in 20l. solvendum eidem J. S. It was holden by the Court, the same did not make the obligation void, because it appeared by the first part of the obligation, that he should be bound to the plaintiff; and therefore the intent being so, the plaintiff might declare of a solvendum to himself: and the [249] words (J. S.) should be surplusage: and 22 E. 3. 4. the abbot of Selby granted quandam annuam pencionem to B. ad rogatum J. E. illam scilicet quam idem J. E. habuit ad terminum vitæ suæ, et solvendam quousque (sibi) de beneficio competo provisum fuerit; it was holden by the Court in a writ of annuity brought, that the word (sibi) should have reference to B. the grantee, and not to J. E. And Cook said, that the original contract did leave the measure in this case; and for that he vouched Kedwellys case in Plowd. Comment. A lease rendring rent at Mich. at D. and if it be behind for a month after demand, that the lessor shall re-enter; it shall be demanded at the first place.

CCCCV. SIR RICHARD EGERTONS CASE.

In this case the wife of Sir John Townsend being sentenced in 1000l. and in execution in the Fleet for the costs of the plaintiff; these points were resolved by the Court: 1. If a man be sentenced in the Star-Chamber to pay a fine, and to imprisonment, and the delinquet renders his body to prison, that notwithstanding the body continues in prison, the King shall be satisfied the fine out of the profits of the delinquents lands. 2. If a feme covert be sentenced there, and she renders her body to prison, and there abides, that the lands of her husband shall be sequestred, and the profits thereof for the fine of his wife. And that now upon the Statute of Recusancy the lands of the husband for the recusancy of his wife, if he do not render her to prison and discharge the same. 3. If a man be sentenced in the Star-Chamber to pay a fine, and to have imprisonment, and he yield himself to prison, that before his fine be also paid, he shall not proceed in any action at the common law against the party in the same suit.

PASC. 12 JAC. IN THE COMMON PLEAS.

CCCCVI. CRANE AND PARKINS CASE.

In trespass, the defendant pleaded that the land in which was parcel of the manor of Broughton Astley demisable by custom, and shewed, that the custom of the manor was, that if any tenant for life dyed, that the lord for three years fine ought to grant the same to his heir, and pleaded a grant of the manor to the Lord Grey of Grooby: and also pleaded [250] another custom of the said manor, that if any tenant for life of the said manor had a wife, and dyed, that the wife shall have in the land her widows estate: and that after the death of the wife, that the son, for a fine of three years paid to the lord, should have it for his life, and that the defendant claimed as son, according to that custom. The plaintiff made title as lessee for years to the Lord Gray of the manor, and traverseth that there was not any such custom, that the son for a fine of three years paid should have the land for his life. Hutton said, that the traverse was good; for if there was not any such custom, that the son should have it so for life, then ex consequence sequitur, that there is not any such custom, that the son should have it after the death of the wife, or her surrender, and therefore he needed not to traverse the last custom alledged. But the whole Court was against him, and ruled, that the traverse was not good; for he ought to have traversed the last custom because there are several customs, and the one is immediately to him, the other not; and the defendant claimed by the second custom, and therefore the Court awarded, that he should amend his plea.

PASC. 12 JAC. IN THE COMMON PLEAS.

CCCCVII. SIR HENRY ROLLS AND OSBORNS CASE.

Sir Henry Rolls brought a writ of warrantia chartæ against Sir Robert Osborn and Katharine his wife, and shewed, that the defendant ought to warrant him a messuage, 40 acres of land, 700 acres of pasture in Kelmarsh, and shewed, that Sir Robert Osborn and his wife levied a fine to him and his heirs of a manor, and of the lands aforesaid, with warranty to him and his heirs; and further shewed, that a writ of entre sur disseisin was brought against him of the said messuage, 40 acres of land, 700 acres of pasture, and that he had demanded the warranty of the defendant, or that he would minister to him a plea, which the defendant hath refused to do, to his damage of 1000l. the defendant confessed the fine and warranty, as aforesaid; but further pleaded, that in the same term that the fine was levied, a writ of entry was brought against Sir Henry Rolls, in which writ he vouched to warranty the said defendant, who alone entred into the warranty, and vouched over the common vouchee, and so a recovery was had accordingly: and averred, that the said recovery was to the use of Sir Henry Rolls for his life, and if there was a marriage between him and A. S. within 4 years, and then to the use of the said A. S. for her joynture, with divers re-[251]-mainders over; and averred the life of Sir H. Rolls: upon which the plaintiff did demur in law. Shirley Serjeant argued for the plaintiff, that the warranty was not destroyed, but that the plaintiff might well maintain his warrantia chartæ: and for the same he vouched 22 H. 6. 22. Cliffords case; that there ought to be an alteration of the estate to which the warranty is annexed, and here is no alteration of the estate; for although the recovery was had the said term, and a voucher upon it, yet because the uses did not take effect presently, but were contingent uses, he remained tenant in fee-simple as he was before; and so the first warranty remained, and was not destroyed. Montague Serjeant contrary; And that the warrantia chartæ was gone, and that for four causes: 1. He who comes to an estate in the post shall not have a warrantia chartæ, but Sir Hen. Rolls cometh to the estate in the post, ergo, he shall not have warrantia chartæ. And for that vide 29 Ass. 34. Lord by escheat shall not have warrantia chartæ. 22 Ass. 57. The lord of a villain shall not have a warrantia chartæ. 21 H. 6. Disseisor shall not have warrantia chartæ: and so 19 H. 6. 25. 10 H. 7. 10. Tenant by the courtesie shall not have the writ, because all these come to the lands in the post: but see Cook 3. part, Lincoln Colledge case, they may have peradventure benefit of a rent or of a condition, but not of a warranty, 27 E. 3. Garr' Statham acc'. 2. Every warranty ought to have the same estate continuing to which the warranty is annexed; but Sir Hen. Rolls had not the same estate continuing, ergo, he shall not have the warranty, because the fine was to him and his heirs with warranty; but this recovery (which was but a further assurance) was but to the use of himself for life, with divers remainders over, so as the first estate is altered: and 42 E. 3. 2. 40 E. 3. 14. it is a good plea in a warrantia chartæ that the demandant is not tenant. And 41 Eliz. in Bointon & Chesters case, it was adjudged in this Court, that if a man makes a feoffment with warranty, who enfeoffs the first feoffor, upon condition that that warranty remains, he shall vouch by reason of the first warranty; but if upon that feoffment he had limited any new use, there because the estate was altered, the voucher was gone. Vide F. N. B. 135. 19 E. 3. T. Voucher 122. 48 E. 3. 18. acc'. And it was resolved 34 Eliz. in Banco Regis in Kempe & Henninghams case, that in such case he should not have several warrantia charta's. And therefore because in the principal case he hath once vouched upon this recovery, and upon that the estate is altered, he cannot now have warrantia chartæ. 3. Every warranty is a covenant real, which consists in privity, and therefore destroy the privity, and the warranty is gone. But now in this case the first privity is destroyed, therefore the warranty is gone. And therefore 11 H. 4. 8. if two joyntenants be with warranty, and one of them maketh a feoffment in fee, [252] the warranty is destroyed, because the first privity is destroyed, 21 H. 6. 51. acc'. But vide 19 E. 3. Statham Garr' 31. If two joyntenants are with warranty, and the one releases to the feoffor, there the warranty remains, because the privity remains, vide 2 H. 6. 7. Cook 1 part, Chudleighs case 125. acc'. And see M. 31 Eliz. in this Court. King and Watts case: Land is given to husband and wife, and to the heirs of the body of the husband and wife, the husband levies a fine, and dyes without issue, the wife is impleaded, and adjudged that she could not have aid, nor warrantia chartæ, because the estate was bound by the fine, the husband being tenant in special tail. 4. No warranty can have but one recompence, and if there be recompence given, the warranty is gone and extinct: but here is a recompence made by the voucher in this recovery, therefore the warranty is extinct. 34 Ass. pl. 15. 23 E. 3. garr' 77. acc'. and 15 E. 4. 13. 12 E. 4. 12. If he will not take advantage of the warranty when he may, he shall never have it after, vide F. N. B. 134. acc': and 36 Eliz. it was adjudged in Owens case, that if tenant in tail bargains and sells his lands, and suffers a recovery, and afterwards inrolls the deed, that that recovery is a good bar to the estate tail, because there is a supposition of recompence: and so he prayed judgment for the defendants. It was adjourned. Vide this case now resolved in the Lord Hoberts Reports.

The REPORTS of that late Reverend and Learned Judge, THOMAS OWEN, Esquire, one of the Justices of the Common Pleas. Wherein are many choice CASES, most of them throughly ARGUED by the Learned Serjeants, and after ARGUED and RESOLVED by the grave Judges of those times. [1] TERMINO PASCH. ANNO 26 ELIZ.

LEONARD AGAINST STEPHENS. ROTULO 1702.

Leonard Chief Prothonotary, brought an action of trespasse against Stephens; who justified, &c. for that Sir Christopher Heyden knight, was seised in fee, and enfeoffed the defendant, and gave colour to the plaintiff; the plaintiff replied, that true it was that Sir Christopher Heyden was so seised, but he being so seised, died seised of the premisses, and that after his death, they did discend to his son and heire, who entred and was seised, and being so seised did enfeoff the plaintiff: without that, that the said Sir Christopher Heyden did enfeoff the defendant, whereupon issue was joyned, and the jury gave an especiall verdict to this effect.

That the said Christopher Heyden was seised as aforesaid, and made a lease for years to the defendant by deed, containing these words, dedi & concessi & confirmavi to the defendant and his heires, with a letter of attorney to make livery.

The question was, whether this was a feoffment, or but a confirmation. Walmsley Serjeant, It is but confirmation being by deed, and hath the word confirmation. Anderson, By that reason he in the reversion cannot enfeoff his lessee for years by deed as he may without deed: but I conceive, that it is at the liberty and choice of the [2] lessee either to take it as a feoffment or a confirmation. Walmsley, As soon as the lessee hath accepted the deed, by that he hath declared his meaning to have it as a confirmation. Anderson, And when the lessee doth accept the livery, doth not that shew his expresse meaning to take it by the livery, and shall the livery signifie nothing?

And in Bracebridges case, where the tenant in tail made a bargain and sale, and made livery, and the deed was inrolled within the six months: this was adjudged to be a discontinuance, and yet the bargain and sale makes no discontinuance, which little differs from the case in question. Walmsley, If tenant in tail be disseised, and it is agreed between the disseisor and the disseisee, that the disseisee shall make a deed to the disseisor, who makes a deed accordingly, it is not in the election of the disseisor to take this as a feoffment. Anderson, The cases differed, for the disseisee hath no power to make a feoffment. And adjudged by the Court that it was a good feoffment, vide 17 Ass. 20. 22 H. 6. 43.

Scire Facias by the Queen against Allen.

The case was, A man recovers damages in an action on the case, and he assignes parcell of his debt to the Queen before execution, and the Queen thereupon brought a scire facias. Manwood Chief Baron, and all the Court held cleerly, that parcell, or a moyety of this debt could not be assigned over to the Queen. See 22 H. 6. 47. where parcell of a debt upon an obligation was attached by a forren attachment.

Beverley against The Arch-bishop of Canterbury.

Quare Impedit.

Thomas Beverley brought a quare impedit against John Arch-bishop of Canterbury, and Gabriel Cornwall, the case was, that the Queen being intituled to an advowson by lapse because that the incumbent had two benefices, each of them being of the value of eight pounds per annum, whereby the first by the statute of 21 H. 8. became void, and after the said incumbent died, and divers others were presented by the patrons, who died also, whereby the church becomes void againe. If the Queen may now take her turn to present, in regard she took not her turn when the first lapse happened immediately at the first avoidance, was the question. And after long and serious debate, all the justices of the Common Pleas did resolve.

That the Queen shall not now have her presentment, but the patron, because the Queen hath such presentment by lapse as the Bishop had, and no other, and could present but to the present avoidance then void: and although nullum tempus occurrit Regi, yet we must distinguish it thus, for where the King is limited to a time certaine, or to that which in its self is transitory, there the King must do it within the time limited, or in that time where in the thing to be done hath essence or consistence, or while it remaineth, for otherwise he shall never do it, for if the grantee of the next avoidance, or lessee per auter vie be at-[3]-taint, here the King must take his interest and advantage during the time, viz. during the life of cestui que vie, or within the years of the next avoidance, or otherwise he shall never have it: the same law is where a second presentment is granted to the King, and he does not present, he shall not present after. Shuttleworth, We have an outlawry against the plaintiff, whereupon judgment was staied: but after Hil. 29 Eliz. the Queens Serjeants shewing that the plaintiff was outlawed; it was argued by Walmsley, that that could not now come into debate, for the plaintiff hath no day in Court after judgment, and it is but a surmise that the plaintiff is the same party. Windham, In a debt upon an obligation, the serjeants may pray the debt for the Queen, and yet it is but a surmise.

And the opinion of three justices was (for Anderson was absent) that the writ to the bishop ought to be staied; but in what manner processe should be made if the scire facias shall issue against the plaintiff, they said, they would advise concerning the course: but Periam said, that a scire facias might have issued against the ancient incumbent, and then the Queen shall bring a scire facias again, because she had no presentation. And the scire facias was brought against Beverly. Walmsley, I conceive the Queen shall have no presentation, for although we have acknowledged our presentment, yet before execution we have but a right; as if a disseisee be outlawed he shall not forfeit the profits of his land; also he hath brought a scire facias, and a scire facias lies not but by him that is party or privy. Periam, After that we have this chattell, it is forfeit by outlawry. Anderson, The judgment that he shall recover, shall not remove the incumbent, and then the plaintiff hath but a right; to which Periam and Walmsley agreed: but as to the other point, that the Queen shall not have a scire facias for default of privity, they saw no reason, for in many cases she shall have a scire facias upon a record between strangers: Anderson, If I recover in debt and then I am outlawed, shall the Queen have this debt? Walmsley, If I recover in a quare impedit, and dye, who shall have the presentment my executor or my heire? To which no answer was made: but the Court would take advice for the rarenesse of the case. And it was said to Walmsley that he might demur in law, if he thought the matter insufficient, to which Walmsley agreed, and did demur, &c.

Annuity to a woman who marries and dies.

An annuity is granted to a woman for life, who after marries, the arrears of the annuity encur, and the wife dies, whereby the annuity is determined. It was adjudged that the husband shall have an action of debt at the common law: for that an annuity is more then a chose in action, and may be granted over. And it was agreed by the Court in this case, that if a man grant an annual rent out of land in which he hath no interest, yet this is a good annuity to charge the person of the grantor in a writ of annuity, 14 H. 4. 29 A. Coke 4th. Rep. 51. A.

[4] BRAGG AGAINST BROOKE.

Second deliverance.

Lucas Bragg brought a writ of second deliverance against Robert Brook, for taking his cattell in a place called East Burlish in the county of Surrey, the case was.

That Sir Thomas Speck was seised of a mannor, containing in it severall copyholds, and the place where, &c. was copyhold. And the said Sir Thomas being so seised, married, and then died, and the wife 5 Edw. 6. demands the third part of the mannor for her dower. Per nomen centum messuagium centum gardinum, tot. acr. terræ, prati, &c. And the wife had judgment to recover; and the sheriff assigned to her part of the demesnes and parcell of the services and of the freeholders and copyholders. And it was resolved clearly that the copyholds did not passe by the assignment; and that she could not grant a copyhold, for when she demanded her dower it was at her election and liberty, to demand either a third part of the mannor, or of the messuages, and when she demanded per nomen messuagiorum, &c. she cannot then have the mannor, nor can a mannor be claimed unlesse by his name of corporation, as Anderson termed it, and not otherwise. And the lands and acres cannot be called mannors, and then the grant of a copyhold by one who hath no mannor cannot be good. And so was the opinion of the Court, and yet the sheriff had assigned to her demesnes and services, and all things which make a mannor. And 29 Ed. 3. 35. if a mannor to which an advowson is appendant be delivered by the sheriff in execution by the name of a mannor, cum pertinentiis, the advowson passeth also; but it is otherwise if it be delivered in extent, by the name of acres, lands, meadow, wood, &c.

WAKEFEILDS CASE, 28 ELIZ. ROTULO 607.

1911: 2 KB: 928

Replevin.

Wakefeild brought a replevin against Cassand, who avowed for damage-feasant: and the plaintiff prescribed that D. is an ancient town, &c. and that all the inhabitants within the said town (except the parson, infants, and some particular houses) have used to have common to their houses, &c. The avowant shewed that the house to which common was claimed, was built within thirty years last past. And whether he shall have common to this new erected house was the question on a demurrer?

Shuttleworth, He shall have this common by prescription, but not of common right. Gawdy, The prescription is against common reason that he should have common time out of mind, &c. to that which hath not been thirty years, and he hath excepted the parson, infants, and such particular houses, and by the same reason may except all, and therefore it is not good. But it was adjudged no good prescription, for if this be a good prescription, then any body may create a new house, so that in long space of time there will be no common for the ancient inhabitants. Periam, By such prescription the lord shall be barred to improve the common, which is against reason. Anderson, The common is intire, for if H. hath common appendant to three messuages, and enfeoff one of one messuage, another of the second, and [5] another of the third, the common in this case is gone: but all agreed that it is impossible to have a common time out of mind, &c. for a house that is builded within the thirty years.

BISHOP OF LINCOLNS CASE.

Quare Impedit.

The Queen brought a quare impedit against the Bishop of Lincoln, and Thomas Leigh, to present to the church of Chalsenut Saint Giles in the county of Bucks. The case was thus; H. being qualified took two benefices which were above the value of eight pounds, and after took a third benefice above the said value, whereby the first benefice became void, and so remained for two years, whereby title of lapse accrued to the Queen, and (before presentment made by the Queen) the patron did present one A. who being admitted, instituted, and inducted, did refuse to pay 38l. 2s. ob. due to the Queen for the tenths, which matter was certified by the bishop into the Exchequer, whereupon and by force of the statute of the 26 H. 8. the church is ipso facto void; wherefore the bishop the now defendant being patron in right of his bishoprick, did present Thomas Leigh the other defendant, against whom the Queen brought her quare impedit: and it was adjudged by the Court that the quare impedit very well lies; for the recusancy to pay the tenths was his own act, and is a resignation, and by that reason the church is void, and his shall not hinder the Queen of the lapse; but if A. the incumbent who was presented, dies, being presented by usurpation upon the lapse to the Queen, yet afterwards the right patron shall present again: but when A. the incumbent doth resigne and make the church void by his own act, viz. by recusancy, as in this case is done, this may be done by collusion, and by such means the Queen may be deprived of her title by lapse: for if this collusion between the bishop and the incumbent be suffered, then may a stranger present upon the title of the Queen, and presently such recusancy and certificate may be made, by which the church shall become void, and so the Queen deprived of the lapse. Fenner, This lapse is given to the Queen by her prerogative, but on condition that she take it in due time, for such is the nature of the thing lapsed, as is in this case adjudged, viz. that when the Queen hath title to present by lapse, and doth not present, but the patron presents, and after the church becomes void by the death of the incumbent: in this case (adjudged by the Court also) the Queen cannot present; but in this case, the avoidance being by privation and not by death, judgment was entred for the Queen.

HALES CASE.

Debt on a Bond.

Samuel Hales brought an action of debt on a bond against Edward Bell, and the condition of the bond was, that if the said Bell should pay to the said Hales forty pounds within forty daies next after the return of one Russell into England from the City of Venice beyond the seas, that then the obligation to be void: and the defendant pleaded in bar that the said Russell was not in Venice, upon which the plaintiff demurred: and adjudged by all the justices that it was no good plea; for in such cases where parcell is to be done within the realm, and parcell out of the realm, the tryall shall be within the realm, 7 H. 7. 9.

HAVERINGTONS CASE. 1974.

Debt by an Administrator.

Haverington and his wife as administratrix of one Isabell Oram, brought an action of debt against Rudyand and his wife, executrix to one Laurence Kidnelly, the case appeared to be thus.

Farmer for thirty years did devise to his wife so long as she shall be sole and a widow, the occupation and profits of his terme: and after her widowhood, the residue of the terme in the lease and his interest in it to Reynald his son, the devisor dies, and the wife enters according to the devise: and afterwards he in the reversion by indenture dedit & concessit, vendidit & barganizavit totum illud tenementum suum, to the wife and her heires, and did also covenant to make further assurance, and to discharge the said tenement of all former bargains, sales, rights, joyntures, dowers, mortgages, statute-merchants, and of the staple, intrusions, forfeitures, condemnations, executions, arrearages of rents; and of all other charges (except rents services which shall be hereafter due to the lords paramount) and then the reversioner and his wife levied a fine to the uses aforesaid; and after the devisee takes husband, and thereupon the son enters in the terme. And the administrator of the wife brought an action of debt upon an obligation, for the performance of the covenants of the indenture against the administrator of the reversioner: and judgment for the plaintiff.

And it appeared by the record that these points following were adjudged to be law, although that the latter matter was onely argued.

1. That the wife of the reversioner who had title of dower in the land, is concluded of her right of dower, by the declaration of the uses of the fine by the husband onely, which fine is after levied by them joyntly, because no contradiction of the woman appears that she doth not agree to the uses which the husband solely by his deed of indenture had declared.

2. To devise that the wife shall have the occupation and profits du-[7]-ring her widowhood is a good devise of the land it self, during such time. See Plow. 524. And that no act which she can do in purchasing the inheritance by which the terme is extinct, shall bar the possibility which Reynald the son hath to come, upon the womans marriage.

3. That a lessee for years being in possession may take a feoffment although it be by deed, and may take livery after the delivery of the deed, and shall be deemed to be in by force of the feoffment, as in this case is pleaded, although that the lessee may take the deed by way of confirmation, and then the livery is but surplusage and void.

4. It was resolved, that this possibility which was in Reynald the son to have the residue of the terme upon the inter-marriage, which at the time of the feoffment and of the fine, was but dormant, shall be accounted a former charge and before the covenant, because of the will which was before the covenant, and shall awake, and have relation before the marriage. As if tenant in tail of a rent, purchaseth the land out of which the rent issueth, and makes a feoffment, and covenants that the land at that time is discharged of all former charges, although this charge is not in esse, but is in suspence, as it is said 3 H. 7. 12. yet if the tenant in tail dye, his issue may distrain for this rent, and then is the covenant broke, for now it shall be accounted a former charge before the feoffment.

BRETTS CASE.

Debt on a Bond.

Brett brought an action of debt on a bond against Averden, and the condition of the bond was to stand to the arbitrement of J. S. who did award that the defendant should pay ten pounds to Brett, and no time was limited to pay it. The defendant confest the arbitrement but pleaded in bar that the plaintiff hath not required him to pay the money: and the plaintiff hereupon demurred. Adjudged by the Court, that it is no good plea, for the defendant at his perill ought to pay the money, and the plaintiff need not make any request, wherfore judgment was given for the plaintiff.

BUCKNELLS CASE.

Action for Robbery on the Statute of Winchester.

Bucknell was robbed in a hundred within the county of Bucks, and thereupon brought his action upon the Statute of Winchester, because the theeves were not taken: and not guilty being pleaded by the inhabitants, the jury gave this speciall verdict, viz. that he was robbed the same day alleadged in the declaration, but in another place and within another parish then that he hath alledged in the declaration, but that both the parishes were within the said hundred: upon which they prayed the judgment of the Court whether the inhabitants were guilty. Adjudged by the Court for the plaintiff, for it is not materiall in what parish he was robbed, so it were within the same hundred.

SPITTLES CASE.

Replevin.

Spittle brought a replevin against Davis, the case was this.

Turk being seised of land in fee, did devise parcell thereof to his youngest son. Proviso, and it is his intent, that if any of his sons, or any of their issues, shall alien or demise any of the said lands devised, before they shall attain the age of thirty years, that then the other shall have the estate, and does not limit any estate: and then the eldest son made a lease before his age of thirty years, and the youngest son enters, and afterwards, and before the age of thirty years he aliens the land he entred into by reason of the limitation: the elder brother re-enters, and demised to Spittle the plaintiff for three years, who put a horse into the ground, and Davis by the commandment of the younger brother entred and took the horse damage-feasant; and Spittle brought a replevin. And upon the whole matter there was a demurrer: it was resolved.

1. That this is a limitation, and that the estate shall be to such use as by the will is directed untill there be an alienation, and upon alienation the land shall go to the other brother.

2. When the youngest brother hath once entred for the alienation, then is the land discharged of all limitations, for otherwise the land shall go and come to one and the other upon every alienation ad infinitum, wherefore all the Judges agreed, that after the one brother hath entred by reason of the limitation, the land is then for ever discharged of the limitation made by the will: and judgment was given accordingly.

MICHAELLS CASE.

Debt on a Bond.

Thomas Michaell brought an action of debt on a bond against Stockworth and Andrews; the jury gave this speciall verdict: that the said Stockworth and Andrews did seale a bond and delivered it to the plaintiff as their deed: and after issue joyned, and before the Nisi Prius the seale of Andrews was taken from the bond.

Shuttleworth, The plaintiff shall be barred, for it is one entire deed, and the seale of one is wanting. And admit (in case it goes against us) the judgment be reversed by writ of error, the plaintiff can have no action on such bond: but it was adjudged to be a good bond; and judgment for the plaintiff. See the like case in Dyer, Trin. 36 H. 8. 59. A.

RICHMONDS CASE.

Debt for Rent.

Richmond brought an action of debt against Butcher, the case was; A man makes a lease for years, reserving rent to him and his executors and assignes, and during the terme the lessor dies, and his heire, who hath the reversion, brings an action of debt. And it was urged, that the rent was incident to the reversion, and the heire having the reversion shall have the rent also as incident to it, as the case is in the 27 H. 8. 16. If H. makes a lease for years, rendring rent, without saying any more words, the heire shall have this part, because it shall go along with the reversion: so in the fifth of Edw. 4. 4. If two joynt-tenants make a lease for years, rendring rent to one of them, yet the other shall have the rent also, although no mention were made of him; so in the 7 H. 4. 223. By the Court, If I make a feoffment in fee, rendring a rent to me, my heires may distraine: and if I grant over this rent, my assignees in this case may distraine and avow: so in this case an action will lye for the heire, although he be not mentioned. But adjudged to the contrary by the Court; for when H. passeth lands from himself, the law gives him liberty to passe them in such way and manner as he himself will, and this liberty ought to take effect according to the expresse words, for the law will not extend the words further, for the intent shall appeare by the words, and then it cannot be here intended that his will was that his heire shall have the rent, because the words are not sufficient to give it to his heire: and therefore note a diversity when the law makes a tenure, and when the party; for if the law makes a tenure, the heire shall have the rent: but otherwise where the party makes it, unlesse there be expresse words for the heire, as in 10 Edw. 4. 19. by Moile, if H. makes a gift in T. and reserves no rent: yet shall the donee hold of the donor and his heires, as the donor holds over; but if he make a lease for yeares, rendring rent to the lessor, the heire shall not have this rent, for it is a tenure made by the act of the party. So in the Book of Assises 86. If a man lets two acres of land, rendring rent ten shillings for one of them to himself by name, without naming his heires, it is adjudged that the heire shall not have the rent of this acre. And this is resembled to the case of 12 Edw. 2. where a man made a lease for yeares, rendring rent to the lessor and his assignes, here none shal have the rent but the lessor, and it is void by his death, for his assignee cannot be privy to the reservation; and the words of the party shall not in any case be enlarged, unlesse there be great inconvenience to be avoided: and his intent and will is performed if he himself have the rent. And if a man reserve such rent to him and his executors, this word executors is to no purpose, for that the rent cannot be reserved to them, but the rent shall be extinct by his death: and if he reserve the rent to his heire, and not to himself he shall not have it, but his heire, for he shall be estopped to claime it, against his own words and reservation. And if I make a lease for years, rendring rent to me during the terme, if I dye without heire during the terme, the lord by escheat shall not have the rent: which case may be compared to the case of warranty, 6 H. 7. 2. That without mention of the [10] heires, the warranty shall not bind them: but if a rent be reserved to his assignes, and he grants over the reversion, here because the assignes were mentioned in the reservation, and for that now there is a privity, the assignees shall have the rent, for it shall be intended that when he speaks of assignes in the reservation, he prefixeth thereby to whom he will assigne the reservation, wherefore it was adjudged for the defendant, vide Dyer 2. Eliz. 180, 181. H. bargaines and sells land: proviso, that if the vendor shall pay a hundred pounds to the vendee his heires or assignes, that then the bargaine and sale shall be void: by two justices.

The tendor shall not be made to the executors, because the law will not determine to whom the tendor shall be made, when the parties themselves are expresly agreed.

GODDARDS CASE.

Confirmation by the Lessor to the Assignee of Tenant for years.

H. makes a lease for years of twenty acres, rendring rent, the lessee grants all his estate in one of the acres to I. S. the lessor confirmes the estate of I. S. Resolved by the Court,

1. That by this confirmation the entire rent is gone in all the other acres, for being an entire contract and by his own act, there cannot be an occupation for part, and an extinguishment for the other part; and in this case there is no difference between a suspension in part, and an extinguishment. If A. makes a lease for yeares of twenty acres, rendring rent, upon condition that if he does not do such a thing, that then the lease shall be void for ten acres: if he performes not the condition, and the lessor enters, the entire rent is gone. And it was resolved that a lease for years was not within the Statute of Quia Emptores Terrarum, for that statute extends to an estate in land of fee-simple. See the report of Serjeant Benlowes in 14 H. 7. A warren did extend into three parishes, and a lease was made for years rendring rent, and after the reversion was granted to another of all the warren in one of the parishes, and the lessee did attorne. The question was, if the lessor should have any part of this rent during the terme, so that the rent may be apportioned or not. And the justices said in this case, that neither the grantor nor the grantee shall have any rent, for the law is, that no contract shall be apportioned.

2. It was resolved, that no lessor shall avow for the arrearages of rent, before the time of confirmation and extinguishment; for H. shall not avow for the rent determined; but he may defend himselfe by way of justification. See where a man may justifie the taking by speciall evidence, 19 H. 6. 41. by all the Court, except Askew.

WARDFORDS CASE.

Error.

Haddock brought a writ of error against Wardford upon a judgment given in the Common Pleas; the case was thus: Two coparceners of a house, one of them lets her part to a stranger, and the other lets her part to a stranger also, and then both leases come to the hands of one H. and then one of the coparceners bargaines and sells her reversion to the other coparcener. The lessee commits wast permittendo dictum messuagium cadere, and the grantee of the reversion brought an action of wast. The errors assigned were,

1. That he brought but one action of wast, although of severall demises by severall lessors, whereas he ought to have two actions of wast. Godfrey, He cannot have an action in other manner then his grantor might have before the grant, and when the reversion came to him, it can be in other plight then it was before. Gawdy, There is a diversity when the right is severall, and when the possession is severall; for although the possession be severall, yet if the right be intire, but one action will lye, as appeares F. N. B. fol. 2. Godfrey, There is difference between the writ of right in F. N. B. and this action, for there he was never intituled but onely to the action, but in our case the action was once severall, and is like the case in F. N. B. 60. where it is said, that a man may have one action of wast, and declare upon divers leases, but that is intended where the leases are made by one person, and he cited the case in 21 H. 7. 39. where it is agreed by all the justices, that if a man hold two acres of one H. by severall services, and dies without heire, the lord shall not have one writ of escheat, but ought to have two writs.

Popham Chief Justice did agree with Gawdy, for although that at first the lessors were intituled to severall actions, yet by matter ex post facto, the actions may be united: and said, that H. might have an action of waste, and declare ex assignatione, and also ex dimissione.

2. Error was assigned, that he had assigned the waste to be committed in the whole house, whereas he had but part of the house, and waste may be brought for part of a house.

3. Error was, because the other coparcener was not joyned with him in the action. But resolved that it was good enough: and the justices made this diversity, viz. when both the parties have an equall estate and inheritance, and when one of them hath but a particular estate, as in the 27 H. 8. 13. Lessee for life, and he in the remainder shall joyne in an action of waste, but where they had equal estate of inheritance, as two coparceners, or two tenants in common, and one makes a lease, and the lessee commits waste, there the writ of waste shall be brought by the lessor only, for it is not like to a personall injury done upon an inheritance; for an action of waste is now in the nature of the realty, although that at the common law (before the Statute of Glocester) there was but a prohibition, yet the statute gives the place wasted, and damages, and therefore it is mixt, wherefore both of them shall not joyne, and the writ saies, to his disheritance that made the lease, vide 22 H. 6. 24. by the Court, and agreeing with this resolution.

[12] 4. Error was, that the waste is a permissive waste, and no such waste lies between coparceners, for each of them are bound to contribution and reparation: but the Court would take no notice of this.

5. Error was in the entring judgment, for judgment was entred by default, whereupon a writ of inquiry of damages issued out of the sheriff, and the sheriff went to the place wasted, which he needed not have done. And the judgment was quod recuparet locum vastatum per visum juratorum, which was nought, for the going to the place was surplusage. But divers presidents were produced to prove that, that was the course: as Hilar. Rot. 501. between the Earl of Bedford and William Smith, upon a demurrer, and a writ of inquiry of damages, and the judgment was, quod recuparet locum vastatum per visum juratorum, and Trin. 31 H. 8. Rot. 142. and the Book of Entries, fol. 620. wherefore judgment was affirmed.

Gaytons Case.

Resignation of a Benefice.

Robert Gayton parson of the church of Little Eyesingham in the county of Norfolk, did by instrument in writing resign his benefice before Edmund Langdon publick notary, and others, into the hands of the bishop, and the resignation was absolute and voluntary, and to the use of Miles Mosse, and Paul Britback, or either of them: and it was further inferred in the said instrument of resignation, protestatione & sub conditione quod si aliqui eorum non admissi fuerant per assentionẽ Episcop. infra sex menses, quod tunc hæc present. resignatio mea vacua & pro nulla habeatur, & nunc prout tunc, & tunc prout nunc: and cestuy que use, came within the time limited to the bishop, and did offer to resigne to him, which the bishop refused to except, &c.

Crooke for the plaintiff, Forasmuch as the plaintiff may resigne on condition as well as a particular tenant may surrender upon condition: and two parsons may exchange, and if the estate be executed on the one part, and not on the other, that parson whose part was not executed may have his benefice again, as it is adjudged in the 46 Ed. 3. But Coke Solicitor, and Godfrey were on the contrary opinion: for that the incumbent may not transfer his benefice to another without presentation, as appeares in the recited case of 46 Edw. 3. Also the resignation is not good, and the condition void, because it is against the nature of a resignation which must be absolute, sponte, pure, & simpliciter and is not like to a condition in law, as in the said case of exchange in 46 Edw. 3. for the law doth annex a condition to it, but a collaterall condition cannot be annext by the parties themselves: also this is an act judiciall to which a condition cannot be annext, no more then an Ordinary may admit upon condition, or a judgment be confessed on condition, which are judiciall acts.

But admitting the condition good, yet a new induction ought to be made by the Ordinary, for the church became one time void; and is not like to the case in 2 R. 2. Quare impedit 143. where sentence of deprivation was given, and the sentence presently reversed by appeal, there need no new institution, for that the church was never void. And after in Easter tearm, 36 Eliz. upon argu-[13]-ments given in writing by the civillians to the Judges, the judgment was entred, quod querens nihil capiat per billam.

Carters Case.

Action on the case for words.

William Crow brought an action on the case against Warham Carter for speaking of these words: The said William is forsworn and perjured in swearing at the common place Bar upon the deeds which he then had in his hand.

Harris Serjeant did move in arrest of judgment, for that the words shall be construed according to the common and vulgar sense, viz. that he is forsworne upon the deeds. But the Court was against him: for the vulgar sense is, that men do not use to sweare but upon a book, and the plaintiff had judgment.

William Bartues Case.

Prohibition.

Woodroffe and Cooke brought a prohibition against Bartue; the case was thus.

The abbot of Langley did let land to one Raston for ninety nine years, who let the same to Woodroff for sixty years, who granted parcell of the said land to Cooke during the whole terme. And Bartue did libell against them both in the Spirituall Court for tythes, and they joyned in a prohibition.

Godfrey, They may not joyne in a prohibition, for by the statute of 34 H. 6. 13. if two men are sued in the Court Christian for slander, battery, &c. which are severall in themselves, there they cannot joyne in a prohibition: but where they be sued for the finding of a lampe, &c. by reason of their land, there they shall joyne; but in this case the tythes are severall. But it was resolved,

1. That their joyning in the prohibition was good enough.

2. That the death of one of them shall not abate the writ of prohibition, because nothing is by them to be recovered, but they are onely to be discharged of tythes.

Haslewoods Case.

Error in Avowry.

The lord of a mannor did avow on the taking of a gelding as an estrey within his mannor, and had judgment to have return and damage to twenty pounds: and hereupon a writ of error was brought, and adjudged that no damages shall be had in such case: for the a-[14]-vowant cannot recover damages at the common law, and by the statute of the 7 H. 8. and 4. no damages shall be given to the avowant for damage-feasant; but where he avowes for rents, customes, or services, and this is neither rent, custome, or service, for that of common right the estrey belongs to the King, and no common person may have it unlesse by grant, or by prescription, and the statute is to be taken strickly: for the avowant for damage-feasant, or for rent charge should not recover damage by this statute, before the statute of 21 H. 8. 19. where the plaintiff hath remedy, as it is holden in Dyer 141. B. But because divers presidents were shewn out of the Common Pleas from time to time since the making that statute, that damages shall be recovered by the avowant, who avowes for amercements, &c. it was said, that it would be very difficult to controll so many presidents.

Gawdy, No great credit is to be given to such presidents as passe sub silentio, without any exception taken to them. Another error was assigned, because the judgment was to have return averiorum predictorum, whereas there was but one guelding: wherefore judgment was reversed, and the roll markt.

And the opinion of all the justices was, that the action did well lye, for the constables cannot take horses out of the pound to deliver them to any by vertue of such a commission.

Lease on condition.

Coles made a lease to Taunton for ninety nine years, on condition that if he demised it in other manner, then in such manner as he let the same to him, that then it should be lawfull for him to re-enter; the lessee devises it by his will to his youngest son. Resolved, that rigore juris, this is a breach of the condition: for a devise is an alienation, as is holden 31 H. 8 Dyer 6. and although conditions shall be taken strickly, yet not directly against the intent of the parties, and the reasonable disposition of the words; and therefore a devise shall be intended to be within this word, demise; yet it was said, that it was very hard according to equity that the estate should be lost: for he in-[15]-tended by this will to prefer one of his youngest children, and not to break the condition, and thought not it was any breach of the condition, and for this cause some doubt was made of the case, but Hil. 38 Eliz. LEIGHS CASE.

Ejectment.

The Queen being seized of lands as Dutchesse of Lancaster, did make a lease thereof to the plaintiff, the lessee is outed by A. the plaintiff makes a lease to B. for years, and B. being outed brought an ejectione firmæ.

1. It was resolved, that the Queen as Dutchesse of Lancaster cannot be disseised, for although she be not seised in jure Coronæ, yet is it in seisin of the Queen, and cannot be taken away from her in respect of her person.

2. Gawdy, and Fenner held that the lessee being outed, the terme is turned into a right, and therefore it hath been adjudged that an ejectment will lye: as the case is in Dyer 29 H. 8. If tenant in taile, the reversion in the King suffers a recovery, although this shall not be to the prejudice of the Kings reversion, yet shall it bar the estate-tail. So if a parson makes a lease for years, and the parson and Ordinary confirme it, and the parson dies, and during the vacation the lessee is outed, he is hereby outed of his terme, yet is not the frank-tenement touched.

Clench on the contrary, That he who is outed hath an estate but at sufferance, for he cannot have an estate for years without a lease, and it is agreed he shall not have an estate of freehold by reason of the reversion in the Queen, and the possession of the lessor, shall maintain the possession of the lessee, as well as the possession of the lessee shall keep the freehold of the lessor: and if he have but an estate at sufferance, then cannot the lease to B. be good: for if tenant at sufferance of a common person makes a lease for years; this is a disseisin.

And Popham was of opinion with Gawdy and Fenner, wherefore judgment was given for the plaintiff.

I have seen a report 24 Eliz. in the Kings Bench, upon a demurrer between Edmund Frough and Henry Dixe, where the better opinion was, that if one enters on the terme of the Queen, he shall not thereby gaine any possession; but notwithstanding the termor may grant over his terme: but it was agreed that he shall have an ejectione firmæ: for by Plowden an assise will lye of a mill, where the water is divers, for the possession of the mill continues in him. But the justices doubted whether it was an ejectment, wherefore the parties did compound. In the 4 H. 6. Intrusion. If lessee for life, the remainder in the King be outed, he shall have an assise.

THURSTONS CASE.

Ejectment.

Goffe brought an ejectment against Thurston, the case was this.

The abbot of Kingswold in Wiltshire, being seised of land in the 28th yeare of H. 8. did (with consent of the covent) make a lease for years by deed indented, and then the abbey came into the hands of H. 8. and from him to Edw. 6. and from him to the present Queen.

And it was pleaded that the defendant hath the lease, and that Henry Thinne did intrude on the defendant, and made a lease to the plaintiff, who being ejected by the defendant brought this action, and on this matter the parties demurred.

1. It was said that the plaintiff cannot bring this action, inasmuch as Henry Thinne by his entry on lessee for years, the reversion being in the Queen cannot gaine any possession, so that nothing passeth by his lease to the plaintiff. But the Court was against this, for he is a sufficient lessee to maintain an action of ejectment: and it was adjudged in the Exchequer Chamber, that the Queens lessee for years being outed may have an ejectione firmæ, which proves that he is put out of possession of his terme; and this very point was in a manner agreed the last terme, in the case of Norris.

Fenner, If H. enters on the possession of the Queen, and makes a lease for years, nothing doth passe, and the lessee cannot maintain an ejectione firmæ, for he gains no possession at all: but it is on the contrary here when he enters on the Queens lessee.

Gawdy, That is no difference, for the lessee for years of an intrudor shall maintain an ejectione firmæ: and I have seen a report 34 Eliz. between Badinton and Hawle in the Kings Bench, adjudged, that if the Queens copyholder be outed, and a lease be made for years by the intrudor, this lessee shall not have an ejectment if he be outed, but he shall have an action of trespasse against any stranger.

The second exception was taken to the pleading, because the defendant pleaded in que estate del lessee del abbe, without shewing how he came to the estate. And by the Court a good exception, for he shall be compelled to shew how he came to an estate in the terme, inasmuch as it cannot be by loyall meaus, vide 1, & 2 Eliz. Dyer 171. that a que estate of a particular estate of a terme is not good, and 7 Eliz. Dyer 238. where the plea was of a que estate of a termor, and exception taken to it; and the difference between it and a freehold, so in the 7 H. 6. 440. it was agreed that H. could not convey an interest by a que estate of a particular estate, as intail for life, or years, without shewing how he came by the estate, be it on the part of the plaintiff or the defendant.

The third exception was, that the defendant pleaded a lease made by the abbot and covent by indenture as it ought to be, without saying hic in Curia prolat. which exception was also clearly allowed by the Court, for he is privy to it, and therefore he ought to shew it. And for these two exceptions, but especially for the former. Judgment was given for the plaintiff.

Palmers Case.

Action on the case for words.

Palmer an utter barrester of Lincolns-Inn, brought an action on the case against Boyer for these words; Palmer being steward to I. S. the defendant in discourse had with I. S. said; I marvail you will have such a paltry lawyer for your steward, for he hath as much law as a jack a napes: and the plaintiff shewed all the matter in the declaration, and that by reason of such words he was displaced of his office.

Williams Serjeant did move, in that the words were not, that he hath no more law then, &c. for then those words were actionable, but, that he hath as much law as, &c. for which words no action will lye. But resolved by the Court that the action will lye, for the words are slanderous and prejudicial to his credit, and by reason of them he was discharged of his stewardship, also an action will lye for saying, that he hath as much law as a jack an apes, or my horse; because they are unreasonable creatures, but if he had said, that he hath no more law than I. S. that is not actionable, although I. S. be no lawyer. And judgment was given for the plaintiff.

But the Court held that judgment should be reverst, for he ought to be named heire, as in debt against executors, he shall be named executor. And judgment was reverst.

DOWNINGHAMS CASE.

Ejectment.

The defendant in an ejectione firmæ pleaded that the lord of the mannor did enter into the land of a copyholder by reason of forfeiture for waste committed in suffering the houses to be uncovered, by which the timber is become rotten, and did not alledge in facto that the custome of the mannor is, that such waste is a forfeiture, for it was said, that although other waste by the common law is a forfei-[18]-ture, yet this permissive waste is not. Sed non allocatur: for all waste done by a copyholder is forfeitable.

2. It was resolved, that if a copyholder made a lease for yeares which is not according to the custome of the mannor, yet this lease is good; so that the lessee may maintain an ejectione firmæ, for between the lessor and the lessee, and all other, except the lord of the mannor, the lease is good, and so hath it been severall times adjudged in this Court.

And it was moved in arrest of judgment that these words were not actionable; for it is not said in facto, that he was in the robbery, or that he was a horse-stealer in fact, but onely by imagination, that he thought he was such a one: but judgment was given for the plaintiff.

PALMERS CASE.

Christopher Palmer brought an ejectione firmæ against John Humphrey, and declared that one George Hanger the eighteenth day of May, in the six and thirtieth year of Eliz. by his indenture did demise unto him a certain peece of land called the great Ashbroke, and other peece of land called Stocking, and also divers other peeces of land naming the peeces, and of one garden called Muchins Gardein, and of another peece of meadow called Michins Meade, and of seven acres of arable land, for the terme of two years; by vertue whereof the said Christopher entred, untill the defendant by force and armes, &c. did eject him, and did set forth in his declaration that the defendant ejected him out of the said peeces of land, and yet did not expresse the contents thereof in certainty: and upon not-guilty pleaded it was found for the plaintiff, and for the seven arable acres of land and the garden, the Court gave their judgment that it was certain enough, but as to the other peeces of land, the Court was divided: for Popham & Gawdy held that it was certain enough being in an ejectione firmæ, which is but in the nature of an action of trespasse, and the damages are the principall, and a man may bring an action of trespasse for a peece of land, without any other certainty: but Clench and Fenner were on the contrary, for he ought to set forth his term in the land, and then to shew the contents thereof, as well in an ejectment, as in a precipe quod reddat, by which land is demanded, and a man shall have an ejectione firmæ de una visgata terræ, but shall not have a precipe [19] quod reddat of one portion of land, by Skeene and Hill, 7 H. 4. 40. 9 H. 6. 3. 5 H. 7. 9. And afterwards vide Mich. 37, & 38 Eliz. WALTERS CASE.

Love brought an action of debt against Wotton, who pleaded the Statute of Usury in bar, and by reason of mispleader, it was awarded by the Court, that the parties should plead de novo, and this award was entred in this manner, viz. et quia placitum illud in modo & forma placitat. est sufficiens in lege, the Court awarded that the parties should replead; and hereupon they pleaded, and judgment for the plaintiff: and the defendant brought a writ of error in the Exchequer Chamber, which was certified accordingly.

And there Gawdy moved that the record in this point might be amended, and to have the record certified de novo into the Exchequer Chamber; for that the first award is repugnant in it self, for it is awarded that they shall replead, because the plea est sufficiens, whereas it ought to be that they shall replead, because est minus sufficiens, as the paper books are, and the opinion of the Court was that it could not be amended, because that the fault is in the indictment it self, which is the act of the Court, and therefore cannot be amended.

Glanvill, It is no error in the judgment, for the judgment is only that they shall replead, but the error is in the judgment to the judgment, and may be well amended, and of the same opinion was Popham.

The question was, whether the heire or the executors should have the fish.

Popham, The heire shall have the deer in the park, and by the same reason, the fish.

Clench, If the fish be stolne it is felony, so that it appears there is a property in them, vide 18 Ed. 4. 10 Ed. 4. 14. 22 Ass. 98. that stealing of tench out of a pool is felony, by which it seems they are but chattels.

Popham, The book is so, and so is the law, but that is of stealing fish out of a trunk, or some narrow place where they are put to be taken at will and pleasure; but otherwise it is where they are put into a pond.

Fenner, He which hath the water shall have the fish: and Popham ex assensu Curiæ gave judgment for the heire. And in the principall case the executors did take the fish with nets, and the heire brought a trespasse and adjudged maintainable. See what chattels executors shall have, and what not, in 21 H. 7. 26. 10 H. 7. 6. & 30. an account will lye for fish in a fish-pond, so in the 5 R. 2. It was adjudged that the lease of the chamber was good, for as well as a man by his exception may except part of a thing, so as it shall be intended that it was never let or granted; so in this case when he saies, except the parsonage house, saving and allowing to the lessee a chamber, this saving makes the chamber, as it were excepted out of it, as if it had been leased; so a saving out of a saving, is as much as there had been no saving at all, and then this chamber not being excepted out of the lease shall passe clearly by the lease of the rectory. Wrights Case.

Wright brought a writ of error against the Mayor and Comminalty of Wickombe, to reverse a fine levied by his ancestor of twenty acres of land, the defendants in abatement of the writ of error did plead that the plaintiff after the death of his ancestor did disseise the defendants of the land, and made a feoffment to a stranger. Judgment, &c. The plaintiff replied, that they did re-enter upon him, without that, that he did enfeoff a stranger modo & forma. The jury found, that there was a fine of twenty acres, and that the plaintiff being disseisor of all, made a feoffment of six of the acres to a stranger. Et si supra totam materiam, &c. And it was objected that the record was intire, and the error is a chose in action, and not a chose in droit, and therefore cannot be divided, but if it were a chose in droit, it is otherwise, as if a disseisee of twenty acres releaseth all his right in five acres, this doth extinguish all his right in the five acres: so upon a feoffment of parcell, yet the right remaineth as to the remnant: but of a chose in action which is meerly entire, no apportionment can be, as in the 31 Eliz. in the Kings Bench, between Charnock and Wrothesley, the case was; Husband and wife levied a fine of the wives land, and after because the wife was within age, they sued a writ of error to reverse the fine. The question was, if this should be reversed as to the wife onely, or against the husband according to the opinion of Belknap in the 50 Ed. 3. And after long debate it was resolved that it should be against both, for it is intire, and cannot be affirmed in part and disaffirmed in another part. And the Lord Norris case is very agreeable to this, where tenant for life did levy an erroneous fine, and then was attaint by Parliament, and all the right which he had to any land was given to the Queen; and it was adjudged that there is no title of error, nor was it given to the Queen by this word, right, and then if it be so, the title of error is not of any right in the land, but onely to the suit, and if it be a suit, it is a suit intire, for he cannot have severall suits, as is agreed in Sir Richard Knightleys case. A man had judgment to recover 150l. and did release 20l. of it, and after sued execution, and the other brought an audita querela upon the releases, and defeated all the execution. But it is otherwise where such apportionment of such suit is done by act in law, as in 7 Ed. 4. fol. ultimo. The sheriff levied parcell of the debt by fieri facias, yet shall he have an action of debt for the residue upon the record: but in this case it is the act of the party himself that destroies his suit for part of the land, for which it shall destroy the other suit, for the error is intire as to all the land and cannot be divided, as in the 38 Ed. 3. and 12 H. 6. if a false verdict be found, and the party greived does make a feoffment of parcell, he shall not have an attaint for any part: so in the 19 H. 6. and the 39 Ass. If he who hath cause to bring a writ of error or attaint, does take a lease for years of parcell, he doth suspend his action, and if he takes in fee, it is quite gone. But it was resolved by the Court that the feoffment does not destroy the title of the writ of error, for more then so much as a feoffment was made of; and thereupon they first took a difference be-[22]-tween suspension and extinguishment of an action, for peradventure if he suspend his action as to any part for any time, this is a suspension unto all, but extinguishment of part; is a bar to that part onely; and Gawdy cited the case in 9 H. 6. where judgment was reverst for part onely, and it is not unusuall to have a fine reversed for part: as if a fine be levied of lands in ancient demesne, 47 Ed. 3. 9. a. there by Parsley, If there be error in law as to one parcell, and error in fact as to another parcell, the judgment as touching the matter of law may be reversed.

Fenner; He who hath title to reverse a fine, or recovery by writ of error, hath right in the land, and if he release all his right in the land, the error is extinct, and the reason of the Lord Norris case was not that the title to the error was an action in privity annexed to the party to the record and his heires, and cannot be transferred over to another, no more then a writ of partition between coparceners, or a nuper obiit.

Popham, He who hath title to have the writ of error hath no title to the land, although that thereby he be to be restored to the land: for if the land discend to one who hath title to have the writ of error, without doubt it shall not be accounted a remitter: but as to the matter now in question, he said, that if two men bring a writ of error in the realty, and the tenant plead the release of one, this is a good bar against both, because the error in the record is released: but if one who hath title to a writ of error, does make a release of all his right in one acre, this is a bar but for so much, inasmuch as the release is a bar but as to the restitution of the land onely, and no release of errors in the record, for by the reversall of a fine or recovery, the party may annihilate the record, and have restitution of that which the record before took from him, and therefore it shall bar the plaintiff. And the opinion of all the Court was, that the fine should be reversed for that part of the land onely, whereof no feoffment was made, but for some defects in the writ of error, judgment was stayed.

BARNARDS CASE.

Smith brought an action of debt upon a bond against Barnard, the defendant pleaded that the plaintiff was outlawed, and a day was given him to bring in the record, at which day he made default.

Daniel moved that the judgment for the plaintiff in this case should be that the defendant should answer, for that the plea of outlawry was but a dilatory plea, and no plea in bar, as appears 21 Ed. 4. 15. but this difference was taken by the Court. In an action of debt upon a bond, utlary of the plaintiff is a plea in bar, and the reason is, because all the debts in specialties are forfeited to the Queen by reason of the outlawry, and because the Queen is to have them, it is a good plea in bar: but in a trespasse or debt upon a contract, the outlawry is but to the abatement of the writ, and the Queen shall not have debts upon simple contracts, but after the outlawry pardoned, the plaintiff may have an action for them again. And because he [23] failed to bring the record at his day appointed, the plaintiff recovered, vide Dyer 6 Eliz. 227, 228.

And there upon he brought his action; and the defendant pleaded nil debet, and it was found for the plaintiff, and yet he had not judgment.

First, because the declaration was insufficient, because the plaintiff was not in surplusage to the defendant, but the defendant to the plaintiff, and so are all the presidents directly; and he ought to alledge he was in service, and that he had received goods, whereof no mention is made.

Secondly, because neither day nor place is alledged where the auditor was assigned.

OWSELEYS CASE.

Roger Owsely brought a replevin against Edmund Brach and others, the defendant made conusance as baily to John Levison; and said, that long time before the taking, &c. one William Coup was seised of a house and eight acres of meadow, &c. whereof the place is parcell, in his demesne as of fee, and did demise the same to Richard Coup for one and twenty years, reserving rent, and the lessee died, and the land came to his wife as his executrix, who married Roger Owseley, and that William Coup did levy a fine of the premisses to Stephen Noke and others, to the use of Stephen and his heires, and after Stephen entred and outed the termor, and infeoffed John Leveson and his heires, and then the termor re-enters, claiming his terme, and for rent arreare the defendant made conusans as aforesaid, and it was adjudged against the defendant, because this entry and feoffment by Noke to Leveson, and the re-entry of the termor is no attornment, and this varies from Littleton's case, where the lessor entred and made a feoffment, and the lessee re-entred, for Noke the lessor had [24] not any attornment, and can have no distresse, and his feoffee cannot be in better case then he himself: and if the first feoffee makes feoffment to B. who enfeoffs C. and the lessee re-enters, that is attornment but to the first feoffee, and not to the other, for he may be misconusant of it, because he was outed by the lessor, but note judgment was not given till Trin. 36 Eliz.

But Owen, Beaumont, and Walmsley held the contrary, and so it was adjudged. BROWNES CASE.

Anthony Brown brought an action of trespasse against Richard Pease, the case was this; John Warren was seised in fee of the mannor of Warners, and of the mannor of Cherchall, and demised his mannor of Warners to the youngest son of Richard Foster his cosin in fee, at which time Richard the father had issue George Foster and John Foster. And he demised his mannor of Cherchall in hæc verba.

[25] I will my mannor of Cherchall to Margery Water for her life, and if she die, and then any of my cousin Fosters sons then living, then I will my foresaid mannor of Cherchall unto him that shall have my manner of Warners, and after the devisor died without issue, and the reversion of the mannor of Cherchall discended to Henry Warner as brother and heire of the devisor. And after the said Henry Warner by deed inrolled, did bargain and sell the mannor of Cherchall to Anthony Browne, who devised it to the plaintiff: and then George Foster dies without issue, and the mannor of Warners does discend to John Foster his brother and heire, who enters and enfeoffs the Lord Rich, and after marriage the tenant for life of the mannor of Cherchall dies, and the plaintiff enters, and the defendant enters upon him as servant to John Foster, whereupon the plaintiff brought this action: and judgment was given for the plaintiff, because that the words and the intent of the devise was, that the mannors of Warners and Cherchall should go together, and therefore the mannor of Warners was sold before the death of Margery, by John Foster, and after the death of Margery, John can take nothing by the devise.

HAMBLETONS CASE.

John Hambleton had issue foure sons, John the eldest, Robert the second, Richard the third, and Thomas the fourth, and devised to each of them a parcell of land, to them and the heirs males of their body begotten, and if it happen that any of their heirs dye without issue male of his body lawfully begotten, then the survivor to be each others heire. If these words make a remainder, or are void, was the question. And it was adjudged against the plaintiff, for the Court held that all those that survived were joynt-tenants, and one joynt-tenant cannot have a trespasse against the other, for by the intent of the will, it appears that the survivors should have that part, and the survivority of each other heire, each survivor, that is, all that survive shall be each others heire, and so the remainder should be to every one of them.

Webbe against Potter.

In an ejectione firmæ by Webbe against Potter, the case was; Harris gave land in frank-marriage to one White, and the deed was dedi & concessi Iohan. White in liberum maritagium Iohannæ filiæ meæ habend. dictæ Ioannæ & heredibus in perpetuum tenend. de capitalibus dominis feodi illius, with warranty to John White and his heires. Periam, The usual words in frank-marriage shall not be destroyed, for the words of frank-marriage are, Liberum maritagium cum Ioanna filia mea, in the ablative case, and although here it be in the dative case, it is good. And of the same opinion were all the Judges.

Also a gift in frank-marriage made after the espousals was held good by all the justices, 2 H. 3. Donor 199. 4 Ed. 3. 8. Dyer 262 B. And a gift in frank-marriage before the statute was a fee-simple, but now speciall taile, and if it be not a frank-marriage, he shall have an estate for life, and to prove this his opinion, he relied upon the intention of the donors which ought to be observed: for if the habendum does crosse the premisses it shall be void, but the remainder is good for the benefit of a stranger, but a rent cannot be reserved upon such a gift, during the four degrees, but after the reversion is good, if he do attorne to the grantee of the reversion.

Windham, Frank-marriage is not an estate in taile, for there wants the word, heires, Coke lib. 1. 103. So a gift to a man & semini suo, 10 Ass. 26. and after Meade agreed with Windham although the grounds of frank-marriage were not observed, yet that it was good; for although there be no tenure between the donor and donee, yet is it a good frank-marriage.

Dyer, It is no good frank-marriage, because the usuall words are not observed, and if the word liberum be omitted, it is not frank-marriage, neither is it good given to a man, but it must be to a woman, for a man cannot give land to a woman causa matrimonii prælocuti: and in this case the party ought to be of the blood of the donor, who by possibility may be inheritable to him, and there ought to be a tenure between them, and an acquittall, and if any faile, it is no frank-marriage, and he said further, that if it once takes effect as frank-marriage, and then the donor grants the reversion, or the reversion discends to the donees, yet it shall not be destroyed, but shall remaine as an estate in taile, and not for life, because it once took effect in the donees and their issues, and if land be given to a man in frank-marriage, the remainder in taile, yet this shall not destroy the frank-marriage, and the donee shall hold of the donor, and not of him in the remainder: and if one give land in frank-marriage, the remainders to the donees in taile, yet is this a good frank-marriage, and if the donor grants over his services, yet doth the frank-marriage continue, although the donees attorn, for they are incident to the reversion, and therefore the grant is void, but if the reversion be granted the services will passe, and he concluded that the husband had all, and the wife nothing, because no estate to her is mentioned in the premisses, and he could not construe the words to be the intent of the donor, for here is an expresse limitation of the fee to the husband [27] and his heirs, which cannot be controlled by intendment. And after 25 Eliz. it was adjudged to be no frank-marriage, nor gift in taile, but a fee-simple: and the justices said, that the ancient books were that where it took not effect as a frank-marriage, it should be in especiall taile, yet those at this time are not law: but they agreed, that this at one time took effect as frank-marriage, and by matter ex post facto may be made an estate in taile.

GIBBS CASE.

Gibbs brought an action of trover against Basil, for a gelding; the case was.

One Porter stole this gelding from the plaintiff, and sold him to the defendant in open market, by the name of Lister, and it was entred so in the toll book that Lister sold him.

The question was, if this alteration of his name shall make any alteration of the property, although the sale was in open market.

Windham and Rhodes Justices, held this no good sale to bar the plaintiff, and grounded their opinion on the statute of the 2, and 3. Phil. and Mar. cap. 7. which provides that no property of stollen goods shall be altered that are sold, unlesse the name and surname of the parties to the sale be written in the toll-book: and Shuttleworth moved, that it should be in the market, and walked there for an houre together, which is not set forth by the defendant in his bar; but the justices said, that such speciall plea need not to be, but shall be intended.

ROUSES CASE.

It was moved in this case, that if tenant for terme dauter vie, does continue and hold in his estate, after the death of cestuy que vie: if he be a disseisor, and whether in pleading, the plea ought to be seised and not possest.

Shuttleworth, He was legally in at first, and therefore cannot be a disseisor, 15 Ed. 4. 41. A freehold could not be gained where he came in by the agreement of the party, and 12 Ass. 22. where the husband and wife were seised of a freehold, and after were divorced by suit, on the womans part, whereby the woman is to have all the land, yet if the husband continue possession and dies seised, this discent shall not take away entry, because he was no disseisor.

Gawdy, He is tenant at sufferance and no disseisor, and there it was moved, that if tenant at sufferance, or a disseisor makes copies of copyhold lands, if they be good or voidable: and note that Wilde took here a diversity between a termor that holds over, and a tenant at sufferance; for in case of a tenant at sufferance, there is no freehold taken from the lessor, which the continuance of possession doth not take from him, but where the tenant holds over his terme, there the freehold is disturbed, and therefore there is a disseisin: but at that present it seemed to the Judges that there was no diversity. But [28] the next terme Godfrey moved, that if tenant for anothers life held over his estate he had fee-simple, and he granted that it was otherwise in some cases, for if he claim to be tenant at the will of the lessor, he shall not gaine a fee-simple: for Littleton in his Chapter of Releases. 108. saith, that tenant at sufferance is where a man in his own wrong doth convey lands and tenements at the will of him that hath the freehold, and such occupyer claimeth nothing but at will. But in this case the tenant claimes otherwise then at will of the lessor, he does not claim any thing but at the will of the lessor; as in the case of Littleton, but claimes to hold over against the will of the lessor, which is no tenant at sufferance, and 10 Ed. 4. if a man makes a lease at will, and the lessor dies, and he continues possession and claims fee, the heire shall have a mordancester, and 18 Ed. 4. 25. if cestuy que use dies, and the tenant continues in, and the tenant is impleaded, the lessor shall not be received, and the reason is, because there is no reversion in him, but the tenant hath it, and 22 Ed. 4. 38. by Hussey Justice, If a termor holds over his terme, there an estate in fee is confest to be in him by matter of law, but it is a doubt whether he be a disseisor or not, but it seemeth not, for a trespasse doth not lye against him before regresse, and in the 7 H. 4. 43. If a guardian holds the possession at the full age of the heir, or tenant for years after his terme expired, the estate shall be judged in fee. And in our case he hath not claimed to hold at will, for he hath done contrary, for he hath made copies.

By all the justices, if tenant at will, or for years, or at sufferance, make a lease for years, this is a disseisin, and a tenant at will doth thereby gaine a freehold, and thereby doth claim a greater estate then he ought, and so it is in this case.

2. Admitting him to be tenant at sufferance, the question is, if he may grant copies, and if whether they be good: and it seems he may, for no trespasse lies against him, because he is dominus pro tempore, and it is not like a copy made by an abator or disseisor, for it hath been adjudged that copies made by them are void, but in this case his act of making copies agrees with the custome; as in Grisbrooks case, if an administrator sells goods, and paies debts with the money, and after he who is executor proves the will, he shall never avoid this sale, for that it was done according to the will which the executors were compelled to do: so in the 12 H. 6. if a baily cuts trees and repaires an ancient pale, this is good, and 6 R. 2. if he paies quit-rents it is good.

Coke, He comes in by right, and therefore is tenant at sufferance, and like this case is Dyer 35 H. 8. 57. Lord Zouches case, where cestuy que use for life, the remainder over in taile, made a leaso for the terme of the life of the lessee, and dies, and the lessee continues his estate. And the opinions of the justices of both benches were, that he is but tenant at sufferance.

Popham, If a mannor be devised to one, and the devisee enters and makes copies, and then the devise is found to be void, yet the copies of surrender made by such devisee are good; but contrary where new or voluntary copies are made by him, 7 Eliz. and in the Lord Arundells case, a feoffment in fee was made of a mannor upon condition, the feoffee upon condition grants voluntary copies, those are good.

Atkins, on the contrary: and he made a difference between a tenant at will, and a tenant at sufferance, for a tenant at will shall [29] have aid, but so shall not the other, as in the 2 H. 4. and a release to one is good, to the other not, &c. and whereas he holds over he doth assume an interest which shall not be thought wrongfull, for he is neither abator nor disseisor, and therefore dominus, and therefore the copies made by him are good, 4 H. 7. 3. Tenant at sufferance may justifie for damage-feasant. And all the justices held for the plaintiff, and that he that made the copy was but tenant at sufferance, and not disseisor, and that he had no fee. And the judgment was to be entred, unless the defendant shewed better matter.

N. that then if the money were not paid at such a day, that then he, viz. the said Smith would pay the money: upon which assumpsit after the day I. D. brought his action on the case, and did set forth in his declaration that he did not implead I. N. and it was moved by Kingsmill, that he could not have this action untill I. N. be dead, for so long as he lives I. D. hath time to implead him. As if a man promiseth another that he will be named in his action that he hath against a third person, and if the third person payes not the money at such a day, then he will, he cannot sue unlesse he shewes he hath discharged the other of the obligation.

Clench, It is implied that he will never implead him.

Shuttleworth Justice, Not so, for if hereafter he sue him contrary to his promise, then the other who made the assumpsit shall have his action on the case, and recover to the value of the summ in the bond. And after the case was moved again, and the plaintiff brought the obligation in Court, and thereupon the obligation was entred, so that now the plaintiff could not implead I. N. in posterum, for which judgment was entred for the plaintiff.

William Warren brought an action of debt for forty pounds, and in his declaration confessed satisfaction of twenty pounds, and hereupon a writ of error was brought in the Kings Bench, and the judgment reversed: for by his declaration he had abated his owne writ, and he ought to have judgment according to his writ, and not to his count. And error was brought upon the outlawry; for if the first record was reversed, the outlawry thereupon is reversed.

4 AND 5 PHIL. & MAR.

Benlowes Serjeant moved this case, a man seised of lands and tenements in London, devises them by these words.

Nota, for Brook Justice said, that it was in ancient time used in divers places of this realm, and had been taken for an inheritance: to which Dyer agreed.

CASE OF SLANDER.

Brook said, that if a man speak many slanderous words of another, he who is slandred may have an action on the case for any one of these words, and may omit the others: but if a man write many slanderous things of another in a letter to a friend, an action upon the case will not lye, for it shall not be intended that it is done to the intent to have it published.

Dyer, The writ shall not abate, for the action is not brought in [31] their own

A man seised of the mannor of Dale, doth let the same with all the members and appurtenances to the same, to have and to hold all the members of the said mannor to the lessee, for terme of years.

Walsh and Weston were of opinion that this was a lease for years of the mannor onely, and that the limitation of the word, members, being after the habendum was void. But Dyer and Browne were of the contrary opinion: and Browne said, that when the habendum is used by way of limitation, it shall not be void. As if he let his mannor of Dale, to have and to hold one acre parcell thereof for a terme of years, the lease is void for all, but if there had been no habendum but the lease for years had been limited in the premisses of the lease, that is good enough: and if the lease had been habendum every part thereof, that had been a good lease of the mannor, for all the parts comprehend all the mannor. And Dyer said, that the word, members, shall be taken for the townes and hamblets wherein the mannor hath jurisdiction.

Note, it was said by Dyer, that if partition be made by the sheriff, although the writ be not returned, yet it is good enough, and none of the parties shall except against it, and so was the better opinion concerning the estate of Culpeper and Navall in the county of Kent.

Sutton brought a writ of ravishment of a ward against Robinson, wherein it was resolved by Dyer, Carus, Weston, and Benlowes, that if the tenant enfeoff his lord and others, all the seigniory is extinct: also if the tenant does infeoff the lord but of a moyety, yet is all the seigniory extinct: and Dyer said, that if the tenant does infeoff the lord and a stranger to the use of another and his heires, and makes livery to the stranger, this is no extinguishment of the seigniory, but if the livery were made to the lord, it is otherwise; and yet is the possession instantly carried away to the stranger by the statute of 2 H. 7. 13.

[32] A man seised of lands devises the same to his wife, to dispose and imploy them for her self and her son, according to her will and pleasure.

Dyer, Weston, and Walson held that the wife had a fee-simple by the intendment of the will, and the estate is conditionall, for ea intentione will make a condition in a devise, but not in grant, vide Dyer 26. 6.

S. for foure and twenty years. And it came into question between I. S. and the termor, if this was warranted by the 27 H. 8. 28. Harper and Portrell, It is not, for the statute is, that they may make leases of any mannors, lands, tenements, and hereditaments for one and twenty years, &c. and this wheat is neither land, tenement, nor hereditament, but a chattell, and shall be demanded in an action of debt. But the opinion of all the Court was, that the lease was good, and they did agree that it was directly within the word hereditaments, for it may discend or escheat, and the wife shall be endowed thereof. Also upon a lease of corne a rent may be reserved, for a man may reserve a rent upon a lease of a rent, and the rent is not parcell of the reversion, but onely incident thereunto, and the lessor hath the same inheritance therein as he hath in the reversion.

Winter brought an action of the case against Barnam for these words; viz. In this case it was the opinion of the Court, that the said Nicholas had no property in the said plate, but onely the use and occupation. And the same law where the devise was that his wife should inhabit in one of his houses which he had for terme of years, during her life, because the wife takes no interest in the terme, but onely an occupation and usage, out of which the executors cannot eject her during her life, but Walsh held the contrary.

In this case which was put by Coke, it was agreed, that a stranger as Cornwall in this case was, could not tender the money to be paid upon the mortgage, for it ought to be one who hath interest in the land: and so was it in the 28 H. 8. between Whaydon and Ashford, where the mother ought to have made the tender for her son within age, and because it did not appear within the verdict what age the infant was, whether he was of the age of fourteen years, or more, so that his mother could be guardian to him by reason of his nurture or not, it was awarded that she could not make a loyall tender.

In an assumpsit for a hundred pounds, the case was; That the defendant in consideration of a French crown given him by the plaintiff, did assume and promise, that if he did not such an act before such a time, that then, &c. It was moved by Godfrey, that the plaintiff can onely recover so much as he is damnified by the French crown: and the like case was before the Chancellor, where a gentlewoman took the death of her husband so heavily, that she said, she would never marry againe: and her son comforted her, and said, God will provide a new husband, and said, that he would give her ten pounds to pay a hundred, when she should marry, which money she accepted of, and then the son brought an assumpsit for the hundred pounds within half a year after she married. And the matter was brought into the Chancery: and the Master of the Rolls awarded ten pounds onely, and said, he would give never a penny more, because it was unreasonable to bar a gentlewoman from marriage.

The Lord Rich was seised of Hadley Park, and of all the tythes thereof, and payed for the tythes but one buck in the summer, and a doe in the winter for thirty years past. The park was disparked and turned into arrable land, and the parson would not receive this fee buck and doe, but would have tythe corne, and thereupon [35] brought him into the Spirituall Court, and he brought a prohibition. And Carus and Catlin said, that he need not pay other tythes but buck and doe, for although they be not tythable, yet may they be paid by composition, and he may not take them, but they are to be delivered to him: and in like manner partridges and pheasants in a garden are not tythable, yet may they be paid in lieu of tythes, and shall be brought dead to the parson, and although there be no park, yet may he give a buck out of another park, and perhaps it may be made a park agen.

B. a mans eldest son is good, although his name be not B. because the other words do make a sufficient certainty.

It was said, that by the grant panagium hoggs may eat the grass, but if a man grant his acrons, the grantee must gather them, and where panagium is granted the grantee may put in his hoggs into the place granted.

If tenant for years hold over his terme, he is tenant at sufferance, and his descent shall not take away entrie: but if tenant for terme of anothers life holds over his terme, he is an intruder, and his descent shall take away entrie. Quod fuit concessum per Dyer.

A court baron may be holden at any place within the mannor, but not out of the mannor, and so a leete may be held in any place within the liberty and franchise, and although no court hath time out of mind been holden within the mannor, yet it is not thereby lost, for it is incident to a mannor of common right, Coke L. 4. 26. 6. 27. MICH. 14 AND 15 ELIZ.

An account was brought by Tottenham against Bedingfeild, who pleaded ne unques son baily pur account render.

Gawdy prayed the opinion of the Court if the action would lye. And the case was thus.

The plaintiff had a lease of a parsonage, and the defendant, not being lessee, nor claiming any interest, took the tythes being set forth, and carried them away. If the lessor may have an account against such trespassor, was the question.

Manwood Justice, An account will not lye because there is no pri-[36]-vity, and wrongs are always without privity, yet I will grant that if H. receive my rents, I may have an account against him, for my assent to have him receive it makes a privity, and when he hath received the rent, he hath not committed any wrong against me, because it is not my money till it is paid: and therefore in this case I may resort to my tenant, and compell him to pay the rent to me because the receit is no wrong: but it is otherwise in the first case, for when the tythes are set forth, they are presently in the possession of the parson, so that when the defendant takes them, he is a wrong seisor of them, and therefore no account will lye against him. And so was it adjudged in a case of a mannor in London, where one under colour of a devise did occupy the land for twenty years, which will afterwards was made void; and thereupon he to whom the right of the land belonged brought an account, and it was adjudged that it would not lye.

Harper, An account will lye against a procter, so that the plaintiff may charge him as procter, and it is no plea for him to say he is no procter, no more then it is for a guardian in socage to say, he is not prochein amy.

Dyer, There are three actions of account. One against a baily, another against a receiver, the third against a guardian in socage. And if an account be brought against a man as receiver, he must be charged with the receipt of the money: but if the defendant pretends he is owner of it, it is contrary to the nature of an account, and therefore he is not chargeable in such action, but he may plead ne unque son baily pur account render: for in an account (as my brother Manwood said) there must be privity: but an abator or an intruder shall not be charged in an account, because they pretend to be owners. But in this case the lessee may have an action of trespasse against him, for the tythes were immediatly upon the setting forth in the possession of the lessee, and by the statute of the 31 H. 8. 7. he may have an ejectione firmæ: but an account will not lye in this case.

Tenant in dower commits waste, and the waste was assigned in this case, that the lessee had destroyed a hundred does of the plaintiffs, whether this was waste or no, was the question.

Dyer, I think it no waste, unlesse she had destroyed all the deer.

Manwood, If a lessee of a pigeon house destroy all the old pigeons, except one or two, yet it is a waste, and so is this, although all be not destroyed.

MICH. 15 ELIZ.

A man is indebted by obligation in a hundred pounds to a testator, this obligation is not assets in the hands of the executors untill it be recovered by them, because it is but a chose in action; but if in such case the executor release the debt now he hath determined the action, and hath made it assets in his hands to the whole value of the bond.

[37] BLISS AGAINST STAFFORD.

Margaret Bliss who was in remainder after an estate in taile, did bring an action on the case against Edward Strafford, for slandring her title in affirming that A. had issue one B. who is alive, and the defendant pleaded not guilty, and the action adjudged good by all: but did abate for an exception to the count.

PASCH. 13 ELIZ.

Upon the Statute of Recusancy made the 29 of Elizabeth, Thomas Salherd and Henry Evered being committed of recusancy, for not paying twenty pounds for every month, a commission was awarded to enquire of their goods and lands in Suffolk to levy the said debt; and amongst other lands certain copyhold lands were seised, and being returned, the parties came in, and by way of plea did set forth, that some of their lands seised were copyhold, and did pray quod manus Dominæ Reginæ amoveantur, and hereupon the Queens Attorney demurred; upon which the question was, if copyhold lands were within the said statute of the 29 Eliz.

Snagge, The lands and hereditaments which the statute speaks of, are such as are known by the common law, and not by custome, for if I grant all my lands and hereditaments in D. my copyhold lands will not passe: so that it seems to me copyholds are not within the statute.

Popham contra. If copyhold lands are not within the statute, some persons shall be free; and he held that lands in ancient demesne were within the meaning of the statute, although not within the words: and he agreed, that where a grant is made of all my lands and tenements in D. that copyhold lands passe not, because they cannot passe by such assurance, and that copyhold lands were not within the Statute of Bankrupts, if they be not particularly expressed, and a copyhold cannot passe by grant but by surrender. But after great debate it was adjudged, that copyhold lands are not within the statute by reason of the prejudice that may come thereby to the lord, who hath not committed any offence, and therefore shall not loose his customes and services.

TRIN. 30 ELIZ.

In the case of Viscount Bindon, it was holden that if a man hath judgment in debt upon an obligation and no execution, yet he may commence another action upon the same obligation, but otherwise of contract, 9 Ed. 4. 51.

A question was moved, that if a man grants vesturam terræ what doth passe: and it was said by Clerk, that one man may have the vesture & another the soil. Lord Chief Baron, He who hath vesturã terræ cannot dig the land: and if many have a meadow together, viz. to be divided amongst them every year by lots how much every one shall have of grasse in such a place, and how many in such a place, and so to change [38] every year according to the lots, they have not a freehold, but onely vesturam terræ, Dyer 285. 6. 14 H. 7. 4. & 6. 21 H. 7. 37. Dyer 375. 6. 13 H. 6. 13. 14 H. 8. 6.

In the case of a dean and chapter, the question was, that if lessee for years be rendring rent with clause of re-entry for non-payment, and then the reversion or rent be extended by a statute, or seised into the hands of the King for debt, if the lessee shall pay the rent according to the extent, and no breach of the condition although he pay not the lessor. And the Chief Baron held it was no breach of the condition, because he is now compellable to pay it according to the extent.

CALTONS CASE.

It was moved by Serjeant Fenner, and agreed by all the barons, that if the King make a lease to A. rendring rent, and there the lessee lets parcell hereof, rendring rent, in this case the second lessee shall not have the priviledge of the Exchequer to fly thither to be sued concerning this land, because that by such means all the causes in England, may be brought into the Exchequer, and hereupon Fenner said, that he had demurred upon a bill exhibited into the Exchequer Chamber by such a lessee, and prayed the Court that he might not answer, and he was thereupon dismist.

Upon not guilty pleaded, the parties joyned issue, and after evidence given, and the jury dismist from the Bar, some of them had apples, and figgs, whereof the Court taking notice when they came to give their verdict, did examine them upon their oathes, and they who had eaten were fined five pounds, and committed to the Fleet. And some of the justices did doubt if the verdict were good; and upon many presidents had, it was adjudged good: and they relyed much on the president of the 12 H. 8. Rot. 102. where one of the jury did eat before they were agreed, and yet the verdict was good: and after a writ of error was brought, and the judgment affirmed, 20 H. 7. 3. 13 H. 4. 13.

PASCH. 27 ELIZ.

A man gives land to I. S. in the premisses, habendum to him and three others for their lives, et eorum diutius viventium successive: the question was, what estate I. S. had, and whether there be any occupancy in the case.

Coke held, that I. S. had but an estate for his own life, because he cannot have an estate for his own and anothers life, where the interest of both begin at one instant, and the habendum by no means can make a remainder; as if a lease be made to one for life, habendum to him and his first begotten son, this makes no remainder to the son, although some have held to the contrary: so of a lease to one for years, habendum to him and another, does not make any remainder to the other: also the word, successive, will not make a remainder, as in the 30 H. 8. Br. Joynt-tenant 53. Also one cannot have an estate for life, and [39] for anothers life also in present interest, for the greater doth drowne the lesse, but if the greater be present and the other future, as a lease to him for life, the remainder to him for anothers life, or a lease for life and three years over, this is good; but if a lease be made for life and for years, the lease for years is drowned, 19 Ed. 3. Surrender 8. where tenant for life of a mannor did surrender to him in the reversion, &c.

Gawdy, If a lease be made to one for life, and so long as another shall live, quære, what estate he hath.

And as to the second point, certainly there cannot be an occupancy, for if the estate be void, the limitation is void; also the occupancy is pleaded que un tiel, and does not say, claymant comme occupant, &c. for if a man comes a hawking on land, he is not an occupant, and the book of entries is, that he ought to plead it.

Clinch Justice, Every occupant ought to be in possession at the time of the death of the tenant, for otherwise the law casts the interest upon him in the reversion. But Gawdy and Chute denied this: and after, viz 29 Eliz. the case was moved again by Popham, and he made three points.

1. If the other three had a joynt estate.
2. If they had a remainder.
3. If there be an occupancy. And he was of opinion that they had nothing by the habendum, for they were not named in the premisses, & they cannot have a remainder for the incertainty, but if those three had been named in the premisses, habendum to them successive, as they had been named, there they had a remainder, for there the certainty appeared, 30 H. 8. 8. Dyer 361. Also there can be no occupancy during the lives of the other three: but he agreed to the book of the 18 Ed. 3. 34. that a lease for life, the remainder to him for anothers life was good: and that if a lease be made to I. S. and a monk, it is void to the monk, and the other hath all, and that during the life of the monk there can be no occupancy. And if I make a lease to I. S. for the life of a monk, it is a good lease: and till the same terme judgment was given, that they could take nothing in possession joyntly, nor by way of remainder, and that no occupancy could be in the case, and that I. S. had estate for terme of his owne life onely.

STILE AGAINST MILES.

Stile parson did suggest that the land was parcell of the glebe of the parsonage, and that the said Stile did let the said glebe, being foure and twenty acres to Miles for years, rendring thirteen shillings foure pence rent; and in a prohibition the case was, if tythes were to be paid. And Wray said, that although it was parcell of the glebe, yet when it was leased out tythes ought to be paid, and if no rent be reserved, tythes ought to be paid without question: but there may be a doubt where the rent is reserved to the true value of the land; but here the rent is of small value, wherefore tythes shall be paid also. And the reservation of the rent was pro omnibus exactionibus & demandis; yet the justices took no regard of those words. But Godfrey said, that those words would discharge him; but Wray on the contrary, for that this tythe is not issuing out of the land, but is a thing collaterall, and if a parson do release to his parishioners [40] all demands in the land, yet tythes are not thereby released, for such generall words will not extend to such a speciall matter. And in the 15 of R. 2. Avowry 99. one held of another by ten shillings for all services, suits, and demands; yet the tenant shall pay relief, because it is incident to the rent, and 8 Ed. 3. 26.

STEPHENS AGAINST LAYTON.

In an ejectione firmæ upon issue joyned, the case in a speciall verdict was, that a lease by indenture was made by William Beale to one William Pyle and Philip his wife & primogenito habend. to them, & diutius eorum viventi successive for terme of their lives, and then the husband and wife had issue a daughter: the question was, if the daughter had any estate. And three justices held that she had no estate, because she was not in being at the time of the lease made, and a person that is not in esse cannot take any thing by livery, for livery ought to carry a present estate, where the estate is not limited by way of remainder, 18 Ed. 3. 3. 17 Ed. 3. 29 & 30 adjudged:

but it was said at the Bar, that if the estate had been conveyed by way of use, it is otherwise. And the said justices held clearly that the word successive, would not alter the case: and the case was further found, that William Beale and Sampson Beale did covenant with one Lendall, that if Tho. Beale son of Sampson Beale, should marry Margaret the daughter of the said Lendall (if she would assent) and also that the said Lendall did covenant that the said Margaret should marry the said Thomas (if he would assent) pro quo quidem Maritagio sic tum postea habendo, the said William Beale covenanted, that he would make, or cause to be made an estate to the said Thomas and Margaret, and to the heirs of their bodies for the joynture of the said Margaret, and it was further found, that afterward a fine was levied between the said Thomas and Margaret plaintiffs and Sampson Beale and William Beale deforceants, qui quidem finis fuit ad usus & intentiones in indentura prædict. specificat. by force whereof the said Thomas and Margaret were seised: but the jury found nothing of the marriage, whether it took effect or not; and further found that William Pile and Philip his wife had primogenitam prolem a daughter, and then died, and then Thomas Beale died, and his wife intermarried with one Lamock, who made a lease to the plaintiff, who was ousted by Layton the lessee of Philip Pile. And hereupon it was moved by Gawdy Serjeant, that inasmuch as the marriage took no effect between Thomas and Margaret, the uses cannot be in them, but the fine shall be to the use of the conusor, which was opposed by Walmesley Serjeant, who said, that it was not like a covenant in consideration of marriage to stand seised of such a mannor, for there if the considerations faile, the uses faile also, for the consideration onely is the sole and entire cause that makes the uses to arise: but in this case the consideration is not materiall, but the fine effectuall, without consideration of money paid: and if a feoffment be made to the use of I. S. although no money be paid, yet I. S. shall have the land.

[41] Windham, The cases differ much, for here the fine is not exprest to be levied to the use of Thomas and Margaret, but to the uses and consents contained in the indenture: but he said, that the common course was to limit the use to the conusor, untill the marriage took effect, and after, as before was urged by Walmsley. And the jury found that Thomas and Margaret, were seised accordingly.

Windham, They are no judges to determine doubts in law.

Rhodes, Justice, Herein they have taken notice but of the matter in fact, and he affirmed the difference put by Walmsley.

Windham, The case de matrimon: prælocut: is stronger that this case, for the secret intention shall reduce the land, if the marriage take no effect. And after (the Court being full) they all agreed to the difference put by Walmsley, and also that the sale afterwards was not good by reason of this limitation. And judgment was given for the plaintiff accordingly.

Hil. 26 Eliz.

Britman against Stanford.

Upon a speciall verdict, the case was. A house, stable, and hayloft were demised to one for yeares, rendring foure and twenty pounds rent per annum, and foure and twenty pounds for an in-come, quarterly by equall portions, upon condition that if any of the rent or in-come be behind at the time it ought to be paid, that then the lease shall cease and determine. The lessee makes a lease of the stable to the lessor, and after part of the in-come is behind and unpaid, and the lessor enters for the condition broken, into the house: and if this was a good entry, was the question. And judgment was given that the condition was gone and void, by reason of the lessors taking part of the thing demised, because a condition is speciall and intire, and not to be severed. And in this case Fenner said, that a grantee of a reversion cannot take benefit of a collaterall condition, as in case of a grosse summe, but in case of a rent, waste, &c. it was otherwise.

DOCTOR LEWIN AGAINST MUNDAY.

In a replevin by Lewin against Munday, it was found by verdict, that a fine was levied the 14th of Elizabeth, between Lowla and Rutland, plaintiffs, and Fook and seven others deforceants of the mannors of Gollochall, whereby the defendant did grant the mannor to the plaintiffs, and the heires of one of them, who granted and rendred twenty pounds per annum to the said Fook and his heires, with a distresse for non-payment. Fook seised of the rent, makes a grant to a stranger in this manner; that whereas a fine was levied the 14. of Eliz. of the mannor aforesaid, and divers other lands, &c. and mistook the mannor, for he put the names of the conusees in place [42] of the conusors, and so e contra, and that it was levied of the mannor, and divers other lands, whereas the fine was levied of the mannor solely; and that he did grant the said rent, granted unto him to the said stranger and his heires: and this grant was adjudged good by Anderson who said, that if one recite that he hath ten pounds of the grant of I. S. whereas it was of the grant of I. D. yet it is good.

HIL. 30 ELIZ. ROT. 17. 32.

HUNTS CASE.

Hunt brought an action on the case against Torney, and declared that he being seised of lands in Swainton in Norf. in fee, secundum consuetudinem mannerii; the defendant did promise to the plaintiff, in consideration the plaintiff would permit him to occupy the same for the space of five years, that he would pay him at the Feast of All-Saints next coming, and so yearly twenty pounds at the Feasts of the Annunciation, and All-Saints by equall portions, during the terme aforesaid, and alledged that he had injoyed the lands by the space of a year and half, and so brought his action on the assumpsit. And Anderson was of opinion that untill the five years were expired, no money was to be paid, because the contract was intire. But all the other justices on the contrary, for the consideration was to pay a certain summe yearly, which made severall duties and so severall actions. For by Periam, if a man be bound to pay I. S. twenty pounds in manner and forme following, viz. ten pounds at such a day, and ten pounds at such a day, in this case the obligee cannot have an action of debt for the first, before the day of payment of the last ten pounds be past, because the duty in it self is an intire duty, but if a man be bound to pay I. S. ten pounds at such a day, and ten ponnds at such a day, here the obligee shall have his action for the first, because the duty was in it self severall.

Anderson at another day said, that if a man makes a lease for ten years, rendring rent, in that case he may have an assumpsit for the rent due every year: so if I covenant with you to build you twenty houses, the covenantee shall have a severall action for each default.

Periam, That case of the assumpsit is much to the purpose, for an assumpsit is in the nature of a covenant, and is indeed a covenant without writing.

Rhodes cited this case. Gascoigne promised in consideration of a marriage of his daughter with such a mans son, to give seven hundred marks, and to pay a hundred marks every year, untill all the summ were paid, and it was held clearly in this Court, that a severall action might be brought upon every hundred pounds, but because the action was brought for all the seven hundred marks before the seven years were out, judgment was given against him, for if a man be bound in a bond of a hundred pounds to pay twenty pounds for so many years, he shall not have an action of debt until the last year expired. And after judgment was given for the plaintiff, viz. Mich. 29 Eliz. Rot. 2248.

Adjudged by the Court, that if for not scouring of a ditch or mote, the groundsells of the house are putrified, or trees cut downe which are in defence of the house, whereby the house by tempests is blown down, waste shall be assigned in domibus pro non scourando, &c.

In an ejectione firmæ, Broker Prothonotary said, that where the title of him in the reversion is not disclosed in pleading, nor cometh in question, aid shall not be granted.

Pasch. 28 Eliz. In C. B.

Yardley against Pescan.

The Queen seised of an advowson being void, the ancestor of Pescan presented, and so gained it by usurpation, and then the church being void, he presented again, and his clark is now dead, and then the Queen grants the advowson to Yardley the plaintiff, and he brings a quare impedit in the name of the Queen, supposing that this usurpation did not put the Queen out of possession, and it was argued that the grant could not passe without speciall words, because it is of the nature of a chose in action, and this was moved the last terme, and then Dyer, Meade, and Windham held that this usurpation did gaine possession out of the Queen, and that she should be put to her writ of right of advowson, and now this terme Fenner moved the case againe, and the opinion of Anderson that was the Chief Justice of the Common Pleas, was clearly, that the Queen was not out of possession, for he said, that it was a rule in our books, that of a thing which is of inheritance, the act of a common person will not put the Queen out of possession, but if she had but a chattell, as the next advowson, then perhaps it is otherwise: but Meade, and Windham held very earnestly the contrary, and they relied on the book of 18 Ed. 3. 15. where Shard said, that if the King had an advowson in his owne right, and a stranger who had no right did happen to present, that put the King out of possession. And the King shall be put to his writ of right, as others shall. Vide 47 Ed. 3. 14 B. 18 Ed. 3. 16. The defendant there did alledge two presentments in his ancestor after the title of the King, and demanded judgment if the King should have a writ of possession, and the plea was admitted to be good; but after Pasch. 25 Eliz. judgment was given for the Queen, for that she might very well maintain a quare impedit, and the two presentments did not put her out of possession.

[44] 31 Eliz. Rot. 211.

Sir Robert Rowley made the Lord Keeper Sir Robert Catlin, and the Master of the Rols, his executors, and did devise a terme to Sir Robert Catlin, and died: and they writ their letters to the Ordinary, certifying that they were made executors, but that they could not attend the executing of the executorship, and therefore they required him to commit the administration to the next of kin, ut lex postulat. The Ordinary enters in the register, quia executores prædicti per testamentum prædictum distulerunt, &c. and thereupon committed the administration over: afterwards the Lord Catlin received the rent of the farme, and after granted it to a stranger; the administrator ousted the lessee, and he brings an ejectment. And if this writing was a refusall in the executors, or not, was the question: and it was said by Ford Doctor of the Civill Law, that it was a refusall, and he said, that if legatees being executors do refuse to prove the will, yet by the civill law they shall have their legacies. But adjudged by the Court, that if legatees do refuse to prove the testament, that by the common law they have no remedy for their legacies, for by the refusall there is a dying intestate, and then nothing could be devised; and also, said, that this writing was a refusall of the executors, so that the Ordinary might presently commit administration, and therefore Sir Robert Catlin could take nothing as legatee.

The array of a pannell was challenged, because the sheriff was cosin to the plaintiff, and upon a traverse it was found that they were cosins, but not in such manner as the defendant had alledged; and per Curiam, the array was quasht, for the manner is not materiall, but whether he be a cosin, or not, 18 H. 6. 18

PASCH. 31 ELIZ.

It was resolved in the case of Miles against Snowball, that if the sheriff return one who hath no freehold, yet he shall be sworne in the jury, if he be not challenged by the parties: and after upon the evidence it was moved. If a woman make a deed of feoffment to severall persons, of a house and land, wherein she herself inhabiteth, and is seised, and delivers the deed to the feoffees, without saying any thing, if this be a good feoffment: of which Periam doubted, because she did inhabit there all the time, but if it were of other lands on which she did not dwell, and she comes there to make livery, and delivers the deed upon the land and saies no words, yet is this a good feoffment, because she comes thither to make livery.

Anderson, The feoffment in this case is good, for if she hath an intent to make livery, the delivery of the deed is good livery, quod Periam & tota Curia concesserunt, if she had intended to make livery, vide Co. lib. 6. 26. & lib. 9. 136. Dyer 192.

[45] PASCH. 31 ELIZ.

A woman brought an action of debt as administratrix to another, the defendant pleaded that the plaintiff was an alien born in Gaunt, under the obedience of Philip King of Spaine, the Queens enemy. And Walmsley moved for the plaintiff that this was no plea, because that the recovery is to anothers use: but the Court was against him, for the Court will not suffer that any enemy shall take advantage of our law; and then he moved that that King was no enemy, because wars were not proclaimed. But Anderson said, that a more open enemy then King Philip cannot be, who had conspired the death of the Queen, and had endeavoured to invade the realm, and subvert the State: which Windham granted; but Periam hærebat aliquantulum whether he could be called enemy in law before such proclamation. But Walmsley said, that the plea was that the woman was born under the obedience of the Emperor, who was in amity with the Queen, and the Court replied, Plead as you will abide by it.

BOND AGAINST RICHARDSON.

In debt, the defendant pleaded payment at the day, and gave in evidence payment at another day, before the day of payment, and so was it found by the jury in a speciall verdict. And Anderson said, We are all agreed that judgment shall be given against the plaintiff, for payment before the day, is payment at the day, and judgment was given that the plaintiff should be barred.

Willis against Whitewood.

A man was seised of lands in socage, and made a lease for years by paroll, and died, & his wife was guardian in socage to his son; and the lessee accepted of a new lease by deed of the guardian in socage, and then the guardian died, and a new guardian entred, and ousted the lessee; and if the second guardian could do this, was the question.

Anderson, It cannot be a surrender, for a guardian hath no estate that may be surrendred; but it is an extinguishment of the lease; and [46] if a woman guardian in socage takes husband, and dies, the husband shall not be guardian in socage.

Almeskey against Johnson.

Johnson had a second deliverance returned, which was returned averia eloigniata, &c. whereupon he prayed a withernam of the cattle of the plaintiff, and it was granted; and then came the plaintiff and satisfied the defendant, his damages and charges, and paid a writ of restitution to have his cattle again taken in withernam.

Fleetwood, Cattle taken in withernam are not repleivisable, how then can you have your cattle, and then we shall not be paid for the meat. And the Court held, that the cattle were not repleivisable, but for satisfaction of damages he shall have restitution of the cattle, and so is the course, which was confirmed by the clarks. And Walmesley cited 16 H. 6. replevin to warrant this: and as to the meat, he had the use of the cattle, whereby it was reason he should sustain them: and a writ of restitution was granted.

In case of a farmer of Dame Lineux Manwood, it was said, that the order called the Cistrenses Order, had a priviledge that they should pay no tythes for the lands that propriis manibus excolunt: but if they let it to farmers, then they were to pay tythes, and now comes the Statute of Monasteries 31 H. 8. If the Queen should pay tythes, was the question. And it was said, that the Queen, and her farmers also should hold the land discharged of tythes as well as the particular persons of the order should, for the King cannot be a husband, and therefore his farmers shall hold the land discharged, so long as the King hath the freehold in him, although he make a lease thereof for years, at will, but so if the King sell the land to another, or the reversion to another, then the farmers shall pay tythes.

Mich. 31 Eliz.

It was said by the barons in the case of one Beaumont, that a debt which is not naturally a debt in it self, but a debt onely by circumstance may be assigned to the Queen. As where a man is bound in a bond to save another harmlesse, and failes thereof, the obligation may be assigned to the Queen. But in such case a present extent shall not be awarded but the processe shall be onely a scire facias against the party, to see if he hath any thing to plead against it, which note well.

And where a man recovers damages in an action on the case, parcell of the damages cannot be assigned to the King before execution, for he must bring a scire facias upon such record. And Manwood Chief Baron held clearly that a moyety hereof could not be assigned over, 22 H. 6. 47.

An action of the case was brought against one Gilbert, for saying that the plaintiff was a suitor to a widow in Southwark, and that he cousened her of her money in procuring false witnesses to cousen her: and a verdict found for the plaintiff. And in arrest of judgment it was said, that in the case of Kerby it was adjudged that cousener will not beare action, and so was it adjudged in this case.

MOSSE AGAINST READE.

The defendant called him theef, and thou forgest a deed; and a verdict was found for the plaintiff: and in arrest of judgment, it was said, that theef generally, without saying of what nature specially, will not bear action. But Wray Chief Justice denied that, and said that it had of late been adjudged to the contrary; and Gawdy against him. But as to the words, that he had forged a deed, adjudged that the action will lye, although it be not specially alledged what manner of deed was forged.

Cripps brought a quare impedit against the Bishop of Canterbury, and others, and declared upon a grant of the next avoidance, and the defendant demanded oyer of the deed, and the plaintiff shewed a letter which was written by his father to the true patron, by which he had writ to his father that he had given to his son that was the plaintiff the next avoidance; and upon this there was a demur. And the whole Court for the demur; for that such letter was a mockery, for the grant was not good without deed: and judgment was given accordingly.

Katherine Gilham brought an ejectment as administratrix to her husband, quare determino eject. & bona & catalla sua ibidem inventa cepit, &c. and a verdict for the plaintiff, and it was alledged in arrest of judgment, that this word sua shall not be intended her own goods, and not the testators. BALDWIN AGAINST MORTIN.

Use to the husband and wife, habendum to the husband for thirty years, the wife shall take nothing thereby, and this case was argued at the Bar and Bench, and was called the Earl of Cumberlands case.

Fleetwood moved that an action was brought against the husband and his wife, and did declare a trover of the goods of the plaintiff by the wife, which she converted to her own use, and prayed that the action might be against the husband onely, because that the woman could not convert them to his own use during the coverture, but onely to the husbands use. And the opinion of the Court was, that the writ was good against them both, and that the conversion was in nature of a trespasse, and so the action would well lye.

In a trespasse quare clausum fregit & herbam conculcavit, the defendant pleaded that he tendred sufficient amends to the plaintiff, and he refused the same, and demanded judgment, &c. [49] Sir John Arrundell and his wife, brought a quare impedit against the Bishop of Glocester and others, who pleaded in bar that William Sturton was seised of a mannor to which the advowson was appendant, and bound himself in a statute-merchant of two hundred pounds to one Long, and the statute was extended, and conveyed the interest of the statute to one of the defendants, and then the church became void: and by the Court the advowson may be extended, and if it become void during the conusees estate, the conusee may present.

Note, it was said by the Justices of the Common Pleas, that if a man promise another that he shall have a lease in his land for eight years, or it is agreed amongst themselves that one shall have a lease of the others land for eight yeares, that is no lease of the land, but onely a contract and agreement; but if one promise another that he shall have his land for eight years, or openly agree that one shall have the others land for eight years, this is a good lease for eight years by force of the agreement.

HOLMAN AGAINST COLLINS.

Holman brought a writ of error against Collins, upon a judgment given in the Court of Plymmouth, in the county of Devon, the case was;

Collins was possessed of a peece of ordnance, and in consideration that he would tender this to Holman for to put into his ship which was then going to sea, and that Collins would stand to the hazard of losing it: the said Holman did assume upon himself, and did promise to give Collins certain goods which he should gain by the voyage, and after the said ship did return laden with certain goods, and for non-satisfaction the said Collins brought his action on the assumpsit, and had judgment to recover. And Crook assigned these errors;

1. That the stile of the Court was not good, for it was Curia Dominæ Reginæ burgi prædict. tent. coram Majori de Plymmouth, without saying, secundum consuetudinem villæ prædict. and he who is Judge of the Court, ought to be either by patent or prescription, and then for not expressing the stile of the Court, nor by what authority they held their Court, it is error; and he cited the case in the Lord Dyer 262. and a judgment, 30 Eliz. Rot. 32. given in the very point: another error was, that no day was prefixed for the defendant to appear, but generally ad proximam Curiam, which is error, although it be held every Munday. And for these errors judgment was reversed.

Mercer had judgment to recover against Sparks in the Common Pleas, upon an action of the case for words; and Sparks brought a writ of error in the Kings Bench, and assigned for error, that the plaintiff did not expresse in the declaration that the defendant spake the words malitiose, but it was adjudged, that it was no error, because the words themselves were malicious and slanderous, wherefore judgment was affirmed.

SAVAGRES CASE.

It was adjudged in the Common Pleas, that if a Baron, or others mentioned in the statute of 21 H. 8. take divers chaplaines which have many benefices, and after they discharge their chaplaines from their service, they shall retain their benefices during their lives, and if the Baron takes others to be his chaplaines, they cannot take many benefices during the lives of the others, which are beneficed and discharged of their services; for if the law were otherwise, the Lords might make any capable of holding benefices by admitting them to be their chaplaines.

And Welson said, that so were all the presidents, that it is no plea to traverse the bar in the avowry, without making title: and Periam said, that it is no title to plead de son seisin demesne, but he must make out his title paramount; his seisin demesne.

BLOSS AGAINST HOLMAN.

John Bloss brought an action of trespasse quare vi & armis for taking of his goods, against Holman, and the defendant pleaded not guilty, and the jury gave a special verdict, viz. that the plaintiff at the time of the trespasse was of the Mystery of the Mercers, and that at that time the defendant was his servant, and put in trust to sell his goods and merchandizes in shopa sua, ibidem de tempore in tempus, and that he took the goods of the plaintiff named in the declaration, and carried them away, and prayed the advice of the Court, if the defendant were culpable or not; and upon the postea returned, Shuttleworth prayed judgment for the plaintiff. And the doubt was because the declaration was quare vi & armis, because it appeared that the defendant had custody of the goods: but Shuttleworth doubted whether he had custody, and cited the case of Littleton, viz. If I give my sheep to compasture, &c. and he kills them, an action of trespasse lies: and the justices held that in this case the action did well lye; and Periam said, that the defendant had onely an authority, and not custody or possession, and judgment was given for the plaintiff, 3 H. 7. 12. 21 H. 7. 14. And Windham said, that if he had imbezelld his masters goods, without question it was felony. Quod fuit concessum, (Anderson absente) and the law will not presume that the goods were out of the possession of the plaintiff; and the next day came the Lord Anderson and rehearsed the case, and said, that the defendant had neither generall nor speciall property in the goods, for it is plaine, he could have no generall property, and speciall he had not, for he could not have an action of trespasse if they were taken away, then if he had no property, a trespasse lies against him, if he take them; so if a shepheard steal sheep, it is felony, for he hath no property in them, wherefore he gave judgment accordingly.

COOKE AGAINST BALDWIN.

A lease was made for one and twenty years, to one Truepenny and Elizabeth, if she, and he, or any child, or children between them lawfully begotten, should so long live, and then they were married, and the wife died without issue. If the lease be determined or not, was the question. And it was moved that it was determined, because it is conjunctive, if he and she, &c. and now one of them is dead without issue, and it is not like the case of Chapman, where a man covenants to enfeoff one and his heires, for it is impossible to enfeoff his heires, he living, and therefore in that case it shall be taken for a disjunctive: and if I make a lease for years to two, if one of them dye, the other shall have all, because they take by way of interest; but if a lease be made to two, during the life of one of them, if one dye, the [53] lease is gone. Quod fuit concessum: and here the meaning is, that the lease shall be determined if one of them dye.

Rhodes Justice, The meaning is against you, for by the word (or) which comes after, it appears that they are to have their lives in it.

Anderson, By the words it is plain, that after the death of one the lease is determined, and that which moves me to think it was so intended, is, because it was intended (as it seems to me) to be a joynture for the wife, which was made by them before marriage; and then if by the death of one it should be gone, and she have nothing, could not be the meaning; to which the other justices assented. And all the Judges agreed that the lease was not determined by the death of one; and judgment given accordingly.

And all the justices held clearly that the avoidance would not passe, because it was a chattell vested. And Periam said, that in case of a common person without question an advowson appendant would not passe by such grant; for if the father dye, it shall go to his executor, but if it be an advowson in grosse in case of a common person, there is some doubt: but in the principall case all the Judges held ut supra, and said, that so it was in 9 Ed. 3. 26. And so was it adjudged this terme in the case between Bret and Shepheard: but Bradford Prothonotary said it was well enough, for it may be that he appeared there, and there was no record of it, to which it was answered, that it was no apparance unlesse there were a record: but the case in Court was ut supra.

In an ejectment by Dorothy Michell against Edmund Dunton, the case was; A woman makes a lease for years, rendring rent, with a covenant that the lessee should repaire the house, with other covenants, and then devised the same lands to the same lessee for divers years more, yeilding the like rent, and under such covenants as were in the first lease, the remainder over in fee, and dies, and then the first lease for years does expire, and the lessee continues in by force of the second lease by vesture of the devise, and repaires not the houses, so that if the first lease had been in being, he had broke the covenant. If this shall be such condition as he in the remainder may enter, was the question.

Shuttleworth, It is a condition, for he cannot have a covenant, and then it shall be intended that it is conditionall: but by all the Court, there appears no such intent, for it appears that he holds under like covenants.

Anderson, The nature of a covenant is to have an action, but not an entry, and therefore there shall be no entry.

Shuttleworth, To what end then serves these words (under like covenants) Periam, They are void. And at last it was resolved by all the justices, that the will expressing that the first lessee should have the land observing the first covenants, it shall not be now taken to be a condition by any intent that may be collected out of the will: for a covenant and condition are of severall natures, the one giving action, the other entry, and here the intent of the will was, that although the covenants were not performed, yet the lessee should not forfeit his terme, but is onely bound to such paine as he was at the beginning, and that was to render damages in an action of covenant. And judgment was given that the plaintiff should be barred.

The Earle of Kent brought an action of debt upon a bond against William Bryan, which was indorsed with a condition, that if the defendant did permit the plaintiff, his executors or assignes, not onely to thresh corn in the defendants barn, but also to carry it away from time to time, and at all times hereafter convenient, with free egresse and regresse, or else to pay eight pounds upon request, &c. that then, &c. And in truth the defendant permitted the corn to lye there two years, in which time the mise and rats had devoured a great part of it, and then the defendant thresht it, and the earle therefore brought this action: and upon demur it seemed to Walmsley that there was no forfeiture of the bond, because the earl took not the corn away in convenient time, for convenient time is such as shall prejudice no person (quod fuit negatum per justitiar.) and here is great prejudice to the defendant, because the plaintiff did not carry away the corn: and he put many cases, where things ought to be done in convenient time, as in the 21 Ed. 4. where an arbitrement ought to be performed in convenient time. But the opinion of the Court was, that he might come in convenient time, although he comes long after, and [55] the words are not within convenient time. Windham said, that if the words had been within convenient time, it would have made a difference.

Anderson, If the words of the condition had been, that he should suffer the plaintiff in time convenient to come, and thresh and take away his corn, then perhaps he ought to send within a year according to Walmsleys saying, but the words here are at all convenient times, and that day that the servant came was a convenient day to thresh and carry away; and the words, At all convenient times shall be construed, that at any time when it pleaseth the earl he may come, unlesse it be night, or Sabboth day, and if the word, convenient, had not been mentioned, then by the words, from time to time, and at all times after, then the earl may come at any time either in the day or night, and that a hundred years after as he pleaseth, and then the word, convenient, does restrain him that he cannot come but in the working daies, but does not restrain any time in which he shall come, but onely in conveniency of time, which is at times of labouring and watching. And so was the opinion of the Court, ut supra.

An action of debt was brought upon a lease for years, the defendant pleaded nihil debet per patriam, and did intend to give in evidence an entry of the plaintiff before any rent behind. And by the Court he could not do it, for it is contrary to the issue.

In a replevin, the case was; One Turk seised of lands in fee, devised parcell thereof to his eldest son in taile, and the other parcell to his youngest son in fee.

Provided, and his intent was, that if any of his sons or any of their issues, do alien or demise any of the said lands, before any of them comes to the age of thirty years, that then the other shall have the estate, and does not limit what estate, and then one of the sons makes a lease for years before such age, whereupon the other enters, and before he comes to the age of thirty years, he aliens that part into which he made entry, and the other brother being the eldest enters and makes a lease to Spittle the plaintiff for three years, and Davies by commandment of the younger brother enters, and takes a horse damage-feasant, and Spittle brought a replevin: and upon demur, it seemed to the Court, that this was a limitation, and by vertue of the will the estate devised to them untill they aliened, and upon the alienation to go to the other, & upon such alienation the land is discharged of all limitations, for otherwise the land upon one alienation shall go to one, and upon another alienation shall go back again, and so to and fro ad infinitum, vide Dyer 14. & 29. And afterwards all the Judges agreed, that after one brother had entred into the land by reason of the alienation, that land was discharged forever of the limitation by the will; and judgment was given accordingly.

1. If by this acceptance of the new lease by the husband, the term which the woman had to another use, viz. to the use of the testator shall be deemed a surrender: and the opinion of the Court was clearly without argument, that it was a surrender. But admitting it was no surrender, but the first terme continues, then the second question is,

2. If when the devisee enters into the terme devised to him, without consent of the executor, by which entry he is a wrongfull seisor, and a disseisor, and after he grants his right and interest to the executor; if this grant be good or no, because he had not any terme in him, but onely a right to the terme suspended in the land, and to be revived by the entry of the executor, and adjudged that it was a good grant, and it shall inure first as the agreement of the executor by the acceptance of the grant, that the devisee had a terme in him as a legacy. And secondly the deed shall have operation by way of grant to passe the estate of the devisee to the executor, and so no wrong, and the case was resembled to the case of surrender to the grantee of a reversion, which first shall inure as attornment, and after as surrender, and so was it adjudged.

In an account the plaintiff declared, that he delivered goods to the defendant to merchandize for him, the defend. said, that the goods with divers other of his own proper goods were taken at sea, where he was robbed of them. And it was moved that this was no plea in bar of an account, but if it be any plea, it shall be a plea before auditors in discharge: but admitting it be a good bar, yet it is not well pleaded, for the plaintiff as it is pleaded cannot traverse the robbing and try it, for things done super altum mare are not tryable here, wherefore the defendant ought to have pleaded that he was robbed at London, or any other certain place upon the land, and maintain it by proofs that he was robbed on the sea.

Gawdy, It is no good plea, for he hath confest himself to be accountable by the receipt, 9 Ed. 4., and it is no plea before auditors, no more then the case was in 9 Ed. 4. for a carrier to say, that he was robbed.

Popham, It is a good plea before auditors, and there is a difference between carriers and other servants and factors; for carriers are paid for their carriage, and take upon them safely to carry and deliver the things received.

And as to the other two pleas to the writ Kinton demurred, & prayed that the writ might be awarded him, and a venire facias to try the issue. For Tanfeild urged, that by pleading over to the felony, he waved the plea to the writ, for there was a diversity between an appeal of murther, and of mayhem, for in murther, as it is 7 Ed. 4. and 3 Ed. 6. although he plead to the writ of appeal, yet of necessity he must plead over to the murther, because it is in favorem vitæ, or else if he will joyne in demurrer upon the plea to the writ, he doth confesse thereupon the felony, and therefore he must plead over, not guilty. But in mayhem it is other-[60]-wise, for although the declaration was for felony, yet is a mayhem but a trespasse onely, and all are principalls, and the life of the defendant is not questioned, but he shall onely render damages, and therefore if he plead over to the felony that is a waver of the plea, and so a venire facias ought to issue out, to try if he be culpable or not, and of this opinion were Popham, Fenner, and Gawdy clearly, and agreed to the diversity between the appeal of mayhem and murther.

WENTWORTH AND SAVELL AGAINST RUSSELL.

In a writ of parco fracto, the plaintiffs declared that they were tenants pro indiviso, of a mannor in Yorkshire, and that the defendant held of them certain lands as of their mannor, rendring rent, which rent was behind, and for which they distrained and impounded the distresse, and the defendant broke the pound and rescued the distresse, and thereupon they brought this action; and the defendant demurred on the declaration, because the plaintiffs did not shew how they were tenants pro indiviso, or tenants in common, or coparceners. But the Court ruled the declaration to be good: and Gawdy said, that a tenant in common alone, without his companion, may have an action de parco fracto. And judgment was given for the plaintiff.

For where a man speaks of Standish or of Dale, it shal be intended to be a town and not a parish, unlesse there be expresse mention of the parish of Standish, or of Dale. Gawdy and Fenner on the contrary, for the grant of every man shall be taken strongest against himself, and therefore all the land as well within the parish of Standish, as within the town of Standish shall passe: and Fenner said, that when Dale is mentioned in any precipe, it shall be intended the town of Dale, because towns are noted at the common law, and not parishes, for parishes were ordained by the councell of Lyons, but notwithstanding in grants, there shall be no such intendment, but the intendment shall be according to the common usage and understanding of the country, and country-men in favour of the grantee: and when a man speaks of Standish, or any such place, it shall as well be intended to be a parish as a town.

Clarentius against Dethick.

Clarentius brought an action of the case against Dethick, by the name of Dethick, alias Garter: the defendant demanded judgment of the writ, for the Queen by her letters patents had created him king at arms, et quod nuncuparetur Garter principalis rex armorum, and that he should sue and be sued by such name, and because he was not sued according to his creation, he demanded judgment, &c.

Tanfeild prayed that the writ might abate, for this case had been here in the Court in question before, where Dethick was indicted by the name of Dithick onely, and because he was not named according to his creation, he pleaded that matter, and the indictment was quashed.

Gawdy, I remember the case very well, and it was adjudged at my first coming to this Court, and in truth the judgment passed against my opinion, which then and still is, that when he is sued as king at armes, in such case wherein his office or other thing belonging to his office comes in question, then he ought to be named according to his patent, but when he is sued as I. S. then it is sufficient to name him by his proper name.

Popham, Upon the creation of any deanery which is ordained and granted by patent of the King, the dean shall sue and be sued by the name of dean of such a place, yet if such dean doth sue or is sued about any matter concerning his naturall capacity, it is not necessary to name him dean. Fenner. But this is a name of dignity, and by his installation is made parcell of his name, and if a man be made a knight, in all actions he shall be so named; wherefore it seemed to him that the writ ought to abate. Et adjournetur.

Curia, Examine what person was sworne, and what was his true name, to which it was answered that his name was Tippet according to the venire facias, and that he was summoned to appeare to be of the jury, and he inhabits in the same place where Tipper was named, and that no such man as Tipper inhabited there, and therefore it was awarded by the Court that the habeas corpus and distringas should be amended, and his true name put in, and judgment was affirmed, &c.

Popham, He shall not, for the lease of the freehold made by the lord before entry, is an assent that the lessee of the copyholder shall continue his estate, and so is in nature of an affirmance and confirmation of the lease: to which Clench and Fenner agreed; and therefore upon motion made by Yelverton Serjeant, and Speaker of the Parliament, judgment was given, quod querens nihil capiat per billam.

Dyer, Welch, and Benlowes held the judgment good, although the court was held at night: and Dyer said, that if it were erroneous, he could have no remedy by writ of false judgment, nor otherwise, but onely by way of petition to the lord, and he ought in such case to do right according to conscience, for he hath power as a chancellor within his own court.

[64] LANE AGAINST COUPS.

In an ejectment by John Lane against Coup, and the plaintiff declared on a lease made by William Humpheston, the case was; William Humpheston being seised of land in fee, suffered a common recovery to the use of himself and his wife for life, the remainder seniori puero de corpore Gulielmi Humpheston, and to the heirs males of the body dicti senioris pueri. Plowden, One point is, that when a remainder is limitted seniori puero in tail, if puer shall be intended a son, or a daughter also; and methinks it shall be intended a son onely, for so are the words in common and usuall speech, and words in deeds ought to be expounded as they are commonly taken, and not to go to any strict construction of the words as (heirs) in the Latine is used also for goods by the civill law, but we use it only for lands, and so libra in Latine signifies a weight; and yet if I am bound in vigint. libris, if I forfeit my bond, I must pay money, and not lead, or the like. And so the word puer is sometimes taken for a servant. Claudite jam rivos pueri, &c. and the same reason that it may be intended for a daughter, may be for a servant also. Gawdy, I suppose the son shall have it and not the daughter, for although pueri was taken for male and female, yet now it is taken for male in any modern author, but to omit curiosity of words, we ought to consider rather the intent of the parties, and there are many circumstances to prove that he intended this to his son, and not to his daughter, for he made it for setling his inheritance, and it shall not be supposed that he intended his daughter should have it. Also where the case may be taken two waies, the most usuall shall be intended; as in case of a reservation of a rent at Michaelmas, that shall be intended at the chiefest feast; also in this case it shall be intended that he would advance the most worthy of his blood, and therefore to that purpose the conveyance shall be expounded; for if there be two I. S. and I give land to I. S. it shall be intended to my next neighbour, but if one be my cosin, although he dwells forty miles from me, yet he shal have the land: and to this Southcote accorded.

Hone against Clerk.

S. unum messuagium habendum prædict. I. S. heredibus suis ad solum opus & usum of the said I. S. and his heirs, during the life of Katherine. The question was, if this was a forfeiture because the wife was tenant for life; and the attorney argued that it was, for the words pro termino vitæ Katherin. are referred to the use only and not to the estate; for by these words habendum to him and his heirs the estate is limited, and therefore it is a forfeiture: but after comes the limitation of the use, ad usum I. S. and his heirs during the life of the woman, and after the death of the woman the use remaines in the feoffor: and he cited the Lord Sturtons case, in the beginning of the Queens raign; the Lord Sturton gave land to Clerk and his heirs, to the use of Clerk and the heirs of his body, and adjudged that it was not an estate in taile, for the limitation of the estate was before in the premises. Coke, on the contrary, and [65] said, that those words, for life of the wife, are to be referred to the limitation of the estate, for if a double sense be in words, such sense shall be taken as shall avoid all wrong, and therefore it shall not be so expounded, as that the grant shall not take effect, and that a forfeiture shall ensue, 4 Ed. 2. and see a notable case for exposition of words, and for relation of words and sentences, 34 Ed. 3. And in debt upon the recognizance, it was shewn that the bargainor paid the money at the day, and had tendred to the bargainee a deed in which was comprised an acquittance of payment of the money, and also a release of all his right, and the bargainee refused to seale it. Coke was of clear opinion that he ought to have sealed it, for it is necessary to have the deed to mention payment of the money, for otherwise the bargainee and his heirs may claim the land for default of payment. Gawdy of the same opinion, and cited 19 Ed. 4. Popham, The case is not so clear, for if he had tendered an acquittance only, there is no doubt but the bargainee might refuse to seale it, and by the same reason he may refuse when it is joyned to a thing that he is bound not to do, viz. to seal the release: but at last the matter was referred to arbitration.

And upon an action of covenant for not performing, the defendant pleaded that the plaintiff had entred in the land demised. And adjudged no plea by the Court, because the covenant was not in respect that the lessee should enjoy the land, nor was it a covenant adhering to the land, but to a collateral thing; but if it had been in respect of enjoying the land, there it is a good plea to say that the plaintiff had en-[66]-tred, but where the thing to be done is collaterall, it is otherwise, and also if he did plead such plea, yet it is not a bar, unlesse he holds him out of possession, Coke lib. 3. 221. 4 Ed. 3. 29. the lord shall not have a cessavit after entry in parcel, 10 Ed. 4. 11. 35 H. 6. But Tanfeild said, that if lessee for life gives leave to a stranger to make livery, it is void, but if he consent that the stranger shall make a feoffment, it shall amount to a disseisin, and the feoffment is good. MOYLE AGAINST MAYLE.

Moyle brought an action of waste against Mayle, and declared that he had leased to him a mannor and a warren, and that he had destroyed a cony-borough and subverted it, and assigned other wastes in cutting down certain thornes. Williams, The action of waste will well lye, and said that a warren consisted of two things, of a place of game, and of liberty, and to prove that a waste did lye for a liberty, he cited the statute of Magna Charta, cap. 5. in which a warren is intended, also the statute of Marlebridge, cap. 24. and the statute Articuli super Chartas, cap. 18. by which statutes it is evident that a waste does lie for warrens, and a warren is more then a liberty, for a writ lies quare warrenam suam intravit, and by the 12 H. 8. if lessee of a warren does break the pale, it is a waste, also if lessee of a pigeon-house stop the holes, so that [67] the pigeons cannot build, a waste doth lye, as it hath been adjudged. Also if lessee of a hop-yard ploweth it up and sowes graine there, it is waste, as it hath been adjudged. Also the breaking a weare is waste, and so of the banks of a fish-pond, so that the water and fish run out: to all which cases the Court agreed, except to the principal. For the Court held it was not waste to destroy cony-boroughs, for wast will not lye for conies, because a man hath not inheritance in them, and a man can have no property in them but only possession, and although by a speciall law, keepers are to preserve the land they keep, in the same plight they found it, yet this does not bind every lessee of land. Walmsley, The subversion of cony-boroughs is not waste, and it was usuall to have a waste against those who made holes in land, but not against those who stop them up, because thereby the land is made better: and it was said, that to dig for stones was a waste, unlesse in an ancient quarry, although the lessee fill it up againe. And Walmsley said, that in Lancashire it is waste to dig marle, unlesse it be imployed upon the land: and said it was not waste to cut thornes, unlesse they be in a wood stubbed and digged up by the roots; but if they grow upon the land then they may be stubbed, and it is no waste: but to cut down thorne-trees that have stood sixty or a hundred years, it is waste.

Sir Arthur Henningham brought a writ of error against Francis Windham to reverse a common recovery had against Henry Henningham his brother: and the error assigned was, that there was no warrant of attorney of the record. And it was agreed by the Bar and Bench, and adjudged error. But the great point was, if the plaintiff could have a writ of error? The case was; Henry the father had Henry his son and three daughters by one venter, and the plaintiff by another venter, and died seised of the land intailed to him, and the heirs males of his body. Henry enters and makes a feoffment, the feoffee is impleaded, and voucheth Henry, who looseth by default in the recovery, and dies without issue, and whether the daughters which are heirs generall, or the plaintiff which is heir in tail shall have the error. Gawdy and Baker for the defendant, who said, that the plaintiff could not have the error, but the daughters who were the heirs to Henry, for an action alwaies discends according to the right of land, and it seems that the heir in burrow English shall have error or attaint, and not the heir at the common law, which was agreed by all on both sides; but it was said, that this varies much from the present case, for two reasons; one, because he came in as vouchee which is to recover a fee-simple, and he shall render a fee-simple in value, which is discendable to the heirs at the common law. Secondly, he hath no estate-tail. Bromley Solicitor, and Plowden contra, and laid this ground, that in all cases where a recovery is had against one by erroneous processe, or false verdict, he which is grieved shall have redresse of it, although he be not party or privy to the first judgment, and therefore at the common law if a recovery be had against tenant for life, he in the reversion shall have error of attaint after his death, and now by the statute of R. 2 in his life, so in a precipe, if the tenant vouches, and the vouchee looseth by default, the tenant shall have error, for the judgment was against him, and he looseth his term: and in the 44 Ed. 4. 6. in a trespasse of battery against two, one pleads, and it is found against him, and the plea of the other not determined, damages by the principall verdict is given against them both, which (if they be excessive) the other shall have an attaint. And Bromley said, there could not be a case put, but where he that hath the losse by the recovery should have also the remedy; and Baker cited 9 H. 7. 24. 6. that if a recovery be had against a man that hath land on the part of the mother, and he dies without issue, the heir of the part of the father shall have the error. But Bromley and Plowden denied this case, and that 3 H. 4. 9. it was adjudged to the contrary: and Wray said to Baker, that he ought not much to rely on that case, for it was not law, and said, that if tenant for life makes a feoffment, and a recovery is had against the feoffee, the first lessor shall not avoid this. Bromley There is no use, for he may enter by forfeiture; but in our case, of whatsoever estate it be at the time of the recovery, the right of the estate-tail is bound, and therefore it is reason that the heir in tail shall avoid it. Jeffrey of the same opinion, and cited 17 Ass. A conusor makes a feoffment, and then execution is sued against the feoffee by erroneous processe, the feoffee shall have the writ of error, although he be not party to the first record, but the reason is, because of his interest in the land. And Bromley and Plowden said further, that notwithstanding the feoffee recovers against the vouchee, and the vouchee recover over the land, yet this recovery shall go to the estate-tail. And judgment was given for the plaintiff.

But Harris Serjeant and Glanvill on the contrary, for although he be attaint of felony, yet may he be in execution, for his own offence shall not aid him: and so was it in Cross case in the Common Pleas; where a man being attaint of felony was taken in execution at the suit of a common person, and he escaped out of prison, and an escape was brought against the Sheriffs of London, and a recovery against him. MALLOY AGAINST JENNINGS. ROT. 1037.

In a replevin the case was; A man seised of land in fee, is bound in a recognizance of 100l. and then bargains and sells all his land to the plaintiff, and then the recognizance is forfeit, and the conuzee sues out a scire facias against the conuzor before the deed was inrolled, and had judgment to have execution. And the question was, if the bargainor was a sufficient tenant against whom the execution was sued. Williams Serjeant, The bargainor was tenant at the time of the scire facias before inrolement, and although it was inrolled after, shall have relation to the first livery to prevent any grant or charge: and if an action be brought against an executor, as in his own wrong, and the suit depending he takes letters of administration, this shall not abate the writ. So in our case, the bargainor was seised of the land when the scire facias was brought; and if a man makes a lease for life, rendring rent, and then the lessor bargains and sells the reversion, and before the inrolement the rent is behind, and the bargainee demands the rent which was not paid, and then the deed is inrolled, yet he cannot enter for the forfeiture, which I have seen adjudged: & in the 28 H. 8. Dyer. disseisee of one acre makes a release to the disseisor of all his lands, and delivers it as an escroll to be delivered to the disseisor, and then he disseiseth him of another acre, and then the deed is delivered to the disseisor, yet the right in the second acre shall not passe. And he much relied on Sir Richard Brochets case, 26 Eliz. who made a recognizance to Morgan upon condition to convey unto him all his lands whereof he was seised the first day of May, and it hapned that one Corbet had sold him land by indenture the 24 day of April, but the deed was not inrolled untill the 24 day of May after: and the question was, if the conuzor was bound to convey these lands, or not, and adjudged that he was not, for inasmuch as the deed was not inrolled the first day of May, he was not seised, and great mischief would ensue if the law should be other-[70]-wise: for no man will know against whom to bring his action, for a bargain and sale because inrolement may be done secretly. Herne Serjeant, The bargainee is seised before inrolement, and by the statute of 5 Eliz. which wills, that none shall convert land used to tillage, unlesse he puts other land to tillage within six months, yet none will say that it is a breach of the statute, although pasture be presently converted to tillage, and he cited Chilburns case, 6 Eliz. Dyer 229. that proves that before the inrolement land passeth to the bargainee, and the bargainee hath a freehold in him before the inrolement, and whereof his wife shall be endowed, and if the bargainor levies a fine, or acknowledge a statute, the bargainee shall avoid them, and denied the case of Morgan, cited by the other side, and cited the case of 6 Ed. 6. where were two joynt-tenants, and one of them bargained and sold his moyety, and then the other joyntenant died, and then the deed was inrolled, there nothing passed but a moyety, but it seems in that case that by the bargain and sale the joynture is severed before the inrolement, so that there is no survivorship, but the book speaks not of it; and if a bargainee be of lands held of the King without license of a alienation, there the forfeiture to the King shall relate to the first delivery of the deed. Warberton contra. Before the inrolement there is but a commencement of the bargain, and before all circumstances in the deed mentioned, are performed, it is no bargain; and I hold the deed shall have relation to the delivery to prevent all charges, & contracts, but as to strangers it shall not have such relation. If tenant for life bargains and sells his land to another and his heirs, and then makes a feoffment in fee to another before inrolement, this is no forfeiture. Anderson, A release made to a bargainee before inrolement is void, then if this scire facias be well brought, no act of the bargainee shall avoid it. Walmsley, If there be a bargainee, and before the inrolement the bargainor enfeoffs him, he is in by the feoffment and not by the bargain, which proves that no estate is really in the bargainee before inrolement. Kingsmill, The reason of that is, because it is out of the statute, for the bargain and sale was onely delivered, and he said that the wife of the bargainee in such case shall be indowed: but the Court denied that, and all agreed that the wife of the bargainee before inrolement shall not be indowed. Kingsmill said, that it was a usuall course in a recovery to make the bargainee tenant to the precipe. And it was said by all the justices, that if tenant for life be impleaded, the bargainee of the reversion after inrolement shal be received, and yet (if hanging the writ) he purchase the reversion, he shall not. And after many arguments it was adjudged that the scire facias was not well awarded: and judgment given for the plaintiff.

Day against Austin.

In a trespasse, the defendant justified the taking of a furnace fixt to the earth, because the sheriff upon an extent sold it to him. And by the Court it was held a good discharge: for if a stranger takes my horse, and sells him, a trespasse will not lye against the vendee, but a detinue. But if one sells my horse, and a stranger takes him, he is a trespassor. Walmesley and Beaumond, Although such furnace be fixed by the termor, yet he may take it away within the term, but [71] the sheriff cannot attach it; and the termor may pull down a wall made by him, and it is not waste. And at another day the case was recited to be thus. The lessee made a furnace for the use of a dyer, and fixed it to the wall of his house, and the lessee being condemned in debt, the sheriff came to the furnace, and put his hands upon it, and delivered it to the defendant; and the lessee brought a trespasse. Glanvill, A furnace may be delivered in execution, and the house never the worse, but otherwise of the doors, because the lessee cannot be without them, 42 Ed. 3. 6. it is not waste to take away a furnace, 21 H. 6. 26. said there that the heir shall have such furnace, but this does not prove that it is not a chattell, but the cause wherefore the heir shall have it, it is because it is annext to the land, as in the case of writings which are meer chattels. Beaumound, It is doubly fixt, to the land and to the wall; and it is clear that the sheriff cannot take it from the wall. Dyer, The diversity is when the furnace is fixt to the middle of the house, and when to the wall, for the termor may take it from the middle of the house, but not from the wall, for the wall is worse for taking it away, and therefore it is waste: and to this Owen agreed.

Rotheram against Crawley. Rot. 332.

In debt upon a bond, the case was; Divers questions were made between the plaintiff lord, and the defendant tenant, concerning relief, whereupon they referred themselves to the arbitrement of I. S. who did award, that the plaintiff should make a release to the defendant (which was done) of all actions, duties, and amercements: and then upon this action brought by the plaintiff for a collatterall thing, the release was pleaded in bar. Coke Attorney, The plaintiff shall not be barred by this release, for deeds ought to be expounded according to the intent of the parties, and the intent of the party was to release no duty but the relief, which was only in question, & this word, duties, being interposed between reliefs and amercements, shall be intended duties of such nature as reliefs and amercements, and no otherwise, as it is in Dyer 23 Eliz. A man grants and to farm lets such land with wood, this is no grant of the wood, and yet there are words sufficient to passe the wood, but being conjoyned with the words, and to farm let, it shall be expounded that it was not intended to have it be an absolute grant. But adjudged that it was a good bar, and judgment was given accordingly.

Goodway against Michell.

Goodway brought a trespasse against divers persons, quare clausum fregerunt & duas ramas & perches of hedge, fregerunt the defendant by way of justification said, that the place was in the parish of Hadnam in Ely, and that all the parishioners time out of mind, have used to have passage through the said close in Rogation week, to make their perambulation of the parish, & because that the plaintiff hindred the defendants as parishioners, ramas & sepes fregerunt, whereupon the plaintiff demurred. Sperling, The justification is not good, for although parishioners may justifie the having a way over my ground, yet they cannot break the hedges; also they have broken two perches, and two gates, which is excessive for a foot-path, 15 H. 9. 10. 6. A commoner cannot break all the hedge upon the land where he hath common. Savile cont. All the parishioners ought to go their perambulation, and being a great number they may well enough justifie, [72] for they are not compelled to keep the foot-path. 6 Ed. 2. F. N. B. 185. b. Parishioners may pull down a wall that hinders them in their way to the church: and in the Book of Entries, there is a president where the vicar and parishioners did justifie an entry for this very cause, & prescribed as we do in this case; so they may prescribe in a way, or other thing of easement or pleasure, 7 Ed. 4. 26. a. 15 Ed. 4. 29. a. Anderson, There is no question but parishioners may justify their going over any bodies land in their perambulation. Warberton, Parishioners shall not prescribe in an easement, as in any way to the church. Owen, The books make a difference between things of interest, as in common, for in such things parishioners cannot prescribe, and things of easement, as a waste, for in such things a man may prescribe. Anderson, It is plain that parishioners cannot prescribe, for none may prescribe but those that have perpetuall continuance, and therefore tenant for years or for life, or parishioners cannot prescribe, but must be aided by custome. Walmsley of the said opinion, for there is no descent or succession in parishioners. And judgment was given for the plaintiff.

Norton and Sharp against Gennet. Rot. 178.

A prohibition was sued by the plaintiffs as executors to I. S. who surmised that the defendant sued them in the Court Christian for a legacy of 200l. and that the testator had goods but to the vale of 350l. and set forth how he was keeper of the prison of Ludgate, & that he was bound to A. and M. Sheriffs of London, to discharge and save harmlesse the same sheriffs from all escapes, which bond was to the value of a 1000l. and shewed that one Holmes was taken by a capias utlegatum at the suit of a stranger, and how the testator suffered him to escape, whereupon an action of debt was brought against the sheriffs, and a judgment, whereby the obligation made to them by their testator is forfeit, and pleaded riens intermaines, and because the Court Christian would not allow this plea, they prayed a prohibition, upon which Coke Attorney-Generall demurred. And it was agreed by Gawdy Justice, Coke and Tanfeild, that if the bond to the sheriff be not forfeit, then is the surmise good, and the legacy shall be paid: but Fenner said to Coke, Quomodo probas? Who answered, The difference is when a bond is made by the testator for payment of money in a suit at the Court Christian for a legacy, such a bond is a good plea, although the bond be not forfeit, as in the 9 Ed. 4. 12, & 13. for the condition of the bond is part of the bond, and a duty, but otherwise it is where the condition is collaterall for the performance of covenants: but in our case the condition is not broken as is supposed, for the capias utlegatum issued the 25 of Eliz. and so the arrest meerly void, for every capias ought to be returned the next term after the teste, 21 H. 7. 16. 6, & 8 Ed. 4. 4. & 6. Sed alii contra. But after a consultation was moved for, if a recovery was afterwards had against the executors: and it was answered, that it was not the course to make a bond to the party but to the Court. But Fenner said, that if such course be allowed, no legacy would be paid. And judgment was given that a consultation should be awarded if the legatee would enter into a bond to the executor to make restitution if, &c. or otherwise not.

Haddon against Arrowsmith.

In an ejectment, the case was; The Queen being lady of the mannor of Winterburne in the county of Berks, by her steward did license a copyholder for life to make a lease for three years, if he should so long live, the copyholder did make a lease generally to the plaintiff for three years, who [73] being ejected brought this action. Stephen, The action will not lye because the copyholder hath not pursued his licence, for license or authority must be pursued very strictly as well in form as substance, 10 H. 7. license to enfeoff by deed, or license to impark 300. acres, he cannot enfeoff by paroll, or impark but 100. acres, and it was resolved the last terme in the Exchequer, that if the King license his tenant to alien, he cannot alien to one in tail, the remainder to the donor in fee: and so in our case where he makes a lease for 3 years absolutely, he hath not performed his license. Gawdy contra, For when his license is to make a lease for yeares, if he so long live, these words (if he so long live) are but surplusage; for the law saies, that if copyholder for life makes a lease for years, and dies, the lease is determined, and therfore the clause in the license is no more then the law saies, and so is void. Quod fuit concessum per totam Curiam. Fenner, The condition in the license is meerly void, for the lord gives nothing by the license, but only doth dispence with the forfeiture, and the lessee is in by the copyholder and not by the lord, for the lord cannot condition with him in his license. Clench, The lord may license on condition, as where the lord doth licence his copyholder on condition that the lessee shall repair the house, or shall not cut trees, for otherwise the copyholder may cut them, and the lord hath no remedy, for his license is a dispensation of the forfeiture. Popham contra, A condition to a license is void, as a license to make a lease for years, on condition that he pay 20l. the second year, this is void for the reason given by my brother Fenner, for the license does not give a right, but only executes it, as a livery, or attornment; but a limitation to such license is good, as license to alien for two years, he cannot alien for three, but in our case the condition & the limitation made by the lord is void: and the difference is between a copyholder in fee, and a copyholder for life, for if the lord doth license his copyholder in fee to make a lease for three years if he so long live, and he makes a lease absolutely, this is no forfeiture, for this lease shall be a good interest against the heir of the copyholder, but otherwise of a copyholder for life. And judgment was given for the plaintiff.

BISHOP OF ROCHESTERS CASE.

The Bishop of Rochester brought a writ of annuity against the Dean and Chapter of Rochester, and declared of an annuity by prescription, from the Prior of St. Andrewes of Rochester, wch. priory was dissolved the 28 H. 8. & 31 H. 8. their possessions were committed by the King to the Dean and Chapter of Rochest. Anderson, The annuity does not remain, for an annuity chargeth the party and not the possession, and therefore when the corporation is dissolved which is the person, the annuity is gone. Walmesley, But in 2 H. 6. 9. it is said there, if a priory be charged with an annuity, the annuity shall continue, although it be charged to an abby. Anderson, That is true, for there the corporation is changed only, but here it is dissolved. Williams, But that is saved by the 31 H. 8 for annuities are exprest in the saving. Anderson, But this is an annuity or rent with which the land is charged. Beaumond, If it be anything wherewith the land is charged, it is saved, but the person is only charged with this annuity. Walmsley, But the 21 H. 7. is, that an annuity out of a parsonage is not a meer personall charge, but chargeth the parson only in respect of the land. And the Court would consider on the case.

THE CASE OF THE DEAN AND CHAPTER OF NORWICH.

The case was, A church in which there had been a parson and a vicar time out of mind, and the parson used to have the great tythes, and the vicar the small, and for the space of forty years last past, it was proved that the parson had tythes paid him out of a field of twenty acres of corne, and now the feild is sowed with saffron, and the vicar sued for the tythes of saffron in the Court Christian, and the parson had a prohibition. Coke, I conceive the parson shall have the tythes, for by the statute of 2 H. 6. it is enacted that tythes shall be paid as hath been used the last forty years, and this hath been alwaies tythable to the parson, and although the ground be otherwise imployed, yet the parson shall have the tythes; and so was it in Norfolk, in the case of a park, whether the parson prescribed pro modo decimandi, to be paid three shillings fourepence, for all tythes rising out of the said park, and although the park was after converted to arable, yet no other tythes shall be paid.

Popham, It hath been adjudged otherwise in Wroths case of the Inner Temple in the Exchequer. But the law is clearly as hath been said; and the difference is, when the prescription is to pay so much money for all tythes, or when the prescription is to pay a shoulder of every buck, or a doe at Christmas, for there if the park be disparkt, tythes shall be paid, for tythes are not due for venison, and therefore they are not tythes in specie. And I conceive that tythes of saffron-heads shall be comprehended under small tythes, and although the tythes of this feild have been paid to the parson, yet it being converted to another use, whereof no grosse tythes do come, the vicar shall have the tythes: and so if arable land be converted into an orchard, the vicar shall have tythe of the apples; and so if the orchard be changed to arable, the parson shall have tythes. Quod Fenner concessit.

HIGHAM AGAINST DEFF.

In a trespasse, the case was, that a vicaridge by composition was indowed of the third part, omnium bladorum decimarum, of the mannor of D. If he shall have tythes of the freeholders of the mannor, was the question. Johnson, He shall not have them, for a mannor consisteth of two things, viz. of demesns and services, and the freeholders are neither parcel of the demesnes nor the services, and therefore no parcell of the mannor, and this is proved in 12 Ass. 40. a rent-charge was granted out of a mannor, the tenancy escheats, it shall not be charged with the rent.

Tanfeild contra, For this word, mannor, does extend to the precincts of the mannor, and not to the demesnes and services onely, and therefore if a venire facias be awarded de viceneto manerii de D. the freeholders shall be returned; also a survey of a mannor shall be as well of the freehold lands, as of the demesnes, and if the King grants a leet within the mannor of D. all the freeholders are bound to appear.

Fenner, Grants ought not to be restrained to their strict words, but are to be construed according to the intent of the parties.

Ewer against Henden. Rot. 339.

In an ejectment the jury found that I. S. being seised of a capitall messuage in the county of Oxford, and also of a house and land in Walter, [75] in the county of Hartford, makes a lease for years of his house and land in the county of Hartford, and then by will does demise his house in the county of Oxon, together with all other his lands, meadowes, pastures, with all and singular their appurtenances in Walter in the county of Hartford, to John Ewer: and whether the house in Walter, in the county of Hartford does passe, or not, was the question.

Tanfeild, The houses shall pass, for if a man builds a house upon Black Acre, and makes a feoffment of the acre, the house shall passe, and so if a man does devise una jugata terræ of copyhold land, the house of the copyhold does passe also, for so is the common phrase in the country; and so if a man be rated in a 100l. subsidy, that does include houses, and by the grant of a tenement the house passeth, but if a man demand a house in a precipe, there the house ought to be named.

Whistler contra, It is true that if a man generally does devise his land, the houses passe: but in this case the devisee hath particularized his land, his meadow, and his pasture, and if he intended to have passed his houses he would have mentioned them as well as his lands.

Fenner, I am of the same opinion, for this speciall numbring of particulars, does exclude the generall intendment; and if the devisor had a wood there, that would not passe by these words.

Popham contra, For if a man sells all his lands in D. his houses and woods passe by this word, lands, and so was it agreed in a case which was referred to Dyer and Wray Chief Justice, and there reason was, because that a warrant of attorney in a precipe of a house, woods, and land, is onely of land, which proves that land does comprehend all of them, and therefore I conceive, if a man does devise, or bargain and sell all his lands in D. the rents there shall passe, for they were issuing out of the land: but if a man be seised of three houses and three acres, and he deviseth all his land in D. and one of his houses, the other houses will not passe, for his expresse meaning is apparent, but here the words are in generall as to the lands in Walter, and therefore the houses do passe. But afterwards it was adjudged that the house did not passe, for by the particular mentioning of all his lands, meadowes and pastures, the house is excluded.

Pasch. 4 Eliz.

Hunt against King.

In a writ of error upon a judgment given in the Common Pleas in a formedon brought there; the case was, tenant in tail enfeoffs his son, and then disseiseth his son, and levies a fine to a stranger, and before the proclamations passe, the son enters and makes a feoffment to a stranger, the father dies, and the son dies, and the issue brings a formedon. The question was, whether by the entry of the son the fine was so defeated that the estate-tail was not barred. Dyer, The estate-tail is barred, and made a difference where the fine is defeated by entry, by reason of the estate-tail, and where it is defeated by entry by reason of another estate-tail, as in 40 Eliz. Tenant in tail discontinues, and disseiseth the discontinuee, and levies a fine to a stranger, and retakes an estate in fee, before the proclamations passe, the discontinuee enters, and then the tenant in tail dies seised, and adjudged that the issue is not remitted, for the statute 32 H. 8. saies, that a fine levied of lands any way intailed by the party that levies the fine shall bind him, and so it is not materiall whether he were seised by force of the estate-tail, or by reason of another estate, or whether he have no estate.

[76] And all the justices were of opinion that the estate was barred, for although the discontinue had avoided the fine by the possession, yet the estate-tail remains concluded, and he shall not enter by force of the estate-tail, but by force of the fee which he had by discontinuance.

Popham, Avoidance of a fine at this day differs much from avoidance of a fine at the common law, for it appears by the 16 Ed. 3. that if a fine at the common law be defeated by one who hath right, it is defeated against all, but at this day the law is contrary, for if a man be disseised, and the disseisor die seised his heir within age, and he is disseised by a stranger who levies a fine, and then five years passe, the heire shall avoid this by his nonage, yet the first disseisee is bound for ever, for the infant shall not avoid the fine against all, but only to restore the possession. And therefore it was adjudged in the Lord Sturtons case, 24 Eliz. where lands were given to him and his wife, and the heires of him, and he died, and his issue entred and levied a fine to a stranger, and before the proclamations passed, the mother enters, it was adjudged that the issue was barred, for the wife shall not avoid this but for her own estate: and so if a stranger enters to the use of him who hath right, this shall not avoid the fine.

Fenner did agree to this, and said that it had been so adjudged; but all the justices agreed, that the estate-taile being barred, the entry shall go to the benefit of him who hath most right to the possession, and that is the discontinue; and therefore the plaintiff in the formedon hath good title to the land, but onely to the fee, and not to the intaile, for that is barred by the fine.

Gibson against Mutess.

In a replevin the case was; John Winchfeild was seised of lands in fee, and by his will did devise all his lands and tenements to Anthony Winchfeild and his heires, and before his death made a deed of feoffment of the same lands, and when he sealed the feoffment, he asked, if this feoffment will not hurt this last will, & if it will not, I will seal it? and then he sealed it, and made a letter of attorney to make livery in any of the said lands, the attorney made livery, but not of the lands which were in question, and then the testator died. And the question was, if the devisee or heire of the devisor should have the land. And it was said in behalf of the heire, that if the testator had said, it shall not be my will, then it is a revocation. Quod Curia concessit: but it was the opinion of the Court, that it appears that it was the intent of the testator that his will should stand, and if it be not a feoffment it is not a revocation in law, although that the attorney made a livery in part, so that the feoffment was perfect in part, yet as concerning the land in question, whereof no livery was made, the will is good; and the jury found accordingly that the land does not descend to the heire.

Fenner cited a case of Serjeant Jeffereys, where it was adjudged, that where one had made his will, and being demanded if he will make his will, doth say, he will not, that this is no revocation.

[81] Sir Wolston Dixy against Alderman Spencer.

20 Eliz. In C. B.

In a writ of error brought upon a judgment given in an assize of fresh-force in London, the case was, Sir Wolston Dixy brought an action of debt for rent arrear against Spencer upon a lease for years made to him by one Bacchus, who afterwards granted the reversion to Dixy, and the tenant attorned, and for rent arrear Dixy brought an action, &c. The defendant pleaded in bar, that before the grant made to Dixy, the said Bacchus granted it to him by parole, according to the custome of London; whereupon he demanded judgement, if &c. and the plea was entred on record, and hanging the suit, Dixy brought an assize of fresh force in London; and all this matter was here pleaded, and it was adjudged a forfeiture of the land; and hereupon Spencer brought a writ of errour, and assigned this for errour, that it was no forfeiture.

Shuttleworth. It is no forfeiture untill a trial be had whether the reversion be granted, or not; as in wast: the defendant pleads that the plaintiff had granted over his estate, this is no forfeiture; and in the 26 Eliz. in a quid juris clamat, the defendant pleaded that he had an estate tail, and when he came to have it tryed, he acknowledged he had an estate but for life, and that was no forfeiture. But the Court said, they could remember no such case.

Walmesley. It was so adjudged, and I can shew you the names of the parties.

Periam Justice. If there be such a case, we would doubt of it, for there are authorities to the contrary as the 8 Eliz. and 6 Rich. 2.

Anderson. If the defendant in a trespass prayes in aid of an estranger, this is a forfeiture; and if it be counter-pleaded, it is a forfeiture, and the denial alters not the case.

Walmesley. The books in 15 Ed. 2. Judgement 237. and 15 Ed. 1. that judgement in a quid juris clamat, shall be given before the forfeiture.

Anderson. In my opinion he may take advantage before judgement as well as after, if the plea be upon record. And so was the opinion of the Court.

[See Cowley v. Cowley [1900], P. 123, 305; [1901], A. C. 450.]

In a quare impedit against the Bishop of Exeter, the writ was ad respondendum Andrew Stoke & Dennisæ Franciscæ de Suffolk uxori ejus. Benlowes demanded judgement of the writ, &c. because she lost her name of dignity by marriage with a base man, as it was adjudged, 7 Ed. 6. Dyer 79. where Madam Powes and her husband brought a writ of dower, and the writ abated, because she called her self Dame Powes, whereas she had lost her dignity by marrying with her husband.

Stanford agreed, for mulier nobilis, si nupserit ignobili, desinit esse nobilis.

[82] Brookes. There is a difference where a noble woman marries a noble man of less noble degree than she is, and when she marries one that is not at all noble; for in the first case she shall hold the dignity of her second husband, but in the last case she shall retain her antient dignity. And so it was observed, where the Marquis of Dorset had two daughters, the elder was married to the Lord Audley, and the youngest to a gentleman, and the eldest took place alwayes, as wife to a baron, but the youngest kept her place as a marquisses daughter.

Dyer. I was of counsel in the case of the Lady Powes already mentioned, and she would by no means lose her dignity, and an herauld was brought into Court, that said she had such dignity, although it was held clearly on the contrary by our law by Montague and Hales, and the writ did abate.

Stanford. A noble man loseth his honour by his own act, as by attaint, and so hath the woman here by taking such husband, and the nobility of such woman is lost also by attainder.

Brookes said, that he knew where the sons of a duke and marquis had a trespass brought against them for hunting a park by the name of Squires, and it was good; wherefore it was said to Benlows, that he must plead to the writ.

PASCH. 4 & 5 PH. & MARY. IN C. B.

A feme sole having the custody of the land, and body of an infant took husband, and she and her husband did tender convenient marriage to the infant, which he refused, and married himself elsewhere, and at his full age entred into the land; if it be necessary that both shall joyn in a writ of forfeiture upon the marriage, or that the husband alone shall have it, was the question.

Brown Justice. Both shall joyn, and so it is ruled in a book.

Dyer contr. The husband alone shall have this writ, for he may discharge it or release it; and by the 5 Ed. 3. 14 & 6. the husband alone may have a writ of trespass; and if the wife have an advouson, and a stranger present, the husband alone shall have a quare impedit; and the same law is, where the woman hath a rent, and the husband distreyns, and rescous is made, the husband alone shall have a rescous.

Prideaux. The wardship of a ward and land is a thing real, and the survivor shall have it, and not the executors of the baron; and if an action be accrued before marriage, as if a bond be made to her before marriage, she shall joyn with her husband in the action upon the bond: but if a right to an action does accrew after marriage, there she shall not joyn, as here the right of the husband does not accrew untill marriage: for the action is not in respect of the wardship, but of the tender and refusal, and his marriage elsewhere, all which do accrew after the coverture.

Stanford. If a man bring a quare impedit for an advowson which he hath in right of his wife, and hath judgement to recover, and dyes, the wife shall present, and not the executors of the husband; so if he recover in a trespass, the wife shall have execution for the damages.

Prideaux. If a lease be made to a woman, and a rent reserved nomine pœnæ, and she takes husband, and the rent is behind, both [83] shall joyn in the action for the pain. Dyer. This action is grounded upon a real covenant. Stanford. Damages recovered in a trespass are not real, yet the wife shall have them, if the husband dye before execution. Dyer. The trespass is done to the disinheritance of the wife, and therefore she shall have damages; and in 43 Ed. 1. Statham. The husband alone brought a ravishment of a ward, for a ward he had in right of his wife and the writ held to be good; but there it is said, that otherwise it is in right of a ward; and if they joyn in a writ of ravishment of ward, and recover, and the husband dye before execution, his executors shall have execution, and not the wife: but it is said there (quære) and at last it was agreed that the action should be allowed: but the surest way is to have both joyn.

POWTRELLS CASE. IN C. B.

In an ejectment the case was, A woman-tenant in tail did make a lease for 31 years, and took husband, and had issue; the wife dyes, and the husband is tenant by the curtesy, and surrenders to the heir, who puts out the lessee, who brings this action.

Dyer. I doubt whether this surrender be good, for tenant by the curtesy is but in reversion, and hath nothing in possession, and it is dubious how he can surrender.

Weston and Brown. He may surrender for a term, or frank-tenement may be surrendred to him that hath the estate in reversion or remainder, if it be not a mean estate, as tenant for life, the remainder for life, the remainder in fee, the first tenant for life cannot surrender to him that hath the fee. But the great point of the case was, if the issue could avoyd the lease during the life of the tenant by curtesy; and the Court held he could not, for the tenant is in as a purchaser. And by Walsh and Carus. If tenant by the curtesy grants over his estate, and then enters into religion, the grantee shall have his estate during the tenants natural life, quod omnes concesserunt; and it was said also, that if the heir had been impleaded during the life of the tenant by curtesy, he shall not have his age, quod fuit concessum.

In an account the defendant pleaded he was never his baily for to render account.

Gawdy prayed the opinion of the Court if the action would lye, for otherwise he would not trouble the Court. The case was, the plaintiff had a lease of a parsonage, and the defendant being no lessee, nor claiming any interest, takes the tithes being set forth, and carries them away, if the plaintiff could have this action was the question.

Manwood. It will not lye; for an account lyes where there is privity, but wrongs are alwayes without privity; but I agree, that if [84] one receive my rents, I shall have an account against him, for by my consent afterwards I do make a privity; for although that he hath received the rent, he hath not done wrong to me, inasmuch as it is not my money untill it be paid to me: but otherwise it is where a man disseiseth me of land, for that is meerly a wrong, and so is it in this case; for when the tithes were set forth by the parishioners, the law sayes they are in the possession of the parson; and therefore when the defendant took them away, he does it wrongfully, and therefore no account will lye against him; and so it was adjudged in London in the case of one Monax, who under colour of a devise, did occupy land for 20 years, and after the devise it was adjudged voyd, he that had right to the land, brought an account against him, and adjudged that it does not lye.

Harper contr. For an account does lye against a proctor, and the plaintiff may charge him as proctor, and it is no plea for him to say that he did not occupy as proctor, no more than it is a plea for him who occupies as guardian, to say he was not the prochein amy.

Dyer. There are three actions of account. 1. Against a baily. 2. Against a receiver. 3. Against a guardian in socage; and if an account be brought against one as receiver, he ought to charge him with the receipt of money, and I conceive that there ought to be a privity to charge one with the receipt of money: but if one claim as baily, or as guardian in socage, he is chargeable in account: but an abator or a disseisor is not, because they pretend to be owners, and in this case, because by the setting forth the tithes the property is in the parson, therefore he being lessee for years, he shall have an ejectione firma, and not an account.

Carter against Kungstead. In C. B. Rotulo 120.

In a trespass the jury gave this special verdict. John Berry was seizin of the mannour of Stapeley in Odiam, and of other lands in Odiam, and the 32 H. 8. suffered a common recovery of all his lands in Odiam, Stapeley and Winkfield, to the use of himself and his wife for life, the remainder to the heirs males of his body, & quod ulterius starent of the mannour of Stapeley, with the appurtenances, to the use of himself for life, the remainder to the heirs males of his body, whereby they were seized prout lex postulat. The husband dyes, the wife makes a lease for 19 years, and whether the mannour of Stapeley were conveyed or not, was the question.

Harris. She shall have all; for when the whole estate is limited at the beginning of a deed, it shall not be abridged afterwards.

Periam. The estate is by way of use, which shall be expounded according to the intent and will of the limiter; and if this had been done by will, it is clear the woman should not have the mannour of Stapeley.

Anderson. If I devise my land to J. S. and afterwards by the same will I devise it to J. D. now J. S. shall have nothing, because it was my last will that J. D. should have it; but otherwise it is of a use; for if I do limit an estate to the use of J. S. and in the last clause do limit the same estate to J. D. the limitation to J. D. is voyd for the repugnancy.

[85] Periam. As to the case of the will, I conceive it is voyd to both, because it cannot be known who shall have it.

Anderson. I am sure the law hath been taken as I have said; and there was a case in the Upper Bench, where a man one day made part of his will, and another day made another part, which was repugnant to the first part, and adjudged that the last was good, and the first voyd.

Periam. I agree to this case, for here is a difference in time.

Anderson. So is there in my case; for when I am writing my will, I am thinking how I shall dispose of my estate, and it shall be intended that I have best advised concerning that which I have done last.

Walmseley. A use is not to be compared to a will, for the statute of 27 H. 8. hath made it an estate, and then by the 19 of Edw. 3. If a man limits an estate at the beginning of a deed he cannot after abridge it.

Periam. I put this case: if a man covenants upon consideration to be seized to the use of himself for life, and after to the use of his son: but he further sayes, that his meaning is, his wife shall have it for her life, this is not a voyd clause, but good to the wife; and the case was adjourned till next term. And Harris argued again, and said, that a use was but matter of trust, and for that it is apparent that the intention was that the wife should have nothing, there is no reason that another construction should be made.

Walmseley. The limitation of the use is but a declaration how the use shall be, and does not give any thing; and the opinion of the Court was against the plaintiff who was lessee of the woman, and that the last clause does countermand the first, as to the mannour of Stapeley.

MICHAEL. 31 & 32 ELIZ.

BROKESBYES CASE. IN C. B. ROT. 18. 15.

Bartholomew Brokesby brought a quare impedit, and it appeared by his declaration, that the next avoydance was granted to him, and one Humphrey Brokesby, and then the church became voyd, and Humphrey did release to Bartholomew totum statum & titulum &c. and then Bartholomew being disturbed, brought a quare impedit in his name alone.

Harris. The plaintiff shall be barred, for the other shall be named with him, for the release is voyd; for when the church becomes voyd, it is a thing in action, and of privity and confidence, and cannot be released nor transferred.

Dyer 283. a. 28 H. 8. 26. a. Where it is said, that it cannot he granted over, no more than an executor may release his executorship to his companion.

Beaumont. In my opinion it is not a chose in action, but an interest which the executors have; and by the 14 H. 4. and 14 H. 6. If a man be seized of an advowson in the right of his wife, and the church is voyd, and the wife dyes, yet the husband shall present, which proves it is not a chose in action; for in the 49 Edw. 3. 23. the husband shall not have an obligation that was made to his wife; [86] and in our case by this avoydance the church is become an interest and a chattell: and therefore one joyntenant may release to another by reason of their privity, although they have no possession.

Fenner. The release is totum statum jus & titulum, but here he hath no estate nor possession, and therefore the release is void. And to prove that there is no estate nor possession, it is proved by the pleadings of the grant of the next avoydance, for he shews that the church became voyd, and that ea ratione pertinet ad ipsum presentare, and not by force whereof he was possest, and if none hath the advowson which becomes voyd, and the lord claymes the advowson, yet he shall not have the present avoydance, and as to the case of the joyntenants, one cannot release to the other for default of possession for the release wanes by reason of their joint possession which is out of them, but release of the demandant to the vouchee is good by reason of the privity of law that is betwixt them; and in 11 H. 4. He who hath right after the incumbent is instituted and inducted, may confirme his estate, and therefore the release here is good.

Anderson. We are all agreed that the release is void, and gave judgment that the plaintiff should be barred.

BRETTON AGAINST BARNET.

MICH. 41 & 42 ELIZ.

A man delivers money to J. S. to be redelivered to him when he should be required: which J. S. refused, and therefore an action of debt was brought, and the defendant demurred, for that an action of debt would not lie, but an account, as in the 41 Ed. 3. 31. & 33.

Walmseley. An action of debt will very well lie. And he took a difference between goods and money: for if a horse be delivered to be redelivered, there the property is not altered, and therefore a detinue lies, for they are goods known: but if money be delivered, it cannot be known, and therefore the property is altered, and therefore a debt will lie. And if Portugalls or other money that may be known be delivered to be redelivered, a detinue lies.

Owen and Glanvill agreed to this, and Glanvill cited a judgment given in Hilary Term, wherein he was of councell, which was that a man delivers money to another to buy certain things for him, and he does not buy them, the party may bring an action of debt, but he said that the plaintiff ought to aver that the defendant had not redelivered them. And judgment was given for the plaintiff.

GREEN AGAINST WISEMAN. IN C. B.

In an ejectment. The defendant pleaded, that a feoffment was made to the use of J. S. the lessor of the defendant, who by force thereof, and of the statute, was seised, and made a lease to the defendant; and that one Green entred and made a lease to the plaintiff, and did not say that he entred upon J. S. And all the question was, whither when a feoffment is made to the use of another, if he have such a seisin before his entry, whereof he may be disseised.

[87] Glanvill. He hath no freehold, neither in deed nor in law before entry.

Walmseley. This is contrary to all the books: for a possession in law is so translated from the feoffee to cestuy que use, that the wife of the feoffee shall not be endowed.

Owen. He ought to have alleged a disseisin.

Anderson. As he might have possession by force of a devise at common law, so he shall have possession of the land here by force of the statute, and it is in cestuy que use, before agreement or entry, but if he disagree, then it shall be out of him presently but not before he disagree. And after viz. Hillar. 42 Eliz.

Williams moved the case again, and Walmseley said then, that he might be disseised before his entrie or agreement, and the pleading shall be that he did enter, and did disseise him, but he shall not have a trespass without actuall entrie, for that is grounded on a possession: Glanvill agreed to this, and advised Williams to adventure the case thereupon.

HILLAR. 41 ELIZA.

SMITHS CASE. IN C. B.

The patron of an advouson before the statute of 31 Eliz. for symony, doth sell proximam advocationem, for a sum of money, to one Smith, and he sells this to Smith the incumbent: after which comes the generall pardon of the Queen, whereby the punishment of Smith the incumbent is pardon'd, and of Smith the patron also. If the incumbent may be removed was the question: Williams said, that the doctors of the civil law informed him, that the law spirituall was that for symony the patron lost his presentment, and the Ordinary shall present, and if he present not within six months, then the metropolitan, and then the King.

Spurling Serjeant. This punishment cannot discharge the forfeiture, although it dischargeth the punishment.

Glanvill contra. and said that this point was in question, when the Lord Keeper was atturney, and then both of them consulted thereupon, and they made this diversity viz. between a thing void and voidable, and for symony the church is not void untill sentence declaratory, and therefore they held, that by the pardon before the sentence all is pardon'd, as where a man committs felony, and before conviction the King pardons him, by this pardon the lord shall lose his escheate, for the lord can have no escheate before there be an attaindor, but that is prevented before by the pardon, and so here this pardon prevents the sentence declaratory, and so no title can accrue to the Ordinary.

Walmesley cont. If the patron be charged by the sentence, he may plead the pardon. But if a quare impedit be brought by a third person, the pardon of the King shall be no bar to him, for the title appeares not to him, but only the punishment.

Anderson. They may proceed to sentence declaratory, notwithstanding the pardon; for the pardon is of the punishment, but the sentence does not extend to that, but only to declare that the church is void.

Glanvill in 16 Eliz. a man was deprived of his benefice for incontinency, and after he was pardoned and restor'd.

Walmsley. I doubt much whither the King can pardon symony:

[88] And Williams said, that the doctors of civill law said, that neither the Pope nor the King could pardon symony, quoad culpam, but only quoad pœnam they may. And the Court at last said, that if the parties would not demur, they would hear the doctors upon this matter.

JELSEY AGAINST ROBINSON.

TRINIT. 25. ELIZ. CONTINUED UNTILL PASCH. 28 ELIZ. IN C. B. ROT. 704. & 1544.

Upon a speciall verdict upon an ejectment, the jury gave this speciall verdict. That the King was seised of the mannor of Freemington, and of the hundred there, and granted this to Hampton to hold of the mannor of East-Greenwich by fealty, and 13l. rent, and then the King being seised of the mannor of Crankford, of which the place in question was parcell, does grant his mannor of Crankford, and his manor of Freemington, to the Marquess of Exceter and his heirs, who by his will does devise legacies to his servants, and does devise that all his legacies shall be payd out of the mannors of Freemington Uplaing and Crankford. All which mannors I give to my cosen Blunt and his heires. And the defendant, as servant to Baker who was heir to the marquess, did eject the plaintiff; the question was, if by the devise of the mannor of Freemington the rent of 13l. did passe nor not, if it does not passe, then by the statute of 32 H. 8. the 3. part of the mannor of Crankford does not go to the devisee, but descends to the heire at the common law.

Shuttleworth for the plaintiffe. The seigniory does not passe by the devise of the mannor, for the intent thereof shall be collected, by the words of the will. 15 H. 7. 12. a. 19 H. 8. 9. and 6. but here he limits a distresse out of a lordship, which cannot be 3 H. 6. Also it is doubtful if the seignory being entire, may be divided by force of the statute of the 32 H. 8. And I thinke not; for when the statute sayes that the lands devised shall be devised into three parts, and that is to be understood of such an estate as may be divided, but so cannot a seigniory: for put the case that the lord held by a hauke, the whole mannor shall descend and cannot be divided, and so de catalla fellonum. Fenner contra. For it seems to me that the seigniory passeth, and so it shall be, if he held but a mesnalty 7 Ed. 4. A man held by frankalmoigne, he shall say, infra feodum summ, and in reputation amongst men a seigniory is a mannor: for if a man makes a feoffment of a mannor, with livery where he hath no mannor, yet shall it passe, 7 E. 3. where a mannor passeth by the name of knights fee. And as to the intirenes of the seigniory it is easily answered, for although the rent were entire, yet it may be severed, for a rent charge is entire, yet a proportionment may be made thereof 44 Ed. 3. To which the Court agreed that the rent without doubt might be severed.

Walmseley, for the plaintiff, The question is if the rent passeth by the name of a mannor to the devisees. If a grandmother deviseth land to her daughter J. S. whereas she is her daughters daughter, yet this is good, because in common speaking she is so called, but here the words are not apt, nor used in common speaking, viz. that rent should be taken for a mannor, and therefore it is voyd, as a gift to the right heirs of J. S. who is attaint 19 H. 8. And he concluded with this difference: that where the words have any affinity or likelihood [89] to the mannor, then it will passe by the name of a mannor. As if a man deviseth his house and land by the name of a mannor it shall passe. But here being but a service, it is otherwise.

Gawdy cont. For if the rent passe not nothing shall passe, which is a hard construction on a will. For 21 Rich. 2. Devise 27. a devise ecclesiæ Sancti Andreæ is a good devise to the parson of the church.

And in Brett and Rigdens case a man devised a mannor in which he had nothing, and after purchased the mannor, the devise is good. And in 26 H. 6. Feoffment 12. land will not pass by deed by the name of a house, but land will pass by the name of a carue, and a carue by the name of a mannor, and I hold that the rent in this case will passe by the name of the mannor, for a mannor does consist of demesnes services, and rent may be called a mannor as well as a carue, and the King gives it by the name of a mannor to the devisor, and that is the reason that the devisor calls it a mannor: and if you grant to me an advowson by the name of the church and rectory, and I devise the rectory, the advowson and the church will passe by the name of rectory: and in Plouden. 194. a man did let his house and great demesnes rendring rent, and did devise to another all his farme; there the devisee shall have all the rent and the reversion also.

MICHAELM. 29 & 30.

BISHOP OF LINCOLNES CASE. ROT. 1528. & 2200.

In a quare impedit, brought by the King, against the Bishop of Lincoln and Leigh, the incumbent: the case was, The bishop had an advowson in gross, and presented J. S. who took a second benefice with cure, whereby the first became void, and continued so untill lapse fallen to the Queen, and after the title of lapse fallen to the Queen, the bishop presented one J. who was inducted, and by reason of recusancy to pay tythes, was deprived, and by the statute 26 H. 8. the church became void ipso facto, whereupon the bishop presented one Leigh within six months, and now the Queen would present. Fenner. This case is the same with Bosherulls, lately adjudged. But the Court said, that here was a privation for recusancy; and therefore it would make a difference. And afterwards Pasch. 30 Eliz.

Walmesley, for the Queen said, that if a lapse be fallen to the Ordinary, if the patron doth present before the bishop hath collated, he ought to receive his clerk, but where it is divolved to the King, the patron by no means can defeate the King, but he may remove his clerke at his pleasure, but if such incumbent be present after such lapse, and die, then the title of the King is gone, and his time passed by the act of God: but in our case the avoydance which does oust the King from his lapse, is avoidance by reason of recusancy to pay tithes, which is the proper act of the incumbent, as is a resignation, and no such avoydance being by the act of the party himself shall oust the King of his presentation, for in the 2 H. 9. in annuitie against an abbot, who resigns the writ shall not abate, for then the plaintiff shall never have a good writ. So in our case, if the King be outed of his lapse by such devises, he shall never have a lapse, for every one will usurp upon the Kings [90] lapse, and will presently resign or misdemesn himself whereby to avoid the lapse. And in the 18 Ed. 4. the 19.

By Pigot. A writ brought against a prior shall not abate, although the prior be not deposed, for it is his own fault.

Fenner. This lapse is given the King by his prerogative, but on this condition, that he take it in due time: for so is the nature of things lapsed, for if after a title accrued to the King he suffer usurpation, and the incumbent die, his lapse is lost, for the nature of the lapse is such that it must be taken at its time, and where the title of the King is limited to a time, there he shall not have his prerogative: for a prerogative cannot alter estates. As if the King grant a seigniory in gross rendring rent, and the tenant to the lord dies without heir, whereby the tenancy escheates, the seigniory is extinct, and the rent of the King is gone, as well as it is in the case of a common person. And so if the King have a rent seck for life out of my land, if I die he cannot distreine in my land for the arrerages as he may in my life time. And so where the statute gives annum diem & vastum to the King, yet he shall not have it after the death of the tenant for life, so if the King reserve a rent upon a lease to an estranger, and the stranger enters, in respect of the land, whereby his entire rent is suspended, now the condition as to the King also is suspended during that time, for the nature thereof is to be attendant upon the rent 22 H. 3. If a man grant a rent upon condition to cease during the minority of his heir, and after this rent comes to the King, and the grantee dies, the rent shall cease during the minority of his heir: so that by all these cases the reason appears that the nature of the lapse is to be taken hac vice, and the King must take it then, or not at all: and where it is objected that by this means every lapse may be taken from the King: I conceive that far greater inconvenience will be to the patrons on the other side: for when a lapse is devolved to the King, and a stranger presents, if then the true patron may not present untill the death of such incumbent, perhaps the incumbent will resign, or be deprived, and a stranger shall be presented again and again in like manner, and so by this means the patron shall never continue his advowson, for by the couin between the stranger, and the neglect of the King to take his lapse, the incumbent shall never die. And afterwards in this term, it was adjudged that such usurpation shall not take away the lapse from the King, because the avoydance accrued by the act of the incumbent. Cook ib. 7. 27. a.

HILLARY. 29 ELIZ.

LASSELL'S CASE.

Lassell brought an action of debt upon an obligation, the defendant pleads, that the condition was, that he should personally appear before the justices, and set forth, how he was taken by a latitat by the plaintiff who was shiriff, who took this obligation upon his deliverance: and urged the statute of 23 H. 6. and said that the obligation was not according to the statute. And by the opinion of three justices (Anderson being absent) if it were in such an action wherein a man may appear by atturney, then it is void. And the plaintiff shewed a judgment given in the Kings Bench, wherein in such case judgment was given for the sheriffs, and it was between Seekford and Cutts 27. & 28. Eliz. Rot. 373. And the next terme it was moved again.

[91] Anderson. The obligation is void; for when an express form is limited by the statute, no variance ought to be from it. But the other three justices were against him, for they held that he ought to appear in his proper person in case of a latitat.

Anderson. I deny that, for latitats have not been of above 60 years continuance; vid. Cook, lib. 10. Beufages case; and his first institutes, 225. a.

KAYRE AGAINST DEURAT. IN C. B. ROT. 603.

In a waste, the plaintiff declared how the defendant was seized in fee, and made a feoffment to the use of himself for life, the remainder to the plaintiff in fee, after which he committed waste. The tenant said, that he was seized in fee, without that he made a feoffment as the plaintiff declared; and upon issue joyned, it was found that the defendant was seised in fee, and that he made a feoffment to the use of himself for life of J. S. without impeachment of waste, the remainder ut supra; and whether this was the feoffment which the plaintiff alledged, they prayed the advice of the Court.

Anderson, Chief Justice. If the impeachment of waste be not part of their issue, then the verdict is voyd for that point, and that which is found more than their issue is voyd, 33 H. 6. the defendant pleaded that he was not tenant of the free-hold, and the jury found that he held joyntly with another, there the plaintiff shall recover. And then at another day it was said by the justices, that the jury had found such an estate as was alledged by the plaintiff; and although that they further found this priviledge to be dispunisht of waste, which upon the matter proves that the plaintiff hath no cause of action, yet because the tenant may choose whether he would take hold of this priviledge or not, the jury cannot finde a thing that is out of their verdict, and whereof the defendant will not take advantage by pleading, and for this cause their verdict was voyd. 7 H. 6. 33. 21 H. 7. 12. where one pleaded in bar a feoffment, and traversed the feoffment, and hereupon they were at issue, and the jury found that he had enfeoffed the tenant after the fine levyed to the plaintiff; this cannot be found, because it is out of their issue, 31 Assi. 12. and judgement was given for the demandant.

MICHELL AGAINST DONTON. IN C. B. ROT. 639.

In an ejectment a man makes a lease, rendring rent, with a covenant that the lessee shall repair the houses, with other covenants and conditions of re-entry for not performance, and then he devised the same land to the same lessee for divers years after the first years expired, yielding the same rent, and under the same covenants as in the former lease, and he devised the remainder in fee to the plaintiff, and the first lease expires, and the defendant being possest [92] by force of his second lease, doth not repair the houses; and if the plaintiff might enter, was the question.

Shuttleworth. In as much as he devised the land under the same covenants as the first lease was, and the first was with covenants and conditions, the second shall be so also, the rather because he deviseth the remainder over, so that the devisee cannot take advantage of the covenants, but of the conditions he may, and the second lease is conditional. But the whole Court was against him.

Shuttleworth. To what purpose then are these words in the devise, under the same covenants.

Periam. They shall be voyd. And by all the justices the intent of the will was not that the lease should be conditional, for covenants and conditions differ much, for the one gives an action, but not the other; but the intent was, that he should perform the covenants upon pain to render damages in a writ of covenant.

BOTTENHAM AGAINST HERLAKENDEN.

29 & 30 ELIZ. IN C. B. ROT. 1620.

Herlakenden was seized of land, and devised the same to the plaintiff for years, the remainder to his wife for life, proviso, that the plaintiff should pay to the woman

20l. per annum; and if he failed of his payment, &c. wherefore the woman entred, and if this shall be called reservation or reversion, was the question.

Anderson. A man cannot make a reservation on a devise.

Periam. A man may to himself and his heirs, but not to a stranger.

Anderson. Every devisee is in, in the sier by the devisor, and why shall not this then be a reservation to the devisor, and a grant of the reversion to the woman.

Gawdy. Wherefore cannot a man devise land, reserving rent, when by the statute 32 H. 8. he may devise at his pleasure?

Periam. Because his pleasure must correspond with the law.

Anderson. If I devise land to another, reserving rent to me and my heirs, and then devise the reversion, he shall have the rent as incident to the reversion, and the Judges were divided, wherefore, &c.

Glover against Pipe. In B. R. Rot. 838.

In debt upon a bond the condition was, that where Glover the plaintiff had a copyhold of inheritance, and had leased it to the defendant, if the defendant should not commit any manner of waste, and should do no other thing that should be forfeiture of the copyhold, that then, &c. The defendant pleaded conditions performed; the plaintiff replyed, and alledged waste committed in a shop that fell down during the term for want of reparation: but the defendant in rejoynder alledged, that the shop was ruinous at the time of the lease, and by reason thereof fell down.

Tanfield. It is no waste, as the books are, 42 Ed. 3. 19 Ed. 3. 2 H. 7. 3. a. 12 H. 8. 11. a. If a house be ruinous at the time of the [93] lease, and fall during the term, it is no waste: yet the book in 7 H. 6. is otherwise. And in the 12 H. 4. a man lets his house, and it is covenanted that the lessee shall not suffer any voluntary waste, if the timber be so good as it will endure the whole term, although it be not covered, yet is the lessee bound to reserve it during the term.

Godfrey for the plaintiff, and agreed to all the cases aforesaid. But here the defendant is bound by his obligation, and therefore it differs from the case in 42 Ed. 3. 6. and of Perkins 142. where a diversity is between a waste and a covenant; for if a man makes a lease for years, and by sudden chance waste is committed, this shall excuse the lessee: but if he covenant to leave the house in as good a condition as he found it, if the house fall down by tempest, yet he ought to re-edify it. Also in this case it is a waste in law, although the house were ruinous at the beginning of the lease; for in a waste brought in such case, if he pleads nul waste fait, he shall not give such matter in evidence, but it is onely to excuse him. And with him agreed all the Court, and judgment was given for the plaintiff.

Austin against Courtney.

30 Eliz. In B. R. Rot. 165.

Austin and his wife, as daughter and heir of one Webb, brought a writ of errour against Thomas Courtney to reverse a fine levied in a base court by the said Webb to himself.

Cook assigned these errors, 1, because the fine was levied de uno tenemento, which is not good for the generality, for it may be land, or common, or rent. And in 3 Ed. 4. a plea in bar was rejected, because it was pleaded that one was seized de uno tenemento, for this is uncertain. And in 38 H. 6. an action is brought upon the statute of 8 H. 6. for entry into certain tenements, that is not good, for it ought to be brought of so many acres. The second errour was, because Webb the conusor did acknowledge the land to be his right, whereas it ought to be the right of Courtney the conusee. The third errour was, because the fine was levied in a base court, which prescribes to hold pleas, but they cannot levy fines there, for then the King shall lose his silver 50 Assis. And so was it adjudged between Bambury and Peres, that a fine levied in Chester which had such prescription, is not good; wherefore judgment was given that the fine should be reverst.

Leigh for the defendant. Here is no consideration; for when the plaintiff is out of the possession of his dog, he hath lost his interest in [94] him, for a dog is feræ naturæ, and therefore when he is out of possession, he hath no remedy. 22 H. 6. 10 H. 7. 16 Ed. 4. and he cited Fynes and Sir John Spencers case in Dyer, where a trespass will not lye for a hawk. Also, by the grant of omnia bona & catalla, dogs do not pass, nor are tithable nor are assets.

Tanfield, contra. Horses, cows, and all cattel which are most profitable for service of man, were at first feræ naturæ, and so were dogs also: but since by use nothing is so familiar and domestick to man than is a dog, and then he cannot be feræ naturæ; and therefore a trespass will lye for a dog, if he declare his dog, for that word does imply it is his domestick dog; and he much relyed on a book, the roll whereof he had seen. Leeks case, where one had judgement to recover great damages for a blood-hound. And as to the case of Fines and Spencer, the reason why the plaintiff had not judgement, was, because he did not shew that the hawk was reclaimed, but after he brought a new action, and had great damages. And at last it was adjudged by all the Court, that the action is maintainable, and judgement commanded to be entred, nisi, &c.

STONE AGAINST WITHEPOOLE. IN B. R. ROT. 771.

In an action of the case the plaintiff declared, that J. S. was indebted to him for velvet and other things to such a value, and was bound in a bond to pay money for them, and that afterwards the defendant (being his executor) did assume and promise to pay the money. The defendant pleaded that the testator was within age at the time of the making the bond, and hereupon the plaintiff demurred.

Egerton Sollicitor for the plaintiff. A contract made by an infant is not voyd, but voydable; and if the infant at his full age had assumed as the defendant hath, it had been good, and by the same reason the executors assumsion is good, 9 Eliz. 13. where the Lord Gray, being heir to the former Lord Gray, although he was not bound to pay the debts of his father upon simple contract, yet in regard he did assume to pay them, he was made chargeable. And in 15 and 16 Eliz. it is a good consideration where an administrator undertakes to pay debts upon a simple contract: but admitting the executor be not chargeable by law, yet in equity and conscience he is chargeable in Chancery; and when he promiseth in consideration that the plaintiff will not sue him, that is a good consideration.

Cooke. The consideration is the ground of every action on the case, and it ought to be either a charge to the plaintiff or a benefit to the defendant. 17 Ed. 4. 5. where a man promised and assumed to a chyrurgean money for curing a poor man: that was a good consideration; for although it is no benefit to the defendant, yet it is a charge to the plaintiff, and where there is no consideration, there can be no good action; as where a man promiseth a debt that he never owed, this is voyd. And after, viz. 31 Eliz. it seemed to all the ju-[95]-stices, that the consideration was not good, and therefore the contract voyd; but if goods be delivered to an infant to be re-delivered, if afterwards his executor assumeth to re-deliver them, this is good.

Gawdy, in the 13 H. 6. If a man be indebted in a simple contract, and dye, and his executors assume to pay the debt, it is good: but this seems to be contrary to the law, for it is contrary to that which hath been lately adjudged in the Common Pleas. And Egerton cited a case, 10 H. 6. where an infant brought an action of trespass, and submitted himself to an arbitrement, this shall binde him at his full age; and this was agreed by the Court, but differs much from the case at Bar; for when an infant commits a trespass, he is chargeable in an action of trespass, and shall lose damages: but it is not so here. Wherefore judgement was given, that the plaintiff should be barred.

STANTON AGAINST CHAMBERLAIN. ROT. 656.

In an action of debt upon a bond, upon non est factum pleaded, the jury found, that the defendant sealed the bond, and cast it on the table, and the plaintiff came and took up the bond, and carried it away without saying any thing; and if this shall amount to a delivery by the defendant to the plaintiff, was the question. And it was resolved by all the justices, that if the jury had found that he had sealed the bond, and cast it on the table towards the plaintiff, to the intent that the plaintiff should take it as his deed, who took the bond and went away, that had been a good delivery; or that the plaintiff, after the sealing and casting on the table, had taken it by the commandment or consent of the defendant: but because it is found that the defendant onely sealed it, and cast it on the table, and the plaintiff took it and went away with it, this is not a sufficient delivery, for it may be that he sealed it to the intent to reserve it to himself untill other things were agreed, and then if the plaintiff take it, and go away with it without the defendants consent, that will not make it the defendants deed. But it was said, that it might be accounted to be the defendants deed, because it is found that he sealed it, and cast it on the table, and the plaintiff took it, &c. and it is not found that the defendant said any thing, and therefore because he did not say any thing, it will amount to his consent, Nam qui tacet consentire videtur. But to this it was answered, that it is not found that the defendant was present when the plaintiff took it, and if the defendant had sealed, and cast the bond on the table when the plaintiff was not there, and then the defendant went away, and then the plaintiff came and took it away, then clearly it is not the deed of the defendant.

BERON AGAINST GOODYNE.

In an ejectment the case was, The King was seized of lands in fee, and a stranger intruded, and the King grants this land to J. S. in fee, and the intruder continues possession, and dyes seized: the question was, if this descent shall take away the entry of I. S.

[96] Johnson. It shall not; for none will affirm that an intruder shall gain any thing out of the King, but that the land shall pass to the patentee, and the continuance of the intruder in possession, and his dying seized, shall not take away the entry; for he cannot be a disseisor, because he gained no estate at the beginning; as if a guardian continues possession after the heir is of full age, he is no disseisor, nor shall gain any estate. And 10 Ed. 3. 2. where a tenant of the King dyes, his heir within age, and a stranger enters, and after the heir is of full age dyes seized, this shall not take away the entry of the heir.

Cook contr. By his continuance of possession he shall be accounted a disseisor, and the free-hold out of the patentee, for another estate he cannot have, for tenant at sufferance he is not, for he comes in at first by a title, as in the 12 Assi. The donees in frank-marriage are divorced, and the husband continues the possession; and so where a lessee continues possession after the death of the tenant for life, these are tenants at sufferance; and the patentee hath a free-hold in law, which is taken away by descent, and denyed there was any such case as was vouched in the 10 Ed. 3. but compared the case to the 21 Ed. 3. 2. where a fine was levyed sur conusans de droit come ceo, &c. if before the conusee enters, a stranger enters, and dyes seized, the entry of the conusee is barr'd. So is it where an advowson is granted to J. S. and his heirs, and a stranger usurps, the grantee hath no remedy. And if a man deviseth land to J. S. and before he enters, a stranger doth enter, and dyes seized, the entry of the disseisee is taken away; and so it is in our case. But a further day was given Cook to shew cause why judgement should not be given against him.

Sutton's Case. In C. B. Rot. 533.

In an ejectment, the jury gave a special verdict, that the defendant (nihil habeas in terra) did make a lease thereof to the plaintiff by indenture, according as the plaintiff had declared, and then the defendant entred on the plaintiff; and whether this entry be good, was the question.

Walmesley for the defendant. Jurors are sworn ad veritatem dicendum, and therefore they shall not enquire of estoppels, because it is not in evidence. But the whole Court was against him, who held that the jury might finde a matter that is not shewed in evidence; for by Anderson, in an assize they may finde a release; although it be not given in evidence; and he and Periam held, that the plaintiff ought to have judgement, for that there was a good lease between the parties, and if rent were reserved, an action of debt would lye.

Windham contr. For it is onely an estoppell between the parties: but the Court is at liberty, and are not estopped, when the truth appears to them; and it is a maxim in law, that he who hath nothing in the land cannot make a lease, and then the plaintiff hath no cause of action. And afterwards, viz. 32 Eliz. Anderson and Periam were expresly for the plaintiff; for whereas it hath been said that it was a lease by estoppell, they held it was not so, for that in debt the rent should be recovered. And Anderson said, If I levy a fine of your land to you for years, if you be put out, I shall have an assize: but Windham was of opinion with Walmesley: wherefore Periam said, we will have the opinion of the other justices in the Exchequer Chamber; wherefore, &c.

Perryn against Allen. In C. B. Rot. 611. & 612.

In a debt upon a lease for years, it was found that one Gibson was seised of land in lease for thirty years, and he let the land to Perryn for 19. years rendring 10l. rent, and that afterwards, it was articled and agreed between Gibson and one J. S. that Perryn should have and hold the lands which he had, and also other lands which he had, for terme of 3. years rendring a greater rent, to which articles Perryn at another time and place afterwards agreed, but the intent of the articles and agreement betwixt them, was not that the first terme to Perryn should be extinct. That afterwards Perryn letted this land to the defendant Allen for 17. years rendring rent, and then the three years expired, and Gibson grants his term to J. S. who enters, &c. If this agreement amounts to a surrender, was the question.

Hanam, for the plaintiff. It is not; for to a surrender three things are incident. First, an actuall possession in him who surrenders. Secondly, an actuall remainder or reversion in him, to whom the surrender is made. Thirdly, consent and agreement between the parties; but to all these the plaintiff was a stranger, and therefore no surrender. For if I let land to you for so many years as J. S. shall name, if he names the years, it shall be good from that time, and not before: but if I let land for so many years as my executors shall name, this is not good, for I cannot have executors in my life time, and when I am dead I cannot assent, so in this case there ought to be a mutuall assent between the lessor and lessee.

Harris cont. It is a surrender, for if he concluded and agreed at another time, or accepted a new lease, it is a surrender. 37 H. 6. 22 Ed. 4. 14 H. 7. and then when a stranger does agree that he shall have other lands and pay a greater rent, this is a surrender.

Anderson. If I covenant with you that J. S. shall have my land for ten years, this is only a covenant and no lease, quod Walmesley concessit. And so if I covenant that your executors shall have my land for a term of years after your death, this is no lease. And all the Court held, that this was not a good lease, for the act of a stranger cannot make a surrender of the terme.

Peryam. You at the Bar have forgotten to argue one point materiall in the case, videlicet. If lessee for 20. years makes a lease for ten years if the lessee for ten years may surrender to the lessee for 20. years. And Hanam said privately, that he could not surrender, for one term cannot merge in the other. And Anderson said, that by opinion of them all, that the lessee for 10. years cannot surrender. But to the other point. All the Judges agreed that it was no surrender. And judgment was given for the plaintiff.

DABRIDGECOURT AGAINST SMALLBROOKE.

In an action of the case, the plaintiff declared that he was sheriff of the county of Warwick, and that a writ came down to him to arrest J. S. at the suit of the defendant, who requested the plaintiff to make Russell, who was the defendants friend, his speciall baily, in consideration of which the defendant did assume, that if the said J. S. did escape, that he would take no advantage against the plaintiff, where-[98]upon he made Russell his bailiff, who arrested the said J. S. who afterwards escapt from him, and that notwithstanding the defendant had charged the plaintiff for this. And a verdict was found for the plaintiff. And in this case it was agreed, that where a sheriff did make a bailiff upon request of any one, it is reason that the party should not charge the sheriff for an escape, by reason of the negligence of such bailiff: for the sheriff hath security from every one of his bailiffs to save him harmeless: wherefore it is great reason that if upon request he makes a speciall bailiff, that the party should not take advantage of such an escape, but that the sheriff may have his action against him again, upon his promise. And judgment was given for the plaintiff.

BEALE AGAINST CARTER. ROT. 331.

In an action of false imprisonment, the defendant justified the imprisonment for two hours because the plaintiff brought a little infant with him to the church intending to leave it there, and to have the parish keep it: and the defendant (being constable of the parish) because the plaintiff would not carry the child away with him again, carryed the defendant to prison, all the said time, untill he took the child away with him. And hereupon the plaintiff demurred. And it seemed to the justices that it was no good plea: for although the constable at the common law is keeper of the peace, yet this does not belong to his office, but if he had justified as officer, then perhaps it had been good. And afterwards, viz. Hillar. 33 Eliz. the case was argued again, and then Glanvill said, that it was a good justification, for any person may do it. For if I see A. ready to kill B. I ought to hinder him of his purpose. And in the 22 Ass. 50. the defendant justified because the plaintiff was madd and did a great deale of mischief, wherefore he imprisoned him. And in 10 Eliz. which case I have heard in this Court, the constable took a madd man, and put him in prison where he dyed, and the constable was indicted of this, but was discharged: for the act was legall, and so here in this case, if the infant had dyed for want of meat, it had been murder in the plaintiff. For it was held in 20 Eliz. at Winchester before the Lord Bacon, if one brings an infant to a desert place, where it dyes for want of nourishment, it is murder.

Gawdy. It was ill done of the plaintiff, but that ought to be reformed by due course of law, for a constable cannot imprison at his pleasure, but he may stay the party, and carry him to a justice of peace to be examin'd.

Wray. Then such matter ought to be pleaded. Quod Gaudie concessit.

Fenner. If he had pleaded that he refused to carry the infant away, then it had been a good justification, for a constable is conservator of the peace, but because it was not so pleaded, the plea is naught; but the Judges would not give judgment, for the ill examples sake, and therefore they moved the parties to compound.

SALE AGAINST THE BISHOP OF LICHFIELD. IN C. B.

Sale executor of J. S. who was grantee of the nomination and presentation to the archdeaconary in the county of Derby, brought a quare impedit against the Bishop of Lichfield, and declared of a presentment and disturbance in vita testatoris, & quod ecclesia vacavit & adhuc vacata est. The defendant pleaded plein d'incumbent, before the writ purchased, and judgment was given for the plaintiff. And it was moved, if a quare impedit does lye of an archdeaconary, for it is but a function or dignity, and therefore a quare impedit will not lie of an office of a commissary, but the 24 Ed. 3. 42. is express in the point. And 30 Edw. 3. 21. a qure impedit did lye of a priory. And therefore notwithstanding this exception, judgement was given for the plaintiff. But there were two other doubts in the case. First, if a quare impedit will lie for an executor for disturbance done in vita testatoris, and that by the statute of 4 Ed. 3. 7.

Snigge. The action will lye by the executors, for in all cases where damages are to be recovered, they shall have an action by that statute. 11 H. 7. 2. An action of trespass was brought for taking of goods in the life of the testator, but no action will lie for entrie into land in the life of the testator, for it ought to be such an action as will survive in damages, and may be a damage to the executor 7 H. 42. An ejectement lies for executors, upon an ejectment in the life of the testator. And if an ejectment be maintenable in which a terme shall be recover'd, it shall be also maintenable in a quare impedit, in which a presentment may be recovered.

Drew cont. At the common law executors have no remedy for a personall wrong, quia moritur cum persona: for upon the death of the testator, executors have no remedy for arrears of rent at the common law, but only the statute of 32 H. 8. And it cannot be that the executors in this case are within the statute of 4 Ed. 3. For that statute intends onely to remedy such things as are avaylable to the testator, and are assets to pay debts: and although executors may have a quare impedit, that is intended of a disturbance, fait al eux, but contra, if it be done in vita testatoris.

Walmesley. I conceive no actions will lie. For the statute gives an action for the taking of goods and such like things, but here is no taking, but only a disturbance, which may be done by parol.

Perryam Justice cont. For the statute says that they shall have an action of trespass for a trespass done to their testator, and not for taking goods, so that the taking of goods is but by way of resemblance, and not that they shall have an action of trespass for taking of goods onely.

Windham, and Anderson agreed with Perryman, and whereas it hath been said, that this cannot be assetts. Put the case that the testator had judgment to recover damages, shall not that be assetts? and why may not the damages here recovered be assetts, and why shall not the grant of the advowson be assetts in the hands of the executor as well as in the hands of the issue. And so was the opinion of the Court.

Foster and Wilson against Mapps. In B. R. Rot. 71.

The case on a speciall verdict was thus, Mapps the defendant made a lease of the parsonage of Broncaster by indenture, and covenanted by the same deed, to save the plaintiff harmless and indemnified: and also all the proffits thereof and premisses, against Philip Blount, the parson of Broncaster; and hereupon a writ of covenant was brought against Mapps, and the breach assigned was, that Blount had entred and ejected the plaintiff. And one point was, if this shall be accounted the deed of the defendant, because the defendant delivered his part of the indenture to the plaintiff as his deed, but the plaintiff did not deliver the counterpart to him. But the opinion of the Court was, that this was a good deed of the defendants, and Gawdy said, that the safest way had been to deliver his part as an escroll to be his deed, when the plaintiff delivered the counterpaine: but a great doubt was made in this case, because it was not shewed that Blount entred by a title, and then he shall be taken to have entred by wrong, and so the covenant not broken, for to save harmeless is only from legall harmes, as it is in Swettenhams case Dyer 306. Where the warden of the Fleet suffered a prisoner to escape, and took a bond of him to save him harmeless, and then the warden was sued upon an escape, and thereupon he sued the obligation, and adjudged that the bond was not forfeit, because the partie was not legally in execution, and therefore the warden could not be damnified for the escape.

Padsy cont. The diversitie is where the covenant is generall, and where it is speciall, for in this case it being speciall to save harmeless from Blount he ought to defend against him his entry, be it by good title or by wrong, and so is Catesbies case. Dyer 3. 28. Where the lessor covenanted, that the lessee should injoy his terme sine ejectione vel interruptione alicujus, the lessee brought an action of covenant because a stranger entred, and did not say he had any title, and judgment was given for the plaintiff.

Gawdy. The covenant is broke. For if Blount disturbe him so that he cannot take the proffits, this is a breach of the covenant, for hereby the plaintiff is damnified. 2 Ed. 4. 15. where the condition of a bond was, that the obliger should warrant and defend the obliged for ever, and against all, and the defendant pleaded, that he had such a warrant, and there it was held by Danby to be no plea, because he cannot warrant unless the other be impleaded. And there it was said by Danby and Needham, that if the obligee be outed by a stranger, who hath no title, the obligation is forfeit by reason of this word defend.

Wray agreed, and said, that this case was not like to the case of 26 H. 8. 3. where the lessor covenanted to warrant the land to the lessee, for there he shall not have a covenant, if he be wrongfully outed; but our case is to save harmeless, which is of greater force than to warrant, for to warrant land is only upon the title, but here, be the lessee outed by wrong or by title, yet is the covenant broken, to which the other justices agreed.

Fenner voucht. 18 Ed. 4. 27. where a man is obliged to save J. S. [101] harmless against me, if I doe arrest J. S. although wrongfully, the obligation is forfeit, which the other justice denied. And at last judgment was given for the plaintiff.

Elmer and his Wife against Thatcher. In C. B. Rot. 1125.

Statut. Westm. 2. cap. 4.

In a quod ei deforceat of a third part of an acre of land whereof the wife was tenant in dower: the defendant confesed she was tenant in dower, but shewed how she committed waste, wherefore he brought his action of waste, to which she appeared and pleaded nothing, for which he had judgment to recover. The plaintiff said that no waste was committed, and the defendant demurred.

Owen for the defendant. A quod ei deforceat, lies not in this case, for such writ is grounded upon a recovery by default in a reall action, but a waste is a meere personal action. And therefore in the 2 H. 4. in a waste against the husband and wife, the wife shall not be received: also it will not lie in this case, because here is no default within the intent of the statute, for the statute intends to relieve defaults after appearance, and therefore all the judgment in this writ is that the recovery was by default, and if there was a default in pleading, it is a default, but not within the statute.

Glanvill cont. No waste is committed, and so the recovery shall not bind, for it appears in the 8 Ed. 4. by West. that this action was provided instead of a writ of right, and there is no question but a writ of right will lie here, and this writ is of the same nature. And Mr. Plowden in his reading said, that this action will lie upon a recovery upon a writ of waste as well as in other actions, for the recovery is not upon the inquiry of the jury, but upon default. And it is also a reall action 7 Ed. 3. 28 Ed. 3. 30. If the husband make default herein, the wife shall be received.

Anderson. There is no question but this action lies upon a recovery in waste, but if this be a default within the statute is a doubt, for if this should be suffer'd, it were very mischievous: for then contempts shall be favoured, which was never the intention of the statute, and therefore it will not lie where there is a default after appearance.

Walmesley, of the same opinion, for this case differs much from the Statute of Gloucester, for this statute gives remedy to a third person upon default of the particular tenant, and therefore upon this statute the intent of the partie, who makes default, is more regarded, than the manner of the default, and therefore it shall be taken largely. But here is default in the party himself, and he shall have no favour against his willfull default, for every nihil dicit, is a confession of it self, for thereupon it is supposed that nothing can be said.

Windham. I hold that a quod ei deforceat will not lie in a writ of waste, for the inquiry of the jury is the cause of the judgment. But he agreed that default within the statute is intended such default, that in it self is the cause of the judgment, but here the judgment is given upon contempt and refusall of the party and therefore no favour.

Perryam. This action cannot be compar'd to a writ of right which is grounded upon the right, and not on the judgment but the form in the quod ei deforceat is set down in the statute which ought to be observed, and the statute gives this action upon a default, and here is no [102] default, for it cannot be a default where the partie appears and hath no day in Court, but he doubted much if it lay in a writ of waste, because the damages are the principall: but as the case is here, it will not lie. And to prove that a nihil dicit is a confession he cited Pepys's case in the Comentaries 438. And at last judgment was given that the writ would not lye.

And Cooks 1. Inst. 355.

PASCH. 35 ELIZAB.

JAMES AGAINST PORTMAN.

William James and Thomas James joyntenants for life of a lease made by Portman, William James doth assent, covenant and agree that Thomas James occupy all the land alone, and sow it with his own corn: after the land is sowed Thomas James dyes, William James the survivor grants the corne to Portman, who takes it, and the plaintiff as executor to Thomas brought an action of trespass.

Ewens, for the defendant. One joyntenant cannot make a lease to his companion, no more than one may infeof the other, by reason they have joynt possession 10 Ed. 4. 3. 2 R. 2. Extinguishment 3. Also the words here are not sufficient to make a lease, but admitting this, yet the survivor shall have the corn of that part which belongs to him, for by this lease the joynture is severed, and then the survivor shall have that which grows on his part: for if two joyntenants sowe their land, and one of them letts his moytie for years; and he, who did not let, dyes, the other shall have the corn as survivor.

Pyne cont. Although one joyntenant cannot infeof another, because he cannot make livery, because he hath possession before, yet may he release to his companion, and so may he make a lease for years, for there is no need of any livery, and by the 22 H. 6. 43. If one joyntenant infeofs another, this shall enure by way of confirmation. And 14 H. 6. 10. One joyntenant may put out his companion by this means, for he may clayme a lease from him, and then a release, and if it be a good lease, then the executors shall have it.

Popham. The action is good, for one joyntenant may make a lease to the other, although he cannot infeof, for a lease is but a contract. And 11 H. 6. 33. one joyntenant commanded the other to occupy all, and in a trespass he was compelled to plead this as a lease, and then if one joyntenant does sow all and dyes, the other shall have the corne by survivor: and it is not as in case where a man hath an estate determinable upon uncertainty, for there his executors shall have the corn, but in our case, the survivor had contracted with his companion, and thereby had bound himself not to meddle with the land, and the other bestowed great costs in manuring and sowing the land, and therefore the executors shall have the corn.

Fenner agreed, but doubted whether one joyntenant could make a lease to the other: but said, that by the contract he had excluded himself from the proffits; and by the 39 Ed. 3. 27. one joyntenant may have an account against the other. And he said, that if I agree that you shall sow my land with me, you shall gain no interest in the land, and yet you shall have the corne. And one joyntenant may distreyn for himself, and as bayly for the other. And the cause was adjourned: and afterwards viz. Hillary 36 Eliz. the case was repeated.

[103] And Gawdy said, that if there be two joyntenants, and one grants to the other that he may sow the land, yet may the other occupie with him, for these words do not transfer any sole interest, but if he sayes that he shall occupy all the land, and shall sow it solely, this does exclude him from having any interest with him.

Popham. Agreed, because this is but a contract, and so of a lease for years.

Gawdy. If one joyntenant sayes to the other, that he will not occupie the land with him, or that he will not put in his cattle, this does not transfer any interest, but that he may occupie with him, and so in this case, if it had not been said that he should occupy solely.

Popham of the same opinion: for where he sayes he will not occupy, the words are in the negative, which will not exclude him of his interest, but in the case at Bar they will, because they are in the affirmative so. That he shall occupy the land solely. And judgment was given for the plaintiff.

WOODWARD AGAINST NELSON. IN B. R.

Woodward, parson of Wotton in consideration of 120l. payd by Bretman, one of his parishioners, did accord and agree with him, that he and his assignes should be discharged of tythes during the time that he should be parson. Bretman made a lease to Nelson, Woodward did libell against him for tythes, and Nelson prayed a prohibition upon the said contract. And if this was sufficient matter for a prohibition was the question, because it was by word only, and without writing, which amounts only to a cause of action upon a promise for Bretman, but no action for his lessees, neither can this amount to a release of tythes, for as tythes cannot be leased without deed, so they cannot be released or discharged without deed.

Gawdy Justice. Tythes cannot be discharg'd without deed, unless by way of contract for a sum of money, and he cited the 21 H. 6. 43.

Fenner: For that year in which the discharge was made, it was good by way of discharge without deed, because the parson for that year had as it were an interest, but such discharge can have no continuance for another year, for default of a deed; and so a promise being no discharge, it is no cause of a prohibition. But Gawdy, held as afore. And about this time Wray Chief Justice dyed, and Popham succeeded, and the same day he was sworn, Cook moved this case again. And the Court held that the agreement being by parol was not good: and Fenner, then, said that without writing the agreement could not be good between the parties but for one year. And the Court awarded a consultation. But upon search made, no judgment was entred in the roll.

DR. FOORD AGAINST HOLBORROW. IN B. R. ROT. 367.

In an action of debt upon a bond, the case was, Dr. Drury (to whom the plaintiff was executor) made a lease to Holborrow of the mannour of Golding for years, and Holborrow the lessee entred into a bond, that if he, his executors or assigns, did pay to Anne Goldingham, widow, the sum of 20l. for 17 years, if the said Goldingham should so long live, and so long as Holborrow the lessee, or any claiming by or under the said Holborrow shall or may occupy or enjoy the said mannour of Goldingham; and then Holborrow surrendred his lease to the obligee, prætextu cujus the defendant pleaded, quod non occupavit, nec potuit occupare, &c. wherefore he did not pay the said sum to Anne Goldingham, and the executor of the obligee brought an action of debt upon this obligation.

Johnson for the defendant. The term is gone, for he cannot occupy after the surrender, and also the obligee is a party to the cause why it is not performed, and therefore he shall take no advantage, 4 H. 7. 2. But the whole Court was against him, for he to whom the surrender is made, cometh in quodammodo by him, and is his assignee, for he shall be subject to the charge that was before the surrender; and also the defendant shall be bound by these words in the obligation, viz. so long as he shall or may: and although these words were not inserted, yet he shall pay the annuity: for where the first cause does commence in himself, he shall not have advantage thereby: but otherwise, where he is not party to the first cause. As if two joynt-tenants with warranty make a partition, the warranty is gone, because they are parties to the act which made the extinguishment: but if one makes a feoffment of his part, the warranty as to the other remains, 11 Ed. 4. 8. and in the case at Bar, the obligor made the surrender, and therefore he is party, and the first cause: and there is a diversity when the thing to be done is collateral, and when not: for if a lessee does oblige himself to do a collateral thing, as payment of money, there he ought to do it, although that he surrender: for although the obligee do accept of the surrender, yet no act is done by him to hinder the performance of the condition: but where the obligee does any act to hinder the performance of the condition, the condition is saved: as if the lessee be bound to the lessor to suffer J. S. to enter into a chamber during the lease, and he surrenders to the obligee, who will not suffer J. S. to enter, the obligation is saved, and judgment was given for the plaintiff.

BEDFORD AGAINST HALL. IN B. R.

In an action of covenant, wherein the plaintiff declared, that the defendant did devise and grant to him certain land, with all his goods contained in a certain inventory for 20 years, and said, that in the inventory, amongst other things, were five cows, which the de-[105]-fendant seized, and that one J. S. took them away as his proper goods, as indeed they were, and hereupon he brought this action.

Fenner. The action will not lye, for no interest in the cows doth pass to the lessee by this lease, neither was there any right to them in the lessor: as if I demise to you the land of J. S. by these words, demisi & concessi, and you enter, and J. S. re-enters, no covenant lyes against me. And so in the 11 H. 4. a prebend made a lease for years, and resigned, now is the term of the lessee quite destroyed; and if after he be outed by a new prebend, yet he shall have no action of covenant. And so is it, 9 Eliz. Dyer 257. Lessee for life makes a lease for years, and dyes, the lessee shall not have a covenant if he be outed by him in the reversion, because he is not in as a termor at the time of the disturbance. But if in the principal case the lessor had been possest of the goods, although by a wrong title and the owner had seized them, then a covenant would lye. And so if a disseisor makes a lease, and the disseisee re-enters, the lessee shall have a covenant.

Gawdy. If a man lets lands wherein he hath no estate together with his goods, although the lands will not pass, yet the goods do; and if a man lets goods for a year, and re-takes them within the year, no covenant will lye, for the property was never in the lessee.

Clench. If a man lets anothers goods to me by deed, if I seize them, and the owner re-takes them, a covenant will lye, and so will an action on the case, if it be without deed, 42 Assi. 8. If I be in possession of anothers goods, and sell them, a deceit lyes against me by the vendee; and so is the book of Ass. 42. 8. contra, where the vendor hath not possession at the time of the sale. And if I sell goods by deed which are in my possession, and they are evicted by the right owner, a covenant will lye: contra, if I have not possession at the time of the letting them, and if I let land, and J. S. enter before the lessee, the lessee cannot have a covenant, quod nota. Et adjournetur.

Scarret against Tanner. In C. B. Rot. 1458.

In a false imprisonment, the defendant justified, that he was high constable of the hundred of E. in the county of Salop, and that the plaintiff made an affray within the said hundred upon one Warin, who came presently to the defendant, and told him of it, and took his oath that he was in fear of his life: whereupon the defendant came to the plaintiff, and arrested him, and carried him to prison until he could finde sufficient sureties of peace.

Glanvill. A constable cannot arrest one to finde surety of the peace upon a complaint made to him, unless he himself sees the peace broken, 7 Ed. 4.

Kingsmill contr. For he is at common law conservator pacis, 12 H. 7. 18. and how can he keep the peace, if he may not compell them to finde surety. 44 Ed. 3. Barr. 202. If a man that is threatned complain to the constable, he may compell the party to finde surety for his good behaviour, and may justifie the imprisoning him, or putting him in the stocks, 22 Ed. 4. 35. 10 Ed. 4. 18. where a constable in such case may take a bond.

[106] Anderson. I grant that constables are keepers of the peace at the common law, and are to keep the peace as much as in them lyes; and that is, to take men that they finde breaking the peace, and to carry them to a justice of peace to finde surety: but the constable cannot take security, nor recognizance, nor bail, for he is not an officer upon record; and if he do take a bond, how shall he certifie it, and unto what Court?

Walmesley contr. who said, that the constable might take security by bond, although not by recognizance or bail.

Beaumond. A constable may put him that breaks the peace within the stocks, but it must be where the breach of peace is committed in his view, for he hath no authority to take an oath that a man is in fear of his life, and then the foundation of his justification doth fail.

Owen. The oath is not material; for although he cannot take such oath, yet his taking of surety is good; and before justices of peace were made, the peace was preserved by constables; and the statute that creates justices, does not take away the power of constables, and therefore he may justifie. Sed adjournatur.

Worsley against Charnock. In C. B.

In an audita quærela the case was thus, The father and son were bound in a statute-merchant to Charnock, who sued out an execution against them, and their lands were severally extended; and they supposing that the statute was not good, because it was not sealed with both their seals, according to the statute, they both brought a joynt audita querela; and whether they could joyn in this action, or not, was the question.

Warburton. They shall not joyn; for in all cases a man must make his complaint according to his grief: and here their grief is several, as if two men be imprisoned, they shall not joyn in a false imprisonment. The same law in a battery, 8 Ed. 4. 18 H. 6. 10 Ed. 4. If J. S. hath goods of divers men, they shall not joyn in a replevin; and 33 H. 6. two men shall not joyn in an audita quærela, unless the land in execution is in them joyntly; and 29 Ed. 3. two joynt-tenants infants alien, they shall have several writs of cum fuit infra ætatem: but he confessed the case in 30 Ed. 3. Fitzherbert, audita quærela, where two men were in execution, and the conusor did release to one, and then to another by another release, yet both shall joyn in an audita quærela; but this is not law: and besides, they cannot recover damages joyntly, by reason of their several vexations; and this action being personal, damages cannot be severed. Vid. 2 Ed. 3. Execution 45. 9 Ed. 4. 31. 12 Ed. 4. 6.

Harris contra. And as to the last reason, the book in the 20 of Elizabeth is, that no damages shall be recovered in an audita quærela, which (if it be law) then is the doubt at an end. And whereas it hath been said, that they shall not joyn because their griefs are several, methinks there is no reason, but that if he that survives shall be charged with the whole, that they shall joyn also in their discharge; for if their charge be joynt, their discharge shall be joynt also. And in the 34 H. 6. and 30 Ed. 3. where an audita quærela may be brought joyntly: and he resembled this to the case of a monstraverunt, where if a tenant [107] in antient demesn be distreyned, all the tenants shall joyn, because the grievance to one may be a grievance to all the rest.

Yelverton of the same opinion. The suing of the execution was the cause of the audita quærela, but not the ground, for the ground was the statute-merchant, and therefore it is here brought according to the statute.

Anderson. If two men do me several trespasses, yet I may have a joynt action against them, and the death of one of them shall not abate the writ: but if two are plaintiffs in a personal action, the non-suit of one shall be the non-suit of the other: and in our case the statute was joynt, and also the execution: then if all the writs are so, the audita quærela which is to discharge them, shall be joint also, especially in this writ where they are as it were defendants; and therefore he resembled this case to a writ of errour, or an attaint brought by two joyntly, and one is non-sued, yet this shall not abate the writ, because they are in a manner defendants.

Walmesley contr. The action ought to be brought according to the cause of the wrong, and the wrong begun in suing the execution, and that was several, and therefore the audita quærela ought to be several also: but if this statute had been good, and had been discharged by release or defeasance, then the audita quærela might be brought joyntly, for then the ground of the execution was joint: but here is but a colourable statute, and the cause of the action is not begun before the execution sued.

Owen and Beaumond agreed: and after by assent of Anderson, judgement was given that they ought to have several writs.

Note, Pasch. 36 Eliz. in B. R. & Rot. 323. or 521. between Curteise and Overscot. If A. did recover against B. by two several judgements, whereby B. is in execution, it was adjudged that he shall not have one audita quærela, but two several writs.

SAWER AGAINST HARDY. IN B. R. ROT. 254.

In an ejectment, the case was this; A woman was lessee for forty years, sub hac conditione, si vixerit vidua & inhabitaret super primissos: the woman dyed before the lease expired, and her executors entred, and being outed, they brought this action; and the question was, if the lease were determined by the death of the woman, by limitation, or by condition, or if it yet remain.

Gawdy. It cannot be a condition, because the sentence is imperfect; for if a man makes a lease for life, rendring rent, sub hac conditione, that if the rent be behind, without any further words, this cannot be a condition, by reason of the imperfection of the sentence; and without doubt, if a lease for years be made to a woman, if she so long live, and inhabit the premisses, this is a limitation, so that the term is ended by her death.

Clench. It is neither condition nor limitation; for a condition ought alwayes to be a full and perfect sentence, and not uncertain. As a lease for years, upon condition that the lessee shall pay 18l. at the house of the lessor, this is a full sentence: but a lease made, rendring rent, and if it be behind, (and no more said) this is no condition. And in all cases where these words, quod si, do make a condition, it is re-[108]-quisite that these words, quod tunc, do ensue. Neither can it be a limitation, because the words, quod si, spoyl the sentence. And Popham was also of opinion, that it was neither condition nor limitation: but if the words had been sub conditione quod tamdiu vixerit & inhabitaret, &c. this is a perfect sentence, and by her death, or not inhabiting, the estate might be determined; and he put this difference, that if a lease had been for 20 years, si tamdiu vixerit super præmissos, the lease had been determined by her death: but if a lease had been for 20 years, si tamdiu in habitaret, quamdiu vixerit, vel durante vita super præmissos; there if she dyes within the term, yet the term continues, for in the first case the limitation goes to the interest, and in the other to the time; and judgement was given, that the plaintiff should recover, for that the term continued.

MICHAELM. 37 & 38 ELIZ.

MARK IVES CASE. IN B. R.

In a debt upon a bond the condition was, that if the obligee should go to Rome, and return from thence again before the 5 of July after the date of the bond, that the obligor should pay to him 20l. upon the 20 day of July at Pauls. And it was moved by Williams Serjeant, that if the obligee returned within the time, whether he ought to give notice of his return to the obligor, for otherwise by his secret return he may make a forfeiture of the obligation; for if the obligor of necessity be to tender this money without notice of his return, inconvenience would ensue; for perhaps the obligee is not returned at the time the money is due, and then the tender is in vain, and the law will not compell a man to make a tender, unless it be to some purpose, and therefore the obligee ought to give notice, to the intent that the obligor may know whether the money be due to him or not. And it is like a mortgage upon condition, that if the mortgager does pay 20l. before Michaelmas at Pauls, that then, &c. here the mortgagor ought to give notice at what day before Michaelmas he will tender the money, or otherwise he cannot enter, for the time that the law prescribes to make the tender is the last instant before Michaelmas; and if the mortgager will make his election to tender it before the day, he ought to give the mortgagee notice thereof. And the case of one Gurney was cited by Cook, Adjudge 27 Eliz. where a lease was made for years, and the lessor made another lease for years, to commence after the surrender, determination, &c. of the first lease, and then a private surrender is made to the lessor of the first lease, the second lease shall not begin untill the lessee hath notice of the surrender of the first lease. But Tanfield said, that the case was ruled contrary, and that the lease did begin presently without notice, (ideo quære) and as to the principal point, the Court was divided. But Fenner said, that if the obligee should give notice, perhaps the obligor will not be found, and therefore good reason that the obligor should make tender to the obligee at his peril.

ESCOT AGAINST LANRENY. IN B. R.

In an action on the case the plaintiff declared that the Lord Barkley by his indenture, dimisit and ad firmam tradidit totam firmam suam tolnetum & proficuum nundinarum & dierum fœrialium infra manerium & Bergum de Thetbury. for 21 years, and that the defendant had disturbed and hindred him, from taking of divers pieces of wool infra manerium & Burgum, prædict. &c. and after issue joyned, exception was taken to the declaration: because he declared of a demise made by the Lord Barkley, and did not set forth, that the Lord Barkley was seised at the time of the demise 7 H. 7. 3. 34 H. 6. 48. But the exception disallowed by all the Court, because the plaintiff in this action is to recover damages only, and the right or title of land does not come in debate, but contra, if it were in such action where the right of the toll did come in debate, and to prove this Glanvill cited 20 Assis. 3. 47 Ed. 3. and 33 H. 6. and upon this reason he said that the plaintiff of necessity is not bound to set forth the market day, nor the quantity of the toll. 34 H. 6. 48. Where it was pleaded that J. S. made a lease to him and did not shew that he was seised, and yet held good.

Clench took another exception, because he did not set forth that toll was to be payd by common usage, for no toll is due for hens or geese, or for many other things of such nature, and so it might be that toll was not due for wooll.

Fenner was of the same opinion, but Popham contra, who said that the plaintiff had declared that the defendant had disturbed him from the toll of divers pieces of wooll, and by that is implyed, that toll ought to be payd for wooll. And at another day judgment was given for the plaintiff.

SACKFORD AGAINST PHILIPPS. IN CAMERA SCACCARII. ROT. 484.

In a debt, this case was moved by Williams Serjeant. A. is indebted to B. in 10l. upon a bond, and R. did promise to B. that if he would forbear A. that if A. did not pay him, he would, B. for non-payment by A. does recover so much in damages upon the assumpsit against R. If in debt upon this obligation against A. A. may plead this recovery in bar.

Walmsley, He cannot, for he is a stranger to the recovery (ideo quære:) and it was assign'd for errour that it was alledged in the declaration, that the defendant did promise to pay the 10l. before Michaelmas, in consideration the plaintiff would forbeare to sue A. and that he hath forborn & adhuc abstinet, and does not say that he made request as he ought to have done, but the Court held it was well enough, and there is a difference when the defendant does promise to pay generally and at a certain day named, there the plaintiff ought precisely to alledge a request made in certain: but when the defendant promiseth to pay at a day certain, he is bound to pay it at his perill without request, and therefore to alledge quod sæpius requisitus, is sufficient without alledging a speciall request, otherwise it is if the defendant assume to [110] pay it upon request, for there it ought to be specially pleaded. Another errour was because the consideration was that the plaintiff should forbeare to sue A. and does not set forth for how long time, for perhaps the forbearance was but for a quarter of an houre.

Peryam. The consideration upon which an assumpsit is grounded ought to be of value, but of what value is it, where the forbearance is but for half an houre?

Fleming. By his promising not to sue, he is ingaged never to sue.

Peryam. There is great difference between a promise not to sue, and a promise to forbeare to sue, for a promise not to sue excludes him from suing at all, but a promise to forbeare to sue, is only to forbeare for a time; so that notwithstanding such promise he may sue after; and it being not here exprest how long he will forbeare, there is no consideration.

Walmesley. There is a difference when the defendant speaks the words, and when the plaintiff. For if the plaintiff says I will forbeare to sue you, so you will promise to pay me, and upon this the defendant makes a promise accordingly, the plaintiff in this case ought to forbear to sue him for ever. But if the defendant only speaks the words, as here he does, If you will forbeare to sue, I will promise to pay you, and the plaintiff agrees and forbeares a certain time, yet he may have his action afterward, sed adjournatur.

STROUD AGAINST WILLIS. IN B. R. ROT. 66.

In debt upon a bond, the condition was: if the obligor shall well and truly pay the rent, or sum of 37l. yearly at two feasts according to the tenure and true intent of certain articles of agreement intended and made between the obligor and obligee during the terme therein mentioned, that then &c. The defendant pleaded that these articles ut supra, contain that the said Stroud the obligee, dimisit & ad firmam tradidit to the defendant, omnia talia domus tenementa & terras in parochia de Petminster, de & in quibus, the sayd Stroud hath an estate for life by copy according to the custome of the mannor. Habendum to the defendant for 21 years, if Stroud should so long live, rendring to the said Stroud during the said terme 37l. to be paid at the Castle of Canton; and pleaded further that at the time of the making the said articles, the said Stroud had not any estate in any lands, houses &c. in Petminster aforesaid, for the term of his life or by copy. And upon this plea the plaintiff demurred, and judgment was given for the plaintif in the Common Pleas, and now was removed by writ of errour. And in this case were two questions. First, if nothing passe by these articles, and so the reservation of the rent is also voyd. Secondly, if the obligation for payment of the said sum be also voyd; and it was said, that this could not be payable as a rent upon the 14 H. 4, & 4. 20 Ed. 4. 20 H. 6. 23. for no rent is reserved, because there is no land out of which it can come, and then the obligation is also discharged. 2. Admitting the rent is not payable as rent, then whether it be an estoppel to plead (as here is done) against the articles, and therefore, they took a difference where the recitall is generall, and [111] where not; as if A. be bound to infeof me of all his lands of the part of his mother, and he hath no lands of the part of his mother: but otherwise if it were to infeof me of Black Acre, for he shall be estopped to say that he had not Black Acre, and so here he shall be estopped to say, that there are no articles: but he may plead that he hath no land by copie: Cook 2. Rep. 33. 6.

Fenner. When a man makes a voyd lease, rendring rent, the reservation is also voyd, because the land is the consideration and recompence for the rent: but where a man reserves rent upon a grant or lease, which grant and lease are good, but the thing out of which the rent is issuing cannot be charged with the rent, there the reservation is good, as where a rent is reserved out of an advowson or menaltie, but in the case at Bar the lease did never begin, and therefore rent shall not, then is it to be considered whether the rent is to be payd by reason of the bond, as a sum in gross or not, and as to that matter the condition of the bond is to pay the rent according to the true meaning of the articles, which is, that if the lessee have not the land, the lessor shall not have the rent, therefore it shall not be paid as a sum in gross.

Popham cont. But he agreed that the reservation was voyd, for if no land do pass, no rent is reserved, and the reservation only does not make any estoppell and he took a difference upon the 14 Ed. 4. A man makes a lease generally, and the lessee is bound to pay the rent in such manner as it was reserved, there such rent ought to be demanded, otherwise the obligation is not forfeit, and the demand ought to be upon the land; but if such lessee for years do oblige himself to pay the rent at a collaterall place out of the land, there he ought to pay it at his perill without any demand, for now he payes it in another nature than as rent; so here if the payment had been limited at a place out of the land, the obligor is bound to pay it, although nothing were demised to him, for by the bond he hath made it a sum in gross. And it is altered from the nature of rent upon the first reservation, and he is bound also to pay the rent or sum, and if this be any of them, he must pay it: as to the second point: he made this difference. A. is bound to J. S. to release to him all his right which he hath in the land descended to him, on the part of his mother; there, in debt upon this bond, the obligee cannot plead that he hath no right descended to him on the part of his mother, but must release at his perill. But if he binds himself to infeof the obligee of all the land which he hath by descent of his father, there he may plead that he hath no land from his father: for all may be released, although the releasor hath no right: but a feofment cannot be made of land which a man hath not.

Holcombe against Rawlins. In B. R. Rot. 401.

In a trespass quare clausum fregit, with a continuando from the 31 Elizab. to the 36. the defendant pleaded that J. S. was seised in fee and made a lease to him &c. The plaintiff replyed, that long time before J. S. was seised, he himself was seised, untill the said J. S. did disseise him; and J. S. being so seised did make the lease to the defendant for years, whereupon the plaintiff reentered.

[112] Tanfield. It appears by the plaintiff's replication that the defendant was in under the title of J. S. viz. the lessee of the disseisor of the plaintif, and therefore he cannot be a trespassor to the plaintiff, notwithstanding his regress. 34 H. 6. 30. 37 H. 6. 35. 2 Edw. 4. 17. 13 H. 7. 15.

Atkinson contra. At the common law the disseisee being out of possession shall not recover any damages, but only against the disseisor, and not against any other that comes to the land afterwards, and for this cause the Statute of Glocester was made. But at the common law when the disseisee re-enters, he is remitted, as if he had not been out of possession at all, and he shall have a trespass against the meane occupiers as in the 4 H. 7. a man was restored to his land by Parliament, as if he had never been out of possession at all, and he shall have a trespass against the occupiers that are in by title, as well as here he had against the Kings patentee.

Gawdy. If a disseisor be disseised, and the first disseisee enter, he shall have a trespass against the second disseisor.

Pasch. 37 Eliza.

Wiseman against Baldwin. In B. R. Rot. 341.

In a writ of errour to reverse a judgment given in the Common Pleas, the case was thus. Richard Baldwin did demise his land in taile upon condition, that the devisee, should pay to J. S. 20l. and if he failed of the payment, that then the land should remain to J. S. and his heires for ever, and whether this be a condition in law, that the heir shall take advantage of, or a limitation of the estate, so that J. S. shall take advantage, was the question.

Gawdy. It is a limitation and not a condition as is apparent in Dyer, Wilfords case 7. 128. and Newis and Scholasticas case in the Comentaries, and there is great diversity between an estate in law, and a devise, in which the intent of the devisor is to be observed, and here if this shall be taken for a condition, the intent of the devisor is defrauded.

Clench agreed. For this should be as a new devise to J. S. and not as a remainder, as a devise to a monk, the remainder to J. S. the remainder is not good, as a remainder, but as a new devise.

Fenner of the same opinion, and said, it had been so adjudged in this Court in an attournies case of Devonshire, and also in Sir Edward Cleeres case.

Gawdy. The received opinion of all learned lawyers hath been such as hath been said, viz. that to the end the intent of the devisor should be observed, it shall be a limitation. Then I put this case. A man deviseth his land to J. S. upon condition, and for non-payment, he devises that his executors shall sell the land, if J. S. faile of the payment, it is cleere that the executors may sell the land.

Godfrey. I agree, because the executors have nothing devised to them, but only an authority given them by the will to sell.

Gawdy. But when the executors have sold, the vendee is in by the devisor, and then it is no other than a devise to one in fee on condition [113] of payment, &c. and if he fail, then to another. And the three justices agreed; but because the Chief Justice was absent, it was adjourned to another day, at which time Fenner said, that he had spoken with Owen, one of the Justices of the Common Pleas, who said, he never agreed to the judgment, but in case of a perpetuity. And therefore the judgment in the Common Pleas was reverst.

The Earl of Lincolne against Fisher.

The steward of the leete being in Court, did say to Fisher who was resident within the precinct of the leet, that he must be sworn for the Queen to make presentments at the said Court. To which Fisher replyed, In saying I ought to be sworn, you lie. For which Fisher was fined at the Court 20l. And the earl who had the leet brought his action for the same.

Yelverton. The action will not lie, for he is not finable for such words, for they are no disturbance to the Court, nor hindrance of justice: for this word, you lie, in ancient speaking is no more than to say, you do not say true.

Gawdy agreed that the action would not lie. But Fenner, Clench, and Popham cont. For this is a misdemeanor for which the defendant is finable: for every leet is the Queens Court, and a Court of Justice, to which respect and reverence ought to be given, and these words are in great contempt to the Court, and the authority thereof, which is supreme: and posito, that he should here say to the Judge of a Court when he delivered his opinion in any case, Mr. Judge, you lie, without question he may be fined and imprisoned; and as it is of a Judge here, so is it of a Judge of any inferiour Court, because it is a Court of Justice.

And Popham said, that if any misdemeaned himself in the leet in any outragious manner, the steward may commit him.

And Gawdy changed his opinion. Wherefore the plaintiff had judgment to recover.

GRESHAM AGAINST RAGGE. IN B. R. ROT. 1295.

In trespass for entring into a house, the defendant pleaded that the plaintiff was indebted to the defendant in 100l. and that he by the permission of the plaintiffs servant, (the doores being open) did enter to demand his debt: upon which the plaintiff demurred. And adjudged for the plaintiff. For the servant of the plaintiff could not licence any to enter into the house of his Mr. also a man cannot enter into anothers house to demand money, unless the debtor be within the house.

Gawdy. If it had been averred, that the plaintiff had been then in the house, the plea had been good.

STREETMAN AGAINST EVERSLEY. IN B. R.

In an ejectment, the case was, A lessee for 80. years upon condition, that if the lessee his executors or assignes did not repaire the house within six weeks after warning, that the lease should be void the lessee made a lease for ten years, who suffered J. S. to occupie the house, and then the lessor came to the said occupation of the house, and at the house gave notice, and said, that the house was defective in reparations and did shew in what, and so gave warning to have it repaired, and after for default of reparations he entred, and the defendant as servant to the lessee re-entred: and his entry adjudged lawfull, for notice given to J. S. who was but an occupier of the house, and not lessee or assignee of any interest of the terme, was not sufficient; but it ought to be to the person interessed in the terme, who is liable to reparations. Vid. Cooks 6 Rep. Greens case. Also the notice at the house is not sufficient, but it ought to be to the person of the lessee, and Popham agreed to this.

SHOPLAND AGAINST RADLEN. IN C. B. ROT. 853.

In a replevin the question was, when a guardian in socage holds a court in his own name, and does grant copies in reversion; if this be a good grant or not, and adjudged to be good against the heir.

Walmesley. Dominus pro tempore of a mannour may hold a court, and make a grant of copyholds, but this is to be understood of perfect lords which a guardian is not, but onely ad commodum hæredis, and is rather a servant to the lord, than dominus pro tempore; and he cannot be called dominus, because he can neither grant nor forfeit his estate, and hath nothing to do to meddle in the mannour, but to account for the profits: and a writ of ward does not lye for the land, but onely for the body.

Gawdy Chief Justice. Warburton and Daniel Justices to the contrary, who held, that a guardian in socage is dominus pro tempore, and that he hath interest in the land, and may make a lease thereof for years, Commentar. 293. and may avow in his own name, 29 Ed. 3. Avowry 298. But a guardian in socage cannot present to an advowson, because he cannot be accountable. But Daniel Justice said, that the guardian may present where the heir is not of years of discretion, and a guardian in socage shall have a trespass, and a ravishment of ward, 24 Ed. 3. 52. and he hath the ward by reason of looking to him, and therefore he hath interest sufficient to keep court, and admit copyholders, who are not in by him, but by the custome. But a bailiff of a mannour hath no interest, and therefore cannot make grants and copies: but a guardian hath interest provisione legis, although it be such interest as cannot be forfeit, and the heir cannot be at any prejudice, for he shall have an account made to him of such fines; for the heir himself cannot grant them, and the law cannot compell the guardian to occupy them; neither can the court be held in the name of the heir, but the guardian, and therefore he may grant copies. And if a guardian in socage hath such interest that he can make a lease for years and his lessee shall maintain an ejectment a fortiori, he may grant copies. Neither is it any argument at all to say that a guardian in socage hath no interest, because he cannot grant or forfeit his estate; for the reason is, because these things are annexed to his person. And after, Mich. 3 Jacob. it was adjudged that the grant was good, and shall binde the heir. Vid. Keloway, 46. 6.

BROWN AGAINST HERCEY. IN C. B. ROT. 620.

It was found by office, that J. S. who held the mannour of D. of the King, did dye without heir; whereupon W. S. as heir to him, did traverse the said office, and hereupon was at issue with the Queen, if he were heir or not: (and depending this suit) he made a feoffment in fee, with a letter of attorney to make livery, and after it was found for him against the Queen, and judgement given [116] against the Queen: but before the writ of amoveas manum, the attorney made livery, and adjudged good, for it cannot be said that the heir at the time of the feoffment had nothing, or that the Queen at the time of the livery was in possession, for by the judgement given, the possession of the Queen was utterly defeated, and possession in the party before any amoveas manum sued out, for that serves but to compell the eschaetor to avoyd the possession, if he hold the land after judgement. Vid. Stanford, prærogat. 78. 10 Ass. 2. 10 Ed. 3. and the difference is where the King is seized by title, and where without title; for when the King is seized by title, and his title is determined, he ought to make livery to him that hath right: but when he is seized without title, and he who hath right hath judgement against him, he may enter without livery, 5 Ed. 5. Quare impedit 34. But it was here said by Owen Justice, that if a man makes a feoffment of White-acre, with a letter of attorney to make livery, and then he purchase White-acre, this is not a good feoffment for White-acre.

KNOWLES AGAINST POWELL. IN SCACCARIO.

The Queen seized in fee, made a lease for years to one who was out-lawed at the time of the lease, rendring rent; and after he was out-lawed again, and before seizure, comes out the general pardon of all goods and chattels forfeited; and in this case it was agreed, that a man out-lawed was capable of a lease from the Queen, as farmer to the Queen. And Manwood said, that the pardon with restitution is sufficient to revive the term forfeited by the second out-lawry; and it was also agreed, that a man out-lawed and pardoned, had property in his goods.

Egerton Sollicitor said, that in the 4 Eliz. it was adjudged in the Common Pleas, that if the Queen made a lease under the Exchequer-seal to begin immediately after forfeiture, surrender, or expiration of a former term, and the lessee is outlawed, that the second lease shall not commence, for it is a Royal forfeiture.

LAMBERT AGAINST AUSTEN. IN B. R. ROT. 185.

In a replevin the case was thus; A man seized of land in fee, grants a rent-charge out of it to A. for life, with a clause of distress, and then makes a lease to B. for years, and grants the reversion for life to J. S. the rent becomes behind the 15 of Eliz. untill the 18 of Eliz. and the grantee makes the defendant his executor, and dyes, the term of B. ends in the 33 Eliz. and then J. S. enters, and makes a lease to the plaintiff; the executor of A. distreyns for the arrearages, and the plaintiff brings a replevin.

Gawdy and Fenner. This distress is well taken for the arrearages upon the statute of the 32 H. 8. cap. 37. for the rent doth not issue out of the term for years, but out of the free-hold; and upon grant thereof, as Littleton saith, the tenant of the free-hold ought to attorn, and not the termor; and so is it, 9 H. 6. and if an assize be brought for this rent, it ought to be brought against the tenant of the free-hold, and all the tenants of the free-hold ought to be named in a rent-charge, by Cook, 6 Rep. 58. but otherwise for a rent-service, for that is against the termor onely, and a termor cannot give seizin of the rent to maintain an assize, by Cook, 6 Rep. 57. and for the same reason executors shall have an action of debt at the common law for arrearages, because the estate is determined, Cook, 4 Rep. 49. but an avowry is given by this statute, onely so long as the land shall continue in the seisin and possession of the said tenant in demesn. And they much relyed on this word (demesn) which ought to be intended of a free-hold; and of a reversion upon a lease for years, it is pleaded, quod seisitus in dominico suo, &c. and so cannot a tenant for years say; for which reasons it seemed to them that the distress was well taken.

Clench contr. For the termor ought to pay it, for he takes the profits of the land; as if a lease be made to a woman, rendring rent, who takes husband, and dyes, the husband shall pay the rent, by the 10 H. 6. for he hath taken the profits; and by the words of the statute, they are (in the possession of seisin) and seisin refers to the tenant of the free-hold, and possession to the tenant for years; and the words are, (which ought immediatly to pay the rent) and so ought the termor in our case, who is chargeable to the distress of the testator.

Popham Chief Justice, of the same opinion. The distress is not well taken; for he who hath the profits of the land, ought to answer for the rent.

Gawdy. Although the cattel of the lessee be distreynable by the testator, that is onely because they are upon his land; as a strangers cattel may be so distreyned, and therefore this proves not that the lessee should pay the rent. And if a man grants a rent-charge, and lets the land at will afterwards, the rent is behind, and the grantee dyes, and the lease at will determines, without question in that case the lessor is subject to the distress of the executor. And in our case, if the grantee had released to the tenant for life, this had extinguisht the rent, otherwise of a release to tenant for years.

Fenner. If tenant in tail grants a rent-charge, and after [118] makes a lease for 21 years according to the statute, and dyes, the rent by the death of the tenant in tail is determined. To which Gawdy agreed; which proves, that the rent issues out of the free-hold. Vid. Cook, 5 Rep. 118.

BUTLER AGAINST RUDDISLEY.

In a trespass, the defendant pleaded the free-hold of Edward Devereux, and so justified as his bailiff, without saying (at his commandment) the plaintiff replyed, that the said Edward was seized in fee, and made a lease to him by vertue whereof he was possest absque hoc, that the lessor made the defendant his bailiff post dimissionem; and hereupon the defendant demurred.

Crook. By this lease a free-hold passeth to the plaintiff, and then the plaintiffs traverse is naught, for he hath now traverst that the defendant is bailiff, whereas he ought to traverse the free-hold in the lessor, for that would have destroyed the justification of the defendant. And to prove that the free-hold doth pass, he cited the case of Littleton, where if a lease be made to the husband and wife during coverture, they are joynt-tenants for life. So in the 30 H. 6. a lease to a woman, dum sola vixerit. And 14 Ed. 2. a grant to a man till he be promoted to such a benefice, or dum modo se bene gesserit, all these are free-holds. And it is clear, that a tenant at will cannot assign over. And also an estate at will is an estate at the will of both parties: but here it is at the will of the lessor onely, when he will make a bailiff.

Haughton contr. An estate at will doth pass, and not a free-hold; for here he hath not pleaded that livery was made; and livery shall not be intended in this case, unless it be specially alledged: but if livery had been made, then he agreed that a free-hold conditional had past; and for the pleading of a livery, he took a difference, that where an express estate either in fee or for life be pleaded, there livery shall be intended: but where a free-hold passeth by implication or operation of law, and not by express words, there livery ought to be pleaded, as a lease to one for years, the remainder to another for life, there livery ought to be pleaded. So in the 21 Assi. If a man pleads a feoffment and livery within the view, he must plead livery within the view expresly; and so upon grant of a reversion, attornment ought to be pleaded. And whereas it was said, that it cannot be an estate by will, because it was not the will of both parties. Vid. 9 Ed. 4. 1. and 15 Ed. 4. But Gawdy and Fenner denyed the diversity put by Haughton, for in pleading of an estate for life, all necessary circumstances in pleading shall be intended. And so it was agreed, that an estate for life should pass, for livery shall be intended. Sed adjournatur.

Gawdy. It is but surplusage; and in the 11 Ed. 3. the writ was good, although he was not named son and heir omnino. But this was denyed, and agreed, that he ought to be named heir; and judgement was reverst.

TANFIELD AGAINST ROGERS. IN B. R.

In a replevin, the case was thus: Tenant in tail seized of a mannour with 3 acres thereof in demesn, makes a lease of the three acres and also of the mannour, habendum the three acres, and the mannour for 21 years, rendring rent for the 3 acres, and all other the premisses, therewith demised 5l. The question was, if this be a good lease within the statute of the 32 H. 8.

Stephens. This lease is not within the statute, for this lease of 3 acres, and of the mannour whereof they are parcel, is an entire demise, and not several, as in 13 H. 4. Grants 88. A man seized of a mannour, with an advowson appendant, makes feoffment of one acre of the mannour; and then in the same deed he grants the advowson appendant, and not in gross, and yet they are in several clauses. Vid. 48 Ed. 3. 41. 33 H. 8. Dyer 48.

Gawdy and Clench. When the lease is of three acres, and of the mannour, although the mannour comprehends the three acres, yet in construction of law they shall be taken as several demises.

Fenner. I am of the same opinion; and as I remember, in the 10 Assis. is this case; a lease is made of the grist, and also of the mill, reserving by the year 5s. and for the other 10s. they are several leases; and so is it here. Note, that Popham was absent. But after in the same term he declared, that he agreed with the other justices; and judgement was given, that the lease was good for the three acres.

CARUS CASE.

Peter Carus was indicted for drawing his sword in Westminster-hall, the Court then sitting, in resisting the sheriff who was making an arrest; and being found guilty upon his arraignment, it did appear that this fact was done upon the stairs of the Court of Requests, out of the view of the Courts; yet it was held, that being in the hall, it was as much as if it had been in view of the Court. But because the indictment was not good, for it was not coram Regina, as it ought to be, the judgement was only to have perpetual imprisonment, and to pay 1000l. fine to the Queen. But if the indictment had been, as we have seen a president in 1 Ed. 4. then the judgement ought to be, to have his hand cut off, and to forfeit all his land and goods, and to have perpetual imprisonment, 22 Ed. 3. 13. WALGRAVE AGAINST SKINNER. IN B. R. ROT. 174.

In a trespass, the plaintiff declared that he was robbed of 20l. and that he pursued the felon with hue and cry to such a town, where he discovered the felon to the defendant, who was constable of the said town; wherefore he apprehended the felon, and found the 20l. about him, which sum the defendant took, and detained in his own possession. The defendant confest the taking the 20l. ut supra; but because the town was of no strength, he carried the 20l. to the next town, and as he was going upon the high-way, he was robb'd of it; and so he concluded that he ought not to be charged in this action.

Johnson for the plaintiff. It appears in 4 H. 7. that the thief hath no property in the money which is found in his possession: and in the 15 Ed. 4. it is resolved, that if A. robs B. and C. robs A. yet C. hath not gained any property; and if the constable takes this out of his possession, he cannot seize it, to any other use than to the use of the King: and therefore if he takes felons goods, and does not keep them safe, the first owner shall have a trespass against him; for by the 21 H. 7. if a man does carry the parsons tithe to the parsons barn because it is like to perish, yet the parson may have a trespass against him. And by the opinion of Stanford, 44 Assi. if goods are taken from a felon, and he will give sufficient surety, he himself shall have the keeping of them, or else the town, and therefore the constable hath no authority to meddle with them.

Erby contr. For a constable is conservator pacis; and preserving the peace does consist as much in keeping of goods, as of the body of a felon. And here the constable, doubting of the strength of the town by reason of the inhabitants who were riotous, and of ill fame, [121] he thought it the best course to carry them to the next town, and so no default was in him, for his taking and medling with them was lawfull. And 22 Assi. 96. if a felon flying be taken in any village, the bailiff thereof may take the custody of the goods; and I suppose that a constable may keep goods as well as a bailiff, for he is a minister of the law; and if they be taken from him, he is no more chargeable than if goods were taken out of the possession of my servant.

Williams Justice, Pasch. 2 H. 7. Common fame is enough to apprehend any man: but if you arrest a person who is possest of money, and he dye, you are chargeable with the money. And so here, although the taking of the felon by the constable be justifiable, yet he is to keep safe the money at his peril; and because he hath not, he is liable to this action.

Popham. He might have pleaded not guilty; for he said, that if a town hath the possession of my goods, a detinue lyes, and not a trespass: but if a stranger takes them out of their possession, there a trespass lyes; and therefore he conceived in this case, that the plaintiff should have brought a trover and conversion, and not a trespass, quod alii justiciarii concesserunt; and therefore the case was deferred till next term, to be argued upon the general issue.

MICH. 3 JACOB.

JORDEN AGAINST ATWOOD. IN B. R. ROT. 561.

The case upon the whole pleading appeared to be thus, A. seized of a messuage called Bodswich, had a way appendant to it in the land of J. S. in a close called B. Acre; after A. purchased the said close, and infeoffed the plaintiff thereof; and this action was brought by the feoffee against the feoffor for using the said way; and the question was, if the way were extinguisht, or not: and it was argued at the Bar, that unity of possession doth make no extinguishment 3 H. 6. 31. where A. prescribed to have a way to a wood in a place called England; against which was pleaded, that time out of minde J. S. was seized of the said place, and of the said wood, and held no plea. 21 Ed. 3. 2. 11 H. 7. 25. it was argued on the other side that the case of 31 H. 6. was a quære; and because the feoffor had not reserved a way it did pass by the feoffment.

Tanfield, Justice. Unity of possession does not confound a way; and he cited 19 Ed. 3. 21 Ed. 3. 2. A way was appendant to a mill which was allotted to one partner, who assigned over her interest, and the assignee brought an assize of nusance, and unity of possession was pleaded in bar, but not allowed.

Yelverton Justice contr. For the 21 Ed. 3. 2. confirms my opinion; for Brook in his abridgement of the case saith, that the partners have that as in case of a new grant, which proves if they had it as heir it should be gone. And the case of Gutter in 1 H. 7. is onely by reason of the custome. But here the feoffor might have reserved his way upon the feoffment, and it was his folly he did not.

Williams of the same opinion. And he took a difference between the case of Gutter which is preserved by custome, and the case of a [122] way or common which are extinguisht by way of unity of possession, according to the 35 H. 6.

Fenner contr. For the case of a way differs from the case of a common, for unity will extinguish a common, but not a way, for then he shall lose the profit of all the land to which the way is appurtenant, for without the way he cannot use the close, and therefore there is no reason that the law should extinguish it.

Popham accorded, and took a difference between a common appendant, which is of necessity, and a common in gross; for in case of a common appendant, if one tenant of the mannour doth purchase the seigniory, and then grants over the tenancy, the common which he had before shall be still appendant, for it is not extinguished by the unity, but shall pass with the tenancy: but otherwise of a common in gross: and so he said was the same difference in this case; for if the way be a way of ease or pleasure, there it shall be extinguisht by unity: but if it be a way of necessity, there it is otherwise, for without it a man shall lose the benefit of his land or house. And he compared this ad viam regiam, which lyes by my house: yet if I do make a feoffment of the land, I shall have a passage also. And he said, that if a man had three fields adjoyning, and makes a feoffment of the middle field, the feoffee shall have a way to this through the other close, where it shall be most easy and beneficial for him. And at last, because the two justices agreed, although others were of the contrary opinion, judgement was given, quod quærens nil capiat per billam, and that the way is not extinguisht. Vid. 11 H. 4, 5.

LEIGH AGAINST BURLEY.

Leigh sued Burley and Cradock in the Court of Admiralty, whereupon a prohibition was prayed. The case was thus: Burley, master of a ship, gave money to Cradock to buy sailors cloaths for him; Cradock bought such cloaths for him of Leigh in the parish of Saint Katherines near the Tower in London, whereby Leigh delivered the cloaths to Burley in his ship that was in the Thames adjoyning to Saint Katherines; and because the money was not paid, he sued Burley in the Admiralty Court; and a prohibition was awarded for two causes; 1. because the contract was made on land, and infra corpus comitatus, and therefore the admiral can have no jurisdiction; for the statutes of the 13 and 15 of Rich. 2. and 2 H. 4. cap. 11. are, that the admiral shall not have conusance but of things done super alrum mare. Vid. Cook, 5 Rep. 107. And so was it resolved by the justices; and they said, that the 15 of Richard the 2. is mis-printed, viz. that the admiral shall have jurisdiction to the bridges; for the translator mistook bridges for points, that is to say the lands-end. And Cook said, that the admiral should have no jurisdiction where a man may see from one side to the other: but the coroner of the county shall enquire of felonies committed there; which was held to be good by all the other justices; [123] and he gave this difference, that where the place was covered over with saltwater and out of any county or town, there est altum mare: but where it is within any county, there it is not altum mare, but the tryall shall be par vicenerum of the town. Doderidge Serjeant demanded this question. The Isle of Lunday is de corpore comitatus of Devonshire and lyes twenty miles within the sea. Whether is that within the county.

Foster. If the sea there be not of any county, the admirall hath jurisdiction or els not. And note Cook and Foster said, that the statute 25 H. 8. cap. 15. for criminall offences upon the sea is to be intended if felony be super altum mare, for if it be committed in a creek or a place where the admirall hath not jurisdiction, the commissioners have nothing to do to meddle with it. And the prohibition was granted.

MORES AGAINST CONHAM. IN C. B.

In an action on the case upon an assumpsit, the plaintiff declared that Lovet was indebted to him in a certain sum, for which he pawnd to the plaintiff certain goods to the value of 100l. and the defendant promised the plaintiff to pay the debt, if he would deliver the pawn, and hereupon the defendant demurred. And two points were moved, one to the forme, and the other to the matter. First, the plaintiff declared that the assumpsit was pro diversis bonis & Catallis delivered to Lovet without shewing what goods or of what kinde, for this is the consideration of the contract, and therefore ought to be pleaded in certainty. But resolved by the Court that the plea was good: for the goods themselves are not to be recovered in this action but damages for them, and so they are but collaterall to the action, as in 10 Edw. 3. 30. in a rescous: the count was for taking of cattle, without shewing what cattle, and the jury found them to be two horses, and the plaintiff had judgment; where note that a verdict did help an insufficient Court, and 22 Assi. 21 Ed. 3. a trespass was brought for taking away of writings concerning land, without shewing what they were, or the quality of the land: but otherwise in a detinue for charters, for there the writings themselves are to be recovered. The second and great doubt was, when a man doth promise to another that if he will deliver the pawn, he will pay the debt, if this be a sufficient consideration to maintain an assumpsit.

Foster Justice, It is not: for he that hath the pawne hath not such an interest in it as he may deliver it over to another, or make a legall contract for it, and that his delivery being illegall, he cannot by his own wrong raise an action to himself, and a man shall never maintain any action, where the consideration is illegall and not valuable. 9 Ed. 4. In an action on the case the defendant pleaded an accord, and that he delivered the writing to the plaintiff which concern'd the land, and it was held no plea, because the plaintiff having land, the writings belonged to it. And cited Reynolds case: where a man promised another 100l. to solicite his business, and it was holden that no action would lie for [124] the money, because the soliciting his business was illegall, he being no man of law. Dier 355, 356.

Cook, Warburton and Daniell cont. who said, that the consideration was good, legall and profitable, and sufficient to maintain an assumpsit: for he who hath goods at pawn hath a speciall property in them, so that he may work such pawn, if it be a horse or oxe, or may take the cowes milk, and may use it in such manner as the owner would: but if he misuseth the pawn, an action lyes, also he hath such interest in the pawn as he may assign over, and the assignee shall be subject to a detinue, if he detaines it upon payment of the money by the owner as in the 2. assise. Land was leased untill he had raised 100l. he hath such interest as is grantable over. And Foster agreed to this, because he had power to satisfie himself out of the profits. And it was agreed by the Court, that if a man takes a distress, he cannot work the distress, for it is only the act of the law that gives power to the distress, for he hath no propertie in the distress, nor possession in jure as in the 21 H. 7. Replevin. A man hath returne irreplevisable, he cannot worke them, for the judgment is to remit them to the pound, ibid. remansurum. vid. 13 R. 2. Brook. 20 H. 7, 1, a. 34 H. 8. Br. pledges 28. 22 Edw. 4, 11. goods pawned shall not be put into execution untill the debt be satisfied. And it was agreed by Cook and Warburton, that when a man hath a speciall interest in a thing by act in law, that he cannot work it, or otherwise use it: but contrary upon a speciall interest by the act of the partie as in case of a pawn.

Daniell. There is difference between pawns, which are chargeable to the parties as cowes and horses, and things that are not chargeable, and also there is a difference between pawnes that will be the worse by usage as clothes, &c. For if the pawn be the worse by usage an action of the case will lie against him that hath them pawned to him: but contra of goods that are not the worse for usage.

Cook. If I deliver goods to you, untill you are promoted to a benefice, you may use them, which Foster denied.

And judgment was given for the plaintiff, and that they may be granted over, and so a good assumpsit will lie.

26 Eliz.

Earl of Northumberlands Case.

This case was privately argued before the Lord Treasurer, because the parties agreed to refer themselves to the opinion of Wray and Anderson. And the case was this, the Earl of Northumberland devised by his will, his jewells to his wife. And dyed possessed of a collar of esses, and of a garter of gold and of a buckle annexed to his bonnet, and also of many other buttons of gold and pretious stones annexed to his robes, and of many other chains, bracelets and rings of gold and precious stones. The question was if all these should passe by the devise, under the name of jewells. And both justices did resolve that the garter and collar of esses did not pass, because they were not properly jewells but ensignes of honour and state, and that the buckle in his bonnet, and the buttons did not pass, because they were annexed to [125] his robes, and were therefore no jewells. But for all the other chaines, rings, braceletts and jewells, they passed by vertue of the said will.

SPERKE AGAINST SPERKE. IN C. R. ROT. 2215.

In an ejectment, the case was this. M. Sperke made a lease of the land in question to William Sperke for 89. years if William should so long live, the remainder after his death to the executors or assignes of the said William for 40. years: afterwards William dyes intestate and administration is committed to Grace Sperke his wife, who entred clayming the 40. years, and the defendant clayming by another lease entred upon him, and he brought this action.

Anderson. Executor is as good a name of purchase as heire is. And I conceive the points in this case are two. First, if the administrator be an assignee. Secondly, if the lease for 40 years, be a chattell vested in the intestate in his life, for if it be, then his administrator shall have it. And as to the first, I conceive that she is not assignee to take these 40 years. For in the 19 Ed. 3. it is there said that administrators are not assignees, for administration is appointed by the Ordinary and assignees must be in by the party himself and not by a stranger, and therefore an administrator cannot be an assignee, as an executor that comes in by the partie, or as a husband for his wife.

Walmesley and Glanvill accorded. But Kingsmill cont. for he said, that although one could not be assignee in deed without the act of the partie, yet one may be assignee in law by the act of the law. And so the opinion of the 3. justices to the first point was, that the administrator could not have it as assignee, and as to the second point, Anderson said, that it could not vest: for if a man have a lease for life, the remainder for 40 years, the remainder is voyd, because there is no person named to whom it is limited: but if a man make a lease for life, and after his death to his lessee for 21 years, that is good, and the executor shall have it as in right of his testator. But where a man makes a lease for years or life, the remainder after his death for 40. years to his executors, the executors shall have it as purchasors, for this word remainder divides it from the testator, and makes the executors purchasors.

Walmesley, Glanvill and Kingsmill cont. and their chief reason was from the intent of the parties, and their intent was that the lessee should have an estate during life, for it is to him for 89 years, if he so long live, and because by common intendment he cannot survive those years, their intent was that his executors should have it after his death, and that the certainty of the time might be known it was limited for 40. years.

And Walmsley said, that the administrator could not have this by purchase, for when a man takes by purchase, he must be named by an apt name of purchase, by which he may be known; as if there be tenant for life, the remainder to the right heirs males of J. S. and J. S. hath issue two sons, and the eldest hath issue a daughter, and J. S. dies, this daughter shall never take any estate, because she is not heir male, she [126] hath no name of purchase, and therefore here the administrator cannot take by purchase, for the administrator comes in by the Ordinary, and therefore cannot be an assignee. And at last, judgment was given, that the administrator should hold it, as a thing vested in the intestate.

WHITE AGAINST GERISH. IN C. B. ROT. 366.

In a replevin the defendant avowd for rent. The case was this. Two persons did joyne in leavying a fine to J. S. in fee sur conisans de droit come ceo, &c. J. S. by the same fine renders the lands to one of the conusors in taile, reserving rent and further would quod tenementa predicta remanerent to the other who is the avovee.

Walmesley. The rent shall passe: as if a man grants land for life, and also grants quod tenementa predicta remanebunt to another, these words (quod tenementa predicta) do make a grant of the reversion: and also these renders are as severall fines, and so it shall be taken as a grant in taile rendring rent, and after a grant of the reversion.

Glanvill accorded. Warburton. If a man makes a gift in taile rendring rent, the remainder over in fee, the donor shall have the rent and not he in the remainder.

Walmesley. That is true in a grant, but not in a fine.

Anderson. If a man makes a gift in taile rendring rent, and at the same instant grants the reversion, and the deeds are delivered, accordingly, this shall passe as a reversion. And after it was adjudged to be a grant of the reversion, and that the rent passeth.

CRAWLEYS CASE.

In replevin the case was thus. A rent is granted to two during the life of J. S. to the use of J. S. the grantee dieth, and if the rent were determined was the question.

Walmsley. The rent remains to J. S. for the grantees have an estate during the life of J. S. and by the statute of the 27 H. 8. the use is raised and conjoynd with the possession, whereby the rent it self is carryed to J. S. whereby J. S. hath an absolute estate for his life, and the life of the grantees is not materiall: as if rent be granted to two for the life of J. S. if he does not grant over the rent, their lives are not materiall. And if they grant over and die, the rent shall not cease, but the grantee shall have it during the life of J. S. And here the statute 27 H. 8. vests this in cestuy que vie, otherwise if it were before the Statute of Use, quod fuit concessum per Curiam.

SHAW AGAINST SHERWOOD. ROT. 2504.

The executors of Shaw brought an action of debt for 20l. upon a bill, and the bill was thus, I William Shaw have received of Thomas Pret 40l. to the use of Robert Shaw and Elizabeth Shaw, equally to be divided; which said sum I acknowledge my self to have received to the use aforesaid, and the same to re-deliver again at such time as shall be most fit for the profit and commodity of the said Robert Shaw and Elizabeth.

Walmesley. Two points are here; first, if this be a debt to cestuy que use, or to him who gave it. Secondly, if it be divided, so that each of them shall have an action for 20l. And as to the first, he held, that it was a debt to him for whose use the money was delivered; and as to the second, that they shall have a debt as of several debts, by reason of these words, equally to be divided.

Kingsmill. Here is no obligation, for the words are not obligatory, but onely an acknowledgement of the receipt. Glanvill accorded.

Walmesley. When he acknowledged the receipt to both their uses, without question such receiver is a debtor. And agreed by the Court, that admitting it was a debt, that then it shall be a divided debt, and not joynt. Quod nota.

LANE AGAINST COTTON.

In debt upon a bond, on condition to pay 20l. within a month after, the obligee had a son, that did or could speak the Lords Prayer in English, that he could be understood; the plaintiff pleaded, that he had a son, qui loqui potuit Præcationem Domini, ut intelligi potuerit; and the defendant demurr'd, because it was pleaded that he had a son qui loqui potuit, for that is a secret ability that cannot be known.

Kingsmill. The plea is good, and shall be tryed, as in case of a writ of non compos mentis.

Glanvill accorded; for it may be proved by the testimony of those who have heard him speak; and if he ever spoke it, it is good evidence that he had ability to speak.

Walmesley contr. Because it is a secret thing, it cannot be tryed.

Kingsmill. A man is bound in a bond to give me 20l. when the river of Ware is navigable, it is a good plea to say that the river is navigable, without saying that some have navigated upon it.

Hern Serjeant cited a case adjudged in a quare impedit by the patron against the bishop, who had pleaded that the parishioners were Welshmen, and that they could not understand English, and [128] that the clerk he presented could not understand Welsh; and the patron pleaded, that the clerk could speak Welsh; and upon demurr it was adjudged a good issue, and that such matter might be tryed.

Anderson. The issue is good, and it is at the election of the party to plead quod loqui potuit, vel loquutus est. And if I am obliged to you to give you a 100l. when I am able to go to Pauls, this may be tryed, although in facto I never went to Pauls; and if I am able, I shall pay the money. And he cited Broughtons case, where in maintenance the defendant pleaded that he was peritus in legibus Angliæ, and that he was retained to be of councel, and adjudged no good plea, for he should alledge that he was student for a certain time, and was elected by the Benchers to be a barrester. And judgement was given for the plaintiff.

MICHAELM. 41 & 42 ELIZ.

SWAN AGAINST GATELAND. ROT. 3267, OR 3667.

In a ravishment of ward, the plaintiff demurred, that T. B. was seized of land in socage, and dyed, and J. B. his son is of the age of two years, and that the guardianship belongs to him, because he is next friend ex parte matris J. B. viz. the brother of E. B. the infants mother. The defendant pleaded, that E. B. the infants mother was his mother also, and that he was begotten by one Gateland on the said E. B. and the said Gateland dyed, and the said E. B. did marry the said T. B. and had issue the infant, and so concluded, quod erat propinquior amicus absque hoc, that the plaintiff is propinquior amicus; and upon this was a demurr.

Hern for the plaintiff. The question is, whether the uncle shall be guardian in socage, or the brother of the half blood, and he said, the uncle should have the wardship, because there is a more natural affection between the uncle and the infant, than between the infant and the brother of the half blood; and if there be not love, he cannot be the procheine amy, although in judgement of law he be the next of kin. 31 Ed. 3. Gawdy 157. In a writ of ward, the plaintiff declared that he was next of kin of the plaintiff the mother of the infant, and it was pleaded against him, that the infants mother was alive; but he replyed, that the mother had made a charter of feoffment to the disherison of the infant, and that she was attaint of treason. And in 15 Eliz. the brother who claimed the wardship of his younger brother, was also within age, and therefore it was ruled that the uncle should have the wardship, because alterum nequit regere qui seipsum nequit. And 5 Ed. 6. the brother of the half blood is next of kin, to whom administration shall be given before the mother; for the statute of 27 H. 8. 15. sayes, that the next of kin shall have it, and the brother of the half blood is the next of kin: but guardianship shall be given by the law to the nearest friend and that is the uncle.

Williams contr. For although the brother be but of the half blood, yet he shall have the wardship, for the brother is the next of kin, to whom the inheritance cannot descend; and the 31 Ed. 1. does not [129] gainsay this, for the mother was denyed the wardship, because she was attaint of treason; for the law will not suffer that the infant shall be in ward to any, who may be suspected to do wrong to the infants land, or to his person, and therefore he shall not be in ward to any that may inherit him, for there is a suspicion that he may kill the infant. And 5 Ed. 6. Brook, Administration 47. it is agreed that the brother of the half blood is next of kin, and that is the cause of the nearness of love; and it cannot be intended that there should not be love between persons so nearly allyed. And 30 Assi. 47. a remainder was limited propinquioribus de languine, and there it is agreed that the brother is next of blood.

Warburton contr. The uncle shall have the wardship for two causes, for there is not such natural love between two brothers of the half blood, as is between the uncle and the infant of the whole blood. Also, the statute sayes, that he shall be in custody parentum hæredis, and therefore he ought to be in custody of those who are of most antient degree, who are the parents: but one brother cannot be parent to the other.

Walmesley contr. For the brother is the procheine amy; and so hath it been ruled in the time of the Lord Dyer, in 7 Eliz. in C. B. for he ought to be in ward to him that is next of blood, and most remote in succession. And the 5 Ed. 6. proves, that he is next of kin, and such nearness must needs procure love: and although it sometimes happens that there is not such love, yet this cannot alter the law that awayes intends amity; and although the Statute of Marlebridge speaks of parents, that is intended of such as are of full age, and of sound memory; for if he be not, then some other that is the next of kin shall have the wardship; and he told Warburton, that he would shew him a report of such a case, where it was ruled accordingly before the Lord Dyer.

HILLAR. 43 ELIZ.

PECK AGAINST CHARNELL. IN C. B. ROT. 1703.

In an ejectment upon a special verdict, the case was this; John Burly seized in fee of land, doth devise it to his wife for life, the remainder to William Burly in tail, the remainder to his next heir male, being of his sirname in fee, and dyes, and then his wife does intermarry with William Burly, who had the remainder in tail, and then they levyed a fine come ceo, &c. to J. S. and by the same fine J. S. rendred to the wife for life, the remainder to the husband in fee, and then a common recovery was had against the husband and wife, and that was to the uses contained in the fine: then the wife dyes, and the husband dyes without issue, and the right heir male of the sirname of the devisors enters, and makes a lease to the plaintiff, who being outed by the lessee of William Burly, brought the action.

Williams. Here are two points; first, if this be a discontinuance by the wife; secondly, if the recovery barrs him in the remainder. [130] And as to the first point, when woman tenant for life, and he in the remainder in tail being her husband, do joyn in a fine, this shall not be a discontinuance of the estate tail; for by Littleton, discontinuance cannot be by way of grant, although it be in case of a fine, but ought to be by livery. And as to the second point, Knivetons case, B. 252. is express in the point, that notwithstanding the common recovery, yet the entry of him in the remainder is legal; for as to the point of recovery, a base fee doth pass to the conusee of the fine, which is rendred back again to the woman for life, and her husband in fee; and by the common law there was no remedy for him in the reversion against a recovery had against tenant for life, 7 H. 7. 12. 5. Ed. 4. 2. untill the statute of Westminster the 2. which gives to him a writ of ad terminum qui præteriit, and by the statute of the 23 of H. 8. he may enter: but now the question is, whether this recovery will bar him in the remainder of his entry, because the recovery was of another estate, and not against his tenant for life. But I conceive that the wife is not in her former or antient estate, but takes hereby a new estate, for if tenant for life grants his estate to J. S. and his heirs, and J. S. grants a rent, and then re-grants an estate to the tenant for life, the tenant for life shall be liable for the rent, Dyer 252.

Harris contr. For by the rendring of the estate by the fine, she shall be in her antient state; and he cited the case of Peter Cary here adjudged, who being tenant in T. the remainder to the Earl of Devonshire, was attainted, and then the King pardon'd him, and gave him his land again, and then he suffered a common recovery, and thereby barred the remainder in the Earl of Devonshire.

But Anderson was against this case, and said, that by the render the woman was in her antient estate, and so the remainder discontinued, and the entry of him in the remainder taken away.

Warburton. The fine does make no discontinuance, for they give away but that which they may lawfully do, and so is Bredons case, Cook, 1 Rep. 67. and as to the common recovery, it is out of the statute of the 32 H. 8. because she remains party to the fine; and by the render upon the fine, they shall be as in by a new estate, and then the recompence shall not be to the antient estate and therefore he in the remainder is not barred nor impeached by this fine, but he may enter within five years.

Kingsmill accorded; for it is plain, that by the render to the husband and wife, they are in a new estate, and the recompence shall go as to that, and not to the antient estate: but contr. if it had been by way of voucher.

Walmesley accorded: but notwithstanding the fine, and recovery, the entry of him in the remainder is good, and as to the woman, it is clear, that there is no discontinuance to him in the remainder in fee, for he in the remainder in tail cannot discontinue, because he is seized by force of the estate tail; as the 4 H. 7. 17. Tenant in dower, and he in the reversion in tail, joyn in a fine, this is no discontinuance of the estate tail because he was never seized, and therefore it is a forfeiture in the tenant for life, although he in the remainder joyn'd with him, by the 41 Ed. 3. but otherwise if tenant for life, and he in remainder in fee, joyn in a fine. Vid. Bredons case, 1 Rep. 76.

Anderson. I conceive he in the remainder may enter, for all passeth from the tenant for life, and it is her feoffment, and the confirmation of the other, and so the estate tail being spent, he in the remainder [131] shall enter for forfeiture, and the recovery shall be no bar, because it was of another estate: and also this title of entry for forfeiture shall not be barr'd by the common recovery, no more than if a feoffee upon condition does suffer a common recovery, yet may the feoffor enter for the condition broken: and judgement was given for the plaintiff: so that his remainder was neither discontinued by the fine, nor his entry taken away by the recovery.

Hall against Wood. In C. B.

In an action on the case for a trover, and conversion of 40l. on not guilty pleaded, it was found for the plaintiff.

Walmesley. How can an action lye for a trover of money, if it be not within a bag? for this writ supposeth a loss; and when the money was lost, how doth it appear that the money found is the same money that was lost?

Davies. There are many presidents in the Kings Bench to prove that this action will well lye for corn and money, and I have been of counsel in many of those cases.

Warburton. If the money were lost in view of a third person, upon such trover the action will lye, for there it may be proved that it was the money of the plaintiff. And Walmesley agreed. And note, that a president was shewn, tempore 40 & 41 Eliz. inter Holloway and Higgs, which was thus; a master delivered to his servant 30 quarters of corn to be sold, and the servant sold them, and converted the money, and the master brought his action on the case for the trover and conversion against the servant, who pleaded, not guilty, and it was found against him; and two things were moved in arrest of judgement; first, that the master was never possessed of the money, and therefore could not lose it; secondly, because the money cannot be known, and so non constat whether it was the money of the masters, or no. But notwithstanding this case, judgement was given for the plaintiff, because the possession of the servant was the possession of the master; and when the servant converts this to his own use, by this the master loseth the property, and is also a conversion in the servant.

LEEKE AGAINST THE BISHOP OF COVENTRY. IN C. B. ROT. 3579.

In a quære impedit the case was thus; Langford and Bussy were patrons of an advowson, to which they and their ministers use to present by turn. Langford presented according to his turn, and his clerk dyed, and then Bussy presented in his turn also, and his clerk was deprived, after which Langford grants his advowson in fee to Leeke the plaintiff, and then the bishop without any notice does collate Dr. Babington, who dyes; after whose death the question was, if Leeke should present, or Bussy; and judgement was given for the plaintiff, because that notwithstanding the church was voyd by deprivation, yet the patron may transpose his advowson over.

[132] BETHELL AGAINST SIR EDWARD STANHOP.

In debt against Sir Edward Stanhop, as executor to Francis Vaughan, he pleaded that he is not administrator; and the said Vaughan gave 40l. to his daughter within age, with power of revocation upon the payment of 20s. and it was found that this was done to defraud creditors, and then he dyed possest of the goods, and the defendant sold these goods, which made him executor in his own wrong, and afterwards takes letters of administration.

Warburton. I conceive the plaintiff ought to have judgement, for the Statute of 21 Eliz. of Fraudulent Conveyances, annuls this gift of the intestate, because he did it to defraud his creditors, and then when he dyed it was assets in the hands of the administrator. And if a testator have goods wrongfully taken from him out of his possession, these are not assets to the executors or administrators: but if they be taken out of the possession of the administrators or executors, they shall be assets, for they may take them again: but for goods taken from the testator, they have but an action. But here the administrator may take the goods which were given by the intestate to defraud creditors, for the gift was voyd, and therefore they shall be accounted assets. And as to the action, it is well brought; for when a man does administer as executor, and then takes letters of administration, it is at the election of the plaintiff to sue him as executor or administrator, 9 Ed. 4. 33. 21 H. 6. 8. 2 Rich. 2. 20. 18 Ed. 4.

Walmesley agreed; for the statute of the 27 Eliz. hath made voyd the testators gift, and sublata causa tollitur effectus, and the gift being taken away, the property is also taken away from the donee, and setled in the donor, as to any creditor: to which the other justices agreed; and judgement was given for the plaintiff.

TRINIT. 43 ELIZ.

GEORGE BROOKS CASE. IN C. B. ROT. 1822.

Gibson recovered in a debt against Brook, as executor to J. S. 60l. and 6l. damages, and upon a scire facias to the sheriff, he returns no assets, and then upon the estate which was in London, which the defendant had wasted and sold, a fieri facias was awarded to the Sheriff of London, with a commission to the Sheriff of London, to enquire if he had assets at the day of the writ, &c. and by the inquest it was found that he had assets at the day of the writ purchased, &c. and that he had wasted the estate, which was thus return'd by the sheriff, against which the defendant took issue that he had not assets; and upon this was a demurr.

Walmesley. A man may averr against the return of a sheriff, if the return be a matter collateral; as if upon a capias the sheriff returns a rescous, there may be an averment against this, 4 Eliz. 212. a. But if it be in pursuance of the writ, as non est inventus, there no averment shall be taken against this: but here the return is the saying of the inquest, and not his own saying.

[133] Warburton. I conceive he shall have an averment and traverse, or else he shall be without remedy, for he cannot have an action on the case against the sheriff, because he returns that which was found by the inquest, and so not like where the sheriff returns falsly without such inquest; and no attachment lyes, because it is but an inquest of office; and after it was moved at another day, and a president shewn, 33 Eliz. in B. R. between Westner and Whitenore, and there it was adjudged that such return of the sheriff was traversable: and Anderson and Kingsmill agreed to it; wherefore judgement was given for the defendant, and that the issue was well taken.

DAY AGAINST FYNN.

In an ejectment, the plaintiff declared of a lease for years of a house and 30 acres of land in D. and that J. S. did let to him the said messuage, and 30 acres by the name of his house in B. and ten acres of land there, sive plus, sive minus, it was moved in arrest of judgement, because that 30 acres cannot pass by the name of 10 acres, sive plus, sive minus, and so the plaintiff hath not conveyed to him 30 acres; for when 10 acres are leased to him, sive plus, sive minus, these words ought to have a reasonable construction, to pass a reasonable quantity, either more or less, and not twenty or thirty acres more.

Yelverton agreed, for the word 10 acres, sive plus, sive minus, ought to be intended of a reasonable quantity, more or less by a quarter of an acre, or two or three at the most: but if it be 3 acres less than 10. the lessee must be content with it. Quod Fenner & Crook concesserunt; and judgement was staid.

SMITH AGAINST JONES.

In an action of the case upon an assumpsit, the case was; that the wife of Jones was executrix to J. S. and had assets to satisfie all debts and legacies. The woman dyes, and the goods remained in the hand of her husband, who was the defendant; and Smith the plaintiff being a legatee, demanded his debt of the husband, who said to him, forbear till Michaelmas, and I will pay you; and if this was sufficient cause of action, was the question on demurrer.

Davies. The promise is voyd, because it is after the death of the wife.

Yelverton. The action will lye, because he hath the goods in his possession, and therefore is chargeable, and must answer for them, and therefore there is a good consideration. And he cited Godfreys case, who laid claim to a copyhold, and the copyholder in possession said to him, If the opinion of the Lord Cook be, that Godfrey hath a good title to it, I will surrender it to him; and because he did not surrender to him, Godfrey brought an action on the case, and it was adjudged that the staying of the suit was a sufficient consideration to have an action on the case.

[134] Yelverton. If the promise had been to pay this legacy in consideration he would not sue him, then it had been good.

Williams. If there be no cause of suit, there is no assumpsit, and here is no just cause, for he cannot be sued for legacies.

Flemming of the same opinion, for the husband cannot be sued by the plaintiff, and although perhaps the legatee may sue him in the Spirituall Court, yet that is only for the temporall administration. And afterwards judgment was given for the defendant.

MICHAELM. 9 JACOB.

KEMPE AND JAMES AGAINST LAURENCE. IN C. B. ROT. 3648.

In a scire facias the case was thus, Gant having two daughters made his wife executrix, untill his daughters came to the age of 21 years, or should be married, and then the executorship should cease, and that then his daughter should be his executors; and the woman did recover a debt upon a bond made to the testator, after which the daughters marryed the plaintiffs, and they brought the scire facias upon the said judgment against the defendants as terre-tenants, and the sheriff return'd the defendants terre-tenants, and no others, and upon Dyer of the scire facias the defendants pleaded, that H. was seised of those lands die Judicii reddit, and made a lease for years to them: judgment, &c.

Nichols. The daughters shall have this judgment as executors, for they are in privity and in by the testator, and are not like an administrator who comes in by the Ordinary after the death of the executor. 6 H. 8. 7. Cook. 5. Rep. Brudnells case: and the daughters are executors and subject to debts of the testator. And as to the plea he said, that forasmuch as the defendants are returned terre-tenants, they cannot plead that they are but tenants for years, and that their lessor is not warned: for the scire facias is a personall action to have execution, but of the goods: but in a reall action it is a good plea, because the lessor himself cannot plead in discharge of such action 8 H. 6. 32. And note that Michaelm. 43 & 44 Eliz. Rot. 834 judgment in the very same point was given accordingly.

TRINIT. 9 JACOB.

INFORMATION AGAINST WEST. IN C. B. ROT. 1246.

In an information upon the statute ofthe 5 of Ed. 6. cap. 14. for buying of wheate-meale, and converting it into starch. It was resolved by three of the justices (Cook being against it) that this is not within the statute: but they agreed, that if one bought corn and thereof made meale or oat-meale, and sold it, that this was within the statute, for that is usuall, and is no alteration, and therefore remaines the same corn, but starch is altered by a trade or science, which [135] is a mysterie, and so it is not the same thing that was sold. But Cook Chief Justice contra. And cited one Franklinghams case Michaelm. 39 & 40 Eliza. in B. R. where one bought barley, and because it was of such quantity that he could not make malt of it in his own house, he made malt thereof in anothers house by his own servants. And it was resolved.

First. That the conversion of corn into malt, in his own house, with an intent to sell it was within the statute, unless there be a saving for it.

Secondly. Forasmuch as it was in anothers house, he is out of the proviso, and so within the penalty of the statute. And in Pasch. 42 Eliz. between Reynolds and Gerret that if a miller buyes corne, and grinds it and sells it within his house, this is within the statute. And in the Checquer Chamber in a writ of errour there between Baron and Brise, adjudged there that a coster-monger, who buyes pippins to sell them again was out of this statute, because they are necessary victuall. And divers exceptions were taken to the information: viz. where he saith ligamen Anglicè starch, whereas there is no such word, but it is ligumen, and the Anglicè will not help this mistake. Cook 10. Rep. 134. and this exception was taken by Justice Winch.

But Warburton Justice cont. for starch is a thing newly devised, and there is no Latin word for it, and therefore the Anglicè there is good.

Foster Justice took an exception, because the information concluded contra formam statuti, whereas it ought to have been contra formam statutorum, for this statute was of force until the 8 Elizab. and then was determined untill the 13th of Elizabeth, and then it was revived, so there are two statutes; but 'twas agreed, that where a statute continued de tempore in tempus, and was never discontinued, nor determined, there it shall be said contra formam statuti, and this diversity hath been twice adjudged upon this very statute. viz. 9 Eliz. in Palmers case, and in the 35 Eliz.

Warburton, cont. for the information doth intend only the statute of 3 Ed. 6, and 14. and he did recite the words thereof in his information: also this statute only makes the offence and declares the manner of it, and no other statute makes any addition to it, or increaseth the penalty, but only revives it to endure in perpetuum. But if a statute doth prohibit a thing, and another statute gives a penalty, there, upon information upon the penalty, both statutes ought to be recited and to conclude contra formam statutorum, vid. Commentar, 206. Morgans case. And so the Statute of Usury, 37 H. 8. is revived the 13th Eliz. and an addition made to it, there such inclusion ought to be contra formam statutorum, but where the statute is only revived, it is otherwise: as the Statute of Perjury 5 Eliz. was continued untill the 14 Eliz. and then it was determined, and 27 Eliz. was revived, yet all informations upon that statute, are contra formam statuti 5 Elizab. Cook. This is no good exception and cited Talbot and Sheldens case. Hillar. 33 Eliz. who were indited for recusancy contra formam statuti 23 Eliz. and in a writ of error, the judgment was reversed because the penalty was demanded: for the 10th Eliz. made the offence, and the 23 Eliz. gave the penalty, but if the information be for the offence only, there it had been good. See the new Book of Entries 182. but if there be divers statutes in the point of information contra formam statuti is good, because the best shall be taken for the King. WALLER AGAINST THE DEANE AND CHAPTER OF NORWICH.

In an action of covenant the plaintiff declared on a lease made from the deane, the case was thus. The deane in the 38 Eliz. had made a lease for 99 years, to one Themilthorpe, and then in the 42 Eliz. made a lease to the plaintiff for three lives, rendring rent, with a letter of attorney to make livery, and a covenant to save the plaintiff harmelesse against Themilthorpe, afterwards the attorney makes livery sc. after Michaelmas which was a rent day, and he being disturbed by Themilthorpe, brought this covenant. And two points were moved in the case.

First. Inasmuch as the lease was voyd to Walter, whether that the covenant was voyd also.

Secondly. If the livery made after the rent day be void.

Hoghton Serjeant. If the covenant depended on the interest of the lease, as a covenant to repay the thing devised, or to pay rent, these had been voyd, because the lease it self is voyd, for they do immediatly depend upon the lease, but where the covenant is for a thing collaterall, as a covenant that the lessor is owner at the time of the lease, or that the lessee shall enjoy it; or shall be discharged and saved harmeless, these covenants being collaterall to the lease and interest are good, although the lease be voyd, and the 43 Ed. 3. proves this: where a lease was made by a baron and feme, a covenant by them shall not binde the wife, contra where the covenant concernes the interest, as payment of rent, &c. Also the covenant was broken immediatly upon the sealing of the lease to the plaintiff. And as to the second point, he held it was a good livery, because no time was limited in the letter of attorney.

Dodderidge Serjeant. The covenant is voyd, because the lease is voyd, but contra, if it had been a covenant to enjoy for three lives, and he relyed much on the difference between tempus annorum and terminum annorum in Cook 1. Rep. 124.

Nichols cont. The covenant is good, and yet in force, for when an estate is created in which is implyed a covenant in law, there if the estate be voyd, the covenant is voyd also, but when there is an express covenant in deed, there it is otherwise, although the lease be voyd or voydable, as if he covenant that the lessee shall enjoy during the terme, and the lessee resign, yet is the covenant good although the terme is gone. And as to the second point. The livery is good, for untill the livery be made, the lessor shall retaine his land, and no rent is due. vid. Commentat.

423. for by intendment the possession is better than the rent. And Cook agreed to this. And the justices agreed with Nicholls.

JACOB BARNES CASE.

Tenant for life the reversion in the lessor, a formedon is brought against the tenant for life, who prays in ayde of him in the remainder for life, without him in the reversion.

Warburton, I conceive he shall have the ayde 7 H. 4. 2. where ayde is prayed against him in the remainder and reversion, and he cited a manuscript 11 R. 2. direct in the point that the ayde would lye. But the other justices cont. for the tenant for life hath as high an estate as he in the remainder, and may plead all that the other may, but if there be tenant for life, the remainder in taile, there he shall have ayde of the tenant in taile. 23 H. 6. 6. 11 Edw. 3. 16. If there be tenant for life, the remainder for life the remainder in fee, tenant for life shall have ayde of them both, for else he in the remainder shall not come in to plead. 11 E. 3. ayde 32. Where it is resolved, that tenant for life shall have ayde of the reversioner for life.

WATKINS AGAINST ASTWICK.

A man makes a feoffment on condition that if he, his heirs or executors do pay the rent of 100l. before such a day, that he may re-enter, the feoffer dyes, his heire within age, the mother (without any notice of the son) requests J. S. that he would pay the money for her son. And all this was found by speciall verdict, but it was not found of what age the son was.

Clinch. If the jury had found that the son was of the age of 17 years, the payment had been good.

Wray. If a bond be upon condition that the obligor or his heirs should pay 100l. and the obligor dyes, his heire within age, I conceive payment by the guardion, or by some other friend is good. And afterwards all the justices agreed, that if the infant were within the age of 14. years, the tender of the money by his mother had been good, but contra, if he had been more than 14 years, and because no age was proved here, but that he was within age, it shall not be intended that he was within the age of 14 years, and therefore they advised the party to begin de novo, and that it may be found that the infant was within the age of 14. years.

MORIS AGAINST PAGET. IN C. B. ROT. 2215.

In a replevin, a speciall verdict was found, that Sir Francis Ascough was seised of the mannor of Castor in Lincolne, which mannor extended itself into four towns viz. Castor, North Kelsey, Dale, & Sale: and that there were demesne lands and freeholders in each of the said towns, and that Moris the plaintiff held the land where &c. by fealty and suit of court to the mannor of Castor, and the lands did lie in one of the towns viz. in North Kelsey: and Ascough being so seised, sold to the defendant totum illud manerium sive dominium de North Kelsey cum pertinentiis in North Kelsey, ac omnia ac singula messuagia, redditus, Herriot, and all other things used or reputed as parcell thereof, with all courts &c. to have and to hold to the vendee and his heirs: and Moris the plaintiff and other freeholders in North Kelsey, did attorne to the vendee. The question was, if the vendee had the mannor of North Kelsey, or not.

Peryam, He has not; yet by the feoffment and attornment all the tenants and services are conveyed to him: but not as a mannor: for a mannor is made and incorporate by continuance of time, and this entire mannor of Castor cannot be divided no more than other liberties; as if the King grant to three partners, who have three mannors, a leet or warren, and one of them makes a feofment, the feofee shall not have the leet, and he cited Dyer 362. a. and he sayd, if I grant my mannor of C. except certain demesn lands and services, the feoffee shall have the mannor, and I shall have the lands and services in grosse: and so if I have a mannor that extends into two towns, and I grant my mannour to you in one town, you shall have no mannor, but the lands and services in gross.

Windham Justice cont. For where he grants his mannor of North Kelsey in North Kelsey, there it shall be construed his mannor in reputation.

Anderson agreed, for although a mannor cannot be created at this day, yet it is not so intire but it may be divided.

HILLAR. 30 ELIZAB.

SIR THOMAS HOWARDS CASE.

A man makes a lease for years the 10th of May, and then the lessor bargains and sells this to another by deed enroll'd, bearing date the 10th of Aprill, and it was entred to be conveyed the 10th of Aprill before, but in truth it was delivered and acknowledged and enrolled afterwards: and it was held that the bargaine was without remedy at the common law, for he cannot plead that it was acknowledged or delivered after the date of the day of acknowledging it, and so was the opinion of Rhodes.

Peryam and Windham, Anderson being absent: for he cannot aver, that it was inrolled or acknowledged at another day then it is record-[139]-ed, because it is contrary to the record, for it is entred, that it was acknowledged the 10 of Aprill, and then if such a plea should be admitted, it would shake most of the assurances in England.

Note, Shuttleworth put this case. A man makes a lease, rendring rent at two feasts, and if the rent be behind at any of the said feasts or 40 dayes after, and no distress to be found, that the lessor shall re-enter, the lessor comes upon the ground the last day of the 40. and demands his rent, and because no distress was found on the land at the time of his demand, he entred. But it was averred that always before this day there was sufficient distress, and the question was, if his entry were good.

Fenner and Rhodes said they had seen a report of the same case. 8 Eliz. that the distress ought to be on the land on the last day, yea at the last instant of the day, which is a legall time to make a demand, or else the lessor may enter.

Walmsley. The same case was resolved a year agoe in the Kings Bench between Ward and Ware. But if it were, (and no distress to be found at any time within forty dayes) there if there be a distress found at any time, it is sufficient. Vid. 1. Inst. 202. a.

WOOD AGAINST ASH.

[See Westropp v. Elligott, 1884, 9 App. Cas. 842.]

In a replevin, the case was thus. Puttenham made a lease of land with a stock of sheep for 20 years rendring rent, and the lessee doth covenant to render back to him at the expiration of the lease 1000 sheepe of the age of three or four years, and that the lessor grants all his chattels, and this stock of sheepe to Elizabeth Vavasor the defendants now wife: but in truth, the sheepe of the old stock were all spent, and others supplyed, part by increase, and part by buying of other sheepe.

Walmesley, for the defendant. The grant made by the lessor is good; for the generall propertie does remain in him, although that the lessee hath a speciall propertie.

To which it was answered, that if the ancient stock of sheepe were still, it had been good ; but it was not, and therefore the grant is void.

Walmesley. Although the first stock was changed, yet the new stock does supply it, and is in place thereof, and shall be in the same condition as the other stock is, and therefore the lessor shall have propertie in it. But the whole Court was against him : for they said, that the increase of the stock of sheepe should be to the lessee, and the lessor shall never have them at the end of the terme : but they agreed, that if the lease were of the stock with lambs, calves, and piggs, there the increase belongs to the lessor. And all the Court took this difference, sc. when a lease is made of dead goods, and when of living ; for when the lease is of dead goods, and any thing is added to them for reparations or otherwise, the lessor shall have this addition at the end of the terme, because it belongs to the principle : but in case of a stock of cattle, which hath an increase, as calves and lambs, there these things are severed from the principle, and lessor shall never have them, for then the lessor shall have the rent, and the lessee shall have no profit.

WISEMAN AGAINST ROLFE. IN C. B. ROT. 1454.

In a writ of right the case was thus. A man seised of land in fee makes his will, and gives to D. his wife such land for life, the remainder to T. his son and heires of his body, and also gives to T. his son his land in B. and also his land in C. and also he gives his land called Odyum to the seed of his son habendum all the demised premisses to his T. son and the heires males of his body. The question was if T. should have an estate in taile in B. and C. or if the last words shall relate only to that which was last named.

Fenner for the plaintiff. For the last clause is a new clause, and shall not be preferred to the first, for it begins with a verbe viz. I give my land called Odyum, and therefore the limitation afterward shall be referred only to this. And 10 H. 7. 8. There was a grant by dedi custodiam parci & arbores vento prostrat. The grantee shall have the trees by this clause, and 14 Eliz. a man deviseth thus. I give my mannour of C. to my second son ; item I give my mannor of S. to my second son to have and to hold to him, and to his heirs. And by Dyer, Welsh and Weston he had an estate but for life, but Brown cont. for if a lease be made to A. B. and C. successively, it is adjudged that they are joyntenants, but if it be to them as they are named, they shall have it one after the other : and if a devise be to one and his heirs, and after to another for life, the law will conster that the estate for life is to precede, for that words of relation in wills shall be taken strictly, as if a devise be to A. and his heirs of his body, and he does devise other land in forma prædicta, this shall be but for life.

Walmesley cont. and said that this limitation did go to all, whereof no limitation was made before ; for the rules of reason are uncertain, and therefore such matters shall be expounded according to the best sense that may be, and here the sense is most naturall to refer it to all, and the word all imports this : and the case of the fourth of Elizabeth (under favour) accords with this viz. that the devisee shall have fee in both. But if the devise had been, I devise D. to my son Thomas, and also to him and his heirs the mannor of S. there he shall have D. but for life. And if a man devise to his 4 sons A. B. C. and D. to have to the persons last named to them and their heirs, there all shall have fee. 19 Ed. 4. In a precipe of a house and an acre of land in three severall towns, and that the defendant ibidem ingressus est, and did not say into the house and land, and yet it was held good.

Periam and Rhodes. He shall have an estate taile in all, and the relation shall be to all. Anderson doubted at first, but agreed afterwards and judgement was given accordingly.

MATHEWSON AGAINST TROTT. IN C. B. ROT. 1904.

Upon a speciall verdict, the case was this. A man seised of land in soccage devised it to his yonger son, and died seised, the elder son enters and dies seised, and his heir enters, and the yonger son enters upon him, the question was, if his entry be taken away by this descent.

Walmesley. It is not, and he compar'd this case, to a title of entry for a condition broken, or a conusee of a fine upon grant and render &c. in which cases no descent shall take away entry.

Anderson. The devisee hath interest presently, and the land does not descend; for the devise prevents the descent, and the freehold is presently in the devisee, and the statute 32 H. 8. which gives power to devise lands, does make a title in the devisee as a title of entry for condition of mortmaine, and the devisee shall not have an ex gravi querela upon this statute, but he must enter.

Walmesley. The devisee hath not a freehold presently, for if it were so, the devisee at the common law ought not to sue an ex gravi querela: but certainly if the freehold be in the devisee, his entry is taken away. And afterwards judgment was given by Anderson that descent does not take away the entry of the devisee, but delivered no reason for it.

MOSGRAVE AGAINST AGDEN. ROT. 2529.

In an action of the case on a trover and conversion of six barrells of butter, the count was that they came to the hands of the defendant, and after the trover they were impared, and decayed, ratione negligentis custodiæ. And the Court held cleerly that the action would not lie, for he who finds goods, is not bound to preserve them from putrefaction, but it was agreed, that if the goods were used, and by usage made worse, the action would lie.

44 ELIZ.

AYER AGAINST JOYNER. IN C. B. ROT. 2529.

In a second deliverance, it was said by the Court, that if lessee for years does assign over his terme, and yet continues possession, that he hath but a naked possession, and no interest nor estate, but the estate and interest does remain in the grantee, so that he may grant it over.

And Walmesley said, that if the lessee makes waste, the lessor may have an action of waste against him: and there is a case that if a man makes a lease, and the lessee waves the possession, and a stranger commits waste, the lessor shall have an action of waste against the lessee, but the principall question was upon the pleading. [142] Taylor being lessee for years, 9 Elizabeth did grant and assigne this to Ayer the plaintiff. The defendant pleaded, that before the grant made to Ayer sc. 8 Elizabeth Taylor did grant and assign his estate to the defendant, without traversing the gift made to the plaintiff.

Williams. There needs no traverse, for being granted the 8 Elizab. it is impossible it should be granted 9 Eliz. 2 Edw. 6. and 1 H. 5.

Anderson. He ought to travers, for it is impossible to confesse and avoyd a grant by confession that was granted to another before, for if it were so, the second grant is voyd, and so being so, confest, here ought to be a travers.

Walmesley cont. in 32 H. 6. it is sufficient to say, that at another day, &c. there was another arbitrement, &c. for by that the first arbitrement is voyd in law. And it is a good plea in a will, that after that, there was another will made, without traversing, and there is difference between lands and chattells: for land may be gotten out of a man by wrong, and therefore it may be that after the feoffment the feoffor entred and it disseised the feoffee, and did infeoffe another, but it cannot be so here of a terme for years, for no man can take it away from the lessee by wrong.

Glanvill and Kingsmill cont. There must be a traverse, for there ought to be a confession before there can be an avoydance, but here he does not confess the grant, but pleads matter that denies it being granted. And at last Anderson gave judgment that he ought to travers.

In a quare impedit, the jury found that Edward Capell was seised of an advowson in fee, and did let it to the defendant for years, and during the lease he presented the defendant, and the doubt was whether this were a surrender or an extinguishment. And it was held by all the justices, that this could not be a surrender, but is cleerly an extinguishment: for if a man does present to his own church as proctor to another, by this he looseth his advowson. GOODRICK AGAINST COOPER. IN C. B. ROT. 1259.

In a replevin the defendant justified for rent granted to the master and schollers of Emanuell Colledge in Cambridge. And the jury found, that one Spendelose being seised of the land where &c. by his deed did grant to the said master and fellowes, a rent ch. of 40l. per annum for ever: and that Spendlose did seale his part of the indenture, and delivered it to the use of the master and fellowes to one J. S. to deliver it accordingly, but there was no deed to shew their receit thereof: and then they sealed the other part but they made no attorney to deliver it, and it was found that the rent was payd for divers years after.

Walmesley. Although no letter of attorney were made, yet it is good, for by their sealing of the counterpart there is a sufficient agreement to the grant. As if a reversion be granted to a corporation by deed, although they cannot accept of this, but by attorney, yet if they bring a waste, this is a sufficient agreement to vest it in them. Quod alii justiciarii concesserunt, and judgment was given for the avowant.

In debt upon a bond of thirty pound, the condition was, that if Robert Batchelor, son to the defendant, did use the trade of haberdasher as journeyman servant, or apprentice, or as a master, within the county of Kent, within the Cities of Canterbury and Rochester, within four years after the date, that then, if he pay twenty pound upon request, the obligation to be voyd. And all the justices agreed that the condition was against law, and then all is voyd, for it is against the liberty of a free-man, and against the statute of Magna Carta cap. 20. and is against the commonwealth. 2 H. 5. & 5. And Anderson said, that he might aswell bind himself, that he would not go to church. And judgment was given against the plaintiff.

DOGGET AGAINST DOWELL. IN C. B. ROT. 654.

In an action on the case upon an assumpsit, the plaintiff declared, that at the request of the defendant he had lent to him 30l. the 10th day of May 5 Eliz. and the defendant in consideration thereof, viz. the second day of May aforesaid did promise and assume upon himself, that he at the end of the yeare would lend the plaintiff other thirty pounds for a year, or give to him five pound. It was said, that the consideration is good, for although the promise was made at another day, yet is it in pursuance thereof, so that in law it shall be accounted all at one time, and is not like to the case in Dyer 372. where the master promised one who was bayle for his servant, that he would save him harmless, this is no consideration, for the bailment was of his own will, and was executed before the assumpsit, but if the master had first requested and afterwards assumed, there it is good; and so was it adjudged in the case of one Sydenham against Worthington, Trinit. 27 Eliz. Rot. 748. where the request was before, and the promise after, and there it was a good assumpsit.

Warburton agreed. And it is like as if I should say to you, do such a thing, and I will give you five pound, this is no good contract.

But all the justices on the contrary; for when at the first day the plaintiff did lend to the defendant thirty pound that was absolute, and the speaking on the second day cannot have such reference to the first agreement, that it shall be accounted all one.

Anderson. If I say to one: In consideration you will serve me, for a year, I will give you five pound, here is no cause of action, for the consideration is precedent and not mutuall, and so judgment was entred for the defendant.

HILLAR. 41 ELIZ.

WENTWORTH AGAINST WRIGHT. ROT. 2529.

In a quare impedit, two points were moved 1. If the parson be made bishop, whether the patron should present or the King by his prerogative.

Williams. The King shall for before the statute the Pope should present, and the reason was, because the bishop had received his presentment gratis from the Pope: and by the same reason, the King now shall present, for there is no reason the patron should, for by his precedent presentment he hath dismist himself untill resignation or death, as if a man lets land for another mans life, he shall not have the land during the life of cestuy que vie, & great mischief would be, if it should not be so, for els all the presentments, that the King hath made, shal be usurpations. [145] The second matter was, that no presentment is pleaded against the King by the patron, for it is pleaded that the parson was admitted and instituted, but not that he was inducted (but the Court held it good notwithstanding that omission.) But as to the first point, the Court asked Williams, if he could shew presidents that the King should have such presentment, for they said, that the usage by the Pope is no argument at all, for that he used to usurpe many things.

Walmesley. I conceive this custome began by the Popes usurpation, but he said, there is a book in the time of Edw. 2. where this point is argued and adjudged, that the patron shall present and not the King.

Williams shewed eight or nine presidents in the time of H. 8. that the King used to present in such case, but all of them were between spirituall persons. And the Court said, they did not regard those presidents, for all spirituall persons were the Popes servants vid. 6 Elizab. 72. 8.

South against Whitewit.

In a prohibition, the case was thus, The wife of Whitewit had spoken scandalous words of South, and therefore she was excommunicated by the High Commissioners, and by letters missive a pursevant came at twelve of the clock at night, and broke the house of Whitewit and tooke the body of Whitewits wife, who was rescued: wherefore Whitewit her husband was called before the Commissioners, and hereupon Whitewit prayed a prohibition. And the question was, if a pursevant could break a house by such commission or not. And it was agreed, that by the common law, neither the Pope, nor any other spirituall Judge had any thing to do with the body and goods of any one, for only the sword spirituall belongs unto them.

Walmesley: At the common law, after excommunication a capias excommunicatum was awarded, and I conceive this writ is of force at this day, and is not taken away by the statute of 5 Eliz.

Kingsmill agreed, for this statute gives power onely to correct the spirituall law, and to take away the authority of the Pope, but gives the same means to execute it as before, and he further said, that the statute that did erect the Court of Wards, doth appoint a seale belonging to it, and other process according to the course of the common law: and therefore by the same reason, if this statute of 5 Eliz. intended to give them such authoritie, they would have appointed a seale also, and a course according to the common law, but as the course is here used, a man may be robb'd in his house by a beggerly pursevant which is no officer known by the law. And so was the opinion of the justices.

Goosey against Pot. In C. B.

In a replevin the case was thus; Two hundreds were adjoyning together to two several mannours of two several persons, and the avowant was seized of one of them, and he prescribed that all the tenants of the other hundred have used to make suit to the leet within his hundred; and also that the lord of the other hundred used to appear, or to pay him 4s. pro anno futuro; and if it were not paid, the defendant prescribed, that he and all those, whose estates he hath, have used to distreyn any inhabitant within the hundred for the same; and therefore for 4s. not paid, he did avow the distress within the mannour of the plaintiff, who was one of the inhabitants.

Williams. A man may prescribe by a que estate in a hundred, for a man may have it by disseisin, and there are divers presidents which the prothonotaries have shewed me to warrant this in a replevin, for the seisin is the matter of the title. And to this Littletons rule may be added, that of all things which lye in grant, and whereof a man cannot be disseised against his will, a man shall not plead a que estate.

Kingsmill. A que estate cannot be pleaded of a hundred, unless it be appendant to the mannour; and a second matter was moved in this case, viz. that he prescribed to distreyn the cattle of a stranger for the offence of the lord.

Williams. It is not good, by the 41 Ed. 3. but by the 47 Ed. 3. for suit and service, the cattle of the lord may be distreyned on any land within the hundred.

Anderson. I do agree to the case of my Lord Dyer, that the cattle of a stranger cannot be taken for a herriot.

Walmesley. In the 12 of H. 7. it is said by Fineux, that a lord of a mannour may inlarge his services by prescription, and so the cattle of a stranger may be taken:

but for a personal matter, as for amercement in default of suit, no stranger may be distreyned. And afterwards agreed by all the justices, that the strangers cattle could not be distreyned.

HOLT AGAINST LISTER.

In a replevin the case was thus, he in the reversion after tenant in dower, grants it over to the use of himself for life, the remainder to his next son in tail, the remainder to the use of himself in fee, and after this he levyes a fine to the plaintiff and his heirs of land which he claimeth de hæreditate sua, after the death of the tenant in dower. The plaintiff brought a quid juris clamat against the tenant in dower, and upon non sum informatus, judgement was given that the tenant should attorn, and now he prayed that she should not attorn, for if she attorns, she will forfeit her estate.

Walmesley. If he in the remainder for life grants over by fine, it is no forfeiture, for he gives no more right than he hath; and so hath it been adjudged in the time of my Lord Dyer.

[147] Glanvill. I agree to that: but in this case he grants that which he hath de hæreditate sua, and this recital will make a forfeiture; and then if the tenant in dower attorn, this is a forfeiture.

Anderson. This attornment is no forfeiture, because it is by judgement of the Court.

Walmesley. I agree, for the grant it self is no forfeiture, unless it be by reason of the recital, but the attornment shall have relation onely to the substance of the grant, and it was much disputed between Walmsley and Glanvill, if lessee for life of a rent grants this in fee by fine, if this be a forfeiture; and Walmesley vouched a judgement, that it was no forfeiture; and Glanvill voucht 31 Ed. 3. Grant 60. to the contrary, and 15 Ed. 4. 9. by Littleton. If lessor for life of a rent grants this by fine in fee it is a forfeiture, by reason of the estoppell, otherwise if it were by deed. Vid. 1. MARSHES CASE. IN B. R. ROT. 1011.

Marsh and his wife brought a writ of errour as executors to Nicholson to reverse an outlawry upon an indictment of felony pronounc'd against the testator.

Altham of Grayes-Inne. The sole point was, whether the executors may have a writ of errour, and I hold that they may; for if there be no heir, it is great reason that the executors should have it, for otherwise the erroneous judgement cannot be at all reverst; and every one shall have a writ of errour that is damaged by the erroneous judgement, and executors have right to the personal estate to have errour: for if a man recovers damages in a writ of cosenage, and the land also, and dyes, his heir shall have execution for the land, and the executors execution for the damages, by the 19 Ed. 4. 5. 43 Ed. 3. 13 Ed. 4. 2. If a man does recover my villain by a false verdict, the heir shall have an attaint for the villany, and the executors for the damages, and a writ of errour shall be given to him to whom the right of the thing lost doth descend, as it was adjudged in the case of Sir Arthur Henningham, and he cited two presidents in the point, 1 Trinity, 11 H. 8. Rot. 3. where an administrator brought a writ of errour to reverse a judgement given in an exigent. Vid. 2 Rep. 41. a.

Cook contr. In Natura Brevium, 21 M. he sayes, an executor shall have a writ of errour upon a judgment given in debt against the testator, and the heir shall have error to reverse outlawry in felony, and to restore him in his blood, and he said that it was part of the punishment in felony to have the blood corrupted, & sic filius portat iniquitatem patris; and by reason of the attainder, he cannot inherit any ancestor; wherefore he having the damage, it is reason that he should reverse it. And although executors shall have a writ of errour for chattels personal, yet they shall not have one when they are mixt with things real, 5 H. 7. 15. 18 Ed. 4. If writings be in a box, the heir shall have the box, because real things are more regarded than personal.

[148] Nevertheless in this case the writ of errour is in a real action, for the law sayes, that it is in the same nature as in original action, whereupon it is brought; as if errour be brought to reverse a judgement given in a personal action, the writ of errour is personal; and so in like manner is it real, if the first action be real, 47 Ed. 3. 35. 35 H. 6. 19, & 23. And although the first action be mixt, yet the law does rather respect the reality, 30 H. 6. Barr. 59. where two brought an assize, and one did release, and there it was said, that although this were a mixt action, yet it shall be according to the most worthy, and that is the reality: and 16 Assi. 14. divers disseisors being barr'd in an assize, did bring a writ of attaint for the damages, and summons and severance was suffered, for damages were joyned with the reality: and Stanford, 184. If a man be indicted before a coroner, quod fugam fecit, if he after reverse the indictment, yet he shall have his goods, for de minimis non curat lex: but note, that the justices said, that the fugam fecit was the cause of forfeiture of the goods, and not the felony. And as to the presidents, he agreed to the case of the 18 H. 7. for an executor shall have a writ of errour to reverse judgment given in an exigent, for there nothing but the goods are forfeit, 30 H. 6. Forfeiture 31. and for the president in 11 H. 8. it cannot be proved that the outlawry was for felony. Vid. Rep. fol. 3.

Lilly against Taylor. In B. R. Rot. 467.

Marsh seized of the land in question, did devise this to Rose Lilly for life; and if she fortun'd to marry, and after her decease should have any heirs of her body lawfully begotten, then that heir should have the land, and the heirs of the body of such heir; and for default of such issue, the land shall revert to Philip Marsh, his son and his heirs, and the question was, if the husband of Rose shall be tenant by the curtesy, or not; and so if Rose had estate tail, or for life onely.

Godfrey. She hath estate but for life; and he cited a case adjudged in Benlowes Reports, 40 Eliz. where lands are devised to A. for life, and after his decease to the male children of his body, and it was adjudged that the male children have an estate tail by purchase, and nothing by descent, and so A. had nothing but for life.

Gawdy agreed, for she hath but for life, and when she dyes, her issue shall have it.

Popham agreed, if the words were, that if she had issue, that he should have it.

But Clench held, that she had an estate in tail executed, and that her husband shall be tenant by the curtesy.

Fenner. The issue is as a purchaser, for the devisor intended that Rose should not have a greater estate than for life. And also it was agreed by all the justices, that a devise to a man and his heir shall be accounted a fee-simple, for that the word, heir, is collective: and so is the 29 Assi. where land was given to a man, and to the heir of his [149] body, & uno hæredi ejusdem hæredis, this is an estate tail.

Popham. He shall be tenant by the curtesy; and he agreed, that heir of the body was a good name of purchase; but if a frank-tenement be limited to his ancestor, and by the same deed it is also limited to his heir, the heir shall be in by descent. But Fenner on the contrary.

Pasch. 38 Eliz.

Bolton against Bolton. Rot. 882. & 582.

Tenant for life being impleaded, doth pray in aid of him in the reversion, who joyn and lose, &c. and the tenant for life brings a writ of errour, and the record is removed, and he in the remainder brings a writ of errour also, de recordo quod coram vobis residet; and the question was, upon which writ of errour the judgement should be reverst: and it was objected, that if it should be reverst by the tenant for life, that he in the remainder should be restored.

But Gawdy, Fenner, and Clench contr. who held, that it should be reverst at his suit who first brings the writ, as in case of interpleader, it shall be alwayes upon the first writ. And notwithstanding the removing of the record by the tenant for life at the next term, the Court said, it was at their discretion to reverse this at suit of any of the parties, as they pleased: and because they observed some indirect practices by him in the remainder, it was reverst at suit of tenant for life.

SIR HENRY DIMMOCKS CASE. IN THE COURT OF WARDS.

Tenant of the King by knights service, bargains and sells his land to Sir Henry Dimmock and his heirs, and Sir Henry Dimmock dyes, his heir within age, and then the deed is inrolled; the question was, if the King should have premier seisin.

Trist. The King shall not, because Sir Henry did not dye within his homage, but the land was in the bargainor; as if there be a bargainee of the reversion, and the tenant makes waste, the bargainee shall not have waste, unless the deed be inrolled before the waste committed, 3 Jacobi. Bellingham against Alsop. Bargainee before inrolment sells the land over, and it was adjudged that the second bargain was void, 10 Eliz. Mockets case. Disseisee releaseth to the bargainee of the disseisor before inrolment, and adjudged voyd, 5 Eliz. in Popham's case it was said, that the Statute of Inrolments had altered the common law; for now by the delivery of the deed, no use is raised untill it be inrolled. But all the justices held, that the heir [150] should be in ward, and pray premier seisin if he were of full age; for the statute sayes, that no use shall be, unless the deed be inrolled: but if it be inrolled, it passeth ab initio, and then the bargainee shall be tenant ab initio. But it was also agreed by all the justices, that the wife of Sir Henry shall not be indowed, and that rent paid to the bargainor at the rent-day incurr'd after the bargain is good, and the bargainee hath no remedy, because it is a thing executed.

CUDDINGTON AGAINST WILKIN. IN C. B. ROT. 924.

[S. C. Hob. 67, 81. See Leyman v. Latimer, 1877-78, 3 Ex. D. 20, 356. Hay v. Justices of the Tower Division of London, 1890, 24 Q. B. D. 565. Monson v. Tussauds, Limited [1894], 1 Q. B. 687.]

In an action of the case for calling the plaintiff thief, the defendant justified, because the plaintiff had stollen sheep, 37 Eliz. the plaintiff replyed protestando, that he had not stollen sheep, and pleaded the general pardon, 7 Jacobi, upon which the defendant demurred, and adjudged for the plaintiff, for the pardon had so purged and abolished the offence, that now he was no thief, 1 Ed. 3. Corone 15. 2 Ed. 3. Corone 81. 1 Assi. 3. So if one call another villain after he is infranchised. And in one Baxters case, in Banco Regis, it was adjudged, that where a man was accused for perjury, and acquitted by trial, if he be afterwards called perjur'd, he shall have his action on the case. And judgment was given for the plaintiff.

SEAMAN AGAINST CUPPLEDICK.

In a trespass of assault and battery, the defendant justified in defence of his servant, scil. that the plaintiff had assaulted his servant, and would have beaten him, &c. and the plaintiff demurr'd.

Yelverton. The bar is good, for the master may defend his servant, or otherwise he may lose his service, 19 H. 6. 60. a.

Crook Justice. The lord may justifie in defence of his villain, for he is his inheritance.

Williams contr. The master cannot justifie, but the servant may justifie in defence of his master, for he owes duty to his master, 9 Ed. 4. 48.

Yelverton. The master may maintain a plea personal for his servant, 21 H. 7. and shall have an action for beating his servant; and also a man may justifie in defence of his cattle.

Cook. A man may use force in defence of his goods, if another will take them; and so if a man will strike your cattle, you may justifie in defence of them; and so a man may defend his son or servant, but he cannot break the peace for them: but if another does assault the [151] servant, the master may defend him and strike the other, if he will not let him alone.

Williams. It hath been adjudged in Banhams case, that a man cannot justify a batterie in defence of his soil, a fortiori he cannot in defence of his servant. vid. 19 H. 6. 31. 9 Ed. 4. 48.

Drury against Waller.

In an action on the case upon a trover and conversion of 200l. delivered by the plaintiff to the defendant; and upon not guilty pleaded, the question was, if denyall by the defendant to pay it upon request, would beare this action. And the case of Isaac was urged, who brought an action of trover, &c. for 200l. in a bag, and by verdict it was found that demand was made thereof, and a deniall to pay it. And by Dodderidge it was a conversion.

Crooke accorded, but Haughton doubted the case. And Man Prothonotarie said, that he remembred a president in the case, where it was resolved, that in such case deniall of a horse was a conversion.

Haughton. I remember an action of trover was brought for a trunk, and it was ruled there, that if one hath timber in my land, and he demands liberty, to carry it off my land, and I deny it, this is not a sufficient conversion.

Dodridge. There is great difference in the cases, for a horse or money cannot be known, if they be used, but timber may. Et adjournatur.

Michaelm. 8 Jacobi.

Alfo and Dennis against Henning. In B. R. Rot. 969.

In an action of covenant, the case was thus. Thomas Tavener by indenture primo Jacobi, did demise land to one Salisburie for 7. years: and by the same indenture Salisburie did covenant, grant, condescend and agree with Taverner his heirs and assignes, that he, his executors and administrators should pay to Taverner his heirs and assigne 75l. per annum. And after Taverner demised the same land, to Mary Taverner for life, and he demised the reversion for 40. years to the plaintiff, if he so long lived, and the tenant attorned, and for rent due at the Feast of St. Michaell he brought his action of covenant. And the first question was, if this were a sum in gross, because the lessee covenanted to pay this as a rent. And resolved by Cook Chief Justice, and the Court, that this is a good reservation of rent, for it is by indenture, and their intention was to have it as a rent, and the words of the indenture shall be accounted to be his, who may most properly speak them. 26 H. 8. 2. 10 Eliz. 275. 22 H. 6. 58. 28 H. 8. 6. And the case between [152] Whitchett and Fox in replevin this terme, where a man made a lease for 99. years rendring rent, and the lessee covenanted by the same deed with the lessor, that he would not alien without his assent upon paine of forfeiture, and after he aliened, and the lessor entred.

And it was held by the Court that this was a condition, although the plaintiff did covenant: for being by indenture, they shall be the words of both, and the words sub pœna forisfacturæ are the words of the lessor. The second point was, if the assignee for 40 years, may have a covenant, and it was held he might, for it is for payment of rent, and if the lessee covenants to do any thing upon the land, as to build or repaire a house, there a covenant will lie for the assignee, by the common law, but if it do not by the common law, yet it is cleere that it will lie by the statute of the 32 H. 8. And the Court held, that an assignee of part of the reversion might take advantage of the condition or covenants, so that he hath part of the reversion of all the thing demised. And Cook, Chief Justice said, that the opinion of Mourson 14 Eliz. 309. a. is good law.

BUTLER AGAINST ARCHER.

If two joyntenants be of land holden by herriot service, and one dies, the other shall not pay herriot service, for there is no change of the tenant, but the survivor continues tenant of the whole land. But if a man seised of land in fee, makes a feofment to the use of himself and his wife, and the heires of their two bodyes begotten, the remainder to the right heires of the husband, and the husband dyes, a herriot shall be paid, for the ancient use of the reversion was never out of the husband.

STEPHENS CASE. IN C. B.

In an ejectment, the case was, Sir William Beale made a lease by indenture to William Pile and Philip his wife, et primogenito proli habendum to them and the longer liver of them successively during their lives, and then the husband and wife had issue a daughter. And it was holden by three of the justices, that the daughter had no estate, for that she was not in esse, at the time of the grant.

[153] MICHAELM. 30 & 31 ELIZ.

LEWIN AGAINST MANDY. IN C. B. ROT. 2529.

In a replevin the defendant avowed for 20l. rent, which was pleaded to be granted by Lovelace and Rut and by fine to Stukeley and his heires, who being seized thereof, did recite that he with 7 others were plaintiffs in a writ of covenant against Lovelace and Rutland, upon which a fine was levyed, by which fine the said Lovelace and Rutland amongst other things, did grant a rent of 20l. out of the mannor of D. and other lands to the said Stukely, who granted it to Hoveden, under whom the defendant claymes in taile. The question was if this were a good grant, because there are many misrecitalls in the indenture: for whereas he recited that in the writ of covenant for the fine Lovelace and Rutland were defendants, in truth they were plaintiffs, and Stukely and the others defendants, and whereas he recited that the said grant was made to him, it was made to him and his heires, also he said, that the said rent charge amongst other things was granted, whereas nothing but the 20l. rent was granted, and that only out of the mannor of D. and not out of other lands.

Anderson. If a man recites that he hath a rent of 10l. of the grant of J. S. whereas he hath this of the grant of J. D. yet is the grant good. And at last it was adjudged that the grant was good.

Note that Fenner at this time said, that it had been resolved by Anderson and Gawdy and other justices very lately, that if the Kings tenant dies, his heir within age, yet the heir at full age before livery sued may bargain and sell by deed inrolled, or make a lease for years and it is good: but if he makes a feoffment or leavie a fine sur conusance de droit come ceo, &c. this is voyd, because it cannot be without intrusion upon the King.

TRINIT. 39 ELIZ.

OLDFEILD AGAINST WILMORE. IN C. B. ROT. 2715.

In debt upon a bond to performe the award of J. S. who did award that the defendant should pay 10l. or cause two strangers to be bound for the payment thereof, the defendant pleaded performance, the plaintiff replyed that he had not payed the money, and the defendant demurred.

Walmesley for the plaintiff. For although the award be in the disjunctive, yet forasmuch as it is voyd as to one part, now upon the matter it is single, and on the non payment of the ten pound is forfeit 17 Ed. 4. 5.

Windham and Rhodes, held that the plaintiff should have pleaded so much of the award as was for it is a thing intire, and the law will [154] adjudge that one is only to be done, because the other is contrary to the law.

Anderson and Peryam. The plea is good, for a man shall not be compelled to shew a voyd matter, and although the defendant had caused the two strangers to be bound, the obligation is broken, for as to this arbitrement, it is meerely voyd, and at another day the plaintiff had judgment.

GOODRIDGE AGAINST WARBURTON.

In an ejectment, the jury gave a speciall verdict, that Francis was seised of the land in tayle, and suffered a recovery to the use of him and his heirs, and afterwards did devise the same lands to his wife Margery untill his daughter Prudence came to the age of 19 years, and then that Prudence should have the land to her and the heirs of her body, upon condition to pay twelve pound per annum to the said Margaret during her life in recompence of her dower, and if she failed of payment, then Margaret should enter, and hold the land during her life, and afterwards, it shall go to Prudence as before. And after this John Francis the heire did reverse this recovery, by a writ of error, and entred upon Margaret, and she brought her writ of dower, and was indowed of the third part, and then she levyed a fine of that third part to the said John Francis, and he infeoft Tyndall, who made the lease to Goldsing, and then Margaret marryed Warburton, and Prudence came to the age of 19 years, the rent of twelve pound is not payd, and Warburton and his wife entred, and Goldsing brought this action.

Walmesley. By the recovery of the third part in the writ of dower, the rent of twelve pound, which was in recompence thereof is gone. For at the common law, if a woman recover in dower, she hath waived that which was assigned to her in lieu of her dower, as in case of dower ad ostium ecclesiæ, and 10 Edw. 4. If the husband discontinues the land of his wife, and she brings a writ of dower, she is concluded to have a cui in vita.

Shuttleworth cont. By this recovery the estate taile is revived, yet as this case it is, not materiall, for because he entred without a suit, he is a disseisor, and that was agreed by all at the Bar and the Bench. And he cited 26 H. 8. 3d. 4th H. 7. 11. And I conceive that the dower will not conclude her of the twelve pound per annum, for it is not a rent, and the title to have the land for her joynture for non-payment the rent was not in esse at the time of the recovery of her dower, but afterwards, as if a lease be made to a woman who marries the lessor, who dies within the terme, and the wife enters, this shall not conclude her dower, after the lease is expired by the eleventh of H. 4. Also the twelve pound is not appointed to be issuing out of the land, and so it cannot be a joynture, and therefore, the wife is at large to have the twelve pound, and her dower also. But the Court held, that she could not have her joynture, for by the recovery of the dower her joynture is barred, for the rent was given her in recompence of her dower, so that it cannot be intended that she shall have rent & dower also, wherefore it was adjudged that her entry on the land was not good.

The King against the Bishop of Canterbury and Hudson. Rot. 1832.

In a quare impedit, Hudson the incumbent did plead, that King Edw. the 4th did grant the rape of Hastings, et bona & catalla fellonum fugitivorum & ategat of all residents and non-residents within the said rape to the Earl of Huntington. And pleaded that John Ashborne was seized of the mannor of Ashborne, and of the advowson appending to it, and held the same of the Earl of Huntington as of his rape of Hastings, and that the said John Ashborne, was outlawed, during which, the incumbent of the said church dyed, and the earl presented the said Hudson.

Shut. I conceive this avoydance does not belong to the earl by reason of this grant, for by the same patent libertie is given to the said earl & his heirs to put himself into possession, and of such things as he cannot put himself into possession, they will not passe, and here this is a thing in action, which by these words will not passe. 19 H. 6. 42. by the grant, de catalla fellonum obligations do not passe.

Walmesley. Stanford in his prerogative, saith, that by the words, bona & catalla the King shall have the presentation to the church of him that is outlawed or attaint, and by the same reason he may grant it by such a name, and although the party cannot seise such a thing, yet it shall passe 39 H. 3. 35. Rent for years shall passe by the grant of bona & catalla.

Periam. It will passe by these words, for it is an ancient grant, for in that time the patents, of the King were not so specially penned, as now they are.

Anderson. I conceive the avoydance will not passe by these words, for within this word bona moveables are contained both dead and living, and avoydance is no chattell nor right of chattell. Quod Peryam negavit, &c.

Mich. 37 & 38 Eliz.

Townsend against Whales.

In an ejectment, the jury found that J. S. was seized of land in possession, and also in reversion for terme of life, and made a devise by these words, that his executors take the profit of all his lands and tenements free and copy, for ten years for the payment of his debts, and legacies, and after the end of the said ten years, that all the aforesaid lands and tenements with their appurtenances, should be sold by his executors or one of them, and the silver to be bestowed in the performance of his will, or by the executors of his executors, or any of them, and then one of the executors dyed within the ten years, and the two surviving executors did grant all, aswell in possession as in reversion to House, who made a lease to the plaintiff. And two points were resolved.

[156] 1. That the executors may grant the reversion (34 H. 6.) for by these words (free and copy) his intent appears, that all should be granted.

2. That although one of the executors died, yet the other two executors may sell.

Anderson. If such devise had been at the common law, and one executor had refused the two others could not sell, but if one die, the survivors may sell the land, for there the authority doth survive. Which difference the other justices agreed to. And at another day Anderson said, there was difference, where the devise is, that executors should sell his and the money divided between them, there if one die, the others shall not sell, but otherwise here, because the money is the performance of his will.

Walmesley. The sale by the two executors is good, for it is said; the executors or any of them &c. And Beaumond agreed, wherefore judgment was given for the plaintiff. Note that there were two verdicts in this case, and the first only found, that the executors should sell after the ten years, and that one dyed, and the other two did sell within the ten years, and the opinion of the Court was that the sale was voyd but in the 39 and 40 Eliz. all the whole will was found and judgment given ut supra.

THE EARLE OF RUTLANDS CASE.

Roger Earl of Rutland, and John Manors and others executors to John late Earl of Rutland executor to Edward Earl of Rutland, brought an action on the case against Isabell Countess of Rutland, and declared for divers jèwells and goods, &c. that came to the hands of John Earl of Rutland as executor to the said Edward, and the said John the 10 of July 29 Eliz. did casually loose them, which after came to the hands of the defendant, & licet sæpius requisita, she would not deliver them to the said John in his life time, nor to the said plaintiffs after his death, but knowing the goods did belong to the plaintiffs in D. in the county of Notingham converted them to her proper use. And a verdict for the plaintiff. And it was moved often in arrest of judgment, but all the justices agreed, that the action of trover and conversion would lie by the executors upon the statute of the 4 Ed. 3. upon a conversion in vita testatoris, and so hath it been adjudged in the Kings Bench, and although the statute mentions onely a writ of trespass, that is only put for example. Also they all agreed, that the sole cause of action is the conversion, for if there were no conversion, they shall be put to their detinue, therefore the great doubt did arise because the day and time of the conversion was not shewed, for perhaps it was after the writ and before the declaration: and also if it was in vita testatoris they should have this action by the 4th of Ed. 3. But at length Walmesley said, that all Justices of the Common Pleas, and of Serjeants Inne in Fleet-street (besides Peryam Chief Baron) were of opinion that judgment should be given for the plaintiffs, for that some of them held, that the day of the conversiou is not materiall to be shewn, and others that of necessity as this case is, it shall be intended that the conversion was in the plaintiffs time, wherefore judgment was entred for the plaintiffs, but a writ of errour was brought, and the case much debated.

CAREW AGAINST WARREN. IN C. B. ROT. 1945.

Gunter tenant in taile of lands in antient demesn made a lease for 60. years to J. S. and for security thereof levied a fine to Lee and Loveland, who rendred to Gunter in fee, who devised the reversion to his wife for life the remainder in fee and dyed. And then the Lord of Andover, (which is an ancient mannor) by an ostensum est nobis, returned in the Common Bench against Lee and Lovelace, upon a scire facias awarded against them, and two nihils return'd, the fine was reversed.

Anderson. The scire facias is not well awarded, for it ought to be brought as well against those in possession, as the conusors, and this appears by the 21 Ed. 3. 56. by which they in possession and those in remainder ought to be made privy.

Walmesley agreed, for the freehold, which is in me shall not be taken from me without making me privie, no lesse, then if A. bring a precipe against B. of my land and recover, for I shall have an assise upon this. Also another matter is in the case, for the land now in question is alledged to be parcell of the mannor of Andover, and therefore cannot be ancient demesne. But no judgment was at this time given, because there were but two justices.

HALLING AGAINST COMAND.

In an action of covenant, the case was thus. Comand the defendant did covenant with the plaintiff, that at the costs and charges of the plaintiff he would assure certaine land for the joynture of the plaintiffs wife before Michaelmas. And the plaintiff declared that no assurance was made, nor tender before the said Michaelmas. And hereupon the defendant demurred, for that the charges should have been offered before the assurance, 3 H. 74. 23 Eliz. Dyer. Anderson in the 35 & 36 Eliz. Foster did covenant with Franke to make an assurance at the costs and charges of Franke, and Franke brought a covenant, and Foster demurred because no charges were tendred to him, & it was adjudge against Foster, for Franke could not have cognizance what manner of assurance should be made, and so could not tell what charges to tender, and therefore he ought first to shew him what manner of assurance he should make, and according to that he ought to tender reasonable charges.

Walmesley. But the chargee ought to precede the assurance, but the declaring of what manner of assurance should be made ought first to be done. Beaumond of the same opinion.

[158] MICHAELM. 38 ELIZ.

DAMPORT AGAINST SYMPSON.

In an action on the case, the plaintiff declared that he had given to one Spilman certain jewells to traffique with them beyond the seas, and that he had not sold them, but had delivered them to the defendant, who had spoild them, whereupon the plaintiff brought an action against the said Spilman, and upon not guilty pleaded they were at issue: and the now defendant at that evidence did depose upon his oath, that the jewells were worth but 200l. whereas they were worth 800l. by reason whereof the jury gave indeed but 200l. damages, and for this false oath he brought this action; and the jury upon not guilty pleaded, found for the plaintiff, and assessed 300l. damages. And now it was moved in arrest of judgment that the action would not lie, no more than against those who informe a justice of peace of fellony upon his oath against J. S. 20 H. 7. 11. Also the party grieved hath his remedy in the Star-Chamber. And Walmesley said that for perjury there was no remedy, and so is it in the 7th Eliza. Dyer 243. a. for it is not to be thought that a Christian would be perjur'd, and in the 2d H. 6. 5. a conspiracy will not lye against indictors, who informe their company of their oath. Wherefore, it was adjudg'd that this action did not lie. Note that Anderson was against this judgment: but Walmesley Owen and Beumond were against him.

[1] THOMSON AGAINST WARNER.

Formeden en descender of the mannor of Iffield in Sussex, the tenant pleads common recovery with voucher by the auncestor of the demandant, in 35 H. 8. and they were at issue upon null teil record, for now it appears that the record is Iffield, but it was urged by the demandant that the record was Iffield until that matter came in question, and for that it was to be presumed that it was corrupted, and prays that it may be amended, and that surmise was proved. But of the tenants part, an indenture which leads the use of the recovery was shewed, which recites the roll of the recovery, and in that it was called Iffield, and it was advised to the Court, that the record should remain as now it is; for it was hard, to defeat the estate of a man upon such a trifle, for which judgment was given against the demandant, and by Walmesly, a common recovery not being; but a common conveyance need not pursue such a strict form as other writs founded upon a title.

FARMER AGAINST DOWNES.

Two joyntenants acknowledge a statute, and their several lands are taken in execution, and after upon the invalidity of the statute, they joyntly bring an audita querela, and adjudge that the writ shall abate, for they ought to have several writs, for the wrong done to one (by an execution of his lands) is not a tort to the other.

HASTINGS AGAINST BLAKE.

In debt the defendant said that he is attainted of fellony, that the attainder yet continues, and demands judgment if he shall be put to answer, and adjudged that he shall answer, and may be taken in execution, and that shall not be prejudicial to the King, for notwithstanding the execution of the party, the King may have him executed when he will.

2. Men attaint or outlawed shall be put to answer in any action against them, because it is to their prejudice; but in an action brought by them they shall not be answered because, it is to their benefit.

3. They shall be put to answer, by reason of the possibility of their being pardoned. Note that this judgment was much against the opinion of Walmesly, who said it was in vain to put any man to answer in an action real or personal, who hath in truth nothing to be taken in execution.

MARTIN AGAINST WENTWORTH. 38 ELIZ.

Debt upon a lease for 35 years to commence at the Annunciation of our Blessed Virgin last past, and the lease was made, 26 Junii, 26 Eliz. rendring a rent of 40l. annually during the first ten years (vid.) 5 [2] Octob. and the last day of March by equal portions; and after the end of the said ten years 46l. 13s. 4d. annually the 5 Oct. and the last of March, by even and equal portions, the first day of payment to begin the 5 of Oct. next. Adjudged that the new reservation to commence at the annuntiation 36 Eliz. although that the term, as to the interest doth not commence until the making of it, yet in respect of the number of years, it shall be accounted of the annunciation of the 36 Eliz.

2. The words of the first payment to be made the 5 of October next, shall refer to the first reservation, and by the manner of the reservation it is impossible for the lessor to have 10 times 40l.

The lord brought trespass against a copyholder for cutting of elmes the defendant prescribes to cut and dispose all the trees upon his tenancy, &c. adjudged to be an ill prescription; but otherwise of a copyholder of inheritance, 2 E. 4. ne poient succider bois sauns licence. Note there it is vouched, that a custome that the wife of a copyhold for life may hold durante viduitate, and agreed to be good. HOLLINGWORTH AGAINST PARKEHURST.

H. brings an audita querela against P. and sues him upon a recognisance for a statute staple acknowledged before Poph. Chief Justice where it was made upon an usurious contract, and it was agreed, that if there be a communication and an agreement after the forfeiture of a recoguizance, and the second defeasance is for more than 10l. in the hundred, according to the principal debt, yet it is not within the 13. Eliz. ca. 11. of usury, but it had been otherwise before the forfeiture. And by Glanvil and Walmsly, Anderson being absent, that although that the second defeasance bears date the same day of the payment of the first defeasance, yet it is not within the statute, for it is not for the forbearance of the first principal but of that penalty, also when the conusor perceives that he was not able to save the forfeiture, it was adjudged that the first contract was not usurious.

WARBERTONS CASE.

A tenant in tayle, the remainder to B. in fee of lands held of the Queen; B. dies, his heir of full age; A. leases to W. who being ousted brings an ejectione firm and it was prayed that proceedings in the case might be staid, Regina in consulta, because the primer seisin is due, but by Walmsly and Glanvil, that it is not due: and yet Glanvil said that the Court of Wards would have ward for such reversion, which seemed to him to be hard law, but Serjeant Harris said that it hath been adjudged in the Court of Wards to have ward for a lease for years. (See Cook on Let. 46.)

KETTLENSHERT AGAINST CHATTERTON.

K. recovers in debt against A. and the money was brought into Court, Yelverton, the Queens serjeant moved that the money [3] might be retaind there to the use of the Queen: for the defendant stood fined in the Star-chamber, it was ruled that that was no cause.

H. 2 Jac. B. R.

A. after many legacies devises the residue of all his goods to one Taylor, and makes Trott his executor and dies, Trott after accounts before the Ordinary, &c. pays the residue to Taylor, and thereupon has an acquittance from the said Taylor. Trot dies, and Taylor sues his executor in the Court of Requests, to accompt de novo, the executor pleads the acquittance, and the plaintiff thereupon demurred; Cook Atturney General prays a prohibition, and the Court said, that an executor shall not be compelled to account in any Court, although the Court of Conscience; but by the Court it was agreed, that an executor of an executor may be sued for a legacy given by the first testator.

FOX AGAINST LEE.

Pas. 3 Jac. B. R.

In debt upon an escape, the plaintiff counts upon a recovery, &c. and that Lee then sheriff took the party, and afterwards extra custod. suam ad largum ire permittit, without saying, extra custod predict. in executione predict existent & remanent, and it was ruled that it was good enough, for it shall be intended all one custody. ve Dyer 66.

CRAB AGAINST BALES.

PRINGE VERSUS CHILD.

Intr. T. 2 Jac. B. R. rot. 520.

P. the vicar of Eaton in the county of Oxon. sues C. the parson impropriate in the Spiritual Court in Oxford, pro minutis decimis. C. sues a prohibition against the vicar upon a surmise of a prescription. P. comes and pleads the first endowment made anno Dom. 1310. by which the minute tithes were allotted to the vicar. C. demurs, and adjudged for the plaintiff, for the parson cannot prescribe against the first endowment.

SIR RICH. CHAMPION AGAINST ROBERT HILL.

Pas. 3 Jac. B. R.

In debt upon the 2 E. 6. for not setting out of tythes, the plaintiff declares, that the defendant was seised of the lands in question within that parish, and that the tythes did belong to the parson and vicar (viz.) two parts to the parson, and the third part to the vicar or their farmers, payable in specie, for forty years last past, that the plaintiff was farmer proprietory of the tithes to the parson, and vicar spectant, and shews the value of the tithes due, and demands the treble value, the defendant pleads nihil debet per pat. and it was found for the plaintiff. It was now moved in arrest of judgement, because the plaintiff ought to have brought two actions, as the parson and vicar ought for their several parts, but resolved that the action is well brought, for it is a personal and one entire debt for one wrong. 32.

HITCHAM AGAINST MURCHAM.

H. brings an assault and battery in one writ against two by several precipes, and recovers, and it was ruled by the Court that he shall have but one execution, because it appears to the Court that it is one and the same trespass, but if he had sued them by several writs, and had recovered against them, if he had execution and satisfaction against one, the other hath no remedy by plea, &c. but by an audita querela, but if after execution against one, he sues the other in an assault and battery, then he may plead that, and so it was agreed. ALLERSON AGAINST EDEN.

The Bishop of Norwich seized of three mannors and of a rectory, grants the said rectory to Maunton, &c. and because the Queen had a rent, &c. of thirty three pounds out of the rectory he covenants and grants with N. his heirs and assigns, that if, &c. he be destreyned, &c. for that rent, &c. that then it should be lawful for N. &c. to destreyn for so much in the three mannors, which after were granted to Wood-house, N. afterwards grants the rectory with such a clause of distress in the same mannors to B. and adjudged that N. might lawfully grant that over as well with a nomine pœnæ, although it be not annual; and the distress by B. adjudged lawful.

ALBANY AGAINST MANNY.

In debt, agreed that if A. be out-lawed in debt, and obtains a release of the party of that debt, and after by Act of Parliament all out-laries are pardoned. When the party is satisfied, then the out-lary is discharged, for the release is a satisfaction in law. (9 Rep. 52. b.)

LICHFIELD AGAINST SANDERS.

In wast, it was said by Anderson and Walmsly, that if the issue be joined upon a collateral point, as if the party entred as devisee or executor, yet the jurors ought to have the view of the place, for the damages given, although that the wast be confessed: for the issue is tried by the verdict, but otherwise if by demurrer; but Glanvil was of a contrary opinion, for it is not sufficient to come and view any part of the land in question as in an assize, but the jurors ought to have the view of every parcel, for the assessing of dammages, 34 H. 6. 45. a. And if any of the parties disswade the jurors from making a view, it is punishable in the Star-chamber, for hindering the course of justice.

BUTLER AGAINST MONNINGS.

A. seised of three acres, grants a rent-charge out of them to M. and after enfeoffs I. S. of two acres. M. covenants with I. S. and grants that he will not charge them two acres, for the said rent with any distresses after; and B. the terre-tenant of the other acre, being distreyned, brings a replevin; and the question was, if the covenant and grant by M. be a release of the rent; Glanvil, that it is a release, Anderson on the contrary opinion; but by the Court, if it be a release, the terre-tenant of the other acre may plead that, for by that the rent is extinguisht.

Note, that if a man marry the wife of a tradesman, during her widowhood, she cannot use that trade if she had not been an apprentice [6] to it, &c. but of the trades excepted in the statute, as tanners, &c. Lege statute.

Note by the Court, that process out of the Court of Requests is not sufficient warranty to imprison any man, and Glanvil advised Heale for his clyent to bring false imprisonment.

Heale moved this case. A. convicted of fellony, and discharged by his clergy, takes a wife, and they bring an accompt upon a cause before the conviction for goods of the wife. And by the Court it is good; for those goods could not be forfeit by the conviction, vide Cook, lib. 246. for false imprisonment brought after pardon for outlary, 29 Assize 63.

WINDHAMS CASE.

8 Rep. 34. a. Dyer a. 19.

If tenant in tail makes a lease for years, according to the 32 H. 8. that that shall bind the issue of the tenant in tail, but not those in the remainder.

Note, by the justices upon pleading of a conveyance by bargain and sale actual entry ought to be pleaded, and that possession, per 27 H. 8. de usibus is not sufficient.

WHIDDONS CASE.

Whiddon brought an annuity, and declares of a grant by deed, the defendant said it was delivered to the plaintiff as an escrow upon certain conditions, to be his deed, and shews the conditions not to be performed. And adjudged upon the demurrer sans agreement per le plt. that a deed cannot be averred as an escrow to the same parties.

WIMBERLY AGAINST THOMPSON.

An action upon the case how as the plaintiff being possest of a fountain of silver to the value of 400l. and delivers it to one to transport over seas, and sell it; and in the account it appears that the factor afterwards melted the fountain and converted it to his own use, for which the plaintiff brought his action upon the case and they were at issue, and it was moreover alledged, that where in truth he was damnified to the value of 400l. yet there made oath, that the said fountain was but the value of £280. And by reason of the said oath, it was adjudged that the plaintiff nil capiat per bre.

First an oath of every one shall be taken as a certain truth, and for that reason the statute of 3 and 22 H. 7. which gives power to punish perjuries in the Star-chamber, were made, for no punishment was for perjury at the common law, be 7 & 8 Eliz. 242.

By that action the intent of the jury shall come in issue, as when they will give in damage that which cannot be tryed, for they are sworn to keep their own counsel.

If this action lye, all testimonies would be terrified to speak the truth.

[7] 4. No president can be produced of such an action, which is a great argument that it would not lye.

5. If that action may lye, the plaintiff may have it upon any wager of law, which is unreasonable, and against law.

Williams against Roberts.

Where an execution shall be de bonis propriis.

Williams brought debt against Roberts as executor, and had judgement de bonis testatoris, and a fieri fac. was awarded, the sheriff returns nulla bona, upon which the plaintiff surmises that the defendant had wasted the goods, and praies a scire fac. against him to shew cause why he should not have execution de bonis propriis, and it was awarded that he should have no such execution, until the sheriff had returned a devastavit. Yet the 9th H. 7. Executors 9. an executor pleads plene administravit, which is found against him, and there a special fieri fac. of the goods of the deceased, and if it can appear that they are wasted, then de bonis propriis, and so it was adjudged.

But there was found by the verdict that he had assetts, but here it doth not appear if he hath assetts or not, so there is a diversity between the cases. Also by the devastavit the judgement shall be altered (that execution shall be de bonis propriis) which cannot be without a return of the sheriff, ergo.

Johnson against Heydon.

For lands in Northpreton in the county of Somerset, upon a special verdict found not to be comprised in a fine, it was ruled by the Court, that a mannor in reputation, which is not a mannor in truth, do's not pass by the name of a manner in a fine, or by a common recovery; for they are grounded upon original writs which ought to be certain, and not to be taken by intendment. But otherwise it is of a grant or feoffment, for there the intent of the parties shall help it.

March against Curtis.

A. leases for years, rendring a rent upon condition that the lessee shall not parcel out the land nor any part thereof from the house, &c. the lessee grants all his term in the house and part of the land, and afterwards he leases the part reserved for half a year, the rent is in arrear and he demands, after which he accepts a rent due, at another day, after the title of entry, and afterwards he enters, and his entry adjudged lawful.

First, The condition is broken; for although that by the assignment of the term, the land is not parcelled from the house, but rather the house from the land: yet the intent. For the separation of it from the house is the substance of the condition.

Secondly, The acceptance doth not take away his entry, for the condition is for a collateral thing, otherwise it is of a condition of reentry for non-payment of rent according to Pemaul's case in Cooks Reports.

[8] Martin against Vaux.

Consideration to forbear a debt, a good assumpsit.

An action upon the case, and declares, that with his testator, &c. he delivered certain wares to I. T. and I. H. &c. ad compotum inde reddend. by I. T. and after that, &c. I. T. goeth over seas, and the testator dieth, and that after, &c. I. T. sent into England 100 kintals of wood, &c. to satisfie the plaintiff of his account, which wood came to the hand of the defendant, who delivers parcel of it to the plaintiff in satisfaction of part of the account, &c. and the defendant, super se assumpsit, that if the plaintiff would forbear the said I. T. for the residue untill his return into England, which he hoped to be within three months or thereabouts, that then the defendant would satisfie the plaintiff all that should appear to be due upon the account. By virtue of which he hath forborn three months, and that 3000l. was due and in arrear upon the said account, which the defendant hath not paid, per quod actio, &c. And upon the non assumpsit it was found against the defendant, &c. and in arrest of judgement, divers exceptions were taken to the declaration.

First, Because he said the testator delivered certain wares to I. T. and does not shew what they were in certain; disallowed by the Court, because in that action the wares are not demanded, but the action is only grounded upon the assumpsit, so the 20th Assize 3. in trespasse the plaintiff declares for the taking of charters, and not shews what; and adjudged good enough. Because in the action of trespass, the plaintiff only demands damages, and not the charters themselves, ve. 47 E. 3. 3. Tho. Pains case, that if an account be brought for the very wares, there they must shew the certainty. So note the diversity.

Secondly, It was alleadged that the wares were delivered to two, ad compotum inde reddend. by one, therefore not good, for both are accomptable by reason of a joint delivery. The Court was of the contrary opinion, because it was the folly of I. T. so to accept the goods upon such delivery, by which he only is chargable.

Thirdly, The assumpsit is not good, because the forbearance is not any recompence to the defendant but to I. T. so no consideration. The Court on the contrary, and especially also because the defendant took into his hands the said wood: and so was chargable to the plaintiff in an account, before the assumpsit, but otherwise it had been doubtful.

Fourthly, It is not alleadged certainly for what time he hath promised to forbear the account, ergo the declaration nought. The Court on the contrary, for he hath averred in fact that he did forbear three months, which is sufficient; quere the case of Smith and Andrews, that if the plaintiff will forbear, ad pauculum tempus.

Fifthly, It is said that the defendant assumes all that shall be due upon the account, and the plaintiff after alleadges that 3000l. was due upon the account, which is not good, because he do's not alleadge, that a writ of account was brought, and that auditors were assign'd, and that so he was found in arrearages 3000l. The Court on the contrary; for the word account is a proper word to merchants, for when they deliver wares to their factors to render account, those wares are called the account, and so by usual speaking amongst them, it is said that the account delivered to such a factor it amounts to the same thing, &c. So judgement was given for the plaintiff.

[9] PAUL BANNINGS CASE. ADJUDGED P. 37 ELIZ.

An action upon the case for stopping a cross way.

In an action on the case, and declares, that where the plaintiff being seized of an house in D. in the county of L. and shows the estate, &c. and prescribes to have a cross way in, by, and through a certain way in sale in the county aforesaid, unto such a close in D. in the said county, and that the defendant made a hedge in the close of D. in the said county, and did stop up his cross way, per quod actio accrevit, and upon non culp. it was found for the plaintiff, and in arrest of judgement exceptions were taken to the declaration.

First, Because to prescribe to have a cross path in a certain way, that shall be intended a common cross way, that being in common right, prescription is gone. The Court on the contrary. For though a man cannot prescribe in a common cross way, yet to have a way in, by, and through that common cross way, is otherways, for that is cross, thwart, and through the cross way, and then notwithstanding, that being in the high way, may continue his course without prescription, yet it may be that the cross way be inclosed and hedged on both sides, and for that, to prescribe to pass, cross, and repass through is a good prescription.

Secondly, The crossing and going through the cross way is only shewing the continuance of the cross way, unto such a close, to which the plaintiff claims way, ergo bon. There the declaration is not good, because the village nor the county where B. acre lyes, and to which the way should lead is alleadg'd. Court on the contrary. Because the village and the county is alleadg'd where the nusans was done, for that only is the cause of the declaration, to which he hath pleaded not guilty, and upon that the issue is joyn'd, and then the visne shall come, but if the issue had been joyn'd upon the prescription of the cross way, or the right of that, the visne should have come from both villages, (viz.) where the house is, and out of the village where the close lyes, to which the cross way leads, and then the plea had been ill for the incertainty of the village or county where B. acre lyes.

WHITE AGAINST WEST.

The case was argued by Herne Serjeant, who took divers exceptions to the pleadings.

First for that it was pleaded, that Sir Henry Bloncker being seiz'd of divers lands held in chivalrie, devises these lands out of which the rent in question is issuing, leaving a third part according to the statute, to descend to his heir, and did not say that it was the third part in value, which otherwise might be taken the third part in quantity, as the third acre, which is not the purpose of the statute by which he ought to have pleaded, that it was the third part in value, left to the heir by descent.

Secondly, Gerish in right of whom the avowry is made, intitles him by Bloncker, by bargain and sale, and said, pretextu quorum he was seis'd, and did not say, moreover virtute stat. 27 H. 8, as he ought.

Thirdly, for that he pleads, that Gerish was seis'd in his demeasn as of fee, and so being seis'd, a præcipe was brought against I. S. I. N. tenants of the land, by which a common recovery was had: the which is a contrariety in himself, they are terre-tenants and at the same time. Gerish is seis'd of his demeasn as of fee, the which demeasn is ever an actual possession. And for the matter in law he mov'd, how that the rent is [10] gone for the avowry is for a rent service, and that cannot be, for by the recovery the tenure is destroyed. Warberton Serjeant argued to the contrary, and first answered the exceptions.

And to the first, he said it was well enough pleaded; for where he said that he left the third part to descend, it answers to the words of the statute, and if it be not sufficient in value but only in quantity, that belongs to another to shew. As in the 4 Assize, upon an appersciament of rent, it is sufficient to make the rate according to the quantity, if it be not shewed of the other part, and differs in value.

To the second exception, for that it is not pleaded virtute statut. but only prætextu quorum, he answered, that that is also a general demurrer, and then that being but a defect in form, the Statute of Jeofayles helpes, and if it will not, yet that pleading seemes to be good enough, for that the statute is a general law, of which the Court shall take notice without any pleader, and so good enough the one way or the other.

To the third exception, that there is a repugnancy in the pleading, I hold that there is not any, for it is that Gerish was seized, &c. until after a præcipe was brought against I. S. and I. N. terre-tenants, by which it shall be intended that after they came lawfully to the tenancy. For another exception which hath been taken, that there is a doubleness in the plea, for that that he pleads, quod concessit reversionem & reddit: prædict. To that I say, that it is not double, although that the rent passeth as incident to the reversion, for that the rent is only responsable, is in question, and the reversion goes by the recovery; and as to the matter in law, it seems that the rent is not gone by that recovery, for the tenant in tayl may take of me my rent, the which is proved by a case in Littleton Seignor M. and tenant, where if the lord purchase the tenancy, the mesualty is extinct by the inconveniency, which shall not be 48 E. 3. Avowry, it is held, that if a discontinuance be of an estate tayl, that yet the donor may distreyn for the rent, and by a common recovery against the donee, the rent is not taken from the donor; for he against whom the præcipe was brought, was not tenant of the rent but the donor; and for the rent the præcipe shall be against the pernor. And for that 33 Assize of Rent, it was maintained against the pernor without naming the terre-tenant, and for the recompence in value it is not gone, in respect of the rent. In Hunt and Capells case it was adjudged, that a rent granted out of a remainder in tayl, was taken away by the common recovery, but if tenant in tayl in possession grants a rent-charge, and after suffers a common recovery, that rent remaines. For at this day a common recovery is but a common conveyance. And although that is ejus en le post, yet it is in a manner ejus en le per, and it is to the use of the tenant, if no use be declared to the contrary, and he that recovers shall take the advantage of the condition by stat. 23 H. 8. and upon the judgment to have in value, and he that was in reversion to have no rent. And upon the extent the tenant shall have the lesser in value, in regard of the rent recoup, with which it shall not be charged, and upon the extent the sheriff cannot assign a rent in value, as in 22 E. 4. in a writ of dower, the sheriff cannot assign a rent in recompence of dower, nor no other can assign a rent, but he that is owner of the land. And to the intent that no injury nor inconvenience shall be to any of the parties, after the estate-tayl is determined, he in the reversion shall have the extent, for that, that the land given in value, is not of so great a value, as that which he hath lost, and so concludes, that the rent remain, and pray'd judgement for the plaintiff to distreyn for it. Et adjournatur.

[11] Action for Slander.

Thompson an atturney of the Common Bench brought an action on the case for these words spoken to one of his clyents, John Thompson is a paltry fellow, for he doth deal on both sides, and deceives them which put him in trust. And after verdict it was mov'd by Heale to have judgement for the plaintiff, to which the Court assented, if other matter be not shew'd to the contrary.

WEEKS AGAINST TYBALD.

Entr. M. 2 Jac. B. R. rot. 364.

In an assumpsit the plaintiff alleges, that whereas there was a communication of marriage between the plaintiff and the daughter of the defendant, that the defendant upon speech between the father of the plaintiff and the defendant, for free liberty to the plaintiff to come to the house of the defendant to woo his daughter, the defendant then and there affirm'd and publish't that he would give 100l. to him that should marry his daughter with his consent, &c. By the Court the action doth not lye, for asseruit et publicavit doth not make words that include a promise.

It is not aver'd nor declar'd to whom the words were spoken, and it is not reason that the defendant should be bound by such general words spoken to excite sutors.

BROOKE AGAINST SMITH.

Entr. H. 2 Jac. B. R. rot. 1169.

In debt against an executor, the plaintiff recovers, and a fieri fac. de bonis testat. and upon that the sheriff returns, that the defendant had not any goods of the testators tempore judicii, nor after; the plaintiff comes to the Court, and surmises that the defendant had wasted the goods, and prays a writ to the sheriff to inquire. But after the very matter being mov'd at the Court, by the Court a supsedeas was granted, for it was out of the Court and without president, Justice Williams being only of the contrary, and cites the 9 H. 6. 57. that he may have a special writ, and also the case between Haworth and Peele.

SOMERFIELD AGAINST STANTON.

HARRIS'S CASE.

An annuity was brought against H. parson of Gistenthorp in Essex, and he praid ayd of the King as patron, and it was agreed by the Court to be ill, because he did not pray ayd also of the Ordinary. [12] SIR GEORGE WALGRACES CASE.

Note by Popham and Williams that a plea of tender of amends, is not good where the trespass was voluntary, as for battery or breaking his close, or putting cattle into his grounds.

Mic. 3 Jac. B. R.

Note, that it hath been many times adjudged, that a trover lies for money although it be not in a bagg, but otherwise of detinue; for by that the plaintiff shall have judgment to recover the thing it self, if, &c. and if not then damages, and therefore the thing ought to be known, 40 Eliz. B. R. Holliday against Higgs. The master delivers corn to his servant to sell, who does accordingly, and converts the mony: the master brought an action of trover for the money, and adjudged to be well brought.

CHADRON AGAINST HARRIS.

If the Ecclesiasticall Court proceed in a matter that is meer spiritual, and pertinent to their Court, according to the civil law, although their proceedings are against the rules of the common law, yet a prohibition does not lye, as if they refuse a single witness to prove a will, for the conusans of that belongs to them. And agreed also, that if a man makes a will, but appoints no executor, that that is no will but is void. But if the Ordinary commits the administration with that annexed, the legatory to whom any legacy is devised by such will, may sue the administrator for their legacies in the Spiritual Court. Note P. 4 Ja. B. R. Peeps case, a prohibition was denied where they in the Spiritual Court refused a single witness in proof of payment of a legacy.

GAGE AGAINST PEACOCK.

Lessee for years of the mannor of Totteridge in the county of Hartford by the Bishop of Ely, and confirm'd, &c. the bishop is despos'd, and the successor by deed indented reciting the lease, grants to the said lessee the office of baily of the same mannor, for twenty one years, with the fees; and there was great arguing if that were not a surrender. See the 21 H. 7. 5. Lessee for years grants a rent-charge out of the lands of the lessor, that that was a surrender, but it was denied for law. See Dyer 200. that a baily had more authority than the keeper of a park, 39 H. 6.

30. Office of a baily goes by lease, Brook Offices 47. Forrestership determined by being a justice in eyre of the forrest. N. B. 264. B. the office of a coroner determined by being a sheriff. It was agreed by the justices, that if A. leases his mannor rendring a rent, and after makes B. baily to receive the rent, B. shall be charged as receiver, and not as baily, because the rent is certain. And if lessee for years of a mannor be afterwards made baily, it was adjudged to be no surrender.

First, because the office of a baily hath not an interest in the land, but an authority only.

For that it hath not any part of the thing demised; and judgment accordingly.

[13] Blackaspers Case.

A. B. and C. joyntenants for years, A. grants his part to B. B. and C. make a leese to W. for years, who is ousted, and brings an ejectione firm. and counts of a demise made to him by B. and C. And the question was now if W. ought to have brought two actions, for B. was tenant in common with C. of the third part. Popham and Fenner that the writ and count is good. For tenants in common may joyne in an action, upon 8 H. 6. cap. 9. and one writ of waste lyes upon several leases. 44 E. 3. 34. Waste 70. Br.7 8. but Williams and Yelverton were of the contrary opinion, because that action is in the realty. But it was by all agreed that it had been good policy for W. to have made a lease to another, and that lessee might have an ejectione firm. without doubt well enough. (Ve. case intr. Chapman & Hill.)

Stockwood against Sare.

Intr. T. 1 Jac. B. R. rot. 282.

A. devises a house to his wife in recompence of a rent which he had formerly granted to his wife, and that she shall have the occupation of B. acre until Mich. next ensuing, paying 40s. to Nich. his son. And after devises all his lands, tenements, and hereditaments (except the land before specified and given to his wife) to N. my son in tayle, which was in May, and the devisor dyes four dayes before, for by the exception of the land before specified and given, nothing by that passeth to Nich. although that the estate of the wife had been but for one day. But otherwise it had been if he had said, except the estate before specified and given; for then the reversion should have passed, so as to B. acre by Popham, if the devisor had lived till after Mich. yet it should not have passed to the son, because the intent of the devisor appears to the contrary, although that the wife had not any interest in B. acre.

Draper against Rastal.

Intr. P. 44 Eliz. B. R. rot. 5, 7.

In the debt for 34l. 10s. the plaintiff declares that he sold certain to the defendant for 66l. Flemish, which amounts to 39l. 10s. and upon nihil debet it was found for the plaintiff, and well, although the action was brought in the debet and detinet, and not in the detinet onely, see 34 H. 3. 12. 6 E. 3. 40. But if it had been brought in the detinet only, it might have been for the 66l. Flemish as well as the other, and so judgment was entred.

That it may be brought in the debet and detinet for the Flemish, if it be a current coyn, as by proclamation. (H. 29 Jac. B. R. 1394. Ward against Regrein.)

Ampson against Stockburn & Ux.

A. brought debt against two upon an obligation of the wife dum sola fuit, and they plead non est factum of the wife, and the issue was found against them: and by Popham, being only in the Court, that the capias shall be only against the wife. See 9 E. 4. 24. E. to the contrary.

Note, by Popham and Williams, that an executor in his own wrong shall be sued for legacies, as well as the lawful executor, but Yelverton doubted it.

[14] CROSSE AGAINST ABBOT, AND OTHERS.

M. 3 Jac. B. R.

Copyholder in fee brought a trespass, and prescribes to have the topings of trees for fireboot and hedgeboot, the defendant justifies, by sale for the lord of the mannor. And the prescription for fault in the plea, of that, viz. to cut ramos aliquarum arborum, which is uncertain, for it may be taken for some of any trees, was rull'd to be nought. But otherwise it had been well, if omnium arborum. And Cook said, that such a copyholder may have an action against the same lord, if he cuts the trees: for by that he destroys the very thing in which the tenant prescribes. Note well 47 E. 3. 22. and 4 E. 2. Trespass 233. 2 H. 4. 11. that a tenant in common may have an action of trespass against his companion, because he destroys the same thing given them in their tenancy in common. And he that hath common of estovers shall have an action upon the case against the owner of the land for distraining the trees. But such prescriptions as in the first case hath been good for a copyholder by life.

WHITLOCK AGAINST CHARTWELL.

Intr. T. 2 Jac. B. R. rot. 696.

M. and E. joyntenants for life, M. covenants conditioneth and agreeeth with B. to have the one moyety of the lands after the death of E. for 60 years, if M. so long live, and likewise M. demises, grants, and to farm letts the other moyety to B. after the decease of M. for 60 years. And adjudged, that the first moyety passeth by the covenant, &c. as the lease of that part which appertains to M. and that then the lease of the other moyety of the companion was void. See Br. Leases 6. 10 E. 4. 48. 20 H. 7. 26. Dyer 150. That a covenant shall amount to a lease. Bartons and Habins case 37 and 38 Eliz. B. R. that a joyntenant may lease his moyety for years, to commence after his death, or the death of his companion; and that in that case it was adjudged, that if a joyntenant covenants to stand seis'd to the use, &c. of the moyety of his companion after his death, that no use shall rise, because 'tis not but a bare possibility.

DRAKE AGAINST DOYLYE.

Intr. T. 2 Jac. B. R. rot. 189.

In trespass it was adjudged, that a prescription to enclose against the land of another is extinct, by the unity of possession: because during the unity the prescription fail'd and ceas'd. By Popham and Fenner that if the owner, having both lands, enfeoffs another of the close which in the bank and hedge is, the feoffee is bound to maintain the fence against the other land, in which the ditch is: for the bank and hedge pass by the feoffment. But Yelverton and Williams were of the contrary opinion, that they are bound at their perils the one against the other to repair. And by Williams, and not denyed by any, that if I bargain and sell an acre of land, that is in the middle of my lands, there the vendee shall have a way to it over my lands. So it is adjudged, T. 5 Jac. B. R. Quere. That if a stranger hath land adjoyning to any part of that acre, if the vendee is not then bound to purchase a way of me, or of the stranger, or make himself a trespasser

[15] PARREY AGAINST CHAUNCEY.

Intr. M. 2 Ja. B. R. rot. 346.

Prescription by a parishioner to pay the tenth part of corn for modus decimandi, for the hay also that grows upon the head-lands, is not good, because the tenth part is due for the corn. But such prescription for the corn and after-rakings is good, with an averment that they are sparsæ manus voluntarie. So prescription of the tenth part of hay, and the after-grasse. See H. 15 Jac. C. B. by Hubbard Chief Justice, prescription to make up the first crop is good, modus decimandi for the after crop, and note M. 29, 30 El. B. R. rot. 250. Bayard against Adams, prescription as in the first case is good. But note that judgment was given against the party, because he had not well pleaded the prescription.

RANDAL AGAINST ROBERTS.

In a replevin adjudged, that if A. be seised of lands in Sokefee, and of gavilkind land, grants a rent-charge out of them, to B. in fee, and B. dies, having issue three sons, that the eldest son shall have all the rent, see Br. Rents 10. and 13. which seems to the contrary.

BARNEHURST AGAINST YELVERTON.

An administrator recovers in debt against A. the administration is revok't, yet the administrator sued A. and took him in execution, a supersedeas was awarded because the execution erronice emanavit, for he cannot sue him to execution after the administration is revok't. And if in such a case A. had escaped, the gaoler might well plead that in discharge.

BOTT AGAINST SIR EDWARD BRABALON.

Bott sues a prohibition against Sir Edward B. and suggests, that the defendant is parson impropriate of W. acre in Warwick, and that there time out of it, &c. there hath been a curat or an incumbent by the appointment of the said rector, who administers the sacraments, &c. and that the custome of that parish time out of, &c. was that the curat should have all tenths renewing within that parish, except decimas granorum which were paid to the parson, and that every parishioner who had so paid the tenths to the curate, was discharged against the parson. And that notwithstanding that, &c. Sir Edward had sued him, &c. and now he prays a prohibition and had it; but after that surmise was adjudged insufficient without argument by the Court, and a consultation granted, for such curat cannot prescribe against his master, that may remove him at his pleasure, and for that it was not good prescription for the parishioners.

WISEMAN AGAINST WAPPTHORPE.

P. 4 JAC. B. R.

A. makes his wife executrix, and devises a legacie to Wap. and dies, the wife takes upon her the executorship, and takes Wiseman to husband, and Wappthorpe sues the wife in the Spiritual Court for the legacy, without naming of the husband, and the husband and wife [16] prays a prohibition, because the baron is not named; nor that plea allowed in the Spiritual Court, and the remedy was to appeal over.

GOODWIN AGAINST THE DEAN AND CHAPTER OF WELLS.

Goodwin being vicar sues them, being parson of a church, for a pension, in the Spiritual Court, and they pray a prohibition, and it was denied; for that pension is a spiritual thing, for which the vicar may sue in the Spiritual Court. Note, that they entitle themselves to that parsonage by a grant of H. 8. who had it by 31 H. 8. of dissolutions.

Note, that lessee for years rendring a rent payable at a place out of the land leased, and was bound upon condition to pay the rent secundum form. & effect. indenturæ prædict. And held by the Court that the lessee ought to pay the rent at his peril without demand. And according to that judgement was then affirmed.

TAYLER AGAINST CHAREY AND HIS WIFE.

In an assumpsit the plaintiff declares, that the wife, dum sola fuit, in consideration of an horse and saddle given to her by the plt. promised to pay 4l. to the plaintiff upon the Feast of the Annunciation next ensuing, vel circiter illius temporis, and alleadged that she hath not paid it at the day, nor by the space of 40 days after. And that she had taken to husband one Charey, which hath and still doth deny to pay the same, &c. Notwithstanding the incertainty of circiter, judgement was given for the plaintiff. For it appears that the 4l. was not paid when the suit was commenced. Note well 3 E. 4. 5. 2. for circa festum.

RANDAL AGAINST WALL.

Intr. H. 2 Ja. B. R. rot. 649.

R. an infant acknowledges a recognisance of a statute staple to Wall, and R. brought an audita querela in C. B. and there adjudged by inspection of the Court within age, and scire fac. awarded against W. and upon a nihil returned judgment given, that the recognisance shall be null'd. W. now brings error in the R. B. because there ought to have been two nihils returned, and also because a scire fac. was awarded, where it ought to have been a venire fac. And for these errors the judgement in the C. B. was reversed. But at the same time hanging the error in B. R. Randal comes to full age, and now again he brings an audita querela in B. R. and prays the benefit of the first inspection, and upon that it was demurred, and by the whole Court, that he could not have an audita querela again upon that inspection. For the Judges ought to judge upon their own inspection, yet at that time no judgement was given nor entred.

BIRKS AGAINST SIMSON.

Co. Litt. 131. b.

A. devises his land to B. his cousin, and publishes that will, and after upon communication with some of the friends of the said B. A. said, If she will not come to me, and live, &c. she shall not have one penny worth of my goods and lands. And at another time spoke words to the same purpose: but never makes any mention of his will, or revocation of that, nor called any to testifie that, but only spoke that in communication, as abovesaid. And adjudged to be no revocation. And Sir John Jeffrys case was voucht, that A. having made his will privately, [17] and being sick he was requested by his friends to make his will, or if he would make any, he answered no, yet adjudged no revocation. And another case was voucht, that A. had made his will and left it at Fulham, and being sick in London, he said to some present there, My will at Fulham shall not stand. And that was adjudged a good revocation. See Dyer.

WILLIAMS'S CASE.

I. brought a habeas corpus for he was committed to the Gatehouse by the High Commissioners, because before that time, he had been sentenced and enjoyned penance for incontinency, and was fined to the King, and that he should pay costs. And for not performing all, he was committed. And by the Court, the High Commissioners cannot imprison any man for a fine imposed, nor take an obligation for it to the use of the King, but they ought to estreat it into the Exchequer; but for the pennance or ecclesiastical censure lawfully made, they may commit the party to prison untill he conform himself to their sentence.

STOCK AGAINST POPE.

In an ejectione firm. the case was thus. A. seized of lands in the village of S. and also of lands in the village of W. and both those villages were in the parish of S. A. bargains and sells all his land in S. and covenants to levy a fine accordingly. And adjudg'd that nothing of the land in W. passeth by the bargain and sale, for S. in that case shall be intended the village of S. and not of the parish. For a præcipe of lands of S. shall be intended of the village and not of the parish. See 39 H. 6. 14. Br. Tresp. 11. (11 Rep. 25. b.)

BREERTONS CASE.

In an account against B. judgment was given quod computet, and before the auditors he makes an uncertain account, and was committed till he had made a full and perfect account, and after B. was delivered by priviledge of Parliament; process was pray'd to retake B. and to bring him again into the Court, and it was thought not to be within the statute of 10 Jac. because B. was not in execution, not for any certain duty. And by the Court a new cap. ad comput. shall not issue, for then all that was done before the first auditors will be annulled, as 1 E. 5. 1. B. But a special writ shall issue reciting all the matter, and to bring him again into Court, and being there he shall be committed to prison by the Court, there to remain, until, &c. ut supra, which was done accordingly.

[18] TANFIELD AGAINST GREEN.

In an assumpsit the plaintiff declares, that in consideration that he would seal and deliver a release to I. S. &c. the defendant would pay to him 5l. and averrs, that he had made the release, &c. and by the appointment of the defendant, had delivered it to B. to the use of I. S. And 'twas adjudged that he had not well persued and performed the consideration but otherwise if it had been by the appointment of I. S. himself. ve. 8 H. 7. 13. a.

Note by Fenner and Tanfield Just. and Kemp secondary, that if A. be bayle for B. in an action in the Upper-Bench, and judgement is there given against B. B. sues error in the Exchequer Chamber, and there the judgment is affirmed, and costs assessed: A. the bail in Upper-Bench remains, and shall be charged for the judgement there, but not for the costs assest in the Exchequer Chamber upon the writ of error.

HIGGINS CASE.

Higgins brought an action of trespass against B. quare vi & armis insultum fecit upon the wife of the plaintiff, & ipsam verberavit, &c. dans ei plagam mortal. whereof she languisht for six months, and dyed, ad grave damnum, &c. By the Court that action will not lie, for the King only is to punish felony, except the party brings an appeal. And by Tanfield also, that it will not lie as the case is, because the wife is dead, and that she ought to have joyned in the action, but otherwise of a servant. 44 Ass. 13. 43 E. 3. 23. which seems to the contrary, ve. 6 E. 3. 36.

SIR HUGH WROTS CASE.

The Dean and Chapter of Wells lease to B. land for 21 years, rendring 4l. rent, to be paid quarterly, &c. B. assigns the moity for years to I. It was said by the Court that the assize of dar. &c. shall abate. See by Hubbard, but if he had brought another quare impedit, it had been well. And so it was resolved in the Earl of Bedfords case, and by Hutton that the statute of W. 2. cap. 5. proves it, (viz.) quod habeant ass. &c. vel, quare impedit, but not both. ve. 8 E. 3. 17.

[19] REVEL AGAINST GRAY.

In an action of debt, for 5l. against the husband and wife, the plaintiff declares that the wife dum sola fuit ought him 40s. and that the husband ought to rest upon accompt. And judgment upon that was arrested; for the wife shall not be sued for the debt of her husband.

TRASSELL AGAINST MORRIS.

In the argument of Trassell and Morris's case, the case of the weaver of Newberry upon by a by-law there made was vouch'd, and of Sawyer against Wilkinson S. brought an ox-hide to Leadenhall in London to sell it, and W. distreyns it, damage feasant, and justifies as servant to the maior, to which that place appertained for the incorporation. Adjudg'd that the distress is not lawfull, for it was brought there to be sold pro bono publico, for goods brought to a market and exposed to sale shall not be distreyn'd. And the case of the University of Oxford was vouch'd upon a by-law: that if any scholar was indicted he should be tryed per medietatem scholarium. ve. 2 R. 3. 11. a Clerk of a Court tryed per medietatem clericorum.

SPENCERS CASE.

It was said by Hutton, that by the civill law the parishioner ought to give notice to the parson when the tythes are set forth. But it was adjudged, that the common law doth not so oblige a man.

YELVERTON AGAINST YELVERTON.

Hill. 35. l. rot. 272.

A man covenants that the assurance of all his lands which he shall purchase afterward, shall be to the use of A. his son in tayl, and that he and his heirs and all, &c. will stand seised to the use of his son in tayl.

First, It was moved that when the covenanter after by bargain and sale purchaseth other lands, if that purchase upon the assurance of that shall be to the uses mentioned in the former deed. And adjudged not, because the second limitation of the use upon the purchase is exprest to be, to the use of the bargainee and his heirs; and by that the first declaration is controld, and an use cannot be derived out of an use, and also because the feoffor ought to declare the uses, and not the feoffee. As by Popham; If a man purchase lands, and upon the livery, to him made, he declares that it shall be to the use of I. S. that shall be void, because none but the donor can limit the uses. But now a feoffment to A. to enfeoff B. to the use of C. and B. is enfeoff't without limitation of any use: yet it shall be to the use of C. So A. covenants with B. that if he purchases lands before Michaelmas, that he will levy a fine of that land to the use of I. S. now if he purchase land and levies a fine to him without expressing any [20] use, or without a consideration; notwithstanding that the law sayes, that that shall be to the use of the conusor, yet with an averment, it shall be taken to be to the use mentioned in the first covenant. But if another use had been express'd in the fine, that should have controlled the first declaration of the use.

2. A. covenants to stand seis'd of all lands which he shall purchase, clearly, as he purchased the same, &c. yet no use shall be raised by that covenant, because at the time of the covenant made, he had not any authority or disposition in the land, &c. Fenner. Lessee for life covenants, after Mich. to stand seis'd to the use of I. S. and his heirs in fee, before Mich. he purchases the reversion; no use shall be rais'd as to the fee, because he had nothing in the fee at the time of the covenant making. So tenant for life, and he in reversion levy a fine, and both declare several uses; it shall enure according to their several interests. So A. covenants to stand seis'd of the land of I. S. to the use of B. that is void, and so shall be, although he purchase it afterwards.

PELL AGAINST TOWERS.

Pell brought a replevin against Towers, and others, who justifie the taking as bayliffs to the Lord Greevill, for an amerciament at the court baron of one that was tenant of the mannor, for three several defaults: the first 2s. the second 20s. the third 40s. Yelverton takes exception to the avowrye.

1. First, for that he pleads that Sir Foulk Greevill had a mannor, and he, &c. and he had us'd time out of mind, &c. to keep a court baron, and so prescribes to have a court baron, the which is incident to every mannor of common right, &c.

2. For that that he prescribes to distrain for an amerciament in any place within the mannor, although that it be out of the tenancy of him that hath offended. Walmesly took another exception, which is:

He prescribes to have a court baron, and to hold it before his steward, which is not good, but it shall be held before the sutors, for the steward is not Judge. All the three justices agreed to the first exception, for a man shall not prescribe in that, which the law of common right gives. Anderson by the way observed, that the amerciament was grievous, which should be secundum quantitatem delicti, and if it be otherwise, a writ de moderata misericordia lyes. Walmesly to the other point said, sometimes pleas are held before the sutors and the bayliffs and lord. But that is as I intend upon this difference: when a plea is held per breve it is coram Ballivo & sectatoribus, but when without a writ it is coram sectatoribus only; and in a court baron of common right pleas shall be held to the value of 40s. and to more by prescription, and then it is a Court of Record, and if there be error it shall be redrest by a writ of error, and not by a writ of false judgment.

2. As to the second exception taken by Yelverton, it was disallowed by Walmesly; for there is a difference between a distress for services and a distress for amerciaments, for not doing the services: for the first is by common right maintainable, the second against common right by prescription. And then for such amerciaments you must distrain the tenants own beasts, and not the beasts of a stranger found upon the land, as for services you may. And the reason of that as I conceive is, for that it is for a personal crime. And moreover he said you may add any thing to a court baron by prescription; as to sell goods taken in execution upon a judgment. Affirm'd now here, whereas otherwise it hath been held that you could not. And the rule of the Court was, that [21] if better cause were not shewn to the contrary, judgement should be entred for the plaintiff.

BATEMAN AGAINST THE HUNDRED OF

An action upon the Statute of Hue & Cry.

Stanton Bateman brought an action against the Hundred of in the county of Glouc. upon the Statute of Hue and Cry, and upon the general issue pleaded, it was found by the verdict that he was robb'd, and that he took his oath before Mr. Seamer, a justice of peace, that he did not know the parties: and because the jury did not find moreover, that the oath was that he did not know the parties which robbed him, nor any of them, according to the letter of the statute, it was moved that the plaintiff should not recover. Walmsly was of opinion that it is well enough found, and sufficient; for an oath shall be taken simply, and they need not observe that precise form as in pleading they ought. Warberton for the defendant, and because that the oath is not precise according to the statute, it may be he swore in that manner upon subtilty; for upon such an uncertain deposition a man cannot be impeacht of perjury. Kingsmill likewise said, that upon that default the action may well fail. Anderson of the same opinion, for that the statute is the ground of the action, the which ought to be observed. Walmsly said, when he shewed that two men did rob him, and that he did not know them, that amounts to as much by common intendment, that he did not know any of them, then if it amounts to as much, it is sufficient enough. Anders. If it be of the same sense, see the statute, but that it self denotes a difference between the cases, for it prescribes that he ought to shew, that he did not know them, or any of them. Walm. That's only proper where there were three or more that robb'd him but where there are but two, it is not apt nor proper speaking to say them, or any of them, but, or either of them. And in this case it may be it was the cunning of the justice that examined him, who peradventure lived within the same hundred that should be charged, to ease himself and his neighbours. But if the oath was in another manner, and that can be proved, although the justice certifies in another manner, yet the proof shall be allowed. To which Kingsmill agreed, and the Court urged the defendants to give to the plaintiff 40s. and so to make an end, which motion both parties agreed to.

BANDALS CASE.

In Judicial acts the Sheriff cannot make a Deputy.

Bandal brought a writ of dower against her son, to be endowed of certain lands, which her husband father of the tenant dyed seized of; the writ issued to the sheriff to enquire of the damages, and the sheriff makes a warrant to one Wallis to take the enquest. Anderson and Walmsly were of opinion that the law was not so, as that he can make a deputy in that case, because it is a judicial act, the which the sheriff ought to do in person, and differs from that where they serve prosess as a servant.

An action of debt was brought upon an obligation, the condition of which was to perform all covenants comprised within certain indentures bearing even date with the obligation (and in truth the obligation and the indenture were both without date). The Court said, that they ought to have averred a date of the obligation, and averred also that the indentures bore the same date with the obligation.

[22] SIR JOHN PASCAL AGAINST CLARK.

Intr. T. 15 Jac. C. B. rot. 2051.

It was said by the Court upon evidence, that if the patron present one to the advowson, having taken an obligation of the presentee, that he shall resign when the obligee will after three months warning, that that is simony within the 21 Eliz. cap. 16.

HARRISON AGAINST MASSAM.

In dower of lands in three villages Allens case was cited 14 Jac. Com. Pleas, that a summons and proclamation at the church of one of them is good; and that the summons must be 14 days before the return of the writ. But in the case between Gray and Rowland, that want of a summons in dower is not error, but that otherwise no grand cape shall be awarded by the statute 31 Eliz. cap. 3.

SPARK AGAINST RICHARDS.

Tr. 15 Jac. C. B. rot. 1968.

The sheriff upon a levari fac. levies 100l. and before the return, the plaintiff receives the money, and made a release to the sheriff, and he returns that he hath levied an hundred pounds. It was said by the Court that an action of debt upon such a return lyes against the sheriff. But in our case, he was discharged by pleading of the said release. And so it was adjudged in London and in the Common Pleas. A. delivers money to B. to pay it to C. for the debt of A. A. himself afterwards payd the debt, and afterwards B. pays the money to C. And it was rul'd, that an action of debt lies against C. for the last money, for the last payment was upon a tacit. condit. if the debt was not payd before, ve. 1 E. 5. 2. a.

PARKINSON AGAINST POWEL.

The plaintiff in an action upon the case brought in the county of Middlesex declares, that he had recovered against one A. in an action of debt, and had a cap. ut legat. and that he had delivered it to the defendant being sheriff, &c. and that the defendant was often in the company of the said A. after, within his baylywick, and that yet he had return'd non est inventus. Judgement was given for the plaintiff, and that the action is well brought in Middlesex where the Common Bench is, notwithstanding that the ground of the offence was in Denbigh. [7 rep. 1. a.]

STONE AGAINST ROBERTS.

M. 15 Jac. C. B. rot. 635.

An action upon the case was brought for words, Thou art a witch and an inchanter; by the Court, the action does not lye, but otherwise it had been if he had added, and hast bewitched I. S. &c. although that I. S. be not dead. For by that the defendant manifested his intent to be of such witchcraft which is punishable by 32 H. 8. ca. 8. 1 Jac. 12. See the case between Edwards and his wife against Osely. Thou art a witch, and I'le prove thee to be a witch, adjudged actionable. [H. 4 Jac.]

FORTESCUE AGAINST JONES.

Lord and tenant by fealty and rent, the tenant at the day tenders the rent upon the land, and afterwards the lord at another day demands it, and destreyns, and adjudged good, and recovers damages in the [23] avowry; for the rent was a thing in demand and not in render, as homage, there, that if the lord one time refused he should not distreyn untill he had demanded it of the person of the tenant, 21 E. 4. 7. 17 E. 44. and other books were cited, where a tender is not requisite but to save the penalty. 16 H. 7. 14. 22 H. 6. 26. 17 Dyer, 29 Plowd. 3. 70. 21 H. 6. A distress judged to be tortious, by a tender at the same time the distress taken. A distress it self is a sufficient demand. 7. rep. 28.

JENKINS AGAINST JENKINS.

In an action of waste for cutting of trees the defendant justifies, &c. that they were to make a fence with pale. And by Hubbards, that it was good without shewing that the fence was made of pale, &c. and now in decay. Note, where hedge-boot, or pale-boot are granted to be taken reasonably, and where certain loads or trees are granted annually for that purpose, here it is not necessary to shew that the fence is in decay. And note, that for fire-boot it is not necessary at the time of the cutting to shew the necessity, and so for reparation. For it is reason and good husbandry to cut them in some convenient time beforehand. And note the difference, because that which is allowed certainly at some years may not be sufficient.

ARCHBOLD AGAINST COOK.

MICH. 15 Jac. 1. R. rot. 556.

In a recordari fac. loquel. the case was thus; A. leases for years to B. but yet A. continues the possession, and afterwards A. levies a fine with proclamations, &c. It was said by Warberton, Winch, and Hutton, that that is no barr to the lessee for his term, but only as a grant of a reversion by A. See the record it self, and the difference between that case and 5. rep. 123. T. 2 Jac. C. B. Mills against Bradley. That a copy-hold estate is not barred by fine and 5 years, and that the lessee for years in futuro is not barred by such a fine, but otherwise of a lessee in possession.

WATERER AGAINST FREEMAN.

Freeman had recovered in debt against Waterer, and had a fieri fac. and the sheriff takes the goods, and returns, that he could not have buyers, &c. and that yet F. knowing that, hath sued another fieri fac. and F. upon that brought an action upon the case, and the better opinion was that it was well, although that F. had sued it in course. The 2 R. 3. 9. was urged to the contrary. But note, there it does not appear whether the suit was determined or not, & res adhuc sub. judice. ve. 5 E. 4. 126. 4. rep. 18. and in the Kings Bench, M. 43. 44 Eliz.

BREY AGAINST PARTRIDGE.

By his deed compounds for tithes, and after sues for them in the Spiritual Court, by Popham and Gawdy, that an action upon the case lies. See 8 E. 4. 13. M. 4 Jac. The Lady Waterhouse was sued for the tithes of trees, whereof none were due, &c. there an action upon the case does not lye, for the person may well be ignorant of what things are due, otherwise where he sues against his own knowledge. Sharplees case in the Exchequer was vouched. A. having recovered in debt against B. in the Common Bench, and knowing that B. was resident in Middlesex, causes him to be out-lawed in London, by proclamations there: and adjudged an acti-[24]-on on the case lies. But at that time the first case was adjourned.

RECORD AGAINST CORNELIUS JOBSON.

Serjeant Harris argued, that a recognisance taken in the Court of Admiralty to stand to the order of the Court is void, and that it hath been so adjudged. Warberton, that it is not a Court of Record.

MONTAGUE AGAINST CLARK.

An administrator is sued in the Spiritual Court to make an accompt, and a prohibition was denied, but otherwise if it had been to make a division of the goods.

STEWARD AGAINST BISHOP.

It was ruled in the Court, that an action upon the case does not lye, for saying, S. was in Warwick Goal for stealing of horses, because 'tis not an express affirmation, that he had stolen horses.

Crawley against Kingsmill.

Lord and tenant, the lord avows the distress for fealty due from D. the tenant said that D. was dead at the day of the taking the distress: by the Court a good plea. But by Hubbard, If the lord demand the fealty of D. and he refuses and dies, yet the lord may distreyn after his death for it.

Note, by the course of the Common-Bench, that a man might have a dedimus potestatem pro guardiano admittendo, where the infant is sick and feeble.

Tooks Case.

A. had issue three sons, B. C. and D. B. and C. die leaving issue, and then A. dies intestate, having bona notabilia: the Commissary of the Superiour Ordinary commits the administration to D. and D. is bound to him to makel awful administration. D. is sued in the Spiritual Court to make a division to the issue of B. and C. D. appeals to the delegates who make a division: and now D. moves a prohibition. Hubbard was clearly of opinion that the delegates have exceeded their commission and authority, for the Ordinary himself cannot do so. For the statute 21 H. 8. makes an administrator equal to an executor; and if the delegates do to the contrary, a prohibition lies. Also they are not interpreters of a statute. And that statute 21 H. 8. that takes away the power of the Ordinary to dispose the goods of the intestate, and the Ordinary now hath only power left to revoke the administration. Also such distribution of the Ordinary is not a good plea in an action of debt, &c. brought against the administrator at common-law. Now by the Court a prohibition was granted, and that by 21 H. 8. an administration shall not be committed to the grand children, if any son of the party of the intestate be alive: note P. 16 Jac. C. B. Lanch against Rosse in a sute in the Spiritual Court to make a division of the goods against an administrator, a prohibition was granted: but otherwise for to render an account.

[25] Winchcombe against Pulleston.

A. seised of a mannor with an advowson appendant: S. comes to A. and promises that if he would present him, &c. after the death of the now incumbent, he would give him 70l. to which he agreed. And upon that it was agreed between them that the next avoidance shall be granted to B. &c. the incumbent dies, B. presents S. who continues incumbent from 27 Eliz. until 7 King James. Then A. grants the mannor cum pertinent. to Winchcombe in fee. S. the incumbent dies, 7 Jac. and the King presents Pulleston by the title of simony, and Winchcombe brought a quare impedit, and adjudged that it doth not lie, in which case 2 points were resolved.

1. That that is simony. (1) Because there was a corrupt contract for the advowson: note, that in the stat. 31 Eliz. there is no word of simony, for by that meanes then the common-law would have been judge, what should have been simony and what not. (2) Although that the prochein avoidance might be bought and sold bona fide, without simony, yet it was so granted to B. to perform the corrupt contract, 2 Jac. was vouch't, that if the father purchased the prochein avoidance, and presents his son after the death of the incumbent, that is not simony, and that it was accordingly judged in 42 and 43 Eliz. It was Smith and Shelbornes case. But by Hubbard, that if in the grant of the prochein avoidance it appears that it was to the intent to present his son or his kinsman, and it was done accordingly, that is simony. In the 7 Jac. in the Exchequer Calvert against Parkinson, the cozen of C. being clark, comes to the grantee of the prochein avoydance, and promises him twenty pound, and twenty pound per annum if he will present C. to the church quando, &c. C. (not knowing any thing of the contract) is presented accordingly: that is simony a fortiore in our case, where S. himself who was to be presented, was party to the first motion of the contract for presentation.

2. It was resolved, that the death of the simonaical incumbent does not hinder but that the King may well present, for the church was never full as to the King, and that turn is preserved to the King by force of the statute. Yet it seems that the church is so full that an estranger may not present for usurpation, for it is not like 7 Rep. 28. where the King is to present by lapse. And there were many cases put, as that the church may be full or void in effect when there is a simonaical incumbent. Hubbard said that if A. be obliged to present B. &c. and he presents by simony, yet the obligation is forfeited; and he put this case, that if the executor pays a debt upon an usurious contract, that is a devastavit if the executor had notice of the usury. And so likewise, that the rightful patron may have a quare impedit after the six months against the incumbent of an usurper, that is in by simony. And by the Court, to say the church was full for six months is no plea, when he is in by simony. Warberton and Hutton cited Doctor Hutchinsons case 10 Eliz. Parson prefers his bill for tithes, the parishioner pleads that he was presented by corruption, &c. and by simony, and a prohibition was granted notwithstanding that the parson pleaded pardon of the simony by the King, and it seemed that it was now triable by the common-law. Note, 7 H. 7. 37. and M. 40. and 41 Eliz. Gregory against Ouldham. In debt upon an obligation to perform certain covenants, which in truth were upon simonaical contracts, and the plaintiff recovered, for it was said that that obligation is colateral, and the law does not at all look upon or take notice of the simony, eo nomine, for it is not once named in the statute, but only corrupt giving, &c.

[26] SMITH AGAINST STAFFORD.

H. 15 Jac. C. B. rot. 906.

In an assumpsit the case was thus, A. promises to his wife that if she would marry he would leave her worth 100l. they intermarry, &c. And now Serjeant Altham moved in arrest of judgement, because the assumpsit is a personal thing, and extinguisht by their intermarriage. But judgment ready to be given for the plaintiff it was compounded in Court. And note the reason why the intermarriage did not extinguish that promise and assumpsit, because it was to have its essence upon the contingency (viz.) that if the wife survived, for it was not a certain promise for any duty, nor in esse during the coverture, and for that it could not be suspended nor extinguished by the intermarriage. But by Warberton Justice, that if A. be bound to a feme sole to pay to her 100l. after his death, and after marries her, the obligation is extinguished, which the Court granted. And the case of Belcher against Hudson in H. 6. Eliz. B. R. rot. 132. was cited. A. said to a feme sole, Marry my friend W. and if you over-live him I will give you 100l. they intermarry, and the husband releases to A. all demands, and dyes, the wife brings an assumpsit or an action of debt upon that, and adjudged that she shall not be barred by that release. Serjeant Altham said that the reason of that case was because during the life of the husband it was not a thing in demand; but it might well be released by apt and special words, although that it was to take effect by contingency in futuro. And so Justice Winch also thought.

SENDALL AGAINST SENDALL.

In an action of trespass, and a new assignment made, &c. the issue is found for the plaintiff, and the writ of enquiry of damages was general without any mention of the new assignment. And yet 'twas ruled by the Court, that judgment shall be entred for the plaintiff, although that the clarkes say in ordinary course 'tis otherwise; and with that judgement agreed the case of Pullen and Eason H. 43 Eliz. B. R. rot. 941. for the new assignment is not the declaration of the certainty of account.

FORD AGAINST MEAD.

M. 15 Jac. C. B. rot. 725.

A. recovers the arrearages of rent against B. at a nisi prius: but before the day in bank A. releases to B. all demands: by Hubbard, that if it had been in the case of the King, the defendant at the day of bank might have pleaded that, for he cannot have an audita querela against the King. But otherwise in case of a common person.

Note, that it was allowed for a principal challenge, that the defendant was indebted to the juror, sed quære in E. 5. if it been't è converso.

It was said by the Court, that in pleading of a lease for years, a man need not say, by force of which he entred, &c. 11. rep. 52. of a lease for life 8. rep. 82. b. yet note, if there been't a difference when the lease is to commence in futuro. Dyer, 189. a.

[27] COOPER AGAINST ILES.

The baily of a liberty makes an execution of a scire fac. within his liberty, and takes his fee by the statute of 28 Eliz. and the sheriff of the county takes also his fee; and that it hath been so used in that place. But by the Court it is not good; but that the baily ought to have his fee only, for see P. 1 Jac. B. R. rot. 445. Gardner against Harrison, where the escape was brought against the baily of the franchise ve. Dyer 278.

PIGG AGAINST CALEY.

H. 15 Jac. C. B. rot. 1966.

P. brought an action of trespass against C. for taking his horse, &c. C. said that he is seized of the mannor of D. to which P. is a villein regardant. And that he and all those, &c. have been seized of the plaintiff and his ancestors; the plaintiff said, that he is free, &c. absque hoc, that the defendant, &c. were seized of the plaintiff, &c. as of villein regardant, and the issue is found for the plaintiff. And upon motion in arrest of judgment it is ruled that the traverse is well taken. Note, Dyer 283. accordingly. And by Hubbard if a man hath not seisin of a villein in grosse within 6 years, he shall be barred by 32 H. 8. of limitation, in nativo habendo, for liberty is favoured; but yet of a villein regardant, the seisin of the mannor to whom, &c. is sufficient seisin of the villein.

Note, it was said by Hubbard Chief Justice, and Winch, but Warberton was of the contrary; that if a man hath a license of forestalling upon the 5 E. 6. he need but only recite the statute 5 E. 6. in his pleadings, without pleading 13 Eliz. for the licence is grounded only upon 5 E. 6. and the 13 Eliz. only qualifies the person.

Note, that in the argument of a case at Bar, Leonards case P. 28 Eliz. was voucht. Lessor for years grants to the lessee by parol to enfeoff, grant, bargain, sell and confirm to the lessee, in fee, with a letter of attorney in the same deed to make livery and seisin; the need was delivered to the lessee, but no livery and seisin was made. And adjudged that the reversion does not pass: for the intent of the lessor appears to passe that by livery and seisin. ve. Dyer 269. 145.

COX AGAINST DAWSON.

H. 13 Jac. C. B. rot. 519.

Copyholder for life becomes lunatick, and A. his cozen sowes his land after the lord grants the custody of the lunatick to B. A. takes the corn to the use of the lunatick, and B. brought an action of trover and conversion in his own name. It was said by the Court, that it was ill brought, for he ought to have brought it in the name of the lunatick.

2. The second opinion of the Court was, that as this case stood, neither the lord nor the committee have any thing to do to meddle with the corn, for this reason, and Mr. Brownl. said it had been lately adjudged in this Court, that a quare impedit ought to have been brought in the name of the lunatick. ve. Dyer 302.

[28] FORD AGAINST WEEDHAM.

M. 15 Jac. C. B. rot. 725.

In an action of trespasse the plaintiff makes this title to himself, that I. S. was seized of that land, &c. and being so seized, &c. 10th. of February, &c. was attainted of felony before A. B. C. and D. commissioners, by force of a commission awarded to them and others, and upon the motion in arrest of judgment, it was rul'd by the Court, that it was not well pleaded, for there it was (as it is pleaded) a joint authority to all the names in the commission. But if he had pleaded that I. S. was attainted by force of a commission awarded to A. B. and others, that had been good, by Hubbard and Winch.

The surmise was to have a prohibition, that the inhabitants of D. of which he is an inhabitant, have paid un. mod. decimand. &c. And they were at issue, and he proved only that he himself had paid it, and yet well. And no consultation; for every particular is included in the general and proved by it. And it appears sufficient matter for a prohibition, and to oust a Spiritual Court of their conusance.

2. Agreed that where the statute appoints proof of the surmise to be by two, it is sufficient if two affirm that they have known it to be so, or that the common fame is so.

SPARROW AGAINST NORFOLK.

B. administrator of A. makes C. his executor and dies, C. is sued in the Spiritual Court to make an account of the goods of A. the first intestate: and C. now moves for a prohibition, and had it, for an executor shall not be compelled to an account. Note the statute 21 H. 8. gives power to the Ordinary but not for accompts; but an administrator shall be compelled to accompt before the Ordinary.

COOPERS CASE.

The sheriff makes an execution of an 100l. 46s. 8d. and now moves that he shall have but 6d. per pound for his fee, according to the stat. 28 Eliz. which gives 6d. in the pound for all above 100l. yet because the 8d. is so little above 100l. the Court awarded that he shall have 3l. 6s. 8d. for his fee.

GREEN AGAINST DINKENSON.

M. 16 Jac. C. B. rot. 541.

It was said by all the protonotaries, that the defendant in account, upon the first writ, shall not be held to put in bayle to the action, yet in special cases by the discretion of the Court, he shall find bayl, and so there are presidents.

Upon a surmise by a parishioner, that he had compounded with the parson for his tithes for one year, and it may be without deed; by Brownlowe that a prohibition shall be awarded, and that there are divers presidents in this Court. But otherwise if it be for more years, 'tis not good without deed.

[29] RENNINGTON AGAINST COLE.

H. 15 Jac. C. B. rot. 362.

Upon evidence admitted by the Court to be a good custome, that an executor or administrator shall have a year in the land of a copyholder against the wife that claims her frankbanck, or durante viduitate. The principal case as it was argued in T. 16 Jac. was copyholder for life (where there is a custome that the wife shall hold durante viduitate) takes A. to wife (being daughter of the sister of the father of the said copyholder) Co. Litt. 235. that it is not a cause of divorce. They have issue, the husband dyes; the wife prays to be admitted to the copyhold, the lord refuses, the wife enters, and the lord ousts her, she re-enters, and leases for a year, and that lessee being ousted brought an ejectione firm. And adjudged that it well lies.

1. Although, that marriage be within the Levitical decrees, yet it is a marriage de facto, and only avoidable by divorce, that now after the death of the husband it cannot be done, for by that the issue shall be bastardized; and that if the wife had been inheritrix, &c. the husband should have been tenant by the courtesie. 7. H. 4. was voucht. A gift in tail to the brother and sister are several estates. And by Hubbard that it ought to appear in the very deed of the gift, that it is brother and sister otherwise it is a joynt tayl, and the issue shall inherit and hold a formedon. 8. rep. 87. 17 E. 3. 51. 18 E. 3. 39. 9 H. 6. 39. 22 E. 4. 18 E. 4. 29.

2. That that lease of the wife where such a custome is good before admittance, especially as our case is (1.) Because she had pray'd to be admitted, and no default is assign'd to be in the wife. (2.) Because in that case no fine is due to the lord, and so no prejudice to the lord. For in that case it was said by the Court, there needs no admittance. For by Hubbard that estate durante viduitate, is but a branch of the estate of the husband, and the admission of the husband suffices for the estate of the wife, and the estate of the husband was big with the estate of the wife, which was to be brought forth by the death of the husband. And that case is more strange which is the case of an heir of coppyholder, which ought to pay a fine for admittance, and yet before admittance he may bring an action of trespass.

BRAND AGAINST TODD.

Note the difference agreed by the Court. If the King grants to A. all the wasts in D. after an ad quod damnum return'd, and that the waste conteins 120 acres, yet if it contain 300 acres, all pass: for the grant is general, and the ad quod damnum was to enquire of the damages, and not for the quantity of the waste. But if the King grants 120 acres of his waste in D. and the ad quod damnum returns, that it is not to his damage, and that the waste contains 300 acres, there nothing passes, for it is uncertain which 120 acres were intended, and the party shall not have any election against the King. All which was agreed upon evidence to the jury.

LORD RICH AGAINST MAKEPEACE.

Lessee for years, the trees being excepted, as liberty to take the shrewes and loppings for fireboot; if he cut any tree it shall be as well for the loppings as for the body of the tree. By Hubbard and the whole Court, without question.

[30] LISTER AGAINST CRAMEEL.

In a quare impedit, the incumbent pleads, that before the action brought he had been in by the space of 6 months, &c. of the presentment of S. S. in the church. This difference was taken by Serjeant Henden, and agreed by the Court. When the incumbent pleads the presentment of a stranger, there he ought to shew, that the stranger had a title, and that he was seized of the advowson, &c. or that he was seized of a mannor, to which, &c. But where he pleads that he was in for 6 months of the presentment of the plaintiff himself, or by collation, by lapse by the Ordinary, there he need not make any title, 10 E. 4. 11.

COLE AGAINST FOXMAN.

[See Robertson v. Hartopp, 1889, 43 Ch. D. 516.]

In an action upon the case by a commoner against I. S. for charging of the common, see 9 rep. 112. The point was, A. seized of 5 acres, and of a common appurtenant to them, aliens one acre, if the common be extinct, for part or in the whole. And by the Court it is not extinct, for any part, but it shall be apportioned, and no prejudice to the terre-tenant. And Hubbard Chief Justice, who gave the rule said, the sole reason is, that otherwise a grand inconvenience and mischief would ensue. For by that all commons in England shall be extinct, and salus populi est summa lex, & apices juris non sunt jura. And the great dispute in that case was, for the certainty what shall be said to be cattle levant and couchant. And Serjeant Attee said, that Cook, Chief Justice in his circuit in Norff. said, that so many of the cattle that the land, to which the common is appurtenant, may maintain in the winter, so many shall be said levant and couchant. To which Warberton and Hutton agreed.

SKINNERS CASE.

A surmise to have a prohibition, if it be prov'd before one of the Judges, within the six months, although that it be not recorded till after the six months, yet tis well enough. And so rul'd by the Court. And good also, although that the proof be in the vacation. P. 43 Eliz. B. R. Pottinger against Johnson.

WOLFE AGAINST HAYTON.

A. makes B. his executor and dies, and in an action of debt against C. as executor of an executor, C. pleads that he had renounced the executorship of B. and it now being mov'd at Court, it was rul'd, that he ought to be executor to both or none. For by Hubbard, quod lex conjunxit nemo separet.

PINDER AGAINST SPENCER.

Parson prefers his bill for tithes of hasle, holly, willow, white-thorn, &c. a prohibition was moved, because they were of 21 years growth, and more. And by the common custome in Hampsh. they were us'd for timber to build and repair their plowes, and cited P. 14 Jac. C. B. rot. 1918. Cufflyes case against the parson, for holly, willows and maple, and a prohibition was awarded. And Hubbard said, in Cumberland beech was used for timber, and the use of the country, for scarcity of other trees will alter the case.

[31] Doctor Bridgmans Case.

The parson libells for tithes of hay, &c. The parson said that the custome of the parish hath been, that he that hath corn within the parish ought to reap the corn, and also the tithes of the parson, and to make them into cocks, and to preserve them untill the parson shall carry them away. And a prohibition was granted; for although that the parishioners ought de jure, to reap the corn as it was agreed T. 28 Eliz. B. R. yet he is not bound to guard the tithes of the parson, &c. but if the parson does not carry them away in convenient time an action on the case lies against him. P. 20 Jac. B. R. rot. 286. there such an action was brought by Wiseman against the Rector of Landen in Essex for not accepting, &c. of the tithes of cheese.

Livesly against Glasbrook.

Intr. P. 16 Jac. C. B. rot. 2313.

By Hubbard Chief Justice, and Warberton. that if the parties are at issue upon not guiltie in battery; as that case was that the defendant relict. verification. cannot confess the action without consent of the plaintiff, for although it be intended to be for his benefit, yet he ought to pay for the entry of the confession, and perhaps too the record is made ready for the tryall, at a nisi prius. But Winch and Hutton to the contrary. For the intent of the law is to punish the guilty; and when the action is confess'd the plaintiff may have judgment, and it shall be as beneficial to him, as if he had had judgment upon a verdict. But Winch agreed that at a nisi prius the defendant cannot confess the action. By Hubbard that it is the practice to this day. And Warberton said, that when an action is brought for a thing certain, as debt, &c. there the defendant may confesse without the assent of the plaintiff; but otherwise, if it be for a thing uncertain, as trespass for battery. Walter the prothonotary said, that before now such a confession was refused, because the record was seal'd, and that such a confession was accepted in the Kings Bench; but yet it was rul'd that the confession shall not be accepted because it appears to be a grand battery, and misdemeanour. [8 rep. 59, 60.]

Butt's Case.

Moore Serjeant mov'd at Court for a prohibition, because where the custome of the village was, that the parishioners have used to elect two churchwardens; and at the end of the year, to discharge one, and elect another in his room: and so alternis vicibus, &c. by the new canon now the parson hath the election of one, and the parish of the other. And that he that was elected by the parishioners, was discharged by the Ordinary at his visitation. And for that he praid a prohibition & allocat. as a thing usual and of course. For otherwise, (by Hubbard) the parson might have all the authority of his church and parish.

Sir Henry Lindeleves Case.

It was said by the Court, that a man needs not have a writ of allowance upon pardon for treason but otherwise of felony, ve. 7 E. 3. 248. 3 Assize 15. Note, that he comes in without process.

[32] BASSET AGAINST BAYNARD.

Intr. P. 48 Eliz. B. R. rot. 483. 8 E. 3. 55.

A. sells one hundred load of wood, of his trees, to B. to be taken at the assignment of the bargainor, and after A. sells one hundred load to C. to be taken at his pleasure; B. assigns his interest to D. the vendor assigns, &c. C. takes them away, and D. recover'd in an action of trover.

GRAY AGAINST CHAMPEINE.

G. recovers by verdict, in an ejectione firm. and it was moved in arrest of judgment, that the Court was of a lease of ten acres of land, by the name of all his lands and tenements in Shoram in Kent, and judgment was stayed, because there is no place where the ten acres of land are: and that after the per nomen it is not sufficient. ve. Tr. 33 Eliz. B. R. Sewters case; upon a grand debate the indictment was held insufficient, because no place is put, untill after the al. dict. &c.

Note, in the argument of a case, Tr. 38 Eliz. B. R. rot. 236. Leeds against Crompton was vouch'd, the Lord Stafford leases land to three, provided that they nor any of them shall alien the premises without licence of the lessor; he licences one of them to alien his part, and after the other two alien without licence. And the entry of the lessor is there adjudged not lawfull, because the condition was intire. 4 H. 7. 9. the very case is there put. Sed quære if they had made partition by consent before that licence. [4 rep. 120.]

SPARK AGAINST SPARK. T. 43 ELIZ.

Intr. 43 Eliz. B. R. rot. 503.

Lessee for years assigns a part, &c. rendring rent, and dies, and his executor for the rent arrear after the death of the testator brought an action of debt, in the detinet only. That it was well brought. ve. 19 H. 8. 8. 11 H. 6. 36. 20 H. 6. 4.

A parson brought an action of debt upon the statute of 2 E. 6. cap. 13. against Spurr, for that that he had not divided the tithes according to the statute; afterwards the plaintiff after appearance is non-suted. If he shall have costs by the statute, 23 H. 8. cap. 15. was the question. Upon that statute it seem'd to King and Walmsley (being only present,) to be clear, that it was out of these words in the statute (viz.) or any action, bill, or plaint of debt or covenant, upon any specialty made to the plaintiff or plaintiffs. For that there ought to be upon a contract, to which the plaintiff was party. But the doubt depended upon the subsequent (scil:) or any statute for any offence or wrong personal immediate supposed to be done to the plaintiff or plaintiffs, &c. Walmsly. The statute of 23 H. 8. will, that if any action be brought upon any statute for any offence or wrong, &c. and also the action is not brought for the offence but for debt which is not any offence, then 'tis out of the words of the statute. King. But the action of the debt is by reason of the offence. Walm. The debt is the penalty for the offence, and the penalty upon that are several distinct things. Sed adjournatur.

[33] Wilkins against The Maior of Lincoln.

Wilkins a baker of the City of Lincoln, brought an action of trespass against the maior of the same city, for taking certain loaves of bread. The defendant said the City of Lincoln est antiqua civitas, &c. and that the custome is, and that it hath been within the same city, time out of, &c. that if any baker within the same city, bake any bread, and offer to sell it within the same city, and that the maior for the time being, hath used to weigh it, and if it be found not weight, that then he hath us'd to distribute it to the poor of the same city. And shew'd how that he was maior, &c. and upon that it was demurr'd.

Gibbons against White.

Gibbons brought an action of debt against White upon an obligation, in which White was oblig'd to G. being sheriff, by the name of sheriff, upon condition to appear personally before the Justices of the Bench such a day. The defendant pleads the statute, &c. And the statute is that the condition of the obligation should be, that he appear at a day, and not that he appear personally at a day, and upon that it was demurred.

Bradford against Lassels.

In an ejectione firm. the case was thus. A man seised in fee conveys his land to the use of himself for life, and to his daughters that shall be unmarried at the time of his death, untill every one of them shall and may levy 500l. First, unto the eldest daughter untill she hath levyed 500l. then to the second, so to the third, &c. The father dies, the sonne enters and continues possession for a certain time, and will not suffer the eldest sister to take the profits: if she may now enter and take the profits untill she hath levyed 500l. or if there shall be a defalcation for the time that the sonne continued possession, was the question. Walmsly seem'd that she shall have her remedy against the sonne, for the time that he hath continued possession; and not to begin now to levy the 500l. in prejudice of the other sisters. For it was her folly to suffer the sonne to continue possession.

Dotting against Ford.

Dottin brought an action on the case against Ford for these words, Thou art a beggerly knave, and a bankrupt, and art not able to shew thy face, and it was mov'd by Serjeant Herle in arrest of judgment, that the action will not lye, if he doth not allege in his declaration, that he was a merchant at the same time. Walmsly said, If a man calls an officer or a justice of peace a briber, he ought to allege that he was an officer at the time when the words were spoken. But here it was proved by divers circumstances conteined in the declaration, that he was a merchant at the same time, although that it be not expresly shewed. King: It may be that a man may merchandize at that time, and yet if such words were spoken to him, an action upon the case shall not be mainteyn'd; as if he be an apprentice to a merchant, and although that he merchandizes for another man, during his apprentiship, yet such words are not to his discredit, when hee's out of his time; and a mer-[34]-chant for himself. And now a man may exercise merchandizing, and after relinquish it for a time, and afterwards exercise again: if a man calls such a man bankrupt, an action upon the case lies. Herle. If a merchant relinquish his trade to live in the country in the nature of a gentleman or of a farmer; if a man calls such a man bankrupt, an action upon the case does not lie; but if afterwards he exercises that again, and then is called bankrupt, an action upon the case lies. And so he held the diversity.

A man cannot traverse that which is not alleg'd.

An action of debt was brought upon an obligation bearing date the 10th day of June, anno 29 Eliz. and delivered the 18th day of the same moneth, in the same year. The defendant pleaded that he made the said deed the said 10th day of June, and then delivered it, at which time he was within age, and that he did not come to full age until the 27 day of the same moneth, absque hoc quod deliveravit, &c. after which he came to full age. And it was mov'd by Harris, that the plea was not good, because that that is a traverse, to that which is not alleg'd (scil.) the full age; but only if it were delivered the 18 day or not, that was only traversable. Warberton, The plea is good enough; for the day of the delivery is not material, but if at the same time he was within age, or of full age; and it may be the defendant did not come to full age of a moneth after the 18 day. Wherefore for us to be bound to a day certain would be inconvenient. And upon that vouch'd 8 H. 6. 6. where the confirmation of patron and Ordinary, which bore date before the grant of the parson, was pleaded, prim. deliberat. 4. days after the grant of the parson; and the defendant pleaded that it was delivered the day that it bore date. Absque hoc that it was delivered after the grant; by which, &c. Walms. That the said book is expresse in the point. And so 14 H. 8. 17. Wheelers case. So all the matter is, if he was within age or at full age at the time. Anderson, You may by protestation. That it was delivered the 18 day, absque hoc that he was of full age at the time. And to that the Court agreed. Wherefore it was so pleaded.

WILDE AGAINST COOKEMAN.

In an action upon the case for slander, in hæc verba, thou wast forsworn in the leet at Beaston, the leet of such a one, &c. held 14 Apr. The defendant said, that the plaintiff being sworn before the steward of a leet to make presentments, &c. with another, and they present, that such a ditch not being scowr'd, ad nocumentum, &c. which was false, and so he justified: adjudg'd for the plaintiff. For their the justification is, that the plaintiff made a false presentment, in saying that such a ditch was not scowr'd, and does not say that the ditch being infra jurisdictionem Curiæ Letæ, &c. and then a false presentment of a thing out of the jurisdiction of the Court is not perjury.

2. The justification conteins only a false presentment made by the plaintiff, which may be true, and yet no perjury committed. For it may be that evidence was given to the presentors, sufficient to induce them to find it. But if the justification had been that they, ex notitia illorum propria, made the presentment, then otherwise. Gaudee and Fenner. It shall be so intended. Popham on the contrary. For perjury is an odious thing, and the justification of that shall not be taken by intendment. But note, the principle case of judgment was upon the first reason.

[35] PERKINS AGAINST WILDE.

M. 31, 32 Eliz.

Parson makes a lease for years of parcel of his gleab land, of the value of 13l. per annum, rendring 13s. rent. Adjudged that the lessee shall pay the tenths to the lessor, notwithstanding his own lease, and the reservation of the rent; but there otherwise it had been, if it had been a rack rent to the value of the land. Sed quære of that diversity.

BLADWELL AGAINST EDWARDS.

A rem. limitted to a bastard.

B. makes a feoffment to the use of himself for life, after to the use of such issue or issues, of the body of Mary Floyd, from eldest to eldest, as were reputed to be gotten by the said Bladwell, whether he be lawful or unlawful. And in that case by all but Popham, that that is a good remainder limited to a bastard. For a son in reputation suffices to make him a purchaser, as 'twas held 14 Eliz. Dy. 313. And although that in 22 of Eliz. it is held that a man cannot by way of covenant raise an use to his bastard, yet by way of limitation of an use upon a feoffment 'tis otherwise. And although Littleton says, that a bastard est nullius filius.

1. First, that is only as to the inheriting any man.

2. That is intended, that he had not any father, but without question he had a mother, and so shall be term'd in law, the issue of his mother: and the law does not regard, if the issue be lawful or not in a purchase.

3. A bastard est filius nullius patris in law, but in reputation otherwise it may be. As the case was also noted by Cook. If A. had issue 3 sons, and the eldest is a bastard, and a remainder also is limitted to the eldest issue of A. the second son that is a mulier shall take, and not the bastard. For in general words the construction shall be in digniori sensu; but if the words are special, as in this case, otherwise it is, for modus & conventio vincunt legem. And he cited Plowden, who often sayes, that a woman may give lands in frank marriage with her bastard.

HOLMAN AGAINST COLLINS.

M. 37, 38 Eliz. rot. 2171.

Error was brought upon a judgement given in the Court of Plymouth in Devon.

1. For that the stile of the Court was Curia Dominæ Reg. tent. cor. Majore de Plymouth, without saying, secundum consuet. Villæ. And that was held error; for he that is the Judge of the Court, ought to be by patent or prescription. And because that the Court there hath been held time out of mind, &c. the omitting of those words secund. consuet. was error.

2. The second error was, because that no day was prefixed to the defendant that he should appear, but generally, ad proximam Curiam. And for all that, it was alledged that the Court was held there every Monday, and so enough certainty: yet that also was held error; and so upon both the first judgement was reversed.

MERCER AGAINST SPARKS.

Hill. 38 Eliz. rot. 948. C. B.

In an action upon the case for slander, and upon that error was brought. Because it was not exprest in the declaration, quod malitiose dixit those words. And adjudged that that is no error. For the words them-[36]-selves are malicious and slanderous, so judgement affirm'd.

KIRTON AGAINST WILLIAMS AND OTHERS.

T. 38 Eliz. rot. 623.

In an appeal of mayme against 3. The one pleads null. teil in rerum natura, and pleads further quoad feloniam guilty. The other pleads misnosmer, and quoad feloniam not guilty. The 3 pleads not guilty. The plaintiff demurs upon the pleas of the two first: and adjudged clearly that the plea is naught. For although a man be charg'd with felony, yet that is in favorem vitæ; but in that appeal of maym, being but a trespass without any jeopardy of life, as 40 Ass. 9. 40. 41 E. 3. the reason is given, and so it shall be otherwise.

ADAMS AGAINST DIXIE.

Consideration to raise an assumpsit.

B. being arrested for debt at the suit of A. puts in R. his special bayl, after judgement was given against B. and for that, that B. neither paid the debt, nor rendred himself, A. brought a scire fac against R. R. hearing of that comes to A. and said, that in consideration that A. would assign over the debt of B. to him, and deliver to him the obligation of B. that he would pay the debt. A. promised to assign the debt, R. pays the money; and because that A. would not assign the debt, he brought his action against him, and maintainably, and that the consideration was good. Yet it was said by the other party, that by the judgement and default of B. it became the debt of R. and then when R. pays it, which he ought by the law, that will not amount to raise a consideration. Ass. 9. E. 4. 19. delivery of his proper evidences is not a satisfaction for the trespass. Sed non allocatur.

BROWN AGAINST MICHEL.

Tr. 37 Eliz. rot. 661. C. B.

An action upon the case for these words, Mr. Brown hath delivered untruths upon his oath in answer to I. S. Bill in the Chancery. And adjudged for the plaintiff. But by a writ of error in the Kings Bench the judgment was reversed, and that the words are not actionable, because that he did not say he delivered untruths in matter of substance, and in Chancery there are many frivilous discourses in matter of form.

It was adjudged, that as an executor may release a debt, so he may give an obligation, which is the instrument of the debt. So two joynt lessees of a tearm by indenture, and the one gives the indenture to a stranger and dies; all the entire tearm survives to the other, yet he shall not have an action for the indenture.

LOYD AGAINST TWYFORD.

Intr. M. 42, 43 Eliz. B. R. rot. 528.

Judgement was given in debt in the Common Bench upon a non sum informatus, and error was brought and moved for error.

1. Because there is no imparlance.

2. Because the entry was quod defendit, vim & injuriam; when it is not usual that such a judgement shall be given upon a non sum informatus. Yet notwithstanding that judgement was affirmed. And likewise P. 43 Eliz. B. R. rot. 592. Essex against Meredith.

[37] HICKMAN'S CASE.

Intr. 41 Eliz. B. R. rot. Coron. 5.

In a quo warranto he claimes to have toll in specie of grain exposed to sale, whether they be sold or not, ratione manerii. Adjudg'd to be ill, because it ought to have been ratione mercati. Also he cannot have toll if the thing be sold. Dyer, 227, 228.

Note, 20 H. 7. The party hath no remedy for his toll if the goods be carried out of his jurisdiction. ve. 30 E. 3. 20. that a distress is incident to every toll. But in the case of Northampton adjudged that toll is not incident to a market, if it be not specially granted. Also he cannot have toll in kind, (viz.) part of the thing it self. 30 E. 3. 15. Br. 299. and Avowrye 129. But note, 6 H. 6. 46. stalage may be claimed by reason of the soyle.

CAUTWELL AGAINST CHURCH.

Intr. H. 42 Eliz. B. R. rot. 437.

A commoner brought an action upon the case for stopping of his way to the common. And upon a writ of error it is affirm'd to be well brought, although he might have had an assize, also perhaps a meer stranger had done it, and not the terre-tenant; also perhaps he that did the wrong is dead, and for that no ass. And Mich. term ensuing, judgement was affirm'd for the plaintiff. In the first action. See Dyer 250. 22 H. 6. 15. 21 H. 7. 30. 33 H. 6. 26.

BRAY AGAINST PATRIDGE.

B. brought an action upon the case; that P. sued for tithes, and recovered, because there was nisi testis singularis to prove the payment, when in truth he had paid it before two, but now one was dead. And by the Court that an action does not lie, because the cause was meerly spiritual. And for that it differs from 8 E. 4. 13. For there the composition was a temporal contract, although it was for tithes.

WRIGHT AGAINST WHEATLEY.

An ejectione firm. was brought de pomario, and well, for it need not be demanded by the name of a garden, as a precipe ought to be. For an ejectione firm. lies de domo, but the precipe shall be pro mess. And by Poph. that the 18 Eliz. an ejectione firm. was brought de pomario, and well brought, and so it was now adjudg'd, ve. 11. rep. 55. a.

Note, by Poph. that the six moneths upon the Statute of Usury shall be accounted half a year, according to the almanack, and not according to 28 days in the month, which none gainsaid.

DEAN AND CHAPTER OF ROCHESTER AGAINST THE BISHOP OF ROCHESTER.

In an annuity, the Court was, that he was seis'd of it in his demeasn, as of fee. And adjudged well enough, and the records directly agree in it H. 19 H. 6. rot. 403. M. 12 H. 8 rot. 836. H. 30 H. 8, rot. 451. It was so adjudg'd upon a demurrer, and that the plaintiff had judgement. And the case in Dy. 65. is the same, and H. 19 Eliz. was vouch'd. Counstable against Yaron. The plaintiff counts of a grant of an annuity in tayle, virtute cujus, he was seized of it in dominico suo, ut de feodo talliato, and well enough, although that the annuity be not within W. 2. and by Cook, that an annuity is not within 32 H. 8 of Limitation. Poph. That see, if it be by original grant of an annuity, but if it be by [38] grant of a rent-charge, &c. that is within the statute. To which opinion Popham, Gaudy and Fenner agreed; and in our case seisin was alleadg'd to be within 60 years.

Beechers Case.

B. was in execution in the Fleet for 12000l. at the suit of Sir Thomas Shirley and one Swey, and being there he had the liberty of the garden and to play at bowls; and upon motion for the creditors, it was ordered by the Court that he should be in strict custody in his chamber. Then Beecher sues a habeas corpus to be brought to the Court, and there prayed, that for dispatching of some necessaries, and to procure speedy payment, that he might have a habeas corpus to be brought to the Chamber of some of the justices to discourse with his creditors; but it was denied by the Court, for he cannot have habeas corpus to any place, but to the Court when the party is in execution, and if the warden of the Fleet so do, it shall be an escape. And it was said by Popham, which none denied, that if the party be confin'd to his chamber by order of Court, and the warden of the Fleet suffer him to have the liberty of the house, that that shal be an escape, and yet it was said that such liberty is granted to the Fleet-prisoners (paying a fine for it) to have that liberty under the Great Seal and Patent. Yet at that time there was not allow'd such liberty to Beecher.

Allwaters against Bird.

A. makes a feoffment to four to certain uses, with power of revocation, upon tender of three shillings for a reasonable cause to be shewed by him, and to be approved of by them; one of them dies: and adjudg'd in an ejectione firm. that a tender to the survivors and their approbation, is not sufficient to revoke &c. For that approbation was a thing of consent, which cannot survive, &c. ve. Dyer 189. But by Popham, Otherwise it had been if the feoffor had limited tender only to be made to two.

Bene against Tricket.

Intr. T. 43 Eliz. B. R.

The point of the case was, if the value of the church for plurality, by 21 H. 8. shall be eight pound, according to the book of rates and valuation in the first fruits office, or according to the very value of the church per annum. Atkinson. That according to the value of the Kings books. For the Parliament never thought that any man could live upon so little as eight pound per annum, which is not six pence a day. Note, 38 E. 3. 4. and Dyer 237. But by the Court, that it shall be according to the very value of the church in yearly value in the statute of 21 H. 8. And by Gawdy and Fenner, to whom agreed Yelverton; that the eight pound shall be accounted according to the very value of the church, per annum.

Coolston against Carre.

An assumpit was brought, and it was moved that the Court was ill in this, that the plaintiff said, that the defendant assum'd to pay, &c. without saying to whom, &c. Crook, That in one Withals case against Jones, in an assumpsit, the plaintiff counted that the defendant in consideration &c. super se assumpsit fol. without saying to whom, &c. and yet adjudg'd [39] good. But Stephens argued to the contrary said, that, that case put by Crook was, that the defendant assumpsit et fidel. promisit to the plaintiff solvere 20s. without saying to whom, &c. But in our case no assumpsit or promise is alleged to be made to the plaintiff or any other; and yet judgement was now given for the plaintiff. Note 9 H. 635. 45 Dy. 15. 2 E. 4. 20. 14 E. 4. 2. 3 E. 4. 11.

Carter against Codd.

Carter had recovered against Codd in debt, who was also committed to the Fleet for contempt, by the Lord Keeper. Carter sues a habeas corpus to the warden of the Fleet to have Codd in Court, to the intent to charge him with the judgement; but after the delivery of the habeas corpus, and before the return of it, Codd was discharged of the contempt by the Lord Keeper; and the warden returns the matter with a corpus parat. habeo, and brings him to the Court. Carter prays that Codd may be kept in execution for him, Codd prays that he may not; for the Lord Keeper may commit by his word without a writ, and so he may discharge the party, 14 H. 6. 8. But Codd would not confess that he was the same party against whom the judgement in debt was had. Note, 22 H. 6. 23. And the plaintiff had not day in Court to take the issue upon that. ve. 33 H. 6. 56. 38 H. 6. 1. Outlary. 43. 1 E. 4. 2. And also the Court would not give him his oath if he was the same person or not. But yet it was pray'd by Carter, because that he alledged in Court, that he was the same person against whom he had recovered, and that he was now in Court: that he should answer to a declaration in an action of debt upon that judgement. And that the justices granted: and ordered that Codd should put in special bayl to answer the action. And for not doing that he was committed to the marshall, and the warden of the Fleet discharged of him.

Bolls against Lassels.

Intr. H. 42 Eliz. B. R. rot. 1107.

The sheriff arrests A. upon a latit. and returns a cepi, having taken sureties for his appearance, the party does not appear, and upon that process issued to bring in the party; and upon that the sheriff returns languidus, &c. where in truth A. was at large, and yet it was held a good return, although that no such return was ever seen before: and although also that he might have returned, that he had let him at large upon bayle; for otherwise a mischief would come to the sheriff, for he is compellable to pay him. And if the party does not appear, the sheriff shall be amerced, and he himself shall be relieved upon his bond: and no action upon the case against him upon that return. And upon that the justices intended to enter quod querens nihil capiat per bill, and will. Note P. 43 Eliz. B. R. rot. 374. Spencers. An action upon the case as also, because after a cepi returned and to the habeas corpus, the sheriff returns languidus, where in truth the party was at large without bayle, and judgement was given for the plaintiff. But otherwise, if the sheriff had let him at large upon bayle; and so judgement was given. H. 44 Eliz. B. R.

Blakebone and Hall against Browne.

Intr. 43 Eliz. B. R. rot. 1073.

In an action of debt upon an obligation, the defendant pleads the Statute 23 H. 8. cap. of Oblig. to the sheriff, and alleadg'd that A. and B. his sureties had not sufficient in that county, &c. and so the obligation [40] void. Hubbard, and adjudg'd, that the obligation is good, for that clause was for the security and indemnity of the sheriff, the which if he will he may waive. And it differs from the case of 2 H. 6. upon W. 2. for there the pledges are for the benefit of the party. And that it hath been so adjudged. M. 42, 43 Eliz. C. B. rot. 607. Clifton against Webb, where one of the sureties was insufficient. And Gawdy deny'd Plowd. 67. and said that it hath been adjudg'd to the contrary, that an obligation with one surety is good enough. And Kempe Secondary also remembred that. But Godfrey of counsel on the contrary said, that it was adjudg'd in Burr and Appletons case, that the plaintiff in the first sute may have an action upon the case against the sheriff if he does not take sufficient security. Which case was not denied. And by Gawdy, that a bond without any surety is good enough between the sheriff and the obligor. And by Fenner, that it hath been so adjudg'd. Poph. was absent, but judgement for the plaintiff.

WOODROSSE AGAINST MICHELL.

Intr. H. 41 Eliz. B. R. 449.

Error upon a judgement in line. The error assign'd was apud Cur. tent. coram Rico. Elimston Maiore, et A. B. C. D. ad num. d 2 capital. burg. vill. prædict. and the plaintiff entred, and the parties at issue, and for the tryal of it diverse of the burgesses aforenamed were return'd for jurors, and found for the plaintiff. And the defendant now assignes that for error, and adjudg'd to be error, for they cannot be Judges and jurors. And although that there might be other burgesses of the same name, yet by the pleading of, in nullo est errat, the party had confest that they were the same persons. And judgement was revers'd.

BROOKS CASE.

Godfrey moves for a prohibition, and surmises that the parishioners had compounded with the parson for the tithes; but yet the due tithes were sever'd, and exposed, and the parson takes and carries them away, the parishioner meets him and takes them from him. And upon that the parson sues in the Spiritual Court. And a prohibition was awarded.

WALDE AGAINST LAMBERT.

Intr. 10, 43 Eliz. B. R. rot. 279.

WALREND AGAINST WINROLL.

Wal. sues Win. in an action of battery in London. Win. removes it by habeas corp. to the Kings Bench; and the term after prays an imparlance, and before the end of the term prays the priviledge of the Exchequer, the puisne baron comes cum lib. rubro, and shews that Win. is escheator, and so an accomptant to the King, and at length priviledge was allow'd.

[41] BARNES AGAINST WORLEDGE.

M. 43, 44 Eliz. rot. 548.

B. brought an audita querela upon the Statute of Usury, and that he had borrowed 100l. of W. for a year, and that it was agreed between them, that he should pay 5l. after 6 moneths, and the other 5l. after the year, and verdict was given for the plaintiff, and now mov'd in arrest of judgement, that that is usury, and that the plaintiff himself had declared that he had not cause of action. And by Cook that it hath been so adjudg'd upon an information in the Exchequer; and Fuller Reader upon the Statute of Usury at the Bar, was of the same opinion. But by Poph. if the party had retein'd 5l. of 100l. at the time of the leave, or that that 5l. was to have been paid before the 6 moneths, that clearly had been usury. The better opinion now, that the principal case was not usury. Et adjournatur.

The Churchwardens of Denfords Case.

P. 4 Eliz.

Denford was an ancient church in the county of Northampton, and the churchwardens sue the inhabitants of Kingstead in the same parish, where there was a chapel of ease, for contribution to repair the church of Denf. And they pray a prohibition upon suggestion that time out of, &c. they have used to repair their own chapel; and only a part of the wall of the church-yard of the said church of Denf. And it seem'd by the better opinions of the Court that it was not good. For their ease shall not be a disease to the rest of the parishioners. For Poph. said, that the assent is not requisite to build a chapel of ease, and then the Ordinary and the parson cannot charge the parishioners with greater charge. By Yelvert. that the parson ought to repair the wall of the churchyard. But by Fenner. The parishioners in the Spiritual Court shall be compelled to do it, although that the franck-tenement be in the parson. Yelver. objected, and by Kempe Secondary, that the parishioners of repaired the wall of the church-yard. Yet now it was ordered that a prohibition shall be granted, and the defendants if they please may demurr upon it. Note also B. 5 Jac. B. R. a Darbyshire case, where a prohibition in such case was denyed.

Reeve against Martin and Cooper.

Intr. P. 43 Eliz. B. R. rot. 152. 4 rep. 13. 8 rep. 63.

Upon evidence in an ejectione firm. it was agreed by the Court, that a grant of a copyhold by an infant is good, for the copyholder is in by the custome, and shall bind the infant; as a presentation by an infant to the church is good.

Cox against Carpen, Elye, and his Wife.

A trover against husband and wife, for a conversion by the wife, dum sola &c. They appear and plead non sunt inde culpabiles, and the issue is found for the plaintiff, and now mov'd in arrest of judgement; that the issue was not good, for it ought to have been, that the wife ne fuit culp. And so was the opinion of the Court. And so also of trespass by the wife; because it is a personal wrong. But otherwise in debt, for that shall be against them in the debent &c. and the issue non debent, &c. ve. rep. 52. 34 H. 6. 19.

[42] Markhams Case.

I. S. was convicted in the Starchamber, upon the statute of the 5 Eliz. for forging of a grant of a rent-charge, issuing out of divers houses of Sir Thomas Gresham in London for one hundred years. And thereupon had his ears cut off, and his nostrils clipt. And after he forg'd a deed of feoffment to B. and C. to certain uses; and was now arraing'd, as felon for that and hang'd, being found guilty of the second forgery by the jury. And Cook said, that it was agreed by the justices, upon the first conviction in the Starchamber, that forgery of a rent-charge or of a lease for years is within the statute; but forgery of an assignment of a rent-charge in esse, or of a lease for years is not within the statute; for that does not charge the inheritance of any.

F. brought debt against M. upon a simple contract. M. wages his law, and at the day he was demanded and did not come; upon which, the roll was marked that he had fail'd of his law, by Kemp Secondary, and costs assest. But afterwards sedente Curia, it was mooved and prayed that he might be demanded again, and it was granted, and then he made his law.

Baspole against Long.

A copyhold was surrendred to the use of A. for life, the remainder to B. in fee, into the hands of customary tenant in the presence of two others; and that the custom of that mannor was, that if at the next court after such a surrender, it be to be surrendred, proclamation was to be made, that if any claime, &c. to be admitted that he should come and he should be heard: and if none came, then two proclamations were to be made, and if none came before the third proclamation made and ended, that then it should be a bar to him and his heirs, to whose use such a surrender was made: and that in our case A. did not come before the three proclamations, &c. Whereupon the lord grants it to another. And it was held by the Court, that in our case he in the remainder is not barr'd after the death of A. for B. in the remainder cannot come and claym to be admitted presently; but the lord shall hold it during the life of A. And a case was vouch'd and agreed. T. 29 Eliz. rot. 413. Rastall against Lane. A custom was that waste shall be a forfeiture of the copyhold. And there adjudg'd, that waste by the lessee for life, shall not forfeit the remainder in fee, but during the life of the lessee for life only. Also a custome shall be taken strict: and judgment was given accordingly. Note, it was adjudg'd P. 3 Jac. C. B. Whitton against Savage, that such a custome, (ut supra) shall not bind he that is over seas when such a surrender is made, or when the copyhold descends.

Stephen against Carter.

Stephen brought an action of trespass against C. for divers things. As to part the defendant said, that it was in default of inclosure by the plaintiff, and as to the residue not guilty, and issue upon that joyn'd. But before the tryal, the plaintiff confest the barr and non prosequi ulteri. us entred, and after the issue is found for the plaintiff, and well. For the defendant had relinquisht that part without benefit of the barr: and for that had pleaded not guilty. So by Popham. If it had been for a tres-[43]-pass in two several acres, and the defendant justifies in one, and as to the other pleads not guilty; the plaintiff may confess part and have issue and verdict for the other. And judgement in our case for the plaintiff.

Payne against Ferrall.

A. devises his land to B. for twenty-one years to commence at Michaelmas next after his death, the remainder to F. in fee. A. dies, B. enters at Michaelmas, the tearm expires. If he in the remainder shall take. Denne, that the remainder is good: and it cannot be compared to an estate that passes by an act executed. ve. 1. rep. 64. A devise from and after my death, good. 18 Eliz. That a devise for years, remainder to the said heirs of I. S. in fee is good, and that was not denied, if I. S. dyed during the term. And the reason, as to me it seemed: because the frank-tenement in the mean time, is in the heir of the devisor, and not in abeyance. And judgment ordered to be given accordingly.

Purrel against Bishop.

Upon evidence it was agreed, that if a lease for years be made to A. and delivered to B. to the use of A. and B. enters to the use of A. if B. be ejected, A. may have an ejectione firm.

Collins against Phillips.

In an action of debt upon an obligation, dated 25 of September, the defendant pleads, that a capias ad satisfac. was awarded against B. who was taken upon it 30 Septem. And that that obligation was made for the enlargement of B. The plaintiff demur'd upon that, and had judgement: because it appears that the obligation was made before the arrest, and for that it could not be avoided by 23 H. 6. cap. But he ought to have pleaded that with a prim. deliber. after the arrest. And it was agreed by Yelverton and Fenner, that if a cap. be awarded, against B. and before the arrest the sheriff takes an obligation of him for his enlargement when he shall be arrested: that by special pleading may be avoided by 23 H. 6.

Oliver Saint John against Bawdrip.

The case was thus, W. Bawdrip the grandfather dies seised, Thomas Bawdrip the father of the defendant at age. Thomas makes the defendant his executor and dies. The Lord Saint John as executor of an executor, brought an action of debt for relief against the defendant, being executor, &c. And well. ve. 20. H. 7. 1. Yelverton said that the doing of the fealty is a contract for the relief and services. Fenner doubted it, & adjournatur Dy. 24. 240. 39 H. 6. 31. 7 H. 6. 13. 11 H. 6. 15. And the case was moved again at another time, and then it was agreed by the Court.

1. That an executor may have an action of debt for relief by the common law without fealty, 32 H. 8. and that seisin of the services need not be alleadged when the executor brings debt for relief, otherwise when the party himself avows.

2. That debt may be brought for that in a forraign country, and the defendant cannot plead nihil debet; for relief is made certain by the statute of Magna Charta cap. 2.

[44] 3. That debt well lies against an executor for relief; the testator could not wage his law for that, because 'tis certain and a real duty: and it is not like to 41 Ass. 15. that an escape does not lie against an executor, for that is grounded upon a personal wrong in the testator. Also that action is expresly given by the stat. against a gaoler, and shall not extend to an executor. Also in the case of relief. There was a real contract in the creation of the tenure. Poph. said, that in debt, for relief, the plaintiff ought to shew the tenure in special, and by what part of a knights fee the tenure: that the Court may judge what is due for relief. But in a writ of ward, there if it be a tenure by any part, it is sufficient for the plaintiff to have ward. And judgement was given for the Lord St. John. And after error was brought, but the judgement was affirmed. Note, upon the tryal in this case, that the mannor of Odamsfee in the parish of Penmarke in Gl. is held of the Lord St. John by service of chivalry as of his mannor of Pen. by homage, fealty, and escuage of 40s. cum acciderit to 2s. and to him, &c. and by the rent of 6s. 8. &c. and suit of Court.

Andrews against Cromwell.

Intr. P. 43 Eliz. B. R. rot. 358. & the sc. fac. T. 43 Eliz. B. R. rot. 649.

A writ of error was brought upon a recovery in an ass. And amongst other things this was assign'd for error; because the writ of error was directed to the Chief Justice of the C. B. Because error in processu, nec non in red. judicii of an assize of novel disseisin, arraigned before the Justices of Assize. In recordo quod coram vobis resident. without shewing by whom the judgement was given, neither how it came into the Common Bench; and yet by Tanfield that it is good. By all the justices that the writ is ill. ve. Dyer 76. 18 H. 6. Where it was before special commissioners that had not a clark of assize.

Webb against Petts.

W. sues P. in the Spiritual Court for not setting out the tithes of two acres, P. prays a prohibition, because he had set out the tithes of one acre in specie, and that a party unknown had taken them; and for the other he suggests a modus decimandi for 2s. 6d. and upon that, issue is joyned, and the witnesses said, that for a long time, as they heard say, the occupiers of that farm: whereof that acre, &c. had used to pay annually to the parson 3s. for all tythes, and agreed by the Court.

1. As for the first, quod prohib. stet. For after the tithes are severed if any stranger takes them away, the parson hath his remedy against him at common law, and shall not sue the parishioner in the Spiritual Court.

2. It was agreed, that a proof (by hear-say) was good enough to maintain the surmise within the statute 2 E. 6. But as to the other acre Poph. held, that the modus decimandi is not well proved. But Fenner and Yelverton on the contrary; for by that appears, that the parson is not to have tithes in specie, and for that had not any cause to sue for them in the Spiritual Court.

CROMPTON AGAINST SMITH.

Error upon judgement in the village of Ludlow. Debt was brought in simul computav. and counts of many particulars, that amounted to 3d. more than he had demanded; and that was held error; but be-[45]-cause it was of so small a thing, afterwards the Court propounded a composition, to which the parties agreed. Note Dy. 55. and the difference; for there the declaration and judgement were good, and the casting up of that after, is the act of the clark. Note also 7 H. 6. 26. For there the lessor may have debt severally, for the several arrearages of every year, if he please, and for that he need not shew how he was satisfied of the arrearages of the other year.

HARVEY AGAINST THE KEEPER OF A PARK.

The indictment was held ill by Fenner and Yelverton, being only in Court, because the value of the cross bow was not put into the indictment, according to the statute. Also the stroke was supposed to be done at D. whereof the party instanter obiit, at S. which is impossible. And so apud D. interfecit. And upon that the process upon the indictment was staid.

ELWIN AGAINST MOUNTFORD.

Intr. T. 42 Eli. B. R. rot. 679.

M. had recovered against E. by default in the Kings Bench, 42 Eliz. and error was assign'd, because there was not any bayl put that term, and then there was not any appearance, and that being so certified, the judgment was presently reversed. See the like case 38, 39 Eliz. Holman against Collins. B. R.

COLSTON AGAINST ROSSE AND LEVET.

Intr. T. 42 Eliz. B. R.

Debt upon an escape against the defendants, as Sheriffs of the City of York. And counts upon a judgment given in that Court there, for the plaintiff, upon an obligation made by one R. Layten; without shewing, that it was made within the jurisdiction of that Court. Yet judgement was given for the plaintiff.

STEPHENS AGAINST TOTTY AND HIS WIFE.

Intr. P. 44 Eliz. B. R. rot. 342.

A prohibition prayd, upon a suggestion, that he was sued by them in the Spiritual Court, for a legacy to the wife: where he pleads a release to the husband. They appear, and the wife said, that she sued a divorce, a mensa & thoro, for adultery of the husband before that he made that release. Yet it seems to the Court, that that release binds the wife: for that does not dissolve the marriage a vinculo matrimonii. Note 26 H. 6. 7. But after arguments by the civilians, Poph. said that a consultation shal be granted (so they in the Spiritual Court admit that plea). And Dr. Cromton said, that then it is clear that the wife there shall recover.

GASCOIGNE AGAINST LONGVILL.

At Serjeants Inne, in Justice Pophams Chamber, by Popham and Anderson Chief Just. Pepper Surveyor, and Hesket Attourney of the Court of Wards, upon a case there depending, office was found that one Haslewood was seized in fee of lands die quo obiit, and that he held them of the King in capite. It was agreed by them to be good enough, without finding of the very dying seized, for so it shall be intended. Note, that the writ diem clausit extremum is, die quo obiit F. N. B. 252. So also in a writ of assize of mor. daucester, die quo obiit idem. 195, 196. [46] Die quo itr. &c. And that there are many presidents accordingly; who find the dying seiz'd. Sed abundans cautela non nocet. And agreed accordingly, note 1 H. 7. 24. a.

At the same time and day, being Wednesday, post octab. Trinit. Bacon. of Grays-Inne put this question. A. leases for life to B. upon condition that if he pays 10l. at Michaelmas to the lessor, that he shall have the same to him in tail, the remainder to I. D. in fee. The 10l. is not paid; if now he in the remainder shall have the fee, or if the contingent and accrewer extend as well to the fee, as to the estate tayl, or if the fee vests presently. Poph. That is a noote point. Anderson. You will not be able to prove that by any book of law. But if you were to read, it is a good point for you.

PENNISTONS CASE.

At the same time it was also resolved by the justices, that if tenant in tail bargains and sells, and the bargainee levies a fine with proclamations, and 5 years pass: and after tenant in tayle dyes, that the issue shall have 5 years after his death to make claim, for his title is saved by the statute; for the tenant in tail himself could not have claim'd it against his bargain and sale.

MOORTON AGAINST BRIGGS.

At that time the justices voucht this case. It was found by office, that A. dyed seized of 40 acres of land in D. whereof certain lands were held in capite, a melius inquir. was awarded.

At the same time also it was agreed by them, that if tenant in tail of lands in capite, grant his estate to A. and his heirs, and A. dies his heir within age, that he shall not be in ward. But by Poph. That if he had bargain'd and sold the land to A. and his heirs; the heirs of A. should have been in ward. But Anderson denied that.

SIR CLEMENT HEIGHAM AGAINST BEDENFIELD.

It was agreed by the two Chief Justices, and so also afterwards agreed, by all; that if tenant in tayl covenant to stand seis'd to his own use, for his life, the remainder to his son; and after he levies a fine to A. to other uses, that these last uses are good against the son. For when he had limited the use for his life, that was all that he might lawfully do, and it was no alteration of the estate of the covenanter; for his wife shall be endowed, 2 rep. 52. It is there so (verbatim) agreed, H. 38 Eliz. Stapletons case.

SALTER AGAINST BUTLER.

Intr. T. 44 Eliz. B. R. rot. 401.

In an action of trover, and conversion for 8 heifers, the defendant said, that a rent-charge of 16l. per annum, payable at four feasts was granted to B. his executors and assignes, during the life of D. and that he died intestate, and that F. took letters of administration, and that the defendant as servant to F. did distrein the said heifers for arrearages, &c. and put them in a pound overt, which is the convers. &c. And the plaintiff demurred, and agreed by the Court that the plea is not good; for he hath not confessed any convers. for in the pound the beasts [47] were in the custody of the law; and so it does not amount to a general issue, for the matter in law, it was resolved, that an administrator cannot be assignee to take that, because it was a frank tenement, and he cannot be an occupant of such a rent; but it passeth to the benefit of the terre-tenant. As Plow. 133. where a rent-charge passeth away by a condition broken. And by Winrell who argued for the plaintiff, that there shall be no occupancy of a coppyhold, but it shall be to the benefit of the lord. Note Dyer 294. a. and by Popham and Fenner, If a man hath granted a rent-charge to another for the life of I. S. the remainder to the right heirs of I. S. if the grantee dies living I. S. the rent shall pass to the benefit of the terre-tenant; but if I. S. dies living the auter vye, his heir shall have the rent after the death of the auter vye. Note that good case. And by all the justices; If in our case B. had assigned that rent, &c. the assignee should have had that during the life of D. And by Gawdy and Fenner, If the grantee had devised that rent, that the devisee should have had that rent during the auter vye. But in this Popham was on the contrary. For that is not devisable by the 32 H. 8. because it is not free; nor by the common law, because it is not a chattel. And in the principal case judgment was given to the plaintiff.

KING AGAINST HOBBS.

Intr. T. 44 Eliz. B. R. rot. 401.

In an assumpsit the case was thus. A cap. ad satisfac. at the suit of the plaintiff, was directed to the Sheriff of Wilts to take one Thomas Hobbs, and that the sheriff mandavit A. B. C. and D. quatuor Balivis & eor. cuilibet to take the said Thomas Hobbs: by virtue of which A. and B. takes the said Thomas Hobbs, and that Francis Hobbs in consideration of the discharge of the said Thomas assumed to the plaintiff, &c. And it was mov'd in arrest of judgement after verdict for the plaintiff, that the arrest by two of them, was not lawful. As 27 H. 6. 6. an obligation by three jointly and severally, two of them cannot be sued. So Dyer 62. And Fenner said, that he was in Shellyes case in the Chancery. A commission was awarded to eight, six, four, or two of them, and the commission was executed by three: and it was held void. Gawdy answered, that that was a judicial act. But in our case only ministerial, and an authority without any colour of interest. And for that it was well executed by two. But it was agreed by all, that the mandavit was good, without shewing it to be by deed. A case was cited of a prisoner discharged by paroll. Popham being absent, it was adjourned. And at another day it was moved again, and the judgement was staid. For the assumpsit was alledged to be apud Westport, and the visne was of Westport without F. Note for the first point. Litt. 181. hath the very case.

HYNDE AGAINST DEANE.

Intr. 43, 45 E. B. R. rot. 206.

Machin being seised of two mannors in Woodbury in the county of Cambridge, and Willousby in Middlesex, and of B. acre in Hackney; acknowledges a recognisance of 1100l. to Hynde, 31 Eliz. and after 34 Eliz. he acknowledges another recognizance of 2000 marks to Deane. Deane purchaseth Bl. acre, and the recognisance to D. is forfeited, and he sues execution in Cambridge and hath the mannor of Woodbury in execution. And afterwards the recognisance to Hynde is forfeited, and W. Hinde his administrator sues an elegit, and had the moyety of the mannor of Woodbury in execution, and well. And upon that Deane sues an audita querela in the Common Bench against Machin for a contribution of the [48] moyety of the mannor of Willousby in Middlesex, of which Machin was in possession. And there was judgement for the plaintiff, for a purchase of part of the land, &c. is no barr, to have contribution against the conusor himself. Pl. 2. b. Also it does not behoove the eldest conusee to have a scir. fac. against the youngest conusee, no more than against a feoffee; and the reason seems to me to be, because it appears upon record that his title is youngest. 9 E. 2. and 22 E. 3. 7. Yet the youngest conusee after the first is satisfied, shall re-have the land, ve 19 E. 3. Estr. defaits 171. Sciri fac. 12. And now upon error, it was order'd that judgement should be affirm'd.

Rooke against Sprat.

Upon evidence, it was said by the Court absente Poph. that if tenant in tail of a remainder in fee discontinue; and retakes an estate in fee, and devises it to his wife for life, the remainder to B. for years, the remainder in fee to him that had the remainder in fee before: and dies without issue, the wife enters and dies; he in the remainder is remitted and may enter upon the devisee for years, and will avoid the lease, although that his remainder be created by the same will. Note, 9 H. 6. 43. Remitter avoids a lease for years without entry 15 E. 4. 6.

Clements against Cassye.

A lease was made to try a title of a house, and the lessee enters into the house, and the wife of the said former lessee ousts him and farms the house: and after the husband came there, yet the ejectione firm. was brought against the husband only, and well. And the matter in law for the title was. A. seised of Bl. acre. and Wh. acre in fee, devises both to his wife for life, the remainder in B. acre to B. in fee. Item, I make my wife executrix of all my goods and lands. By the Court that does not give the fee of W. acre to the wife, for lands shall intend such land as she may have as executrix. But by Popham, otherwise it had been if he had said, I make my wife heir of all my lands.

Carey against Stephens.

An action of tran. quare vi. & armis was brought for casting wine upon his velvet, and well, although that he might have brought for that an action upon the case. ve. 12 H. 4. trespass for casting dung against his wall.

B. brought error upon a judgement given in the Court of Lynne. The case was B. had sold certain wines to A. and warranted them to be the best wines in England; when in truth they were corrupt and nought. And judgement was reversed, because he had not averr'd in that action, that there was better or as good wine in England.

Whartons Case.

Intr. T. 43 El. B. R. rot. 979.

The jurors acquitted him of murder, and found it man-slaughter, contrary to evident proof for the murder of one Herlakenden in Kent, by Wharton and three others. And the jurors were punish'd in this manner, three of the jurors that were principal leaders of the others, and also suspected to be corrupted by Whartons friends; were committed to pri-[49]-son, & to pay 20 marks a piece to the King for a fine, & to be bound to their good behaviour, and for the good behaviour of the prisoners acquitted by them: and to remain in prison for a year, and after that done to be delivered. Six other less suspitious were fined 10l. a piece, and to be bound in a recognizance for the good behaviour of the prisoners, and of the other 3 jurors before. And the last three because they much disagreed, and did not consent, until by long time and perswasion they were mislead by the others, contrary to their evidence, and because they had not so declared themselves, and pray'd advice of the Court before verdict given; they were committed to prison, and to pay 5l. a piece. And Poph. said there were presidents to that purpose. A. was found guilty, and enquiry of the goods were made: and because the jurors would not find the value of them, as it was plainly proved; they were awarded to prison, and fined to the King. Another president before the justices in eyre: The jurors acquitted a prisoner, contrary to their evidence; and for that they were fined and imprisoned, and bound for the good behaviour of the prisoner during his life. And to this day the Justices of the Kings Bench are the supream justices in eyre, and such an offence is not to be suffered. And the jurors were presently committed to the Marshalsey; and they were so punisht by the advice of all the justices.

MOYLE AGAINST EWER.

Upon evidence, it was moved by Cook, that an indenture of feofment and letter of atturney in it, is not good to a stranger to make livery. But otherwise of a deed poll; because in that 20 men may be made parties one after another, but in an indenture those between whom it is made, only are parties to it. But by the Court, that is good enough, and that it is a common case, and a common use. ve. Cook, Litt. 52, and note, Cook Entrys 192. a president to the contrary: other matter was mov'd. A. grants to B. medietat. manerii sui of C. and 8 rood of land in C. moreover all other lands and tenements in C. whether all the mannor of C. passes or not. Poph. that a moyety only passes. But Gawdy, Fenner and Yelverton were on the contrary, that all passed, and the jury found for the plaintiff accordingly.

HARTLAND AGAINST YATES.

By Poph. that is clear, that if an exigent be awarded against A. and after he is quint. exactus, and before the return of the exigent A. dies; yet the outlary shall stand in its force, and shall not be reversed; for judgement was by coroners upon the quint. exactus, and they may certifie the outlary. But otherwise if A. had died before the quint. exact. Which was not denyed.

JOHNSON AGAINST HERNE.

The plaintiff in an ejectione firm. was admitted to sue by guardian, because he was within age, and they are at issue, and at a nisi prius in the country; the justices assign him a new guardian, and it was found for the plaintiff; and that matter was now moved in arrest of judgment. And by the Court, absente Poph. that it was good, and that the justices at a nisi prius may asign a new guardian, and judgement for the plaintiff.

[50] H. 45 Eliz. B. R.

Heale moved, that an obligation may be delivered as an escrow to the party himself, upon condition to be his deed upon special delivery. But if afterwards it was delivered as a deed, and not by special words as an escrow: then the condition ought to enure, to make that no condition upon the matter that it was made at the beginning.

Poph. and Fenner agreed by a special delivery, Gawdy accordingly. Yelvert. only was on the contrary. And that all the cases in our books are put of such delivery to an estranger. Note, Dy. 34. 9. rep. 136. 137. And that difference reconciled all the books. Cook, Litt. 36. a.

WEBB AGAINST HINDE.

W. sues a replevin, H. removes it by a recordari into the Kings Bench; the plaintiff does no declare, and upon that a return awarded to H. and the sheriff upon that returns averia elongat. And then a withernam was awarded, and executed, and now comes the plaintiff and prays to declare, and prays a deliverance of the withernam. And it was testified to the Court by the clarks, that upon submission of the plaintiff to the fine for not declaring, and that imposed upon him by the Judges, he shall have deliverance of the withernam, and shall declare. And now a fine of 3s. 4d. was imposed upon the plaintiff, and then he declared, and had deliverance; note, the course of the Kings Bench is contrary to that of the Common-Bench.

CHANDFLOWER AGAINST WATERHOUSE AND PRESBYE.

Intr. M. 44, 45 Eliz. B. R. rot. 378.

Covenant was brought., that whereas C. had delivered to the testator of the defendant 70 hogsheads of copras upon condition to pay 170l. at a certain day, and if it be not paid, &c. that then it shall be lawful for the said C. peaceably and quietly habere, capere, &c. the said hogsheads. And said that the money was not paid, & quod non potuit pacificè & quietè habere, &c. Which was nought, because he had not counted: how he was disturbed at the taking of them. Note, 3 E. 2. LAWE AGAINST SANDERS.

Intr. P. 44 Eliz. B. R. rot. 54.

Declaration in an assumpsit was, S. complains against S. in the custody of the marshall, &c. that in consideration that the aforesaid S. would marry M. the daughter of S. super se assumpsit. And it was said to be ill: because he had not shewed who made the assumpsit, and declarations shall not be aided by intendments. This was mov'd in arrest of judgment, and it was staid.

Note that Poph. said, Upon the tryal of Wilburn for the death of Potter, that if two be fighting, and there are more looking on, who do not endeavour to part them; if one be kill'd, the lookers on may be indicted and fined to the King. Yelvert. concessit.

MUSKET AGAINST CORDALL.

Intr. T. 44 Eliz. B. R. rot. 422.

C. recovers in the Common Bench against Musket, being an attourney of that Court, and judgment upon a non sum informatus, & quod defend in misericord. And that was now moved for error, because the defendant is intended to be all times present in the Court. [51] But judgement affirm'd because he had imparel'd, and had defended vim & injuriam quando, &c.

Aynesworth against Battye.

Intr. H. 41 Eliz. B. R. rot. 1061.

I. S. devises to every of his younger sons B. C. D. and E. 20l. a piece, to be paid when they shall severally come to the age of 21 years, and devises his land to A. his eldest son, and his heirs: upon condition, that if he refuses to pay these legacies; that then that land shall remain to the younger sons, et, &c. A. pays the legacies to B. and C. and refuses to pay them to D. and E. D. enters into the land in his own right, and the right of E. upon the heir of A. in by discent. And it was resolved.

1. That the younger sons may enter upon the refusal, &c. by way of limitation.
2. Although that he had paid the legacies to two, yet their entry is also lawful.
3. That the descent doth not take away their entry.
4. That by the entry of D. in his right, and the right of E. the estate is invested in all 4, for they take joyntly, and the estate of the heir devests from him in all.

Gardener against Harrison.

G. had recovered against B. 100l. in the Common Bench, and had a cap. ad satis. and B. was enlarg'd, whereupon G. sues a cap. utlagat. against B. directed to the sheriff, quod non omittat. And the sheriff delivers it to Harrison being bayliff of the liberty of Stepney. That it appear'd to the Lord Wentworth, that had there the return of all writs, that H. the defendant had apprehended B. such a day at White Chapel, and had him in his custody, and that after he suffered him to escape. The defendant demurred upon that, because the writ was directed to the sheriff, and he himself ought to have executed it, and the arrest by the baily was not lawful, ve. 5. rep. 88. a. b. by which the party may have an action of debt upon an escape.

Farmer against Ward.

M. 37, 38 Eliz. C. B.

By Anderson and Walmsley, that voluntary waste is a forfeiture of the copyhold by the common law, but negligent waste not without a custome.

Burchier against Wiseman.

It was said by Anderson and Walmsley, that the ancient sheriff is not discharged till he hath deliver'd the county to the new sheriff, although that the patent be sealed. Dyer 355. And by them agreed, that if in the deputation of the under-sheriff, there be such a clause (that he shall not meddle with any execution above 20l.) that that is void as to the subjects; who are not bound to take notice of such private agreements and indentures; and it is void as to the under-sheriff himself, as it was adjudged H. 12 Jac. C. B. Sir Dan. Nothon against Gouldsmith, and by 22 Eliz. cap. And authority cannot be so apportioned. Dyer 175. 4. rep. 33.

[52] Harvey against Bateman.

That if a man assign an obligation to another for a precedent debt due by him to the assignee, there, that is not maintenance; but if he assign it for a consideration then given by way of contract, that is maintenance. ve. 34 H. 6, 30.

The Countess of Rutlands Case.

She brought a detinue for a coach: the defendants pleads an attachment according to the custom of London, hanging the writ: by the Court that is not good. And so was the opinion of the Kings Bench.

Broth against Archer.

Upon evidence it was held by Anderson, that if a feme covert, eject one, and that afterwards the husband assents: that yet the husband is not an ejector, for an ejectment is made in an instant, and hath not a continuance. Otherwise of a disseisin.

Odander against The Hundred of Grodley in Surrey.

In debt upon the Statute of Hue and Cry, it was resolved that notice given to the next village forward in the road is good, although that it be in another hundred, and although that there was another village a latere nearer, in the same hundred. For it cannot be intended that a stranger should have such precise notice or knowledge of the villages in a strange place. So also P. 38. C. B. Stinchcomb against the Hundred of Benhurst in Berks. ve. & lege the statute 27 Eliz. cap. 13.

Patridge against Naylor.

Upon evidence, in an action upon the statute 1 and 2 Phil. and Mary, although that one distress be put into several pounds, yet one replevin shall serve. There that is not within the statute. Otherwise if it had been in divers counties, or several franchises, where there ought to be several replevins. And if several men take the distress, that 5l. shall be upon every of them, because the statute says, every person offending, and not for every offence: and that before that time it had been so adjudged, and after the judgement upon error in the Kings Bench was reversed, but it was for another cause; and the Court now trebled the damages, and 5l. against every offender. But after error upon that very point in T. 38 Eliz. in the Kings Bench, between the same parties; and by the Court it was error, yet they gave a day for presidents. Dyer 177 b.

Strickland against Fallowfield.

In a formedon in discender, the demandant counts of a gift to A. and B. then a feme sole; and to the heirs of their bodies engendred. That they intermarry, and that they as heirs of their bodies, &c. And the tenant demurs, because he had not shew'd the place where the marriage was solemnized: for without marriage no right in discender in tayl, and that is issuable. But by Walmsly upon a count in frank marriage, a man need not alledge the marriage. Which the Court granted.

[53] Snellings against Norton.

S. brought an action of debt against N. as administrator, the defendant pleads upon a prescription: that by the custom of London, debt lies against an administrator, without any specialty; upon a concessit solvere to the testator; and that a recovery hath been had against him upon such a sute, and that was held a good plea: for debt against an administrator is not first given by 31 E. 3. but that was at the common-law, and the statute is declaratory. 19 E. 3. 4 Pl. 27. 1.

ARDEN'S CASE.

By Beomond, that rien rule en le, is a good plea in waste. Walmsly you may see the difference; when the waste is brought by the first lessor himself, and when it is brought by the grantor of a reversion: in the one case it is good, in the other not. Note also these books voucht. 5 H. 5. 12. Br. Waist. 72. 46 E. 3. 20. Br. Waist. 45 H. 8. 6. 5. And note, if they warrant that difference, the reason is, because of the contract and privity between the parties at the making of the lease.

LORD WILLOUGHBY AGAINST KEMPE.

It was said by the Court that a grant of an office, of keeping the courts of dutchy land by Privy Seal is not good; but it ought to be by dutchy seal.

YELVERTON AGAINST CORNWALLIS.

Y. covenants with C. to make an assurance of Bl. acre before P. by indenture. Y. dies the covenant not performed, and the very original deed comes into the hands of the executors of Y. and C. brought a writ of covenant upon the counter-part. And it was said by the Court, that it doth not lye without the deed it self. Walmsly. He may have an action of detinue to recover the deed.

Note, A. leases to B. by indenture for years, in which also were divers covenants, and amongst the rest, there was a covenant to pay the rent, and the lessee was oblig'd to perform all covenants, in that indenture; and an action of debt was brought for non-performance: and assignes breach in non-payment of the rent. And the defendant pleads performance. And by the Court, that is not a good plea, without shewing how he had performed; and agreed also by the Court, that the lessor need not demand the rent. But otherwise it had been if the obligation had been made expresly for the payment of the rent. And by Walmsley, that it had been so adjudg'd in that Court. ve. 22 H. 6. 57.

GRIFFIN AGAINST SHEET.

It was said by the Court, that a writ of disceit lies against the heir of him that had recovered. Note, 8 H. 6. N. B. 97. C.

[54] AKERMAN AGAINST WARREN.

Upon false imprisonment, the plaintiff counts of an imprisonment in the county of B. and also in the county of W. And by the Court it was ill, for he cannot joyn in the tryal, because it is a local trespass: but the plaintiff ought to have had several writs. But a man may justifie battery by an assault of the plaintiff himself in two counties: for that is transitory. 13, 11 H. 4. 14. But not found.

LORD IVERS CASE.

Debt was brought upon an obligation, &c. By the Court, that an obligation to the sheriff to appear and answer, &c. is void by 23 H. 9. cap. 10. But otherwise if it had been to appear to answer; for the party by the law may appear and yet judgement may be given by default.

FISHER AGAINST TRUSTLOW.

That pleading, quod villa de Beverly incorporata fuit was good enough, although that it be better pleading to say, that the maior, burgess, &c. or the inhabitants were incorporate, &c. Note in the Statute of Winchester, that the hundred shall answer, &c. And so in other statutes the village is taken for the inhabitants, and Dyer 100. a. is so.

TOTTEL AGAINST HOWELL.

It was held by the Court, that herbagium for years, cannot be granted without deed. Note 17 E. 4. 6.

JENNINGS AGAINST BRAGGE.

It was said by the Court, that a writ of error bearing teste before the judgement be entred of record, is void, although that the Judges have pronounced judgement, (viz.) quod intr. judic. Note 1 R. 3. 4. is contrary.

BYRONS CASE.

He brought an action of debt as administrator, by the letters of administration of the Bishop of York; because the testator had bona notabilia in divers diocesses in his precinct, upon an obligation then being within the province of Canterbury. And adjudged that it is not good, and the prerogative of York does not extend to Canterbury. And by Anderson, If a man dies having bona notabilia in Canterbury and York, Canterbury shall have the prerogative. And by Walmsly and Beom, that the debt upon a specialty is bona notabillia in that place where it is, at the time of the death of the party: but debt upon a simple contract, there where the party himself dies.

[55] LEAKE AND MICHELL AGAINST HOWELL AND HALE.

[See S. C. Cro. Eliz. 533.]

An information in that term was exhibited in the Exchequer, upon the 1 Eliz. cap. 12. and 19. of Taxes, Custome and Subsidy. Note, that merchandizes, and by way of merchandize, in the statute, and upon those statutes was now resolved. And that goods taken by letters of marque and reprisal, shall pay subsidies. Which was said in Captain Prestons case.

2. That the information was good, saying that the goods were landed as merchandizes, although he did not say, brought in by way of merchandize. And it was agreed by all, that if a man buy goods beyond sea, for his own provision, that is not within the statute.

BEALE AGAINST TAYLOR.

The better opinion was, that if process was delivered to the sheriff, and he takes the party without saying any thing, that yet it is good; for otherwise the sheriff shall be a trespasser; which the law does not intend. And the sheriff hath any lawful authority so to do. So also it is, although the sheriff had not the processe about him at the time of the arrest.

Elwin against Moor.

E. brought an action upon the case against M. for words, Thou art a thief and hast robb'd my son, without averring that he hath or had a son ; and yet it was held good by the Court; because the words, Thou art a thief, are actionable, because of discrediting the party in the audience of others, who know not if E. had a son or not. So if he had said, for thou hast stolen my horse. It was good without averring that he had a horse.

Note it was said by Owen, If there be 2 joyntenants in London, joyntraders, and the one dies, that the survivor shall not have all, but the executor of the other shall have his part. To which the Court agreed. And so it is of a joynt obligation to them for such wares.

Wentworth against Wentworth.

One brought dower in the C. B. in 37, 38 Eliz. and the case was thus. A rent was assigned to her for dower out of land, to which there was a condition that if the rent be in arrear and unpaid, that the grant shall be void, and she restor'd to her action for her dower; and averr'd. And it was adjudg'd.

1. That rent assign'd for dower, and ought to be upon condition, how the same dower could not be upon condition; because the rent is a thing collateral, although that it ought to be of the same land.

2. That there need not be any demand of that rent (for in our case the demandant had not alledg'd a demand of the rent.) But it was distreynable of common right. Also the party need not alledge a demand of the rent, when it is to cease by the non payment to the prejudice of him that demands it, and P. 38 Eliz. judgement accordingly for the demandant.

[56] Note, by Anderson and Walmesly, that not guilty is a good issue in an assumpsit, or detinue. Because a wrong is suppos'd; and 19 H. 6. agreed by the protonotaries. And so debt upon the Statute of Winchester for robberies. But in debt it is not good. And yet in debt not guilty hath been pleaded, and issue upon that, and verdict passed upon it; and by the Court it is now good, and help'd by the Statute of Jeofailes, because it is onely mis-joyning of the issue.

Cooper against Columbell.

Upon evidence in an ejectione firm. by Walmesly, that a gift in tayl, &c. to the lessee at will, or tenant at sufferance, as Dyer 61. is good without livery and seisin; for possessions countervaile livery. Note by E. 5. Dy. 145. b. & 269. b. accordingly. And if lessee at will make a lease for years to commence in fururo, it is not a present disseisin. And Beomond agreed. Note, that if lessee at will, lease to B. for years, and B. enters, B. only is the disseisor. ve. 12 E. 4. 12.

By the Court, that error does not lie against the Queen upon a petition where she is immediate party to the recovery; but otherwise where she is party onely as for conformity, as in an action upon the statute, or in a popular action. Note in Tr. 29 Eliz. B. R. Glazier against Hudleston. Where the difference is for an inheritance, or a real action. ve. 23 E. 3. 22. a. 22 E. 3. 3. a.

Dennyes Case.

It was said by the Court, that debt lies against the heir of an heir upon an obligation of the ancestor, who obliges himself and his heirs unto the 10th degree. ve. Dyer 344. debt against the executor of an heir.

Woodroff against Greenwood.

Intr. 38 Eliz. C. B. rot. 90. 12.

C. tenant in tayl, the reversion to the Queen, leases to A. for 21 years; A. assignes that to B. and covenants, that B. shall enjoy that, without the molestation, expulsion, or eviction of any person, except the Queen her heirs or successors. C. dies without issue, the reversion being granted before to Wentworth, who enters upon B. and B. brought a writ of covenant. And by the Court it was well brought, without acquittance. For the lease by tenant in tayl although it be according to the 21 H. 8. it does not bind him in the remainder or reversion.

Tompson against Clark.

An action upon the case was brought against C. and he counts upon a trover and conversion of his goods in the county of Nottingham; the defendant pleads a recovery against the plaintiff, in the upper bench in another action, in which he had 20l. damages, and for those damages a fier fac. issued out of that Court directed to the Sheriff of York. Upon which the sheriff seises the same goods in the county of York, and delivers them to the defendant in satisfaction of 20l. and so justices, &c. And upon that it was demurred and adjudged for the plaintiff for two causes.

1. First he justifies by reason of a fier fac. upon a recovery in the [57] Kings Bench, and does not shew in what county the Kings Bench was, for that Court is removeable; and for that, all processes are to appear coram nobis ubicunque fuerimus in Anglia.

2. The trover and conversion is suppos'd to be in the county of Nottingham, and the defendant pleads special justification in the county of York, without taking any traverse absque hoc that he is guilty in the county of Nottingham. Note by Fenner, that the sheriff cannot upon a fier. fac. deliver the goods to the party in satisfaction of his debt quod concessum.

Hall against Hemmsly.

Tr. 38 Eliz.

Hall brought an action upon the case for words, and declar'd, that whereas he was rob'd of certain cloth, per ignotost, &c. The defendant in præsentia diversorum malitiosè dixit, H. hath receiv'd again 3 pieces of his cloth, and beareth with the thief, innuendo quendam malefactorem ignot. Adjudg'd, that the words were not actionable, for the receipt of the cloth may be lawful; for he doth not shew that he knew them to be his cloaths. So 29 Eliz. intr. George & Parker. Adjudg'd for saying H. hath broken my shop, and taken away my goods, no action lies. Also there was another exception taken, that the declaration is, in præsentia diversorum that may be said, and yet no slander, for it may be in their presence, and yet they not hear it. But that exception was waived, for it shall be intended that they heard it also.

Harrington against Wyse.

M. 37, 38 Eliz. rot. 226.

An action of debt was brought for rent upon a lease, &c. and it was found in this manner, articles of agreement were sealed and delivered between the parties in hæc verba, it is covenanted and agreed that the plaintiff doth let land to the defendant for 5 years, from and after the Feast of St. Michaell next, provided, and it is agreed that the lessee shall pay therefore yearly at 2 feasts of the year, (viz. such a time, and such a time) by even and equal portions, 120l. And there is another covenant, that a lease shall be made and seal'd before the Feast of All Saints next, according to that agreement. And if that may be said a lease or a reservation or not was the question. By some it was said, that that last covenant, that the lessor should make a lease according to those articles declares the intent of the parties, that those articles shall not be a lease. The Court on the contrary, for by the articles the lease is to commence at Michaelmas next, and by the covenant he may make the lease at All Saints, which is after the first lease commenc'd. So it appears that that was but for further assurance, and not to destroy the lease precedent. Also by the Court, that the covenant, that the lessee shall pay yearly, &c. makes a reservation by reason of the word yearly. But by Poph. that is a good reservation also, omitting the word yearly. And that proviso (it is covenanted) makes as well a covenant as a reservation. But adjudg'd for the plaintiff.

Willoughby against Grey.

A venire brought, and the teste out of the term (viz.) after the term ended. If that be error or not, was the question: it was said by the Court that that was not error. And the diversity is between original and judicial writs. As 1 Eliz. Dyer 168. 3 & 4 Mar. Dyer 129. Popham, that it is not ayded by the statute being after verdict. Afterwards a [58] case between Moulton and Hall adjudg'd that term was vouch'd. The venire fac. bore teste before the appearance of the defendant in Court; and it was rul'd to be nought, the Court said that that was not like our case, so judgement was affirm'd, another error was assign'd, because the writ of habeas corpus ibi nomina, ommitting jurat. But it was not allow'd.

Crispe against Fryer.

The lord of a mannor comes upon the land of a copyholder to demand his rent, and because none was there to pay it he enters for a forfeiture. Fenner said, his entry was not lawful: but otherwise it had been if the tenant had been there and made an expresse denial; and so the diversity is between a negligent fault, and a wilfull. ve. 31 H. 8. Greenlessees case. Popham and Gawdy, were strongly of the contrary opinion; and said that a denial in law was as much as an expresse denial. As if the tenant had been there present at the time of the demand, and had said nothing: that silence with a non-payment is a forfeiture; ve. 42 E. 3. 5. The lord enters for a forfeiture because the copyholder would not pay the rent. Also it was agreed by all the justices, 22 Eliz. in Sir Christopher Hattons case, that if the copyholders do not come to the court of the lord after a particular summons made to their persons, that was a forfeiture without any expresse refusal to come. Also by Popham, that the lord might avow upon the copyholder. And 6 R. 2. Avowry, 86. Mich. 36, 37 Eliz. 5. C. B. Vaugham. case ergo; because he had another remedy he shall not enter for a forfeiture. See the same reason 4 Eliz. Dyer 211. To which it was answered, that that was no reason; for so in Sir Christopher Hattons case afore voucht, the lord might avow for the not doing of suit of Court, yet he might enter also. Quere.

Sherriff against Diggs.

An action of trespass of an assault and battery was brought, and the plaintiff declares, quod cum the defendant die & anno, &c. the aforesaid plaintiff verberavit & vulneravit, &c. and upon that the plaintiff recover'd. And now error is brought and assign'd in the declaration; in that, that there is not any direct affirmation that that the defendant verberavit, &c. But it is quod cum verberavit. Clerk. The course of the Common-Bench is to declare (the Court being willing to be inform'd by the prothonotaries) in debt with a quod cum, &c. The Court lik't the difference well; and said, certainly that such a declaration in trespass cannot be good. So the judgement was revers'd. ve. Buckleys case, Plowd. 128.

Sir Humphrey Ferres against Wignoll.

An action of debt was brought for taking an horse. The defendant pleads that the now plaintiff was auter foits barr'd in trespass for the same thing. And by the Court that it is a good plea. And judgement given against the plaintiff, for that barr by judgement amounts to a release in law; or otherwise sutes would be infinite. ve. 29 H. 8.

[59] Wooddye against Coles Baily of Southw.

An action of trespass was brought for taking goods, &c. The defendant said that a recovery was had against the plaintiff in Southw. upon which a fieri fac. was directed to him, by which he took the goods and sold them. By Popham. If a fieri fac. for 20l. be awarded to the sheriff, upon which he takes an entire chattell and sells it for 40l. and returns the fieri fac. with the 20l. in Court, he may deteyne the surplusage until the defendant comes to demand it of him; for he is not bound to search the defendant. Agreed. But by Gawdy. If a fi. fac. be awarded for 40s. by force of which the sheriff takes five oxen, every one of the value of 5l. and sells them all, it is clear that the defendant shall have an action of trespass against the sheriff; which was agreed.

Hart against Amerideth.

Errour of reversing a fine levyed by non-age, &c. and after he came to full age before that the fine was revers'd, and now it was said that the fine could not be revers'd, because the plaintiff had levyed a fine of that land to another. Poph. Then he hath extinguisht his title of errour. Gawdy on the contrary. Cook, If the disseisee levy a fine to a stranger, the disseisor shall have the benefit of it, Popham agreed. And it is the case in effect, between Zouch and Bamfield. Fenner accorded. Cook said the reason of that case was the Statute of Fines. Pleming, That is not so in question, for the second fine is not pleaded by the defendant in the writ of error: and so non constat, if there be such a fine levied after that fine or not. By the Court. Then the case is clear, and so it was adjudg'd, quod finis reversetur. Note it was said that that second fine cannot be pleaded, because it was not yet ingross'd: and the ingrosser was staid on purpose by the conusee.

Harewood against Hamond. Trini. and Hill. 39 El.

An action upon the case was brought, and counts that in consideration the plaintiff delivered to the defendant ten quarters of malt to the proper use of the defendant, he assumed to pay the plaintiff ten pound, and upon a non assumpsit pleaded it was found for the plaintiff. And now it was moved in arrest of judgment, that in that case an action of debt shall lye, and not that action. Which was granted by the Court. And Walmsly cited 21 E. 4. that a delivery of goods ad usum suum proprium, is a gift, and by consequence also it is a sale. Wherefore it was adjudg'd against the plaintiff.

LOVELACE AGAINST REYNOLDS.

An action of trespass was brought, quare clausum fregit: the defendant prescribes to have common in the place, &c. and it was found, that the defendant had used to have the common paying a penny yearly to the plaintiff, and if that issue is found for or against the defendant was the question. And adjudg'd, against the defendant.

1. The prescription is intire, and the payment of the penny is parcel of that, and shall be intended as ancient as the common is. Note the case between Brigandine and Westan before Sir Thomas Gawdy at the assize in Kent, where one prescribed to have a way to the church; and [60] it was found, to have a way, paying every year to the terre-tenant 2d. and a pair of gloves for every one that he should marry out of his house.

2. If that payment be not shewn by the commoner, the lord shall have no remedy for it. For he cannot have an action of debt, nor shall he distrein for it, without it be by prescription. As 26 H. 8. cap. 3. that payment cannot be a rent; for a rent cannot be reserved out of a common, office, or other thing which lies not in demand, in which an entry may be made; unless it be out of a mesualty, as 1 H. 4. and that by the possibility of escheat. Note the case in Trin. 36 Eliz. between Gray and Fletcher. A copyholder prescribes to have common in his lords land, and it was found that he had the common accordingly, and it was likewise found in that manner, that the copyholders have used to pay to their lord pro eadem communia unam gallinam & 5. ova yearly. And there, that the tenant hath well alledg'd the prescription, without shewing the payment, &c. And note, that there were two prescriptions, the one by the commoner, the other by the lord, by which it was sufficient for the commoner to alleadge his own prescription.

Debt reserved upon the lease of a warren of conies. The defendant pleads that the plaintiff had plowed a field, parcel of the warren, by which the conies had not sufficient pasture. By the Court (absent Anderson) that it is no plea, for it is not a rent, but a seniory in gross, due by reason of the contract: by which the entry or user of that part is not any suspension.

HARGRAVER AGAINST ARDEN.

Trin. 38 Eliz. rot. 1117. Adjudg'd Hill. 39 Eliz.

Error upon judgement given in a replevin, was assign'd; because the plaint was entred Tho. Harg. and Ambrose Arden. and the recordare that removed the plaint into the Common Bench, was according to the plaint; but the declaration in the Common Bench was Tho. Harg. against Ambrosin Arderne, and according to that declaration were all the proceedings in the Common Bench, and the writ of enquiry of damages was Arderne. So the variance was between Arden and Arderne. But by the Court (absent Poph.) that a variance between the plaint and the declaration in the Common Bench is not error. To which purpose Gawdy voucht 21 E. 4. fol. 6. where a plaint in the county is of 2 oxen, and that is removed into the Common Bench; and there the plaintiff declares of one ox only, and the avowry was made of two oxen. And notwithstanding the variance between the plaint and the declaration in the Common Bench, yet the avowant had judgement to have a return of two oxen; and no fault in the recordare or pone shall abate the plea, when the plaint is removed: for they are determined by the remover into the Court. As 3 H. 6. fo. 1. So the first judgement affirm'd.

GREEDLY AGAINST WHITCOTT.

38, 39 Eliz. rot. 464.

G. sues a plaint in the Court of Ludlow and Wales, against W. et sequitur tam pro Domina Regina, quam pro seipso. And complaines upon the statute 5 Eliz. for that, that the defend. had used the craft of a taylor, not being an apprentice to the occupation. The plaintiff had judgement, upon which error is brought in the Kings Bench and assigned, because by the statute of 18 Eliz. it is enacted, that all sutes [61] upon penal statutes, ought to be by original writ; now this sute is by none of them, but by plaint. And by the Court clearly, that it is error. Also the statute 18 Eliz. is a general law, of which the Court ought to take notice. So the first judgement revers'd.

WOLFE AGAINST MEGGS.

Tr. 37 Eliz. rot. 1063. B. R.

In an action of debt upon an obligation of 16l. and declares to the damage of 10l. the defendant pleads non est factum, and it is found against him: and the jury gives the plaintiff damages, and 40s. costs; so the plaintiff had judgement to recover the 16l. and 9l. for the costs, and damages assest by the jury; moreover 4l. pro incremento assest by the Court. And upon that error was brought in the Kings Bench, which was assign'd in this. Because the plaintiff had judgement to recover 13l. for costs and damages, when he declar'd but to the damage of 10l. and the damages and costs ought not to exceed that which the plaintiff hath alledged. But that shall not bind the Court as to the increase of costs above that which is given by the jury. So the judgement was affirm'd. ve. 13 H. 7. 26. 2 H. 6, 7.

RAYNOR AGAINST GRIVISTON.

H. 38 Eliz. rot. 944.

A case was adjudg'd 39 Eliz. Hill. and affirm'd upon error in the Exchequer Chamber, viz. an action upon the case for saying, that he was perjur'd, and would prove him so by two witnesses; without saying in what Court he was perjur'd. And yet the words adjudged actionable.

DUREINGE AGAINST KETTEL.

M. 38, 39 Eliz. rot. 449.

D. brought an action against K. after a tryal by verdict in London, and it was said in arrest of judgement, that the venire fac. is Regina vicecomitibus London salut. præcipimus tibi. &c. where it should have been præcipimus vobis; but by the Court, the venire fac. being as it were a judicial writ, that ought to ensue the other proceedings, and it was held to be amendable; and so it was.

GOWER AGAINST CAPPER.

M. 38, 39 Eliz. rot. 211. B. R.

An action upon the case, upon an assumpsit, and the plaintiff declares, that whereas the defend. was indebted by bill to the plaint. in 20l. in consideration that the plaintiff faithfully promis'd to deliver the said bill to the defendant. The defendant super se assumpsit, to find two sufficient securities to enter into bond to the plaintiff for the payment of the said 20l. And in fact saith, that he delivered the aforesaid bill to the defendant, &c. and he procured two to be bound for the payment of the said 20l. who were not of any worth or value, &c. The defendant by protestation, non cognoscendo aliqua in narratione, &c. for plea saith, that the aforesaid plaintiff had not re-delivered the bill of 20l. and upon that demurs in law; and adjudged no plea. For the declaration of the plaintiff, that he had re-delivered the bill, &c. was surplusage, and vain. For the defendant cannot traverse that, because the consideration is not that he shall deliver, &c. but that he promis'd to deliver. So there is a reciprocal action given to either party. If the other does not perform his promise; and notwithstanding that the defendant had found two sureties, yet because the plaintiff had averr'd [62] that they were insufficient, and that is confessed by the defendant in his plea in barre; it is all one, as if he had not found any surety. And so adjudg'd.

PATRIDGE AGAINST EMSON.

Hill. 39 Eliz. B. R.

An action upon the statute 1. 2. M. for driving distresses and impounding them in several places: so that the owner was put to several replevins, and it was against three defendants, and upon not guilty it was found for the plaintiff, and 40s. damage assest by the jurors against every defendant severally. And judgement was given for the plaintiff, that he should recover the penalty of the statute, (viz.) against every one 5l. and for damages against every one 40s. trebled. Upon which a writ of error was brought, and error assign'd, was in the point of the judgement, (viz.) because the damages and the penalties are sever'd: (viz.) every defendant by himself, where it ought to have been joyntly, (viz.) all one. And that was adjudg'd error, and the first judgement reversed. For but one 5l. shall be inflicted upon all the defendants, and not several 5l. by the statute; yet the words are, that every person offending, shall pay 5l. but the meaning of the statute is that the penalty shall be referr'd to the offence, not the persons, then because there was but one offence in all the defendants, there shall be but one 5l. forfeited. So by Popham, If two distreyn, and they alike drive the distresse, there shall be only one action, and one penalty, which was granted. So by Gawdy, Upon the statute that enacts, that every one that sues in the Admiralty, for a thing done upon the land, shall forfeit 10l. There if two commence an action contra formam statuti, yet but one 10l. shall be forfeited. So upon the Statute of 5 Eliz. of Forgery against 20. but one double damages shall be given against all. And by Popham and Fenner, that where 20 are so joyntly sued, a release to one shall discharge all. But by Fenner: If the plaintiff had brought his action against them severally, every one should have paid 5l. Sed quære.

SMITH AGAINST WOODSTOCK.

Pas. 39 Eliz.

Two men submit them to the arbitrament of A. of all actions and controversies between them; ita quod, the said award be made by such a day. Afterwards the defendant in consideration of 12d. assumes, that if he did not perform the award, he would pay the plaintiff 100l. Afterwards the arbitrator awards, that the defendant should deliver certain cloaths and apparel to Smith the plaintiff, which the defendant hath not perform'd. Whereupon the plaintiff brought an action upon the case upon an assumpsit, and adjudg'd that it doth not lie, because the arbitrament so being conditional, with an ita quod, &c. it ought to have been made for all quarrels, &c. according to the submission. But if the submission had been general of all quarrels between them, without any such clause, ita quod &c. there the arbitrator had had absolute authority, and then if the award had been made but of a part, it is good for that part, and ought to be performed. So see the diversity in the case. Gawdy denied 7 H. 6. 40. 40. to be law ve. 4. Eliz. Dyer 216. 8 Eliz. Dyer 242. 19 H. 6. 6. and 10. 2 R. 3. 18. And judgement was given quod querens nil. cap. per bill. By Popham. Such an assumpsit, as abovesaid, was before the arbitrament; and after an avoid award is made, he is not bound to perform it: otherwise it is of such [63] an assumpsit made after such an arbitrament; for there volenti non fit injuria.

EDWARDS AGAINST STAPLETON.

M. 38, 39 Eliz. rot. 470.

An action upon the case was brought by an executor upon a promise made to the testator; and the executor in the end of the plea omits this clause. Et profert hic in Cur. literas testament. And that was assign'd to be erroneous, and for that it was prayed to be reversed in a writ of error. The Court accordingly, so the judgement was revers'd.

ILE AGAINST SURLINGE.

T. 39 Eliz. rot. 978.

Error was brought upon a judgement in the Common Bench, in a writ of covenant: and it was said that the course of the Court is, that if a man brings a writ of covenant, or other action in the Common Bench, and lays his action in Middlesex, and Middlesex is writ in margent: if the plaintiff in his declaration shews that by his deed covenanted, &c. that is good enough, without shewing in what place the covenant was made; for it shall be intended to be in the same county where the action is brought.

2. It was assigned for error, because the plaintiff had assign'd three covenants to be broken, and the jury assess damages ratione fractionis coventionis to 10l. so that the damages are assest only for the breaking of one covenant in the singular number, and there is not shewn for what covenant. Gawdy. That is no error; for the dammages shall be intended to be assest for every covenant by him broken: so the damages go intirely for all the 3 covenants broken, regarding every one severally by it self, to be broken. So the first judgement confirmed.

WEBB AGAINST POORE.

39 Eliz.

An action upon the case was brought for slander, in hæc verba. I (innuendo) the defendant, will call him (innuendo) the plaintiff, in question for poysoning my aunt, and I make no question but to prove that he hath poysoned my aunt. And upon not guilty, it was found for the plaintiff, and damage assest: and in arrest of judgement it was moved that the action does not lie; because by those words no express affirmance is laid to the charge of the plaintiff. The whole Court on the contrary, and that the action is maintainable, and that without averment of the death of his aunt; because one may be poysoned, and yet he may not dye. So it is not like Snaggs case of murder. For it is impossible for a man to be murdered and he not die. So note the diversity.

ROSCITER AGAINST BUSSEY.

M. 38, 39 Eliz. rot. 197.

An action of debt was brought in the Common Bench: and in the first declaration before appearance, the plaintiff declares upon an obligation made by the defendant, and does not shew where it was made; but leaves a space for the place and county. Also he counts that the defendant summonitus fuit ad responden. the plaintiff in 10l. quas, &c. Et unde the plaintiff says, quod cum, &c. and does not say unde the plaintiff in his own proper person, or by his atturney says, &c. And the defendant to that imparled, and after appeared, and then the plaintiff declares de novo, and makes the second declaration in all things [64] certain; and upon that had judgement to recover. Now errour was brought to reverse that. And Fenner was mov'd by a prothonotary, that it was the course of the Common Bench; that the first declaration is that upon which the judgement is given, and it is an exemplar of the second: and if that be nought, although the second be good, yet it is incurable. So judgement was that the first judgement should be reversed.

PARRET AGAINST CARPENTER.

In an action upon the case; that whereas he is parson of D. and a preacher, the defendant slandered him in hæc verba, Parret is a lewd adulterer, and hath had two children by the wife of I. S. I will cause him to be deprived for it. By the Court the action does not lie: for the slander is to be punished in the Spiritual Court. And so awarded, quod quer. nil. cap. per bill.

THE LADY DIGBYES CASE.

The Lady Digby exec. to brought trespasse and counts of her own possession, &c. And it was mov'd because the plaintiff was non-suted: if the defendant shall have costs upon the statute of 23 H. 8. By the Court. The plaintiff shall render costs. For she did not use the action as executrix; but of goods taken out of her own possession. And so the naming her executrix is nothing to the purpose: ergo within the statute.

TIMMELTHORPS CASE.

An action upon the case was brought for this slander. He is a bloudsucker, and not worthy to live in a commonwealth, and his child not born is bound to curse him. By the Court no action lies.

BROUGHTON AGAINST RANDAL.

Father, tenant for life, the remainder to his son in tayl, the remainder to the right heirs of the father, after the father and son at a certain time were attainted of felony, and executed likewise at one time, the son not having any issue of his body. If now the father shall be said to be seis'd of an estate in fee, that dower, &c. was the matter. And there because it was prov'd by witnesses that the father mov'd his feet after the death of the son, it was found by the jury, seisie que dower, &c. And upon that the wife of the father had judgement to recover. Note after errour was brought, and the error assign'd in the processe. ve. Tr. 38 Eliz. rot. 876.

GARRARD AGAINST SOULE.

Intr. M. 37 Eliz. C. B. rot. 1149.

A devise was to A. and his heirs. And if he die without issue, that then it shall be to B. C. and D. or the survivors of them. Adjudg'd, that that is an estate tayl in A. ve. 37 Ass.

THE COUNTESS OF WARWICK AGAINST THE BISHOP OF LICHFIELD.

The condition of an obligation was, that if A. pay 15l. at Michaelmas next, and 15l. at P. after, so 15l. at every of the said feasts, so [65] long as A. shall live, or until B. shall be preferred to a benefice of 30l. per annum. In an action of debt upon that obligation, the defendant pleads that B. was prefer'd, &c. before Michaelmas next. And held no plea upon a demurrer; for take it which way you will, he ought to pay the 15l. at the said two feasts, that are expresly set down; for they are absolute, and so adjudged without argument.

P. 39 Eliz.

Upon evidence to the jury, by the Court, that a lease for years of a mannor except one acre: that that exception extends to the entire estate, and is not determined by the death of the lessor or lessee. But by Walmsley, it hath been a question, if an exception hath been expresly to the lessor, that should determine by his death. The action was for arrearages of rent, and the defendant pleads entry in one acre of land demised: and in evidence given, it was entry in one acre of wood. And by the Court, that shall not maintain the issue.

FEERBY AGAINST LORKINGS.

L. assumes to F. quod dimitteret to him a parsonage, and two months after he leases it to him for years; and by the Court, that it is well as to the time; for it shall be intended within reasonable time. But by Beomond and Walmsley, that it ought to be a lease for life. Anderson on the contrary. For the assumor hath election what estate he will make. But they all agreed upon a difference. But if it had been by way of covenant, there the covenanter shall have the election: for by the grant the thing and estate is executed; but the covenant is executory. And the action was for non-performance.

WHITLEY AGAINST BEST.

W. brought a writ of dower against B. C. lessee for years by lease of the husband rendring rent, was before the coverture prayed to be received for his tearm. The wife recovers, and had judgement. By the Court, the lease of C. is saved, by 21 H. 8 cap. 16. And the Court advised, that an habere fac. seisinam shall be awarded to the sheriff to put the wife in possession, with a proviso, quod ten. ad termin. annor. non expellatur. And Beomond said, that 3 Eliz. so it is said. Rul'd in dower brought by the mother.

SERVEIN AGAINST THE BISHOP OF LINCOLN.

If the incumbent resign and the usurper present within 6 months, and is in for six moneths, no notice being given at the resignation; yet that shall bind him, and he shall be put to his right of advowson. Otherwise if the Ordinary had collated, because the induction is notorious to the country, and the patron ought to take notice of it at his peril, to prevent the usurpation by an estranger.

R. marries the widdow of Terril, who died intestate, and divers goods came to the hands of R. Administration is committed to B. and R. accounts for the goods to B. and pleads that in barre in an action of debt brought against him, as executor in his own wrong, and intermedling, ve. 5. rep. 34.

[66] Cooke against Bromehill.

P. 37 Eliz. C. B. rot. 1437.

A. leases for life to B. and afterwards levies a fine to the use of R. for life, the remainder to A. in fee: with a proviso or power to make leases for 21 years, or three lives; and that the conusees should stand seis'd to such uses. And afterwards A. covenants to stand seis'd to the use of P. in tayl, with divers remainders over: and after A. grants the reversion aforesaid to L. for life, who distrains C. and avows, and judgement was given against the avowant.

1. Because by the covenant to L. A. had destroyed his power to make leases, &c.

2. The pleading was naught, because he pleaded that by grant of reversion, predict. which was limitted to A. himself in fee upon the fine; for he ought to have pleaded that, as is by the limitation in the indenture. So if the reversion be by bargain and sale, or if it be by way of release; if that be pleaded as by grant, that is naught.

Osmand and his Wife.

A. lessee for life, the remainder to B. in fee, A surrenders upon condition to B. and enters for the condition broken. B. dies and his wife brought dower against A. and the issue is joyn'd upon ne unq. sei. q. dower, &c. That shall be found against A. ve. Dy. 41. And by the Court, If a man bargain and sell his land in fee, by those words only, and makes livery, that yet the bargainee, although that the indenture was never inroll'd, may plead that, for a bargain includes a grant.

The Bishop of Glouc. & Al. against Veale.

M. 39, 40 Eli. C. B.

Veale recover'd in a quare impedit against them, and had judgement to have a writ to the bishop. And a writ of enquiry of damages issued. Now the defendants brought error. And by the Court, that writ shall abate, because judgement is not given upon the entire records; and that a writ to the bishop shall not issue, till the writ of enquiry of the value be return'd; unless the plaintiff release the damages. And that by the Court and all the clerks.

Reeve against Cox.

In an ejectione firm. upon a demurrer, the case was thus. A. gives to the eldest brother in tayl, the remainder to the youngest brother in tayl; the remainder over to B. in fee. The eldest brother leases for three lives, according to 32 H. 8. with warranty, and dies without issue; which descends upon the younger brother, who enters and leases to R. for years. And it was resolved that the entry of the younger brother was lawful, and not hindred by the warranty: for the remainder was not devested, because that lease was not a discontinuance P. 40 Eliz. for the plaintiff.

Godbolt against Mallet.

By the Court, that if the husband seis'd in right of his wife, pleads, that he and all those whose estate they had, have used to have a common appendant, that that is naught, for the estate is in the [67] wife. But he ought to have pleaded, that he and his wife, and those whose estates the wife hath, or whose estates they have, have &c.

ENDENNE AGAINST FEVISAME.

Wallet delivers one hundred muskets into the Tower, and the debenture for that, was by consent of both parties made to H. as if he had delivered them. W. dies making F. his executor: and Hopkins surrenders that debenture, and a new one was made to F. And it was agreed by the Court, that the money was not assets in the hands of F, for it was only of trust and confidence between W. and H. and there is no remedy but in the Chancery. But note well 12 Jac. C. B. Harronet against Reynolds, R. as executor recovers 1008l. in Chancery against F. that had leased for years in trust for the testator. And that was adjudg'd to be assets. Et quær. what difference.

ROTHERAM AGAINST GREEN.

In an action of trespass against G. he justifies because of a common appendant by prescription, in 500 acres. And it was found by verdict that the auncestor had releas'd his common in five of these acres.

1. And by the Court he had fail'd in prescription.

2. The common by that is not extinct: because it is discharg'd to be common by Act of Parliament for fayler of prescription ve. Dyer 164. a. 284.

FLOWERS CASE.

[See Cochrane v. Moore, 1890, 25 Q. B. D. 71.]

A. borrowed one hundred pound of F. and at the day brought it in a bagg and cast it upon the table before F. and F. said to A. being his nephew, I will not have it, take it you and carry it home again with you. And by the Court, that is a good gift by paroll, being cast upon the table. For then it was in the possession of F. and A. might well wage his law. By the Court, otherwise it had been, if A. had only offer'd it to F. for then it was chose in action onely, and could not be given without a writing.

SUSANS AGAINST TURNER.

If a sute be in the Admiral Court, for a contract supposed to be made super altum mare, the defendant upon a surmise that it was made upon the land within the realm, may have a prohibition. And that it may come in issue if it was upon the land or upon the sea. But by the justices, their rule is, that upon such a suggestion they shall not grant a prohibition after sentence pass'd.

BEUM AGAINST FELTON.

An ejectione firm. was brought of 50 acres of land, 10 acres of meadow, 100 acres of pasture, and the jury found the ejectment only in 2 closes, called Black acre and Wh. acre parcel of the said lands, and by the Court the verdict is naught, and that the plaintiff shall have another judgement; for the judgement ought to be according to the declaration of the plaintiff, and his demand: and it does not appear of how [68] much execution may be made, also it may be that those two closes conteyn more than was in the declaration; and by the Court a venire fac. de novo. was awarded.

COUNTESS OF WARWICK AGAINST THE LORD BARKLYE.

By the Court, that in a writ of partition no damages shall be recovered, nor an enquiry for them; and yet the writ and the count is ad damnum, &c. N. B. 61 H. E. 3. 57. 3 E. 3. 3. 47. partition. 11.

BESTWICK AGAINST CAMDEN.

Intr. P. 19. C. B. rot. 15.

In a quod permittat in nusance, quod levavit quandam molem (Anglice) abay, by which, &c. the warter-house of his mill was stopped. And it was said by the Court that the writ shall abate; because moles is an equivocal term, and is not proper for a brook or bay.

Note by all the justices, two executors bring an accompt against B. and have judgement quod computet; and after one of them dies, yet the writ shall not abate: but the survivor shall have a special scire fac. ad computandum, in his own name, reciting that the other is dead.

TISDALL AGAINST BEVINGTON.

That maintenance does not lye, for maintenance in the Spiritual Court, nor by 32 H. 8. nor by 1 R. 2 cap. 4. And that so it was adjudged, in one Constantines case.

MINORS AGAINST BOCHER.

Intr. 39 Eliz. C. B. rot. 1615.

In debt upon an obligation there was an attachment by the custome of London taken against one, before the day in which the obligation was payable. But note that custome ought to be so alledg'd, yet judgement was against the defendant, for two other causes, as Bar. Heron reports.

BURLEY AGAINST READ.

B. brought some yarn on horseback to the house of A. his neigbour, for to weigh it upon his scales and beams, and the lord comes and distreyns the horse and yarn for rent arrear by A. And by the Court that is not lawful, for they were brought thither for another intent. 7 H. 7. 10 H. 7. 22. 22 E. 4. Also they were in the possession of the very owner.

ETHRINGTON AGAINST ASHON AND HIS WIFE.

E. brought an action of debt against them, the wife being executrix to the debtor, &c. The husband comes in upon the exigent, and prays his priviledge, because he is a servant to the Lord Keeper. But by the Court that he shall not have it; because the wife is joyn'd with him, and she can have no priviledge. ve. Dyer 377. a. b.

[69] WARNER AND STONE, AND THEIR WIVES.

They bring an action of debt upon an obligation, made to the wives when they were sole, and averr that the mony was not paid to the said wives before the coverture, &c. And an exception was taken, because it is not said nec alicui eorum, for it might be paid to one of them. But by the Court, that the count is good enough, and that had been superfluous, for payment to one of them is payment to all the obligees.

Deeles against Nokes.

A feme the obligor of full age, takes a husband within age. And they in debt upon the obligation pray his age. But the Court denyed it. See a good case in 8 E. 2. Age 125. Debt upon an obligation. Where A. obliges him and his heirs against baron and feme, as heir to A. And they had age allowed, because the wife was within age. And also 19 E. 2. Age 122.

Robbins's Case.

R. brought debt against A. as executor; and upon plene admin. and issue upon that, assetts are found, and judgement for the plaintiff. And upon a testat. execution was awarded to the sheriff in another county than where the tryal was: that sheriff may return a nihil, and is not estopped by the verdict and judgement; otherwise it is of the sheriff of that county where the action was brought; for he cannot return a nihil, &c. but he ought to return a devastavit. ve. 9 H. 6. 9. Exec. 9.

Note, in an action of debt against A. as executor in his own wrong, he pleads ne unque exec. &c. And it is found against him, and execution by the Court against him for all the debt (viz.) 60l. for his false plea, although in truth he had not medled but with one bedstead of smal value. And it was said by Daniel that in 39, 40 Eliz. C. B. Kitchin against Dixon, that one Mr. Offlye for such a false plea was charged to 100l. and he had medled but with one Bible. Therefore beware and plead well the special matter.

There was a question upon a demurrer in law. If a lapse devolves to the Ordinary, and within those 6 months, the Ordinary is translated to another bishoprick: if the King or his metropolitan shall present to that lapse, in default that the patron does not present. Noy Atturney, That the warden of the Spiritualties shall present whosoever he be. ve. Dyer 78. Pl. 103.

Tavernors Case.

That an obligation made to a deputy of a bayly of a franchise, or to an under sheriffs deputy, is void, by 23 H. 6. For it ought to be in the name of the bayly or sheriff himself.

Dean and Chapter of Pauls.

Debt was brought against them, for an escape suffered by their baylye of a franchise, where they had the return of writs. And ad-[70]-judged that it doth not lie against them, but against the baily himself. For the writ is directed to him (viz.) ballivo libertat. de mannerii, and not duii, &c. Also an obligation according to 32 H. 6. ought to be taken in his name. Also for an ill return the baily is always fin'd. Note Dyer 278. Escape is brought against a deputy gaoler, because the clause to make a deputy was in patent to the marshal. Note 39 H. 6. 34 a.

Hollmasts Case.

By the Court that a prohibition shall not be awarded to the Admiral, or Spiritual Court after sentence. Also that a plea was there pleaded and refused, which was triable at common law.

Bold against Walters.

In a replevin, and the title was by lease made by a parson; and the avowry was. That A. was seis'd of the rectory of H. and made the lease, without shewing that he was parson. And by the Court; that that should have been a good exception, if it had not been said in the avowry moreover, that A. was seis'd in jure ecclesiæ, which supplyes all.

Russel and his Wife.

They join in a trover and conversion, for a deed of a rent-charge granted to the wife, dum sola fuit. And that the deed came to the hands of the defendant after the coverture. And it was said by the Court that the action was well brought by them two; for the action shall survive; for otherwise a grand inconvenience would ensue to the wife. For if the husband only should recover, and after die; his executors would have execution for the damages, and not the wife. Judgement was given accordingly. T. 40 Eliz. C. B. 38 H. 6.

Colme against Frome.

It was said by the Court, that if an offender be brought before a justice of peace, the party ought to tender sureties, and it doth not behove the justice to demand it. But Owen said: that if the sheriff takes one that is bailable, there the sheriff ought to offer to him, if he will be bail'd: for the party is to pay 4d. to the sheriff by 23 H. 6. for making of the obligation. To which Walmesly agreed.

Moyle against Moyle.

[See S. C. Owen, 66.]

That destroying of coneys, and stopping or digging up of coney burroughs; is not waste by the lessee of a warren. And so it was adjudg'd. N. B. 87 a.

Warneford against Giles.

W. leases to G. for 21 years, if he so long live and continue in his service. W. dyes. And by the Court the lease is not determined, because it was the act of God. So an annuity pro concilio, &c. to the grantee for his life, is not determined by the death of the grantor.

[71] Gascoynes Case.

A. acknowledges a recognizance of a statute staple, according to 38 H. 8. to G. and afterwards he enfeoffs many others of his land severally of several parts. G. sues execution against one only, returnable in the Chancery, as it is said upon that statute; and he that had his lands extended, brought an audita querela in the Common Bench. And it was mov'd by Daniel, that the audita querela ought to have been brought in the Chancery; because there is no record of it in the Common Bench. But by the Court, it may be brought well enough in the C. B. And Williams voucht M. 31, 32 Eliz. Claver and Mulacres case.

By the Court it was said, that where any statute, as 5 Eliz. for perjury, &c. limits any remedy by information for the party grieved, that such an informer is not within the statute 31 Eliz. cap. 5. For that is intended of a common informer. And by Anderson, it was adjudg'd in the case of the butchers of London, that if a man be an informer, and is not the party grieved at one time, that yet he is not a common informer. And it was agreed in one Holdens case of Coventry, that an information (upon the 27 Eliz. of Fraudulent Conveyances) by the party grieved, after the year, &c. is good enough, and not within the statute.

The Countess of Warwick against The Lord Barkley, Iter.

A writ of partition was brought, and judgement, quod partitio fiet; and before that it was executed in the country by the sheriff, error was brought. And it was said by the Court, that it does not lye, upon such a judgement: before that the partition be made and return'd by the sheriff. And judgement was given, quod partitio stabilis remaneat. For this is not like to other real actions, where errour lies before the habere fac. seisinam be return'd. For that is a final judgement, and no other to be given. Also there needs no return of an habere fac. seisinam. For the party that recovers may execute his judgement by his entry, as Dyer 67. a.

Cawdrey against Kingsmill.

In a replevin the case was thus, A. devises to C. by these words, I devise a rent of 40s. out of all my lands in Hawley (with a clause of distress) payable yearly at the usual feasts, &c. And the devisee avers that such feasts were the usual feasts in Hawly; and so advows, &c. And by the Court, that is a good devise of a rent-charge by these words, with a clause of distress; because of the intent of the devisor, of a remedy and means to come to that rent-charge. So, cum clausula districtionis, is the same with cum clausula warrantiæ, which makes a warranty.

Streingsborrow against Beedlow.

They were tenants in common of a lease for years. And B. brought a partition upon the 32 H. 8. cap. 32. And the writ was general as in the register, with a secundum formam statuti, which made it to be a partition, upon his case within the statute, as the statute limits and appoints. But it had not been good if that clause had been omitted. And it was so ruled in one Maurices case.

[72] The Sheriff of Nottingham's Case.

An escape was brought against two sheriffs, one dies; the question was, if the writ shall abate. By the Court, in debt against two, the death of one abates the whole, but otherwise in trespass, 21 E. 4. 1. 2 H. 7. 16. Because they are several misdemeanors. But the Court deliver'd no opinion in the first case. But by the Court this difference was agreed, that an escape upon an arrest, by the same processe, as a cap. ad. respondend. &c. The writ ought to surmise, ad largum ire permisit, & non comparuit ad diem. Because the party was bayleable, and so the sheriff might lawfully suffer him to go at large. But otherwise, if the arrest be upon an execution, as a cap. ad satisfac. there ad largum ire permisit, is good enough.

Note, P. 2 Jac. C. B. The Lady Mounson against the Sheriffs of Lincoln City, for taking of insufficient security, upon 23 H. 6. And the death of one of the defendants did not abate the whole writ.

Buryes Case.

In the argument of Buryes case for a divorce, the 5 Rep. 98. there was cited 35 Eliz. B. R. rot. 605, that if a lay-man be made a commissary by the bishop, it is good, until it be undone by sentence; although that the canon says, that he ought to be a Doctor or a Batchelor of Divinity. But 21 H. 8. hath limited that a Doctor of the Civil Law may be a commissary.

GREGORY AGAINST OLDEN.

In debt upon an obligation. It was said that it was made upon a simonaical contract for presentation to the church, with the cure of souls; and so it was for symony. All that was averr'd to be matter de hors, and not appeard within the deed. And for that the plaintiff had judgement. For no such averment is given by the statute.

Note that if a venire fac. be return'd without the name of the sheriff endors'd; that is not ayded by the 18 Eliz. cap. 14. because it is not any return; and the statute remedies insufficient returns. And by Williams, that so it was adjudged. Trin. 40 Eliz. C. B. in Brownlowes office. Sir Henry Darcyes case. And Brownlowe agreed to it, and by Daniel, that it was so adjudg'd in the Kings Bench.

BRITTON AGAINST BARNET.

Britton delivers money to B. to deliver to C. who does not so. Br. brought an action of debt against B. And by the Court well brought. And Glanvil said at St. Albans term, in a case between Dowse and Cawley, Dowse delivered money to C. to dispatch his business in the Exchequer, and he does not do it; and an action of debt was well brought for that, and so adjudg'd: and also in the Common Bench, the Countess of Lincoln against Topcliff. T. makes a bill, testifying that he had receiv'd 7l. of the earl to buy bellows. But does not do it. An action of debt in that case lies, and so 'twas adjudged.

[73] POWELL AGAINST BRAZEN NOSE COLLEGE IN OXON.

A formedon in the discender was brought in a præcipe of 20 acres of land Luddington, and (in) was ommitted: and rul'd, that it shall be amended, although it was a fault of the cursitors, and not of the Judges or their Clerks of the Court, that being an original writ. And Williams who mov'd it vouch'd 48 E. 3. and 35 H. 6. 10.

GREEN AGAINST WALLWIN, OR WISEMAN.

In an ejectione firm. the plaintiff counts that A. was seis'd &c. And of that enfeoffed K. to the use of the plaintiff, and that he was seis'd by 27 H. 8. devisibus, &c. until the defendants lessor entred, and does not say (and him disseis'd) for the truth was, that cestuy que use, had not actually entred in the land. And if upon such a seisin by 27 H. 8. he may maintain an ejectione firm. was the question. And the Court seem'd that he could not, for they advis'd the defendant to demurr; for actual possession is not in cestuy que use by the statute. For he may disagree to it. And by Walmesly and Glanvil. That he may have an ass. but not a trespasse without actual possession.

DOWMAN AGAINST BUTTER.

Tr. 40 Eliz. 8. B. R. rot. 895.

D. sues B. upon a counterbond to save harmlesse, and B. said that the principal bond in which D. and he were obliged, was made upon an usurious contract; and D. pray'd to avoid that by pleader. And Walmesly said, the plaintiff shall recover. For that counterbond was made bona fide, and perhaps the surety was not conusant of the usurious contract, and then he cannot be, nor ought to plead that, as if error had been in the first suit; yet the surety shall recover upon the counterbond, although that he takes no advantage of the error. So if the surety had been an infante, and had not pleaded nonage. And that counterbonds mentioned in the statute 13 Eliz. are intended for payment of money, to him that lent the money, and not between him that borrows and the surety. Glanvil said, that would be a dangerous president to avoid the statute; for the surety may be a friend of the usurors, who will not plead the statute in an action of debt brought against him; and so the statute should be to little purpose. But at length judgement was given for the plaintiff. Then Glanvill said, that that judgement will be quickly carryed to Cheaside. Note, the saving harmlesse is the substance of the counterbond, 5 Rep. 27. 18 E. 4. 27.

THOROUGHGOODS CASE.

A. recovered in debt, and had execution against B. The defendant B. dies, and the sheriff levies the money upon the executors of B. and by the Court that was nought. For the writ was fier. fac. de bonis & catallis B. which cannot be after his death. But on the other part, if after execution awarded the plaintiff dies: yet by the Court the sheriff may levy the money. And if he makes no executors nor administrators as yet made, the money shall be brought into Court, and there deposited until, &c. Note Dyer 76. b.

An action upon the case for words was brought. Thou keepest an house of bawdry. And held by the Court, that it lies, because the words [74] are spoken in London, where it was said by Anderson By the custom there, such that keep a bawdy house may be corporally punisht, but not in other places. But by Glanvile, They may be put in Bridewell, or whipt by the common law for such misdemeanours. But by Anderson, That is for breaking of the peace vi & armis. Also such an offence is inquirable in the leet.

Note by the Court; Lessor for years rendring a rent acknowledges a statute, and the reversion is extended, and the conusee brought an action of debt for rent arrear, and well. But the defendant said that the plaintiff is outlawed, and issue is joyn'd upon null. tiel. record. And the record was certified much varying from the record of the outlawry, as it was pleaded in disability. And awarded that the party had fail'd of the record. And 7 H. 4. j. was denyed for law by the Court.

SUCKLINGE AGAINST CONEY.

Upon a special verdict, upon payment for a redemption of a mortgage, the mortgager comes at the day and place of payment, and said to the said morgagee, Here I am ready to pay you (naming him) the 200l. which was of due money, and yet held it all the time upon his arm in baggs. And adjudg'd no tender; for it might be counters or base coyn for anything appeared. Note, 5 rep. 114, 115. And by Anderson. It is no good tender to say I am ready, &c.

VEALE AGAINST REEDE.

U. brought a quid juris clamat upon a fine against R. &c. as lessee for life, R. said that he was seis'd in fee absque hoc, that he was seis'd for life onely, and issue upon that: and it was found, that R. was tenant in tayl after possibility of issue extinct. And the question was, for whom the issue is found, and for whom judgement shall be given. Williams. For the plaintiff, because it is an estate for life privileg'd, and ought to have been pleaded in bar, ve. 46 E. 3. 27. 15 E. 4. 28.

VAUGHAN AGAINST PARAMORE.

It was adjudged that in false judgment, all that are return'd by the sheriff to be suitors at the court baron, and present when the judgement was given, ought to return the writ, and not all those that ought to make sute at Court. For by that means the party shall never have it certified, as it may happen. ve. N. B. 18 d. Dyer 262. 1 E. 5. 36. false judgment, because the steward named in't, 6 rep. 11. The reason is, because he is not Judge there.

DOBSON AGAINST DUGDALE.

In an action upon the case for words, Thou art a cozener, the plaintiff shew'd how he was an officer, &c. and upon the evidence it appear'd that the Lord Treasurer had made A. deputy of the baylywick of Middlesex per hæc verba. I make A. my bayly, &c. to exercise the office of himself, or his assigns, at the pleasure and will of the Lord Treasurer. And because Dobson was assignee, by A. with the consent of the Lord Treasurer, and by the Court the assignment is not good; for A. is but tenant at will: and he cannot assign over that; and the clause upon that was repugnant. Upon which it was found by the direction of the Court against the plaintiff.

[75] ANDREWS AGAINST NEEDHAM.

Intr. M. 40, 41 Eliz. rot. 21. 21.

A. leases for years, by indenture. N. covenants to repair, &c. and to yield up all at the end of the term, but during that, one Blunt enters by an elder title. If the lessee be discharged of the covenant to yield up all, &c. And it seem'd to the Court that he was. For if the land be gone, the obligation is discharged. ve. 20 H. 6. 45 E. 3. 8.

DAVYES AGAINST BLUNT AND OTHERS.

False judgement, for error in an ancient demean, the writ de droit close was of five messuages, and he makes protestation to sue for five messuages in the nature of a writ of entry upon disseisin and yet he enters his plaint but for two messuages, and hath judgement for them only. And rul'd that it was error, for the writ de droit close, is their warrant, and that is the writ, and the plaint is the count, which ought to be pursuant.

Intr. H. 1. Car. 13. B. R. rot. 415.

Clow. fraights the wife of Conustable, who covenants with Clow. that his wife shall go with the next wind to Calles; and Clow. covenants that if the wife shall go the intended voyage and return, &c, that he should pay to Conustable 200l. And the plaintiff now in his count, counts that the defendant non solvit, &c. but he does not shew nor averr that the wife did go with the next wind. The defendant pleads a special plea, and traverse absque hac, that the wife went with the next wind.

First, It was ruled by the Court that the traverse is not well; for the voyage is the substance of the covenant, and not the going with the next wind, which is uncertain in every hour. And voucht, that a condition precedent is traversable. 3 H. 9. 33. 48 E. 3. 34. 9 E. 4. 3. b.

2. The declaration was upon a covenant by indenture between the plaintiff and the defendant and one A. And upon oyer of the deed, It was between the plaintiff and the defendant and A. and B. and for that cause naught. 15 E. 3. Three covenant joyntly and severally, and the plaintiff declares quod defendens not solvit, without saying, nor any of the others, and yet that was well enough, because the action was not brought against them all; for then otherwise it had been. And if any of the others had paid it to the defendant, might well and properly plead that. So it is in debt upon an obligation where two are bound joyntly and severally.

WALDEN AND GESNER AGAINST VEASELY.

Intr. H. 1 Car. B. R. rot. 710.

The plaintiffs being sheriffs of Coventry, &c. bring debt for 7l. and six pence for their fees for an execution of 181 pound. So that for their fees demanded was 12d. for every pound until 100l. and 6d. for every pound over and above. Read the words of the statute and for the construction of it, note the proviso in the statute 28 Eliz. which does not extend to a city corporate. And note that statute is introductive of a new law; for the encouraging of officers to venture to do executions. And in that case it was resolved.

1. That the sheriff may have an action of debt for his fee, although the statute does not give any remedy. And it was so adjudg'd. 14 Jac. [76] B. R. rot. 531. Probee and Lumbee Sheriffs of London. And so debt by a parson upon two E. 6. 6. for not setting out of tithes. And that in our case it was also ruled; that the sheriff may refuse to make execution, until his fee be paid him. But then see if a new sheriff be made, and before that the old one had made execution, what remedy now hath the party. And it seem'd to me, that he may have an account, or an action upon the case, in nature of an assumpsit.

2. It was resolved that the proviso extends to a city corporate, when judgment is there given within their franchise, and execution upon that: and not when judgement and execution issues out of superiour Courts, for in the first case the officer is not at that grand care and peril; but as to the sheriff of a county, his travail and labour is all one, be it in the body of the county or in a franchise. But if that town be a county of it self, there the sheriffs shall have their fees according to 28 Eliz. And now judgement was given for the plaintiff, but now there was much doubt upon the words of the statute, and the Court divided in that point; if the sheriff shall not have but 12d. for every pound to an hundred, and after 6d. or if he shall have but 6d. for every pound when the execution is more than an hundred. Coopers case, that a sheriff cannot take an obligation with a penalty for his fee within the statute.

BAGSHAR AGAINST SALTER.

In an assumpsit, the plaintiff declares; that whereas John Green was indebted to the defendant in 30l, and that the defendant had sued and recovered against Green. And in Tr. 18 Jac. had a cap ut lagat against Green directed to the sheriff. And upon communication between the plaintiff and the defendant; the defendant promised that if the plaintiff would go to the sheriff, and procure a special warrant and arrest John Green, that he would give him 40s. And averr'd that he had done so, and had often requested the same of the defendant. And issue joyn'd upon non assumpsit, it is found for the plaintiff. And it was moved in arrest of judgement, and so rul'd by the Court, that the assumpsit is void by 43 H. 6. And judgement quod querens nil capiat. But one Audleys case was vouch'd and agreed that an assumpsit made to an estranger, to go and help the sheriff to make execution is good, and an assumpsit lyes.

CROUCH AGAINST HANNY.

C. had judgement in the C. B. in an ejectione firm. and H. brought a writ of error in the Kings Bench. And the judgement was there also affirmed. And afterwards he brings error in the Parliament: and the Chief Justice in the Kings Bench brought the record it self in Parliament, and there left a transcript of it, and reports the record it self. And after, the Parliament is dissolved. And C. now prays execution, and had it: although that the error abated without the act of the party. And Noy said, It is doubted if error in Parliament shall be a supersedeas; for upon that if the party be in execution, he shall not be bayl'd as it should be in another Court. ve. 1 H. 7. 19. b. 15 H. 6. 18. By dissolution of Parliament the error is abated, 22 E. 3. 3. 1 H. 7. 19. And so was the case of Godsave and Heydon. Error in Parliament abated by dissolution. And by Doderidge error was brought in Parliament, and the party prays a scire fac. returnable the next Parliament, and it was denyed for the delay. And in our case execution was awarded.

[77] ARGOLL AGAINST CHEYNEY.

The point in that case was, father lessee for life, the remainder to the son in tayl, and a præcipe is brought against the father, who vouches the son; and a common recovery was had accordingly; and indentures made reciting, that that recovery was between the father and the recoverors, &c. to the uses in that indenture. And because no proof was of the assent of the son to that declaration of the uses, nor was party to the indenture, the Court directed the jury to find the uses according to the estates that the parties had at the time of the recovery: and so they agreed, that if two joynt-tenants suffer a common recovery, and one only declares the uses; that does not bind the moiety of the other. Unless that the consent of the other to that declaration be proved. ve. 2 Rep. 57. a. Dyer 143. a.

CALLY AGAINST SIR WILLIAM FISH.

Intr. T. 22 Jac. B. R. rot. 1307.

Upon evidence, the case was thus. F. had three several closes, 1st. arable, 2d. pasture, 3d. medow. B. pretends a right to all, and enters, and makes a lease of all to try title. The servants of A. with carts about their masters business enter in one of the closes. And by the Court that is an ejectment of all: although there be not any proof of the command by their master.

HEENE AGAINST WARDEN.

Intr. H. 22 Jac. B. R. rot. 654.

Judgement for ideo concessum, for consideratum was revers'd for that error. And so also M. 2 Car. B. R. rot. 231. Cooper against Williams. Judgement revers'd because of the word concessum.

MARSHAL AGAINST ALLEN.

An action upon the case was brought for words, He is a base broken rascal, and hath broken twice, and I will make him break the third time. And issue is joyn'd upon not guilty; and it was found for the plaintiff, and now moved in arrest of judgement: that it is not actionable (viz.) he hath broken twice; yet at that time he might be a sufficient merchant as others. And I will make him break, &c. is but a threatning, &c. But by Justice Jones otherwise it had been if he had said, He will break the third time. And a day was given to shew cause why judgement should not be reversed.

Dixye against Brown.

An executor of an executor was sued for a legacy, and he pleads riens in le mains. And that plea in the Spiritual Court was refused: upon which a prohibition was awarded out of the Kings Bench. Note in the case there was these points toucht upon; that in the Common Bench a prohibition shall not be warded, until the suggestion be of record; and for that the prohibition is the suit of the party, and shall not be discontinu'd by the demise of the King. But otherwise if it be out of the Kings Bench, for there a prohibition may be awarded upon a bare surmise, without any suggestion of record, and is not but in nature of a commission prohibitory: which shall be discontinued by demise of the King.

[78] Carleton against Hutton.

C. claimes the upper place in a seat in the church, and H. disturbs him in violent manner; and the bishop of the diocesse sends an inhibition to C. until the matter be determined before him. And by the Court a prohibition was awarded; because it does not belong to the Spiritual Court: and as well the priority in the seat as the seat it self may be claimed by prescription; and an action upon the case lies for it at common law, ve. Litt. 121. 122.

Bellamy against Alden.

An administrator accounts before the Ordinary, and a creditor of the intestate takes exception to it, and averr'd that the administrator had not paid so much: and the administrator proved payment by one witness, and for default of better proof, he was excommunicate. And a prohibition was awarded. Because the Ordinary had not power in such a case to hold plea, and to try the payment or not payment: or administer an interrogatory to a witness, but ought to accept the account as it is, for the creditors may sue for their debts at the common law; and then payment or not payment shall be well tryed, and there one witness will suffice. 13 E. 3. Exec. 91. An executor shall not have an account against his companion.

Dixon against James.

An escape was brought against the baily of a franchise; and the plaintiff counts of a recovery in the Common Bench, by an attachment of priviledge in the Common Bench. And now error was brought in the Kings Bench.

1. Because he had not shewed, that the plaintiff was an officer. By the Court, That the sheriff nor bayly shall not take advantage for that error.

2. He had counted that the bayly had arrested the party; and detein'd him ex causa prædicta, from such a day until such a day, in which he escaped. And he does not say, that the bayly arrested him virtute warranti, which the sheriff had made to the bayly. And that also was disallowed, because ex causa prædicta supplies that. For he cannot be intended to be arrested for other cause. And judgement affirm'd.

Awdley's Case.

He had the grant of townclerkship in reversion, and he in possession dies, and one Joy was admitted to that office, and Awdley had a restitution: and it was said that the Kings Bench hath jurisdiction of all such causes, and one Bostons case was vouched. B. was elected to be alderman upon purpose to oust him of an office of town-clerk, because they are incompatible offices in one person: and in the Kings Bench he had restitution to the first office. And one Middletons case was vouched, and he was elected constable, and ousted by the justices, and in the Kings Bench had restitution; and it is the direct way to try the title upon the return of the restitution. And agreed by the whole Court.

[79] GERMIN AGAINST RANDAL.

Intr. H. 1 Jac. B. R. rot. 445.

The condition of an obligation was to pay 20d. weekly for the keeping of a bastard, according to an order made by the justices, &c. The defendant pleads null. talem fec. ordinem, and the plaintiff had judgement, for that is an estoppel to the defendant. Otherwise it had been, if it had been according to an order to be made, &c. Because that is executory. ve. Dyer 196.

An action of debt was brought against A. as executor to Samuel Baker upon an obligation; the defendant defendit vim, &c. Et dixit quod script. præd. non est fact. suum. And issue upon that, and it is found for the plaint. And it was moved in arrest of judgement, that the plea was not good: for suum cannot be referred to the testator, of whom no mention is made in the Bar. But by the Court, judgement for the plaintiff. And by Doderidge. If husband and wife bring an action of trespass of battery, de bonis suis asportatis, that is good, pro reddendo singulis singula.

NEWMAN AGAINST CHEYNEY.

An action of trover is brought against baron and feme, for a conversion (during the coverture) by the wife. And it was said by the Court, that it is good. For by Just. Jones. Although that feme covert cannot make a contract for goods, nor be charged for them; yet she may convert them, &c.

DROPE AGAINST THAIRYE.

Intr. T. 1 Car. B. R. rot. 115.

It was adjudged that the master may have an action against the common ostler, if his servant be robbed there, and he need not shew that the servant was in his journey. For he may be at the end of his journey, as at London about his business. Sir William Sandy's case was vouched to be term. 7 Jac. rot. 15. 35. B. R. It was between Beedle and Morris. Where the master had the action.

HARDEN AGAINST WARNER.

Intr. 19 Jac. B. R. rot. 1553. vel. 1353.

A feoffment was made by Sir William Shelly to 4 men, with power of revocation, upon tender of a ring, or a pair of gloves of 12d. price, to the feoffees or any of them, or to the heir of any of them. Sir William was attainted of treason. And by Act of Parliament 28 Eliz. with the same words which are in 33 H. 8. his lands, &c. are given to the Queen, with a clause, that every one that claimes any interest from Sir William bring their deeds to be enrolled in the Exchequer, otherwise they shall be void. And that feoffment was enrolled accordingly. And afterwards the Queen awards a commission to Sir Francis Fortescue to tender the ring, &c. according to the proviso in the deed of feoffment. Who returns that he had tendred the ring, &c. to Sir Anthony Hungerford, heir apparent of one of the feoffees. And then the Queen makes a lease of that land to Hardwin, who enters. And Warner brought an ejectione firm. And in that case it was resolved.

1. That the return of the commission was good, as to the ring, although that no price of it was in the commission return'd. For the price of twelve pence only extends to the gloves.

[80] 2. That that return was naught as to the tender to the heir apparent, which implyes that the ancestor himself was alive, and then it is not according to the proviso. In debt upon an obligation, &c. against one an heir apparent in C. B. P. 35 Eliz. rot. 242. Chawdley against Newdigate and a recovery there. Afterwards for that very error, 'twas revers'd in the Kings Bench. So it is naught in our case, also the certificate cannot be supplied by a subsequent record. But otherwise if it had been found by office that Sir Anthony Hungerford had been heir in tro. to one of the feoffees: and after that certificate had been returned as now it is: there it should have been good enough by all the justices, and by the counsel. But by Jones that is ayded also. For the return was secund. form. conditionis, ve. 2 H. 4.

LUTHER AGAINST HOLLAND.

An action was brought upon 5 Eliz. for perjury before one of the Masters of Chancery, who had power to take an oath. Adjudg'd quod nihil cap. per brev. And the reason was, because he does not shew that the oath was in Court. By Whitlock. They were called Masters of Chancery, because they were priests and clergy men in ancient time; and that was the reason that the Lord Chancellor had the disposal of the petty offices of the King for the preferment of those clerks. That was also the reason that they could not marry, until they were inabled by the stat. &c.

CHALLONER AGAINST HOBBS.

The plaintiff in a replevin had judgement, and a writ of enquiry of damages in the Common Bench. The defendant brought errour, then the writ of enquiry is returned in the Common Bench: and judgment there given of the damages: and the plaintiff moved in the Common Bench, that he might proceed to execution for the damages; and awarded that he might proceed. Mr. Brown said, that this is the course upon error upon an interlocutory judgement, to move the superiour Court, where error is brought, for a rule to proceed in the inferiour Court, notwithstanding the errour brought, ve. Dy. 32. 8 Rep. 142. 42 Eliz. 33. 11 H. 4. 49. 8 H. 7. 10.

DANIEL AGAINST UPTON.

H. 22 Jac. B. R. rot. 720.

F. devises land to his wife to dispose at her will and pleasure, and to give it to which of his sons he pleaseth, and dies. The wife takes another husband; and by indenture, reciting the devise, and her power by that, &c. during the coverture, enfeoffs William son of F. and yet the husband and wife continue possession, and the wife only levies a fine to William, sur conusans de droit, without proclamations, &c. And by the Court adjudged, that the wife had not but a power; and that she notwithstanding the coverture might execute the power: for the son is in by the devisor. It was adjudg'd in the time of Poph. The father devised land to his two sons equally to be divided betwixt them. And ruled that the youngest son shall have it for life, although that the eldest being his heir had fee in the other moyety, by discent of the fee; because of the intent of the devisor of the estate. 10 H. 7. 20. A. devises to B. in tayl, the reversion to C. in fee, upon condition that B. shall grant a rent-charge to D. in fee. And adjudged that that is a good rent-charge, and shall bind him in the remainder after the tayl determined.

[81] WATLINGTON AGAINST PERRY.

W. sues P. in the Spiritual Court for tithes of a dove-house. P. upon suggestion had a prohibition, that he did not prove his suggestion within the six moneths. W. takes issue upon the suggestion, and it is found against him; and yet he prays costs by the statute 2 E. 6. for failer of proof within the six moneths. But by the Court adjudg'd, that he shall not have it; for he hath surceast his time, to take advantage of that, and he can never have a consultation; ergo, he shall not have double costs. Read the words of the statute.

STEWARDS CASE.

Parson prefers his bill for tythes of corn, and alleges that time out of mind, &c. in that parish they have used to allot the tenth shock; whereupon the parishioner suggests, that the parishioners and all those who had estates, &c. have us'd only to set out the tenth sheaf for tithes, and had a prohibition. The parson prays a consultation, but it was denyed. And resolv'd by the Court.

1. That the parson might sue for modus decimandi in the Spiritual Court. 2 R. 3. 3. a. But if the parishioner denies that, they ought to surcease, and a prohibition lies, and that shall be tried at the common law.

GOODWIN AGAINST WILLOUGHBY.

In an assumpsit. The plaintiff declares, that the husband of the defendant upon an in simul computav. was indebted to him in 100l. and that the husband had promised to pay it. But he died, and that the defendant having notice of that, and that the plaintiff intended to sue her upon that promise: came of her own accord to the plaintiff and requested him, to forbear to sue until Michaelmas: and in consideration of that promised to pay, &c. And the issue upon non assumpsit is found for the plaintiff, and now moved in arrest of judgement.

1. Because it is not shewn what the account was, &c. But by the Court, that is well enough, because it is the sole inducement, and need not be particularly shewn; because it would be infinite.

2. The second exception was, because it is not shewn, that she was executrix to her husband, and therefore not lyable. Justice Jones voucht Whittypools case. An infant contracts, and at full age promises to pay, &c. And an assumpsit was brought against him. And yet that being not for necessaries was meerly a void contract. And Doderidge said, that the wife of such an infant, who had contracted as abovesaid, being executrix to the infant makes promise for forbearance, an assumpsit lies. Crew, It is a grand presumption, that it was a due debt, and that she was executrix to her husband. Jermin pray'd judgement for the plaintiff, because the defendant first made the request to forbear: as Dyer 127. And now a peremptory day was given to the defendant, &c. to shew cause why judgement, &c. should not be given, &c.

PASCHAL AGAINST WARREN.

The administrator had judgement upon an obligation, &c. and the administrator dies intestate. B. his administrator sues a scire fac. upon that judgement. And upon two nihils returned, had judgement, and [82] execution made upon it. And now it was moved upon the very matter, that the administrator upon an administrator could not have execution, &c. But praid now, that he should not have the monyes levied, &c. But the Court said, he came too late after judgement upon the scir. fac. to remedy it by motion: but he is put to his writ of error. And so there was a day given to shew cause why the plaintiff should not have his money. M. 44 & 45 Eliz. rot. 168.

Yate against Goffe was voucht, that an executor of an administrator shall not have judgement or execution in such a case, 4 Rep. 9.

MARKHAM AGAINST COBBE.

Intr. T. 1 Car. B. R. rot. 112.

[S. C. W. Jones, 147. See Wells v. Abrahams, 1872, L. R. 7 Q. B. 560; Midland Insurance Company v. Smith, 1881, 6 Q. B. D. 569; Appleby v. Franklin, 1885, 17 Q. B. D. 94.]

An action of trespasse was brought for breaking his house, and taking and carrying away of 3000l. of money in baggs. The defendant said, that he and one A. were indicted for that before the Justices of Assize, &c. in the county, &c. by procurement of the plaintiff for the same offence, as of burglary, &c. and that A. was found guilty as principal, and he as accessary, and had his clergy. And demanded judgement if an action shall be brought against him: for nemo debet bis puniri pro uno dilict. 4 Rep. 39. 43. 2 Rep. 3. 14. and 9. And when he had been convicted of fellony, the plaintiff had not any remedy for his goods, untill the statute 21 H. 8. It seemed to Justice Jones that the action would not lie, because it is found to be felony by the verdict and inquest; and the party shall not be admitted now to make that trespass. Tit. Coron. Stamf. 100. Doderidge and Whitelock on the contrary; because an indictment is at the suit of the King. But otherwise if it had been by appeal 6 E. 4. 4. Felony made petty treason, yet is presentable at leet as felony. 1 R. 3. 1. 11 H. 7. 22. But by the Court the plea in bar is naught; because it does not shew that the plaintiff had given evidence for the conviction; for otherwise he shall not have restitution: and an allegation of procurement is not sufficient. Et ea de causa, judgement was given for the plaintiff.

VINCENT AGAINST BEVERLY.

An annuity was granted by the father to the younger son, who delivers the deed to a friend, who loses it. And the younger son sues the eldest at the council at York. Doderidge said, There was not any remedy or ground of equity in this case, for the deed might be upon condition or other limitation; and the deed might be lost by practice or covin to charge the heir absolutely. That case was referred to Justice Hutton, H. 2 Car. and it is said by Doderidge, and not denyed by any, that if the lessor enters and suspends his rent, he shall not have his remedy in equity for it: for it is contrary to the law.

CALF AGAINST BINGLEY.

C. recovered in debt against A. and had a sciri fac. against Bingley, his baily, who pleads that after the judgment A. brought error in the Exchequer-Chamber. And hanging that, A. had rendred his body in the Kings Bench, for only a transcript of the record is removed in custod. marescalli; and there hanging, the error dies. Which matter he is put to averr per pais. And it was ruled by the Court.

1. That that averrment is naught, for it ought to have been by record. And Jerman said, that hanging that suspention of the exe-[83]-cution; the principal cannot render himself, for then he cannot be in execution.

2. That by the death of the principal the bayl is discharged. So by Justice Jones if he had died before the return of the first sciri fac. So in Hobbs and Todcastles case, that death after a cap. against a principal, and before a sciri fac. against the bayl is a discharge; and so all the clerks affirmed.

HODGES AGAINST MOOR.

The defendant being burges of Parliament, brought a letter from the speaker of the Parliament to the Kings Bench, to stay, &c. And it was disallowed by the Court, for it ought to have been a writ of privilege. And it was said that when Thorp was speaker of Parliament, he had a general supersedeas for all actions against him, &c. And it was held ill, for he ought to have had a special supersedeas for every action, and that the Parliament only priviledges the person of the members of it, and not stayes the proceedings of the Kings Court. And so in the case of Curtesie against Wescot, that if A. had recovered against B. in two several actions, and had judgement, &c, that B. might not have one audita querela, but he ought to have two several writs.

SHARP AGAINST ROLT.

R. promised to Sharp that if he would deliver certain wares to the daughter of the defendant, that he would pay for them. By the Court that shall be intended payment to the plaintiff. But yet the declaration ought to have been certain. But in our case it was well enough, ve. 40 E. 3. 30. 2 E. 4. 21. Plowd. 149. An assumpsit without shewing to whom is naught. And so it was adjudged upon a false judgement. T. 3 Jac. C. B. rot. 507. Harding against Unton, that if the jury found, that the defendant assum'd modo & forma, without saying to whom yet it is good, and so it was adjudged.

COWLIN AGAINST COOK.

In an action upon the case the plaintiff declares, that whereas the defendant was obliged to him in 100l. and that he intended to sue him for it, that the defendant in consideration that the plaintiff would deferr the payment of the money aforesaid, and not sue him upon that obligation, promised, that he would pay him, and assum'd upon that. Mr. Littleton, that it is not a good consideration; for he may forbear and deferr, &c. for a day only, &c. as 19 Jac. Kebbs case. A lease at will is not a good consideration, for the lessor may determine it presently. But by the Court in our case, it is a good consideration, for the deferring shall be intended during all the life time of the obligee: and that if he sues him sooner upon that obligation, an action upon the case lies. And so it was ruled in one Barkehams case. But if it had been quod deferrat, pauculum temporis, that had not been a good consideration without putting a certain time.

WEAVER AGAINST FELTON.

Upon error; by the Court, after in nullo est erratum pleaded, the plaintiff and defendant are estopped to alledge a diminution, and no certiorari can be awarded at the suit of the parties. But Bishops case, and other presidents are, that the Court ex officio may award, a certi-[84]-orari ad informand. conscientiam: and that which is certified shall be annexed to the record, and is called a rider roll, ve. 22 E. 4. 46. a. 28 H. 6. 10. Dyer 32. b. 9 E. 4. 32. b. And note in Chapmans case the difference. If a diminution be alleged, in a thing collateral as warranty of atturney, or any mean process, that is not of the body of the record, so diminution may be alleg'd, after in nullo est er. But otherwise if it be of the substance, and part of the record it self, as if returned in the detinue only, where the first action was in the debet and the detinet. ve. 1 H. 7. 21. which reconciles many differences.

HAMAN AGAINST WITCHBOW.

The plaintiff in an action upon the case declared, that he and F. are tenants in common, &c. and have common in the land of the defendant, and that the defendant had made trenches in it, by which the cattel of the plaintiff were in danger to perish, &c. And the issue upon not guilty is found for the plaintiff; and now mov'd in arrest of judgement, that the declaration is naught, because a tenant in common cannot have an action in such a case. And that was allowed by the Court for good cause.

SURREY AGAINST PIGGOT.

H. 1 Car. B. R. rot. 124.

The case was in effect thus: A. seis'd of Wh. acre, and also of an house, with a curtillage and hop-yard, and in the curtilage there was a water-pond for the cattel, and the water-pond came and gourded through the hop-yard into the pond. A. enfeoffs P. of the hop-yard, and afterwards leases the house and curtillage to S. P. stops the stream, and S. brought an action upon the case. And the question was, if by the unity of possession, the water-course be gone, so that the feoffee of the land by which he gourded might stop it. And adjudg'd, that it is not extinct.

1. Because it is a thing of necessity by the continual flowing of the stream, 12 H. 7. 4. of a gutter. So it is also of a thing that hath an existence during the time of the unity. As a warren, ve. 35 H. 55. Warrens 16. Otherwise of a rent or a way which a man cannot have in his own land, 14 H. 7. 7. And Barksdale cited the case of M. 6 Jac. B. R. between Challoner and Moor, that an ejectione firm. does not lye of a water-course, because it is a thing fluent and current, and so incertain. Note 11 H. 7. 25. of a gutter. Mr. Beare argued to the contrary, and voucht 21 E. 3. 2. 31 H. 6. 3. a cross way extinct by unity. And by Doderidge, That a cross way of necessity is not extinguisht by unity; otherwise of a cross way of ease. And so was the opinion of the Lord Popham in the Kings Bench in the Lady Browns case, who had a water-pipe through Whiteacre, running to her house, and purchases Whiteacre, and then cuts and stops the pipes. There such a water course is good; because of the intent of the owner declared, and the thing hath not now a continuance in the possession of the party himself. And Doderidge also agreed, that the fence is extinguisht by unity; because it is not a thing of necessity. And so the other justices agreed. And by Crew Ch. Justice, that it was adjudged accordingly in 3 Jac. B. R. between Drew and Prake. And Doder. also put a case which was not denied. A. had a water-mill, and a water-course to it, over his own land, and infeoffs another of that land, yet the watercourse shall remain for the necessity, and the feoffee cannot stop it.

[85] LEWES AGAINST WHITTON.

Whitton sued Luce in the Spiritual Court for a defamation, and had sentence, L. appeales, and hanging the appeal comes a pardon, which relates to the offence, and pardons it, then L. deferrs his appeal; and for that W. had costs taxt him: and now L. pray'd a prohibition, because he deferr'd his appeal because of the pardon, which had taken away the offence. And by the Court in that case, after the pardon the inferiour Court cannot tax costs; but it was urged that the superiour Courts might tax costs upon the desertion of the appeal: which is an offence after the pardon. But it was answered on the other side, that it was in vain to prosecute the appeal, when the offence it self is pardon'd. The words were, Thou art a pander, to Sir Henry Vaughan; and there was much debate if they were actionable at common law; yet it was agreed, that a sute may be brought for them in the Spiritual Court, as for calling one whore, bawd, or drunkard. But otherwise by Jones, if he had said that he was drunk, for then a prohibition lyes. And it was rul'd in 6 Jac. B. R. in the case of Cradock against Thomas; a prohibition was granted in a sute for calling one whoreson. And in Weeks case, a prohibition in a sute for calling one knave.

Dr. Lambes Case.

He was indicted for sorcery and witchcraft (viz.) quod exercuit quasdam malas & execrabiles, & diabolicas artes, Anglice witchcraft; Serjeant Attoe took exception to it, because there is no word there that signifies witchcraft in the indictment, and therefore naught. As an indictment, that A. had murdered quendam hominem ignotum Anglice I. S. that is not good. Now incantation is an apt and proper word for witchcraft, as 4. Rep. Tormentum, Anglice a gun is good enough; because there is no other proper word for it. And for that the indictment was quash'd.

Delavel against Clare.

In an action upon the case the plaintiff counts that the defendant put cloth to the plaintiff being a taylor to make him a suit of cloths, and promised to pay him as much as he deserv'd for the making of it, and for the necessaries thereof, &c. The defendant pleads that he was an infant at the time of the promise: yet judgement was for the plaintiff; and this case was vouch'd M. 17 Jac. B. R. rot. 1574. Blackstones case. A brewer brought an action upon the case against an infant for beer, which he had sold to the infant, and the action was maintainable. For there need not in our case any averrment, of necessary apparel, and convenient for the infant, for the promise is for making of it, and for petty necessaries also, as for lineings and thred, &c. But an obligation with a penalty, by an infant is void: although it be for necessaries. And a case M. 3. Jac. in B. R. was vouch'd, that a gardian in soccage may grant a coppyhold that escheats to an infant.

Giggham against Purchase.

An obligation to pay 100l. 31 day Septemb. in debt brought upon that, and the issue upon payment, and found for the plaintiff. And it was mov'd in arrest of judgement that that issue is upon an impossibility. For Septemb. hath but 30 dayes. Then by the Court it is pay-[86]-able presently, and non payment ad diem is well found for the plaintiff, and the issue is ayded by 18 Eliz. of Jeofayles, and judgement for the plaintiff.

Parke against Stewsam.

An action upon the case is brought, for stopping a way which the plaintiff had from such a place over Black acre, where the nusance is, unto such a field (by name) and it was rul'd to be good, without shewing what interest he had in that field. For it shall be intended to be a common field. But otherwise it had been, usque ad talem clausum. There he ought to shew what interest he hath in the close. Note 8 H. 5. 4 b.

Palmer against Litherland.

In that case it was agreed by Doderidge and James, that an executor durante minore ætate, if he waste the goods after the age of the infant, shall be charg'd upon the special matter, and not as executor in his own wrong; because he had a lawfull authority to that time. 6 Rep. 18. b.

Merritons Case.

A. and B. leases to M. for years, and covenant that he may alien without disturbance, interruption or incumbrance by them; and an obligation was made for performance, &c. A. makes another lease to C. who enters, and M. brought debt &c. and by the Court it is well. For the covenant is broken, and them shall not be taken joyntly only, but severally also. ve. 2 Rep. 3. 12.

Rochester against Keckhouse.

Error upon judgement in the Common Bench in an ejectione firm. of one messuage or tenement. And it was revers'd because of the incertainty. Note Dy. 264. Mich. 4 Jac. C. B. Waste, in messuagia sive tenemento, and yet well by the certain assignment. Affirmed by the whole Court that a writ in the disjunctive is void.

Petty against Hobson.

Upon error, a nisi prius awarded to be coram Fr. Harvey Armig. uno Iust. Dom. Regis de Banco, and it was return'd to be coram Fr. Harvey milit. &c. and yet good. For he may be knighted after the commission, and before the return; and so it was adjudg'd. ve. 35 H. 6.

Crabb against Tooker.

Intr. H. 1 Car. B. R. rot. 315.

Upon a marriage between the son of T. and the daughter of C. it was covenanted, that after the marriage, &c. T. should find to his son and his wife, and their issues, competent entertainment of meat and drink, and during the life of T. and to live with him in his house. And that if the said T. the son, and his wife should dislike to live together, that then the son and wife should have such lands and such goods of T. the father, and to live where they please. The son having issue dies, the wife takes a second husband: the wife and T. dislike and disagree, &c. [87] And now C. brought covenant upon the indenture for the lands and goods. Whitlock said, that that is a disagreement within the covenant, because it came in lieu of maintenance. Doderidge and Jones on the contrary, for the disagreement between the father and son, in the life of the son had not been sufficient. But by the Court, that T. ought to find meat and drinke, &c. to the wife and her issue by the first husband, during the life of T. and judgement was given according to the opinion of Doderidge and Jones.

By Mr. Littleton, who mov'd divers exceptions to an inquisition taken by the coroner of Montgomery; and it was adjudg'd that such an inquisition ought to be upon view of the body. But when a man drowns himself, and the body cannot be found; that cannot be found before the coroner, but the justices of the peace ought to inquire of that. As it was declar'd for law. T. 13 Jac. B. R.

Mason and Bavy against Dixon.

Intr. T. 2 Car. B. R. rot. 1365.

The sheriff arrests A. upon a latitat at the sute of B. A. escapes, B. makes executors and dies; and they bring an escape. And it was doubted if it lies, because a latitat is onely as a mean processe, and is not an execution, in which case the party hath not other remedy: and the Court was divided in opinion. Hide and Jones, that it does lye, Doderidge and Whitlock that it does not. 5 Rep. 27. Trover by an executor for conversion in vita testatoris. And in M. 33, 34 Eliz. C. B. rot. 506. the Bishop of Lichfields case, a quare impedit by an executor for disturbance in vita testatoris. And now this difference was put and agreed, that the executor shall have the action, where the thing itself is to be recovered: but not where damages only are to be recover'd.

Sir Richard Lucy's Case.

In. M. 2 Car. B. R. rot. 150.

He was indicted for not repairing of an high way. And by Serjeant Thinne an exception was taken, because he is miles & Barronettus, and is not named Barronet in the indictment, and Mr. Holborn said it was resolved in the Common Bench, that in an action brought against a Barronet, he ought to be nam'd Barronet, and it is a clause that they shall be impleaded, &c. by such name in their patent. And the indictment above was quash'd, because it is not shew'd of what place Sir Richard Lucy was an inhabitant.

Wood against Witherick.

The plaintiff declares upon an assumpsit, upon an insimul computav. &c. The defendant pleads infancy, the plaintiff replies that it was for necessaries: and agreed by the Court, that an action upon the case, &c. shall lye well upon a promise by an infant for necessaries. But in our case the action is grounded upon an accompt, which an infant cannot make. And in our case, the value and necessity of the things is not requisite to be given in evidence, but only the accompt; and therefore in our case the action will not lye. But by Master Mason, and so it was adjudged, M. 19 Jac. B. R. Sterril against Holliday; and the reason was because an infant may be an accomptant.

[88] Tharsby against Warn and Sands.

Intr. T. 2 Car. B. R. rot. 1033.

T. brought an action of trespass 1. a. Car. against W. and S. for taking of his goods, &c. they justifie the taking of them by authority of a commission of sewers, granted by the late King James, for a tax assest, by authority of that according to a stat. 32 H. 8. cap. 5. And the barr adjudg'd ill, because they do not averr, that the assessment was in the time of King James. For the commission is expired by the death of the King. And note well the clause in the stat. 32 H. 8. shall be intended in the time of the same King that granted the commission. And rule was given for judgement.

A. for consideration promised to make to M. an assurance of Wh. acre, but afterwards he refuses to make it; and M. sues him to make it, in the Court of Request. And there was now mov'd for a prohibition, because M. might have an action for that at the common-law. But not allow'd. For by the Court, he cannot sue at common-law to assure Wh. acre, the thing itself, but to recover of the damages only.

2. A prohibition was pray'd; because it appear'd in the bill, that the plaintiff is a recusant convicted, and so a person excommunicate; but by the Court, the defendant hath answered him, there admitting him a person, able; and tis now too late to have that plea. And a prohibition was denied.

Note, an infant brought an appeal of murther by his guardian: and at the day in Court, it was pray'd, that the guardian shall not be demanded; because he is sick, and prays two or three days longer. By the Court, that cannot be in an appeal, and we will not make new laws. So the guardian was demanded, and he came not, by which he lost his appeal.

Sherwoods Case.

An action of trespass was brought, for taking of a load of fetches. The defendant said, that they did grow in Wh. and Bl. acre, and for Bl. acre convey shis title from A. and for Wh. acre from Pots, and Dame Ursula his wife, and that he by their commandement, &c. and it was rul'd by the Court.

1. That it is not a good exception to the barr, that the wife of Potts was called lady, but otherwise in a writ.

2. That the commandement shall be taken reddendo singula singulis.

3. It was rul'd to be a good exception, because the defendant had not aver'd quantum crescebat in Wh. acre, and quant. in Bl. acre, and for that the plea was ill. But in our case the defendant had demurr'd upon the replication of the plaintiff, which was ill. And so it was of purpose as it seem'd in policy.

Kitely against Haynes.

Intr. M. 2 Car. B. R. rot. 4837.

An action upon the case upon 9 several assumpsits of several summs of money, which in the whole came to 52l. when in truth the particulars did not amount to so much. And issue is joyn'd and found for the plaintiff, upon a non assumpsit, and damages assest to 42l. which is lesse than was due. And the first matter was mov'd in arrest of judgement, and rul'd that it shall be arrested, 5 E. 4. 14. See such a case resolved.

[89] Note A. recover'd and had judgement against B. and had a cap. and pays the sheriff his fee, and delivers him the cap. and shews him B. and the sheriff turns himself about, and said I cannot see him; and afterwards returns a non est inventus. And upon affidavit made of it, how it was done; the sheriff was remov'd, and a new one made: an attachment was granted against him, because the contempt was made during his office.

Bellamy against Balthrop.

Intr. M. 2. Car. Br. rot. 179.

By the Court, That where the defendant in trover, &c. justifies by lease of the tithes, &c. by the impropriator for a year, that yet it is meerly void without deed; otherwise if it be by lease of the tithes of a year by the parson himself. And that so it was rul'd 20 Jac. B. R. Bennet against Spell.

Good against Lawrence.

Intr. M. 2 Car. B. R. rot. 119.

Errour was assign'd, because the judgement in the inferiour Court was so entred. Ideo ad petitionem querent. considerat. adjudicat. & assess. By Court, quod quær. recup. damna, &c. taxed by the jury, nec non damna de incremento, &c. and rul'd for error.

1. For the addition of the adjudicat. & assess.

2. Because there is not any request of the plaintiff, for the increasing of the damages, and that ad petitionem quærent. before was misplaced, and it is not sufficient, for it is an undue place. So judgement was revers'd.

Dr. Cademan against Grendan.

Intr. T. 2 Car. B. R. rot. 549.

C. brought an action of trespass against G. who pleads the Statute of 3 Jac. cap. 5. of Recusancy; that if any popish recusant be convicted, that he shall be taken in law as an excommunicate person; and averr'd that the plaintiff was convicted at such a place, &c. unde petit ludic. of the bill. The plaintiff demurrs, quia placitum illud minus suffic. certum & issuabile in lege existit, &c. And the Court for the plaintiff, that the plea is naught.

1. Because there is not shewn before what justices he was convicted: so that if it had been denied, the Court might know to whom to write for a certificate of it.

2. He hath not averr'd his plea with a hoc paratus est verificare by record.

3. The conclusion, as judgement of the bill is also naught. But of the third part there was some doubt. But at length by the Court, a respondeas ouster was awarded. And so it was also in Tr. 2 Car. B. R. rot. 894. Ratcliffe against Bewcock, upon that statute; the defendant concludes, judgement si actio where it should have been, if he shall be answered, ve. 24 E. 3. 26. 34 H. 6. 8. 11. rep. 52. Clench the clark shewed a record, Pasc. 2 Car. B. R. rot. 331. where the defendant after imparlance pleads out-lary in the plaintiff, and demands judgement of the bill. And judgement was, that he shall answer further. And the Court agreed to that.

Note a prohibition was awarded, upon the 23 H. 8. because the party was sued out of the diocesse. And now a consultation was [90] pray'd because the inferiour Court had remitted that cause to the Arches, and their jurisdiction also. Yet a consultation was denyed. For it ought to be pleaded upon the prohibition.

Ganton against Ganton.

Intr. M. 2 Car. B. R. rot. 366.

Errour upon a judgement in the Isle of Elye.

1. In the stile of the Court, because it is not shewn by what authority they held pleas there.

2. Because it is not shewn that the cause of action arises within their jurisdiction. And although that in that Court they do not use other entry of the stile, or of the matter, yet when they are to certifie it, they ought to shew those things; for the superiour Courts take not notice of any inferiour Courts or of their authority, unless it be in case of the County Palatine, or a Court by Act of Parliament, as in Wales. And judgement was revers'd.

Halsells Case.

He was indicted for stopping the Kings highway in Kensinton, but does not allege any buttals of the King, (viz.) leading from such a village to such a village, &c. And by Justice Jones it needs not, being the nusance is in the Kings highway, which is intended to go through all the realm. But otherwise it should have been of another common way. To which Doder. and Whitlock agreed.

Note, if a lat. be against two, one is taken, and he puts in bayl in Mich. term, and afterwards the other is taken, and he puts in bayl in Hill. term: and it was pray'd that the bayl of Mich. term might be taken off the file of that term, and put upon the file of Hill. term; for otherwise the plaintiff cannot proceed against them joyntly, upon bayl put in several terms. And Clench Deputy Secondary said, that that is the course of the Court. And it was rul'd that it should be done according to the use in such a case.

LAYCOCK AND HIS WIFE AGAINST THE UNDER SHERIFF OF WILTS.

They count that they have sued a lat. against one Willmott, and that the husband delivered it to the under sheriff when W. was in presence, and he was the under sheriff appointed, and did execute that office, and yet notwithstanding he returns non est inventus, in deceptionem. And upon that they bring this special action upon their case against the defendant. Serjeant Ashley argued that it lies. For an escape shall be always brought against the sheriff himself, yet upon a special falsity an action may be well brought against the under sheriff. Dyer 238, 239. 278. But the Court seem'd to the contrary. For the under sheriff is not an officer to the Court, but the sheriff himself shall be amerc'd for all defaults, neglects, and falsities of the under sheriff, but shall not be imprisoned for him. And note 5 E. 3. 26. No challenge for consanguinity to the under sheriff. And also that misdemeanour was in execution of his office, and is laid as a ground of the action.

An action of trespass was brought quare testas diversas (Anglice) (earthen pots) ipsius querentis cepit. And mov'd that it is naught for the incertainty. And so was the opinion of the Court. As 5 Rep. 34. Trespass was brought quare pisces suos cepit, without shewing the number, or of what nature they were. And therefore naught.

PALMER AGAINST WARNER.

A sute was in the Spiritual Court, and sentence pass'd for one with costs, and 9 moneths after the costs are assest, and tax'd. And then comes a pardon of 21 Jac. which relates before the taxing of costs. But afterwards the sentence and that pardon was pleaded, and allowed in discharge of the costs. Then W. who had recovered sues an appeal, and P. brought a prohibition, and well, and no consultation shall be awarded, because by the Court that pardon relating before the taxation of costs had discharged them. As 5 Rep. 51. Hall's case.

STOCK AGAINST SICKS.

A lay patron having the next avoidance &c. presents St. being the son of the last incumbent; the Ordinary for that refuses. Because by the canon filius patr. non potest succedere in ecclesia. Then the patron presents Sicks. After which St. procures a dispensation of the canon, yet the Ordinary institutes and inducts Sicks, then St. libels against Si. and the Ordinary in the delegates. And they now pray a prohibition. And allowed by the Court. And by Jones, That in such a case it hath been 3 times granted. 1. In the time of Gawdy. 2. In Cooks time. 3. That time where both persons claim of one and the same patron. And by the Court, That canon does not bind us in England. And by Doderidge, A lay patron may vary from his presentation before induction, but a spiritual patron cannot, because he may well understand the sufficiency of his presentee at first. ve. 38 E. 3. 36. DR. SUTTONS CASE.

P. 3 Car. B. R.

He was deprived of the office of official of Gloucester by the Commissioners 3 Jac. appointed to examine the defects of chancellors, and that he was not read in the canon or civil law. He said, that time of mind, &c. the bishops have used in their diocesses, to bestow the chancellorship, and that A. the bishop, &c. had made him chancellor by deed; and that was confirm'd by the dean and chapter, by which he had a frank-tenement in that office, &c. And Mr. Glanvill moved for to have a prohibition, but it was denyed by the Court; for it is lawfull for the Commissioners to deprive for insufficiency, that being within their commission; but upon a sute in the Spiritual Court for the profits of that office, supposing the grant of that by the predecessor does not bind the successor. As it was in Dr. Barkers case. There a prohibition shall be awarded, because the profits are temporal. But we in the first case cannot try the sufficiency. ve. 8 E. 3. 70. 9 E. 3. 11. So it is if the Or-[92]-dinary deprive the Mr. of a lay hospital, for there he is not a visitor; nor is it visitable by him. But otherwise of a spiritual hospital.

ALDERMAN HARRIS'S CASE OF OXFORD.

He was depos'd of his aldermanship for scandalous words of Mr. Davors the then Maior of Oxford, in conference with B. (viz.) Our maior is a base fellow. And B. admonishes him of that which he spoke. Then H. said again, The maior is a base fellow, and thou art a base fellow, that appears upon the return of the writ of restitution; but before that an attachment had issued against the Maior of Oxford for not returning that, and affidavit made of it, and a fine of 5l. impos'd upon him. And in that case it was agreed by the Court.

1. That the pleading that he was depos'd per concilium civitatis, and not civium according to their custome and charters, was good enough. ve. 11 Rep. 9.

2. That the writ of restitution was well enough, although that in it there is not exprest any particular prejudice that the alderman had suffered by that deposal; no more than in case of an infranchisement. 11 Rep. 93. Dyer. 333.

3. That the attachment was well granted, without alias or plures. Because it issued out of that Court. But by Jones otherwise it had been, if it had been a restitution awarded out of the Chancery. But for the matter in law, it was adjourned; for a grand debate was if those words were a sufficient cause of desposer. Noy aggravated the offence, and vouch't 33 E. 1. An accompt was brought in Exchequer against the Lord Bruce, and he being condemn'd in the action, said to Heigham, Ch. Baron. Rogere, Rogere habes de me quod dudum petiisti, upon which the Baron, replyed, quid habeo. And the Lord Bruce answered, habes damnum & dedecus meum, and for that offence he was fin'd and committed to the Tower: he pray'd forgiveness of his offence, in all the Kings Courts, being bare and distinct. And in the black book, in the Exchequer, there is ordain'd a particular law of the Exchequer, for the severe punishment of such offences, and contumelies against the Judges and officers. ve. 23 E. 3. The defendant in a writ of ravishment of ward, beat the plaintiffs atturney. Upon which he brought a special action upon the case, and recovered three hundred pound. Because it is derogation of justice and government. And 32 H. 6. One was punisht for menacing an atturney.

4. By the Court, That as in our principal case, if the maior makes a false return, the party may indict him for perjury, upon the general oath when he was admitted to the office of maior. And by Justice Doderidge, And that by rule of order of that Court, the maior may be compeld to make a return, upon an other particular oath; and that so it was done in the case of the Maior of Coventry.

ASHFIELD AGAINST ASHFIELD.

Intr. T. 2 Car. B. R. rot. 913.

Upon a demurrer the case was, Infant copyholder in fee leases for years without licence, rendring a rent; and at full age he accepts the rent, and after ousts his lessee, who brought an ejectione firm. And agreed by the Court.

1. That a lease for years by a copyholder, although that it be a forfeiture, yet it is no desseisin to the lord.

2. That the lease is not void but voidable, and may be affirm'd by acceptance and judgement for the lessee for years. And agreed that such a for-[93]-feiture, does not bind an infant. 8 Rep. 44.

HARVEY AGAINST SIR GEORGE REYNOLDS.

Intr. T. 2 Car. B. R. rot. 1179.

H. brought debt upon an escape, and counts that he had recovered, &c. in Lond. against A. and had him in execution in Lond. and that from thence he was by hab. corp. remov'd and also committed to the Marshalsea, where the defendant was keeper. And that he, &c. had suffered him to go at large voluntarily, &c. The defendant confesses, &c. and said that he had broken prison, and so escap'd contrary to his will; and that upon fresh sute he had retaken A. (viz.) 18 day of May, before the bill exhibited also. But in truth that 18 day of May was after the bill exhibited, and an imparlance had, yet it was before any plea pleaded. And by the Court that the reprisal is found tarde, 13 E. 4. 9. for it shall be mischievous to the party to attend for a reprisal, which if in truth had been before, &c. it had been a good excuse and plea. As reparation of waste, before the writ brought is a good plea in waste. Also there needs not any traverse to a voluntary escape, where he confesses in voluntary escape; for that is a good cause of action. And by the Court the plaintiff had judgement.

DICKER AGAINST MOLLAND.

In a second deliverance D. avows by feoffment made to A. and B. to the use of his father for life, the remainder to him in fee, and so conveys a title to him, &c. M. conveys a title to him and takes a traverse to the feoffment to A. and B. &c. and upon that are at issue; and the jury found the feoffment to be made to A. B. and C. &c. to the use, &c. as D. pleads. And by the Court, that issue is well found for D. because the feoffment to the use, &c. being found, that is the substance. And the number of the feoffees is not traversable. 21 H. 6.

Note, one was indicted for not repairing of a way, which he ought to do ratione tenuræ in Bl. acre in D. without saying tenuræ suæ. And that was naught by the opinion of the Court: for another may have the land. So 5 H. 7. 3.

STONE AGAINST KNIGHT.

Intr. H. 2 Car. B. R. rot. 234.

The question was if a submission to an arbitrament by an infant be void or voydable, for if it be void, then an obligation made by him and his father of the one part, &c. is also void. ve. 8 E. 4. 1. and 22. 19 E. 4. 1. 10 rep. 31. Noy said it was only voydable. 13 H. 4. 12. 10 H. 6. 14. And the opinion of the Court was, that the infant might waive that arbitrament if it be to his prejudice and disadvantage during his minority: but at his full age if he makes any note, which amounts to an agreement, that shall bind him; and the reason that an infant cannot appear by atturney is because he cannot make a warrant. Also by the Court, that an arbitrament to pay, &c. to any of the parties of the one part is good. ve. 2 R. 3. 18.

EVANS AND KIFFIN AGAINST ASCIUTH.

[See S. C. Palmer, 457; W. Jones, 158.]

Intr. H. 22 Jac. B. R. rot. 1169.

In trespasse the grand case of a commend. was thus. D. Thornburye being Dean of York was chosen Bishop of Limbrick in Ireland. But before consecration or confirmation, he obtained a patent, with large words non obstante retinere valeat in commend. the said deanery, &c.

[94] And afterwards he was chosen Bishop of Bristol, and then also before installation he obtained another patent, with a more ample dispensation of retaining the said deanery in commend. Read the case if need be upon the record it self.

1. It was agreed by all, that the church or deanery, &c. in England shall be void by cession, if the parson or dean, &c. be made a bishop in Ireland, for the canon law in that is one through all the world. Also Ireland is governed by the laws of England, and is now as part of England by subordinacy.

Note well 45 E. 3. 19 b. Confirmation under the Great Seal of England of presentation to a church in Ireland, of the heir of the tenant of the King; and that a dispensation under the Great Seal of England, is good in our case, without any patent of it in Ireland, ve. 8 Ass. 27. 10 E. 3. 42. And exchange of land in England for land in Ireland is good. Note 20 H. 6. 8. scir. fac. sued in England to repeal a patent under the Great Seal of Ireland, ve. the Irish statute, 2 Eliz. cap. 4. that an Irish bishop may be made under the Great Seal of England. Note stat. 1. E. 6. the Irish bishops shall be donative by patent by the King, under the Great Seal of England; yet the King may let them be chosen per conge destier, &c.

1. Noy argued at Barr, and so stated the points of the said case by themselves. If a commendatory dean by a retinere in commend. may well confirm a lease made by the bishop, for it is agreed, that a commendatory dean by recipere in commend. cannot confirm because he is but a depositarius. Note 19 H. 6. 16. 12 H. 4. 20. 27 H. 8. 15. A commendatory shall be sued by that name, and by such a commend. he may take the profits and use jurisdiction, and yet is not a dean compleat. Note he may make a deputy for visitation, but not for confirming of leases. Note if there be two deans in one church, both ought to confirm. ve. Dy. 282. Coo. Justi. 30. a.

2. The second point, if such a bishop, be chosen to another bishoprick, if now the first church in commend. (admitting that there was a full incumbent) be void presently by the election and assent of the superiour (viz. the King). And it seem'd to him that it was; because there need not be a new consecration. And he voucht Panormitan 2 part 101. The Bishop of Spires was chosen Bishop of Trevers, and had the assent of the Pope, and that he came to Trevers, and there found another in possession. And he would have return'd to the former bishoprick, and could not. And he also cited the 8 Rep. Troblops case, that the wardship of temporalties cease by the election of a new bishop. Note that Serjeant Henden who argued on the contrary, voucht. M. 4 Jac. May, Bishop of Carlile made a lease to the Queen, and a commission issued out of the Exchequer to take it, and the dean and chapter confirm'd it before the inrolment of it. And yet adjudged good, that case was for the Castle of Horne.

First, The Judges argued two days: and resolv'd that all commendams are dispensations, and that cession commenc'd by the Canon and Council of Lateran.

Secondly, That the King may dispence with that canon. 11 H. 7. 12. for the Pope might, and now by the statute 21 H. 8. that power is given to the King cummullative, by way of exposition veteris, & not by introduction novi juris, and by that statute a concurrent power is given to the Archbishop of Canterbury, and may be granted by the King, or by the archbishop, &c.

3ly, That that dispensation, after election to the first bishoprick and be-[95]-fore consecration, &c. and also the dispensation, after election to the second bishoprick, and before the confirmation, is good enough in both cases, and he remains a good dean to confirm, &c. And afterwards the judgement in the case, being an action of trespass, was given accordingly.

Note, that bishopricks were donatives by the King, untill the time of Will. Rusus, and so untill the time of King John. Read for that the History of Eadmerus.

ALCOCK AGAINST BLOWFIELD.

Intr. P. 3 Car. B. R. rot. 213.

A. had recover'd 50l. against M. and then B. promis'd, that if A. would forbear the execution of it, that he would pay to him 50l. at midsummer next, or 100l. after, if it be not paid then, &c. when it should be reasonably requested, and A. avers non-payment with a licet sæpius requisitus, (but does not aver a request expresse) and recover'd. And now upon error it was agreed, that the request ought to have been expresly averr'd; because that was issuable. For the promise being made by an estranger, there, there is not any duty before request. But otherwise when the party himself which is indebted promises to pay, there a licet sæpius requis. shall suffice; because there was a duty before, and without the promise. But in the case of an estranger it is nudum pactum, and no consideration until a request made. And for a promise where there was a precedent debt, &c. there needs not such precise shewing, for what thing, or how the debt accrued. As upon an assumpsit upon an indebitatus existit, or insimul computaver, because that is only an inducement, 3 H. 7. 1. 21 H. 7. 15. 9 E. 4. 41.

SCARREBORROW AGAINST LYRIUS.

L. being in a ship upon the sea, B. who was in it was reputed an agent and factor, borrows 100l. of L. upon bottomage, (that is) when the money is paid upon the keel of the ship, and the ship obliged to the payment of it; and if it be not paid at the time, &c. that he that lends the money shall have the ship. And that was allowed to be a good and necessary custome by all. And it was agreed by the justices, that if the master, factor, pursor, or he that is reputed owner of the ship borrows money in such a manner, for the necessaries of the ship, that binds the owner of the ship although that the money be not so imployed in truth: and the owner hath his remedy against him that he so put in trust. And it is not a good allegation for to have a prohibition, to say, that the property was not in him, that took such bottomage.

FERRY AGAINST NEWTON.

Intr. M. 2 Car. B. R. rot. 118.

The plaintiff in an ejectione firm. in the Common Bench had judgement quod recuperet termin. and a writ of enquiry of damages. But before the return of that, errour was brought. And it was resolv'd that the errour is well brought before the writ of enquiry of damages return'd, because the judgement was principally given for the thing itself. Otherwise if only damages had been recover'd, then they were the principal. Also in our case the plaintiff by the judgement might enter without suing an habere fac. seisinam, or a writ of enquiry of damages. Noy at Barr said, that they in the Common Bench, upon the return of the writ of enquiry of damages there may well proceed. And judgement given for the damages in our case.

[96] SURREY AGAINST COLES.

Intr. P. 22. Jac. B. R. rot. 62.

The main point of the case was, A. leases to B. for years, rendring a rent annually durante termino prædicto to the lessor and his assigns. A. grants the reversion over to S. in fee, &c. and dies. If now the rent be determin'd. And these cases were voucht, M. 3 Jac. C. B. Barker against Barret. A. leases for a year, and so from year to year; rendring for that so long as the lessee shall enjoy it, 10s. rent. The lessee after the first year dies, his administrator enjoys it for another year. And adjudged that he shall be charg'd for the rent. And P. 4 Jac. C. B. rot. 12. or 112. Hill against Hill, the husband leases for years, rendring a rent yearly, during his life and the life of his wife, and dies; the wife by custom had that land as frank-bank, and in debt recovered the rent. And Wotton against Eggwin was voucht. A. leases for years, rendring a rent to the lessor, his executors and assigns, and dies; and his heir distrains for the rent, and adjudg'd not lawful (note the fault annually) for it was adjudg'd in the Chancery in the case of Winch against Winch. Where the rent being upon a lease for years reserv'd to the lessor and his executors (annually, &c.) that was decreed to the heir.

CROSSMAN AGAINST HUME.

Intr. M. 2 Car. B. R. rot. 451. & 161.

In error, upon a judgement in the Court of Lanceston in Cornewell, error assign'd, because the venire fac. was de viceneto de Lanceston, where it ought to have been of Lancest, for their jurisdiction does not extend but to the village of L. ve. 8 H. 5. that a superiour Court hath a superintendency, and may award a venire fac. de viceneto. But otherwise of a particular jurisdiction. There the enquest is coram non Judice. And so note the case. As administration by the inferiour Ordinary, where there are bona notabilia is void. And so it was rul'd.

WOOD AGAINST BROOKE.

Intr. P. 2 Car. B. R. rot. 383.

In an action upon the case the plaintiff declares to 17l. damages, and upon the demurrer, judgement given for 17l. 10s. for his damages by the Court. And now that judgement was revers'd, because the damages being uncertain, there ought to issue a writ of enquiry of damages. Otherwise where the demand is certain, as in debt. Note, 11 H. 7. 5 b.

Note by the Court upon an arbitrament, the defendant shall be ousted of waging his law, Kellw. 39. And the reason, because a third person hath notice of it. But 1 H. 7. 25. a. is to the contrary.

THARE AGAINST FOSSET.

M. 3 Car. B. R.

F. sues T. in the Court of the Veirge, and declares of a trespass in St. Martins, infra jurisdictionem of that Court. And upon issue of not guilty, a venire fac. was awarded from St. Martins aforesaid, without saying infra jurisdictionem, and there recover'd. And now in errour, it was held by the Court to be errour, because the Court varied and altered the limits of its jurisdiction, according to the residency of the King. And St. Martins at the time of the trespass might be within the [97] vierge and jurisdiction, and at the time of tryal might be out of it. For that is a removeable jurisdiction.

GREWELL AGAINST IRELAND.

In battery the defendant pleads, quod vi & armis, &c. not guilty, without saying, et de hoc ponit se super patriam: and as to the residue, &c. of his own assault; the plaintiff replies that the defendant vi & armis in ipsum insultum fecit, &c. Et hoc paratus verificare. And issue taken upon that, &c. and it was found for the plaintiff, and well, and it is no discontinuance, for also the vi & armis, &c. is in issue: and the defendant shall be fined to the King.

LONGELY AGAINST STREET.

Intr. H. 1 C. B. R. rot. 470.

The plaintiff declares of an action of trespasse in the time of King James, contra pacem Dom. Regis. And it was now mov'd after verdict for the plaintiff in arrest of judgement, and not allowed because it is brought tarde. But otherwise it had been, if it had been mov'd before verdict given, when the jury was at Barre: for, for that they shall be dismissed. As it was done in one Drakes case, vouch'd by Serjeant Davenport. And see for that purpose 2 E. 4. 23 a. The Statute of Jeofailes.

IREMONGER AGAINST NEWSAM.

The point was, Lessee for years rendring a rent dies, the executor assigns the term over, the rent is arrear, the lessor brings debt against the executor. And by Noy and Mr. Mason that it lies. 3 Rep. 24 a. Sydals case, and Marrows case there also was cited, and so adjudg'd. And by Noy in his argument, the 10 Jac. B. R. Sir Thomas Walker's case was vouch'd. Where a freeman of London imports wines, and before the landing of them he dies. His executor shall not pay prisage. And that so it was adjudg'd, although that the executor was not a freeman. Which Justice Doderidge also affirmed.

SLADE AGAINST DRAKE.

Intr. H. 15 Jac. C. B. rot. 418.

S. sues a prohibition against Drake, alleging that an abbot, &c. was seised, &c. of that land discharg'd of the payment of tithes at the time of the dissolution, and so conveyed it to the King, and from the King to him. The defendant demurrs, and it was resolved that the abbots holding of it discharg'd of tithes, &c. was not good, without shewing how. For note the statute 31 H. 8. cap. 3. is in as large and ample manner as the abbot held it, &c. and the statute pinches upon that, ergo he ought to take notice by what manner the abbot was discharged; also such a claim of discharge of tithes, is contrary to common right, and therefore shall be strict, ve. 21 H. 7. 9. He ought to shew how he was discharg'd of the rent, 5 E. 4. 6. a. He ought to shew how he is more neer of blood, for entry for consent of ravisher, 35 H. 6. Replevin 46. He ought to shew how the plaintiff is seis'd of the part of land out of which the rent issues. So if the abbot had it then for life or for years; and no reason that the inheritance shall be discharg'd for that. Note 22 E. 4. 40. He ought to shew how he hath discharg'd the annuity. See and note 9 rep. 35. and 9 E. 4. He ought to shew before what Judge the abbot was deposed; and so by what Judge the vicaredge was sequestred. 5 E. 4. 28. b. 10 H. 7. 17. [98] He ought to shew the heresie, &c. 26 H. 8. 1.

2. He ought to shew what estate he hath made, &c. 5 rep. 57. And by Hubbard Chief Justice, that 31 H. 8. cap. 3. hath created a discharge of tithes, (viz.) by a perpetual unity, which was not before at the common law.

PLUMMER AGAINST WEBB.

B. R.

A. licences P. to put a stack of hay upon the land of A. A. leases that land to W. and the hay remains there for two years, and W. puts in his cattel who waste the hay, and P. brought an action of trespass, and adjudged that it doth not lie.

1. Because it was not remov'd in convenient and reasonable time, and the licence is determined by the lease to W. and P. at his peril was bound to look that the beasts of A. or W. his lessee did not eat the hay. And so the damages comes to him by his own fault.

JELLIET AGAINST BROAD.

M. 18 Jac. B. R.

I. sells goods to B. for 200l. and in consideration of that bargain B. promises that he will not exercise the trade of a mercer in such a village, &c. But after B. uses it there, and I. brought an action upon the case, and resolv'd by the Court that it well lies. For it was a voluntary promise for a good consideration, and is restrained to a place. Otherwise if it had been a general restraint, or upon a coaction, or without consideration. As 2 H. 5. 5. b. Note also M. 43 and 44 Eliz. Common Bench, rot. 3217. Leggate against Batchelour. The condition of an obligation was, that if the son of the defendant us'd his trade, &c. within the county of Kent in the town of Canterbury or Rochester, within 4 years, that then if he payd 20l. the obligation should be void. And it was said by all the justices that that condition is against the law and liberty of a subject by Magna Charta, cap 38. and contrary to the common good.

MURTON AGAINST BURTLEY.

18 Jac. in Exchequer Chamber.

An action upon a promise to pay the arrerages of rent, upon an insimul computav. when he should be thereunto requested. And hath not expresly alleg'd a request, and yet adjudg'd good, for the arrerages are due before the request, and an action of debt lies for them. And also the bringing of an action is a request sufficient; that was mov'd in arrest of judgement, and yet judgement was for the plaintiff. But otherwise it were if it had been to do a collateral thing, which was not a present duty. As to deliver an obligation or an indenture upon request; there he ought to shew a request expresly, with the place and time, for it is issuable, and a licet cæpius requisitus is not sufficient.

PRESTONS CASE.

An action upon the case by a councillor at law for these words, Thou a barrester, thou a barreter, thou called to the Bar, thou wert put from the Bar. And judgement for the plaintiff. And upon errour now also it was affirm'd, although he did not say common barrettor, nor that he was put from the Bar for just case. And it was said by Lanfield it hath been adjudg'd that an action lies for saying, Thou art a daffidowndilly (innuendo) an ambidexter, in respect of his profession, 4 rep.

[99] IN THE STAR CHAMBER.

GILLIBRAND AGAINST HUBBARD.

M. 38, 39 Eliz.

H. levies in the name of G. he being over-sea. And sentence was given, that the fine shall be void. And Poph. cited Holcombs case. A. acknowledges an action in the name of H. and sentence was also given that (vacat) shall be made upon the roll. And 2 Jac. Serjeant Heals case. He had unduly sued an execution, upon judgment in debt, acknowledged by the Lord Cobham, and afterwards, the Lord Cobham was imprison'd for treason. H. sues an elegit, and there sentence was: that the record of it should be vacated; and Serjeant Heale was fined deeply for that practice.

STRANGWAIES AGAINST HICKS.

P. 41 Eliz.

H. knowing that Str. was within age, procures him to acknowledge a recognisance for wares bought, &c. Str. dies, and his wife sues H. in the Star-chamber; and H. was fin'd one hundred pound, &c. And Calmaders case against Here was voucht for a president of the Court in the point.

SIR EDWARD MEREDITH AGAINST HIS TENANTS.

The defendants were fin'd for making an obligation between them, the one to the other, to contribute to expences in sutes commenc'd or to be commenc'd by the lord against any of them. And this difference was agreed, that for sute, for custome common or copyhold, whereof the obligees participate, there they may contribute, but not in the case where they claim several frank-tenements, or copyholds of inheritance in which they have not a joynt and equal interest. ve 10 E. 4. 2.

THE KING AGAINST CROOKER, HIGGINS, & ALIOS.

M. 41, 42 Eliz.

The under Sheriff of Oxford had process of extent upon a statute staple of goods and lands, of Crooker. And the under sheriff gathers the goods together, and the defendants endeavour to rescue, but did not prevail. And now they were censur'd for that, notwithstanding that the under sheriff had not taken an inquiry by the jury, and although that it was before the appretiari fac. &c. for before such inquiry, &c. the sheriff ought to gather the goods together, for to be view'd by the jury, by the law. But the final power of safeguarding, &c. in the custody of the sheriff is not good, until after the enquiry; and it is not material although they did not prevail, &c. for conatus punitur. Also the fine of Crooker was aggravated, because he said to the sheriff (shewing his writ) put up your bauble.

BLACK AGAINST ALLEN.

M. 42, 43 Eliz.

B. was oblig'd in one hundred pound to A. for the honesty of his sonne an apprentice with A. And A. in the obligation races out libris and puts in marcis.

That is not forgery punishable, for it is not a prejudice to any but himself, for by that the obligation is void, and hath lost his own duty. And so decreed. And the Lord Keeper and the two [100] Chief Justices, saying that if the defendant pleads not guilty, he shall not have the benefit of the general pardon at hearing. But he ought to plead that, and shew that he is not a party excepted in that; but he needs not shew, that the offence is excepted. For the Judges, ex officio, ought to take notice of the offences excepted, but not of the persons.

STEPNEY AGAINST WOLFE.

H. 43 Eliz.

A. was oblig'd as surety with W. and W. for that, and to save A. harmless makes a deed of gift of certain barbits to A. Stepney takes them, and A. sues him, but W. maintains the sute and charges; and at the time of the taking and sute for it. The day of payment of the obligation now was come: and yet by the Lord Keeper and the two Chief Justices, that is no unlawful maintenance: but justifiable, in respect of the trust that was reposed in A. by W. to re-have the barbits if A. be not damnified, &c.

AGARS CASE.

M. 43, 44 Eliz.

He was receiver of certain rents of the Queens, payable at Easter, or within 40 dayes after. And upon conquest of the office, for condition broken for non-payment, he deposes, that the rent was not paid within the 40 days, but after. But he had antidated his acquittance. And it was agreed.

1. That the Queens Attorney may inform for that perjury; although that it be an oath made for the Queens advantage; so for any other if he be grieved by it.

2. That the perjury before the enquest of the office, is a misdemeanor punishable in that Court; but not by the statute 25 Eliz. and the Court held that antidating to be a great offence. But no censure of that, because it is not complained of in the bill.

Note, that in that term it was also rul'd, that if one exhibite a bill or an information, and is not the party agrieved, as an informer upon a penal statute or a misdemeanor, if he dies, his heir, executor or administrator, shall not have a bill of reviver, but Mr. Attorney General may.

RYE AGAINST FULLCUMBE.

H. 44 Eliz.

F. being divorc'd for incontinency of the wife, he afterwards marries P. the daughter of Rye, living the first wife. By the whole Court that is a void marriage; for the divorce is not, but à mensa & thoro, and does not dissolve vinculum matrimonii. And by Whitguift Archbishop of Canterbury. So is the opinions of divines and civilians.

H. 2 Jac. 13. Feb.

Before many noble men, archbishops and bishops, and the Justices and Barons of Exchequer.

1. Agreed that the deprivation of Puritan ministers for non-conformity to the last canons, was lawful by the High Commissioners. For by the common law, the King hath such a power in causes ecclesiastical. And it is not a thing de novo, given by the first of Eliz. For that is declaratory only, &c. and the King may delegate it to commissioners: [101] and the King without a Parliament may make constitutions for the government of the clergy: and that such a deprivation ex officio, without libel, is good.

2. That the statute 5 H. 5. cap. 4. is to be intended, when they proceed upon libel, and not when ex officio. Read the statute.

3. When their petition subscribed by a great number, with intimation, that if the King denies their suit, that many thousands of his subjects shall be discontented, that is an offence finable at discretion, and is near to treason, by raising sedition by discontent, &c.

Bellew against Bullocke.

The defendants upon a riot, in destroying 16 foot of an hedge for a commoner. There they were fined every one 40s. And the plaintiff for suing in that Court for that riot was fined 20l. And so both parties fined, which was seldom seen before.

Combes the Defendant. The Same Day.

44 Eliz.

For forgery of a will of one Brokenbury, it was held by Popham, Flemming and Yelvert, that if he that writes a will, omits a thing that was appointed to be put in, that is not forgery: but if the devise had been to A. for life, the remainder to B. in fee, and he that writes the will omits the estate for life to A. by which the fee is presently to B. that is forgery.

Stockwells Case.

St. was deputy purveyor for the Toyl, and was fined for misdemeanours, &c. Note in that case, by Poph. who delivered the opinion of all the Justices of England in these 3 points.

1. That no purveyor or his deputy may take any thing, without shewing of his commission.

2. That they cannot take wood or trees growing, without the consent of the owners; because they belong to the freehold.

3. That no purveyor may take that which a man hath provided for his own provision: but of that which is to be sold, the King shall have the buying at reasonable prices, ve. 47 E. 3. 18. 11 H. 4. 28. Mag. Chart. cap. 21. And in 25 E. 3. B. R. rot. 27, the servants of the marshall presented for taking 12 carts for to carry the Kings prisoners, where one would have sufficed. And they had levied to 10 marks for the redemption of their carts and horses; for which they were committed to the Marshalsea, &c.

Doydige against Penkvell.

P. was censured, for inserting the name of a special bayly, in a warrant made with a blank by the sheriff. And note, that in that case, as also P. 4 Jac. an information by Mr. Atturney, against Willoughby and others, for many riots. One was censured, and the others dismist with costs against the relator Mrs. Gawen.

[102] The Lord Sturton and Lord Mordant.

H. 4 Jac.

They were brought to the Barr now, being held for a contempt to the King for not coming to the Parliament by prorogation 5 Novemb. when the gunpower treason was intended: and it was grandly suspected that they knew of the plot, because they were Papists, and their excuses were frivolous. And St. was fined to 6000 marks, and Mor. to 1000 marks.

STOCKWELL AGAINST NORTH.

N. was Sheriff of Nottingham 43 Eliz. and took money for the offices of gaoler and bailywick, and he first gave them to his servants, who sold them: but he himself had the money; and he was fined for that, for it is contrary to 4 H. 4. cap. 5. And also by the Court; that that is a corruption, and a great cause of oppression in the officers; and such sale of offices is malum in se, and finable.

SIR THOMAS PALMERS CASE.

T. 9 Jac.

For forgery, in that case this arose, and it was resolv'd by the 2 Chief Just. and the Ch. Baron, that whereas Sir Tho. had covenanted by indenture for natural affection, to stand seis'd to himself for life, the remainder for life to F. the eldest son of his brother, the remainder to the first son of the said F. and so to the 8th son, &c. the remainder to the right heirs of Sir Tho. Palmer. Sir Tho. is attainted of treason, and executed before the birth of any son to F. that the sons born after are all utterly barr'd by that attainder. And the King shall have the fee discharged of all the remainders limited to the sons not yet born.

I. was plaintiff in an action against F. makes a breviat of the cause, and delivers it to some of the jurors before their appearance for their instruction. And the plaintiff, after evidence, was non-suited; and for that he sues them. And now resolved by the Lord Keeper, and the two Ch. Just.

1. That the party himself might labour with the jury to appear, but not a stranger.

2. That the party himself cannot instruct, or promise reward for, or before appearance; for that is imbracery, a fortiori in a stranger, and the defendants were fined and censured.

H. exhibits a bill for forging of a will against Turvil, and others, hearing. He relinquishes the forgery, and insists upon a practice between them to draw the party to make that will. And by the Court that he cannot insist upon the practice, for that is but a circumstance of the forgery. But otherwise if he had confest the will, and charged them directly with the practice. And now the bill was dismissed, and the plaintiff fined 200l. to the King, and several damages to every of the parties. Because they have not a remedy for those slanders (being before a competent Judge) at the common law. 4 rep. 14. b. And it seem'd that that was the first president for damages, for a scandalous bill.

[103] HIND AGAINST MANFIELD.

1 P. 12 Jac.

M. was fin'd to two hundred pounds, for diverting part of the River of Thames, by which he weakned the current of the river to carry barges, &c. towards London and other houses of the King upon that river. And such a thing cannot be done without an ad quod damnum. regist. and N. B. Because that river is as an high-way. And also it ought to be by patent of the King, for to do such a thing.

Whinnel against Strowd.

W. exhibits his bill against St. for a misdemeanour in his office of justice of peace as for compounding of matters between the parties, being bound over to the sessions. And now the Court observed this difference; that for petty quarrels between party and party, or for the peace or petty trespasses, where the King is not to have a fine, there a justice of peace may make and perswade an agreement between the parties. But otherwise where a fine shall accrew to the King.

Breerton and Townsend upon a Special Day.

T. 12 Jac.

An information by Mr. Attourney against Sir Thomas Breerton, Richard Breerton his brother, and Sir Henry Townsend and his wife, for the suppressing of a will, &c. And all the defendants but Sir Henry Townsend were fin'd to the King, and the Court assest and gave 3000 pound damages, to one Egerton the relator, whose wife was disinherited, &c. And in that case these three points were mov'd and agreed.

First, That process shall issue out of that Court to the sheriff to levy the damages, to the party or to the relator, upon the goods and lands of the parties, and many presidents were there voucht for that point. T. 22 H. 7. Hales against Sherly, H. 10 H. 8. Bradshaw against Suitor. And it was now decreed that process shall issue to the sheriff to levy the three thousand pounds upon the lands of Breerton.

Secondly, It was decreed, that process shall issue against Sir Henry Townsend the husband, to pay the damages for his wife. Note, Bacon the Atturney having extolled the dignity of that Court, where many Kings in person have sate, and is composed of the chiefest Counsellors of State, of the chiefest divines, and of the chiefest sages of the law, and hath a transcenvent jurisdiction, that now if the husband should not answer for the damages against the wife, as in trespass or in an action upon the case they shall, it would be an incouragement to feme coverts, to commit all manner of outrages. But the two Chief Justices and the Chief Baron, and the Lord Knolls were of a contrary opinion in those two points; but they agreed with the others, that the body, goods and land of the party may be taken for a fine to the King, by the common-law, but not by process out of that Court. But upon an estreat in the Exchequer, process shall issue thence, but not for damages of the party. And they gave this answer to the presidents: because in some of them the damages are part of the decree, and given to them that were parties to the sute, but in our case the damages were given to the relator who is a stranger, and by that means he shall be in a better plight than the King; who must stay till his fine be estreated into the Exchequer. And also by the judge-[104]-ment, that the husband shall not answer for the damages given against the wife, because it is a criminal and not a civil offence; as battery, slander or assumpsit by the feme covert.

Thirdly, It was decreed by all, that an injunction shall issue against him that stood in contempt, to surcease all suits in other Courts concerning the same thing or cause, for which the original suit was in the Star-Chamber, and also against the same party, at whose suit he stood in contempt in this Court; until he had obey'd the decree: but not a general inction, for all suits, for any thing, against any other person, as the Baron had urged to be reasonable, as well as outlary, or excommunication in other Courts are pleadable by any man, in many actions, a fortiori, for a contempt against him in the High Court of Star-Chamber. And note, that the party grieved was preferred in his remedy for his damages, before the King for his fine.

Hawkings against Harris.

M. 12 Jac.

Harris was fin'd to 200l. for practising with the Maior of Laskree in Cornwall to be unduly chosen to be a burgess of Parliament: and also came in to the common-hall, and sat there upon the Bench with the maior. And although he was elected by the lesser number, yet he took the book and swore himself; and being a justice of peace, shewed a discontent, and threatned in his gesture and countenance, against them that gave their voices against him.

Day against Beddingfield and Others.

Upon a cross bill in that Court between the parties, for pulling down of painted glass, pictures and armes, in a window in an ile of a chapel, in the parish of Wellington in Somerset, these points in the case were resolved.

1. If an inhabitant there, and his ancestors time out of mind, &c. have us'd to repair an ile in a church, and to sit there with his family, &c. and to bury there, that makes that ile proper and peculiar for his family. Otherwise if he had not us'd to repair it at his own cost, but with the charge of the parish. Then the Ordinary may appoint who shall sit there from time to time, notwithstanding a use to sit there, only, to the contrary.

2. If any superstitious pictures are in a window of a church, or ile, &c. it is not lawful for any to break them, &c. without license of the Ordinary; and if any does to the contrary, he shall bind him to his good behaviour, and so it was in Prickets case.

3. That the Ordinary or churchwarden cannot license a parishioner to bury within the church; but it ought to be licensed by the parson; for the frank tenement is in him only.

4. If coats of armes are put in a window, or upon a monument in the church or church-yard, they may not be broken by Ordinary, parson, or church warden, or any other, for the heir shall have his action upon the case for that, 9 E. 4. 14. For they are, and belong to him, 30 E. 3. 9. b. c.

5. If one be assaulted in the church, or within a church-yard, he may not beat the other, or draw a weapon (although it be in his own defence) there, for it is a sanctified place, and he may be punished for that by 2 E. 6. And so if in any of the Kings Courts, or within view of the [105] Courts of Justice; because a force in that case is not justifiable, though in his own defence.

Oliver St. Johns Case.

About Octob. 12 Jac. a commission for benevolence issued to the village of Marleborough, for to collect, &c. And St. John being required to contribute, absented himself, and wrote a letter to the maior, &c. that such benevolences were contrary to law, ve. Magna Charta, cap. 29. and 25 E. 3. cap. 26. and that it is contrary to the oath of the King at his coronation; and that the breach of that was the chief reasons urged by H. 4. against Richard 2. which was the cause of the barons wars, &c. and much to that purpose. And for that, being urged to be near to treason, he was fined to 5000l. But after his recantation he was pardoned by the King, &c. And now the presidents of such a commission, &c. were produced. Note well that case.

Poulton & Al. against Wiseman & Alios.

A bill exhibited upon 27 Eliz. cap. 4. of Fraudulent Conveyances; in which these points were resolved.

1. That where Wiseman had agreed for 1000l. paid by one Thompson to assure 100l. per annum to him, &c. during his own life and his wives: and for assurance of that a mortgage was made, although that Wiseman and others did not pay the money, yet are they purchasers within the statute of 27 Eliz. because they are named as parties in trust for the benefit of Thompson.

2. That the estate which they had upon that mortgage, was a sufficient purchase within the statute.

3. That one entire years profits, which is the penalty of the statute: shall be forfeited without apportionment; as well upon a mortgage as upon an absolute sale. So also upon a lease or a petty annuity made by fraud, &c. One years value of the land shall be forfeited.

4. That every defendant that is found guilty, shall pay a years value of the land, every one by himself; and not a years value joyntly amongst them all. Note and read the statute (Also and every offender, &c.)

5. That the infancy of one of the defendants shall not excuse him of that penalty, he being of 16 years, and privy to that conveyance, and having justified that fraudulent deed to be made bona fide. And for that he shall be punished as if he were at full age.

6. The bill being preferred only upon the statute of 27 Eliz. that the Court of Star-Chamber could not encrease or diminish the penalty of the statute, nor impose a fine for the King. For that the Lord Chancellor advis'd that all such bills should be framed upon a statute, for to have such punishment as the Court of Star-Chamber shall inflict.

THOMAS VALLEY AGAINST RICHMOND. P. 1 JAC.

Intr. M. 43 & 44 Eliz. C. B. rot. 3272.

V. brought on action upon the case against R. because he had inticed his prentice, (he being a tradesman in London) to depart from his service for 6 days: and divers times to take money out of the box of the shop, and play at cards with R. and that R. cozened the apprentice: and it seemed to the Court, that the master might well have an action for [106] the departure, and losing his money is a damage to the master; and the cosenage is not but an aggravation of the offence. And for that the servant himself only shall have an action. But yet in our case because the damages were intire, with a respect to the cosenage, as well as to the departure, the plaintiff could not have judgement, by the better opinion of the Court. And so the matter was referred to arbitrament.

THE LORD NORRIS'S CASE.

Tenant in tayl of a mannor wherein coppyholds are demisable for life, &c. for a certain rent. The coppyholder for life dies, and lord demises it by indenture for 21 years rendring the ancient rent, &c. And by the better opinion of the Court it is good, within 38 H. 8. For it is not any prejudice to the issue as to the rent.

DALBY AGAINST SPOONER.

Intr. H. 54 Eliz. C. B.

It was resolved that a grant of omnia bona & catalla sua. that the goods that the grantor hath as executor to I. S. shall passe, ve. 10 E. 4. 1. 19 H. 6. 4. Plo. 289.

WEEKS AGAINST CARVEL.

T. 44 Eliz. C. B. rot. 1744.

In a replevin, the case was thus. A. seised in fee of burrough English land, demises it to B. his son in tayl, and dies. B. dyes seis'd having issue two sons. And by the Court it was resolved, that the youngest son shall inherit as well to the tayl as to the fee-simple. So all the issues shall inherit an estate tayl in gavelkind land, ve. Litt. 107. Dy. 176. 26 H. 8. 5. 22 E. 4. 10. b.

Note, that if the debtee makes the debtor and A. his executors, A. proves the will and dyes. The debtor refuses before the Ordinary. And after an action is brought against the executor; and by the Court the debtor may plead ne unq. executor. For he is discharged in law, there being no administration to charge him, ve. 21 Eliz. 4. 81. b. Note, in T. 2 Jac. in C. B. in an action of debt against an administrator, he pleads that the testator was indebted to him; and over and above which sum he hath not to satisfie, &c. And by the Court that is a good plea, and safer than to plead, plene administ. &c. For by that plea it may be tried.

BRADSHAW AGAINST BOKINGHAM.

Intr. M. 44, 45 Eliz. C. B. rot. 155.

It was adjudg'd that if a commoner incloses part of the wast, in which he ought to have common, that by that all his common is extinguished, ve. 11 H. 6. 22. 19 H. 6. 11.

BELLINGHAM AGAINST ALSOPP.

Adjudged, that if the bargainee before enrollment bargain and sell the land to A. and within the 6 months respectively both the deeds are enrolled, that the bargain and sale to A. is not good. And by Walmsly: If the disseisor bargain and sell, and the disseisee release, &c. to the bargainee. And upon evidence agreed by the Court, that if the bargainor continue possession after enrollment, that [107] he is a disseisor. For the statute transferrs the franktenement to the bargainnee.

BACKWELL AGAINST HUNT.

In an accedas ad Cur. in false judgement, where the writ was in propria persona, &c. the sheriff or under-sheriff sends his servant with the writ, &c. And they of the Court of Shrewsbury refuse to certifie. And the Court that the sheriff ought to return it so, that they have refused. Upon which a distringas shall issue, &c. For the writ was well sent by the sheriff with his servant, ve. N. B. 18. a. b.

WALLER AGAINST WEEDALE. T. 2 JAC. C. B.

Intr. M. 44, 45 Eliz. C. B.

In detinue the case was thus. A. had recovered in debt against W. and execution awarded to the now defendant being then Sheriff of Southampton, who takes the goods, &c. and returns a fieri fac. & denarios habeo, but none of the goods were sold before the return, but the sheriff kept them in his hands; and judgement now for the plaintiff. For the sheriff cannot detain the goods taken upon an execution in his own hands, and satisfie the debt of his proper money. But he ought to sell them upon a venditioni exponas, and may return upon his so doing, quod non invenit emptores; for a grand inconvenience would ensue if the sheriff himself might retain them.

HARVY AGAINST GULSON.

Hil. 1 Jac. C. B.

In a replevin, the husband being seis'd in right of his wife, for damage feasant in his own name, and that the other are servants to him, &c. And that was rul'd to be good, without shewing as servants to the wife also.

2. That if A. hath a close next to the highway, and beasts come out of the highway into the close of A. and there-hence they enter into another close of B. adjoyning, and that B. ought to fence, there in default of enclosure, &c. it is a good plea against A. but not against B. or another stranger, &c. ve. 36 H. 6. barr. 168.

BECKET AGAINST BROMELY.

If A. brings partition, and by that demands the 4th part, &c. and if the jury find that they hold pro indiviso: but that A. ought not but to have a 5th part, &c. yet so A. shall not have that which is due to him; for the judgement shall be variant from the demand.

Note that in a quare impedit, if the venire fac. be returned, the plaintiff cannot be non-suited without calling of the jury, but if the venire fac. be not returned at the day, then he may be non-suited upon the roll, without calling of the jury. But otherwise also in the first cause by consent of the plaintiff himself, because consensus tollit errorem.

[108] HOLLAND AGAINST HEALE.

A libel in the Spiritual Court for the tithes of pilchards taken in the sea, and now the party had a prohibition; upon a surmise that the custome there is, that the owner of the fisher-boat, hath one moyety of the fishes, and the fishermen the other moyety, and that the owner hath used to pay the tenth of his moyety in discharge of all, &c, and it was held by the Court to be a good surmise, for by the common-law the parson cannot have the tithes of fishes taken in the sea, because it is not within any parish; and then when the parson, by the custome, ought to have the tithes of them, he ought to take them according to the custome, and that the tenth of the moyety may be a good discharge of the whole. And the parties went to issue upon the custome in Cornhill.

In debt, they had submitted and obliged themselves to stand to the arbitrament of A. who awards that the defendant should pay to the plaintiff 10s. before Easter, and that if the defendant did not perform the said arbitrament, that then he should pay 5l. to the plaintiff, that the ten shillings is not paid, and now the plaintiff brought an action for the 5l. and adjudg'd, that debt well lies for that penalty, for the arbitrator hath power to appoint the assurance, for the payment of the principal, and of the penalty also, being by one entire deed; although that it be by several clauses, ve. 9 E.4. Bro. Arbitram. 9. Although that it was objected, that the thing it self in debate, and not the performance of the arbitrament was the thing referred to arbitrament, ve. 7 H. 6. 40.

NICHOLS CASE.

2 Jac. C. B.

In an ejectione firm. it was observed by the Court for an infallible rule, that, that as may be reduced by a real action, may be reduced by an entry (as in one acree) in the name of more.

WILLIAM GILSON against WRIGHT & ALIOS.

G. brought an action of trespass for the breaking of his seat in the church, and cutting of the timber in small pieces and carrying them away, &c. The defendant pleads in bar, that they were the church-wardens: and that the plaintiff had erected that seat without the licence of the Ordinary, and it was an hinderance to the parishioners, &c. and that they as church-wardens, the said seat, &c. the which is the same trespass. The plaintiff demurs and judgement for him, for admitting that the church-wardens may remove seats in the church at their pleasure, yet they cannot cut the timber of the pew. And thereupon they confess the trespass, ve. 6 E. 4. 7. 9 E. 4. 14. 8 E. 4. 6. 18 E. 4. 8. 21 H. 7. 21. 12 H. 7. 27. 11 H. 4. 12.

DAME POWEL against WEEKS.

T. 2 Jac. C. B. rot. 2716.

In dower it was resolved, that a divorce causa adulterii is no barr of dower. Because it is but a mensa & thoco and not a vinculo matrimonii. And it was said by Daniel that an elopement is not a bar of dower ad ostium eccles. And judgement for the plaintiff.

[109] FORD against LERKE.

An ejectione firm. was brought of an house, barn, & de coquina (Anglicè) a kitchin, and after verdict it was moved in arrest of judgement, that the writ is not good; for the demand is uncertain: for any room by usage may be made a kitchin, &c. And judgement querens nil cap. per bill. ve. 5 H. 7. 9. Franktenement in an upper-room. Pasc. 13 Jac. An ejectione firm. pro cubiculo maintain'd. And Mr. Corbet reader of Furnivals Inn voucht Tri. 2 Jac. B. R. rot. 649. Perk. against Ford, that an ejectione firm. lies pro coquina.

COURT against BLACKMAN.

Intr. Tri. 2 Jac. C. B. rot. 1320.

In trover and conversion, the plaintiff declares that he was possest of the said gelding, and lost it causually, and that after it came to the hands of the defendant at T. in the county of Warwick; and that he knowing, &c. converted it to his own use. The defendant said, that long time before &c. the Archbishop of Canterbury, &c. was seiz'd of the mannor of Harrow upon the hill, in the county of Middlesex, where he, &c. had waifs and streys; and conveys that mannor to the Lord North, and that the said gelding was waif'd there; and he as a bayliff seised it, absque hoc, that he is guilty in the county of Warwick, &c. The plaintiff upon that demurs, because the traverse is to the place. But by all the justices, the traverse is well; because it was a local justification; and it is not lawful to bring an action in a forein county. And in that was voucht 43 Eliz. 506. Purrels case. 34 H. 6. 5. 9 H. 6. 63. 9 E. 4. 45. 22 E. 4. 39. 1 H. 7. 6. A traverse is well taken to the place, &c.

SHERRET against MALLET.

Intr. H. 3 Jac. C. B. rot. 909.

In debt upon an obligation noverint universi, &c. teneri. &c. in 40 libis, &c. for libris, and that was held an ill and insufficient obligation, for liba is a word that signifies a cake, and the dash does not help it. And one Penroses case was voucht, who was an atturney of the Court, and makes an obligation of 100 litris for libris, and it was adjudg'd an ill obligation. And he was committed to the Fleet for his knavery.

Note, if tenant of the King in capite, makes a gift in tayl; and the donee dies, his issue within age, N. B. 14. 3. b. the King shall have ward. Otherwise of a tenure in chivalry only. And that difference was held by Frowicke in his reading; the which was inroll'd in the Court of Wards by the Kings command. And the law there rull'd accordingly, which reconcil'd the books, ve. Dyer 54. b.

Warner against Agus.

M. 2 Jac. C. B. rot. 2760.

Lessee for years grants all his interest to the lessor by indenture, rendring rent durante termino. And adjudg'd, that that is a good reservation, and that the lessee may distrain for it, and durante termino, shall be construed for all the years. And Littleton, A rent reserv'd to an estranger. That in truth is not a rent, yet it is a good reservation.

Note, faux judgement, brought upon a recovery in antient demean by the ancestor of the defendant, and he prayd his age, and had it; because he was now a terretenant, by the Court: but otherwise if he had been nam'd for conformity only. ve. 9 H. 6. 47. 47 E. 3. 37.

[110] The Governours of Bridewell.

They brought a quare impedit by that name. And in that a case was voucht to be in 41 Eliz. B. R. Lodars case. And indictment alledg'd de facto to be at D. in the county of Oxford, and that the party went from thence to W. in the county of Buckingham, &c. and concludes; and so apud D. in the county aforesaid, &c. that is ill, because uncertain at which county: but otherwise it had been, if it had been, and so apud D. prædict. in com. prædict. that had been good enough.

Harris against Stephens.

A man makes a feoffment in fee to the use of himself for life, the remainder over to B. in fee, with a power to make leases for three lives, &c. rendring the antient rent, &c. and does accordingly, and dies. Quære, if B. in the remainder shall have rent. And the better opinion was that he should. But 'twas not adjudged.

Bridges against Raymond.

In debt upon an obligation to pay a lesser sum. The defendant pleads tender at the day and place, &c. And the plaintiff takes issue upon the tender, which is found against him. And now he prayes to have the money out of the Court. But it was denyed. For he hath lost that advantage, by taking issue upon the tender. And that he was too covetous, and by seeking to gain all, he hath lost all, ve. 21 E. 4. 45.

Eden against Blake.

In covenant, the case was thus. Lessee for years covenants to repair the houses, during the term. And in a covenant brought for not repairing, from such a time until such a time. The defendant pleads, there was an agreement between them, that the plaintiff should retain 5l. which he ow'd to the plaintiff in full satisfaction of the said decay and want of reparations. The plaintiff demurs, because an accord by parol is pleaded in discharge of a matter in deed, which is of a more high nature, as 10 H. 4. But by the Court adjudg'd a good plea. Because it is for a thing executorie, and is only a bar pro tempore, and not for a perpetual bar of the said covenant, ve. 47 E. 3. 24. and Dyer 338. 5 Jac. B. R. Executor of lessee for life in a writ of covenant brought against him to remove the utensils before a certain day. And he pleads that accord; and it was ill, because he had not pursued the agreement in removing them, and that was Stamford and Luttleys case.

BANKS AGAINST BROWN.

In an ejectione firm. he sues upon a demise of a copyhold by indenture by Sir Francis Knowls. This point was resolv'd, that if the lord of a copyholder for life demisable by ten shill. rent, leases it by indenture to the copyholder, and two other for their lives, rendring ten shill. rent. By which it is with 32 H. 8. Read the statute. And it is not material, although the herriot be lost, because it is meerly causual, ve. 5 Rep. 4.

[111] THE KING AGAINST THE BISHOP OF WINCHESTER, AND DR. HIDE.

In a quare impedit, after evidence given, and the jury departed from the Bar. And it was moved that one of the jury might be drawn. And it was denied by the Court, because the King shall not be prejudiced; because the judgement is salvo jure. But otherwise it is used in the Exchequer upon an information or intrusion.

STACEY AGAINST WIN. SLANE, AND THO. SLANE.

In debt against two. They plead nihil debent, and upon that they wage their law, and a day given, &c. at which day one of the defendants came, and the other makes default, and he that appeared pray'd for to do his law, and it was denied, for the declaration, and their plea, and the wager of law were all joynt, and the default of one now is the default of both.

BRIDGES AGAINST CAGE.

Intr. H. Jac. C. B. 1856.

A sheriff brought an action upon the case for 60l. upon an assumpsit, for extending of land upon an elegit; and judgement quod nihil cap. per breve by the statute 32 H. 6. which avoids that. And in that case by Just. Walmsly, that if a sheriff execute an extent he shall have his fees according to that when it shall be levied, and not according to the debt, or duty recovered. But other sheriff sues an execution who takes the body of the party, and that 35 El. C. B. By the Court that if one sheriff extend land, and before the delivery to the recoverer, he is removed, and the succeeding sheriff delivers it, the last sheriff shall have the fees, lege verba stat. 29 Eliz. cap. 4.

FLETCHER AGAINST MUFFLETT.

In a writ of covenant the defendant pleads performance, and that he was marryed according to the covenant, within 10 days after the date of the indenture. And the plaintiff said that he was not marryed to his said wife, within the 10 days, and upon that they are at issue, which is found for the plaintiff. And it was now mov'd in arrest of judgment, that that ought to be tryed by certificate of the Ordinary, and not by the country: and adjudg'd that the issue is well tryed, for the time of the marriage is made part of the issue, and that was all tryable by the country, ve. 49 E. 3. 12 H. 4. 9 H. 6. 33. 9 H. 7. 2. And the common-law shall be preferred. 38 Ass. 29. Dyer 313.

ROE AGAINST MATHEWSON.

R. had recovered in debt against A. for which M. was bayl, &c. And in a scire fac. against him, M. said that the record, &c. cum omnibus id tangentibus is remov'd by error; and the plaintiff demurrs, and adjudg'd for him, because it is an ill plea: for the recognisance remains in Court, and is not removed; by which the Court might well proceed, ve. Dy. 32. and 284. and 6 E. 4. 9. By Piggot and Andrews. For a scire fac. is not so grounded, as a judicial writ upon the record, which is remov'd, but upon the recognisance, which is still in Court, and is not as a dependant upon the other, ve. 7 H. 6. 44.

[112] GAMFORD AGAINST NIGHTINGALE.

Intr. T. 2 Jac. C. B. rot. 1402.

In an action upon the case the plaintiff declares, that he was seis'd in fee of Bl. acre, and that he had a way to it by such and such a gate, &c. and that the defendant had fastened the gate with a lock. And upon not guilty it is found for the plaintiff. And now mov'd in arrest of judgment. And adjudged that that action of the case is well brought, and that he is not put to an ass.

1. Because it does not appear if the defendant claims a francktenement in the land, by which, &c. for it may be an estrangers, and then an assize does not lie against him.

2. That is not but a disturbance of a way pro tempore, of which a man cannot have an assize; as where the party meddles with the francktenement. As in digging or making of a ditch. ve. for that 2 H. 4. 11. 14 H. 8. 31. Dyer 319. b.

OSBURNE AGAINST BRADSHAW.

In debt, by an assignee by commission of bankrupts. The defendant pleads nihil debet, and wages his law. And by the Court he may well, although the interest and power to sue in his own name be good to the plaintiff by the Statute of Bankrupts. But otherwise if the duty it self had been originally due by the statute ve. 10 H. 7. 18.

FITZWILLIAMS AGAINST FITZWILLIAMS.

Resolved upon evidence, in an action upon the 5 H. 6. of forcible entry, that if A. had made a lease for years of Bl. acre, and another lease for years of Wh. acre, and he devises all his goods, plate, and jewels (except the lease of Bl. acre) to I. S. that the lease of Wh. acre pass by such a devise, because the intent appears by the exception.

GOMERSAL AGAINST WOODWARD.

Intr. rot. 2912.

G. brought an action of debt of 24l. against W. who after oyer of the condition pleads, that it was seal'd by him and one William Chute, and that after the ensealing, that the seal of William Chute was worn off, and after reaffixed. Per quod scriptum illud vacuum in lege existit. The plaintiff replyes that the said William Chute never seal'd, &c. Upon which the defendant demurs. But judgment for the plaintiff. 3

H. 7. 5. Note by the Court: It is better to plead the special matter than to plead non est factum.

BARNES AGAINST THE LORD MORDANT.

Note, in debt by an administrator. He declares of the administration committed to him at London by the Bishop of Exceter, and yet it is well, for the power of a bishop is not so local as the authority of a justice of peace.

CORNERS CASE.

By the Court, upon evidence of the case by Cooke Ch. Justice by the request of the Lord Treasurer, agreed that an atturney of that [113] Court cannot be compelled to be a constable in his county, for the Court shall discharge him, because he is an officer of the Court; but it is not so in the Kings Bench, and otherwise of a solicitor. ve. 1 H. 12.

Note, an attachment was awarded against the coroners of York, because A. was quinto exactus, but they would not give judgment of the outlawry, and an affidavit of that made. And by Millington an ancient atturney. That the coroners of Stafford for such an offence were fined every one 10l. But after the judgment of the outlawry pronounced they may stay the return of the exigent for to be advised, if the case requires.

DAVID MELLER AGAINST SHERFIELD.

In debt against an executor, he pleads that his testator was obliged to B. in a recognisance of 300l. ultra quod he had not to satisfie. The plaintiff demurs, and judgment for the plaintiff, because the defendant had not averr'd, that it was pro vero & justo debito: upon which issue might have been taken, and the executor well knowing upon what defeasance that was made. And by Cooke Ch. Justice it was rul'd accordingly.

GOLDWELL AGAINST NAVENDEN.

In a replevin the case was thus. B. held 50 acres of A. as of his mannor of Swarden by fealty, and 4s. 7d. rent, &c. And C. held 47 acres of A. &c. by fealty, and 3s. 4d. rent. A. by indenture between him the said B. and C. reciting the said several tenures, gives, grants, &c. and confirms the said rents, services, and seniories to B. and C. and their heirs, to the use of them and their heirs, &c. And in that case it was resolv'd, that is an extinguishment of a moyety of every of their tenures: and for the other moyety they hold one of another. And the avowant had judgment accordingly, for there was a cross tenure between them for the one moyety, and that shall not move as a release, reddendo singula singulis, &c. Dyer 319. See and note, 11 H. 7. 12. a. 39 H. 6. 2. 49 E. 3. 40. A recovery against one joyntenant does not extinguish all the seniory, but the actual entry is gone. 27 E. 3. 88. Pla. 47. In the principal case there is not an equal benefit to every of them: for it was said, that if the acres and rents had been equal, that then it should have been extinguish'd in all. Cooke put this report case. A. lessee for life, the remainder to B. for life. The lessor gives, grants, and confirms to them and their heirs. A. shall have all the possession during his life, and afterwards B. shall have all the possession during his life, and one moyety then executed, and after the death of B. the other moyety to A. in fee.

STRAKE AGAINST THROGMORTON.

M. 4 Jac. B. R.

The parties were at issue, the plaintiff sued a venire fac. and before the return of that, the defendant sues another venire fac. by proviso, which was ill, for no default in the plaintiff then. The venire fac. of the plaintiff was not return'd. And now it was held.

First, That if the defendant had lawfully sued a venire fac. by proviso, that yet he could not sue a nisi prius upon that until the plaintiff had made another default and laches in him; that in our case, (that happen-[114]-ing) the defendant, by the opinion of the Court, may sue a new venire fac. by proviso reciting in that, that the first erronice emanavit. And so it was ordered, P. 4 Jac. B. R.

Note by Williams, that it was adjudged that perjury upon interrogatories upon a suit in the Court of Requests, that concern a franktenement is punishable, because that concerning frank-tenement was coram non Judice. 14 E. 4. 2 Br. bre. 487.

SHORTS CASE.

Thou hast stollen my timber, are words actionable, for they shall not be intended of trees growing. By the whole Court, for they are then timber-trees.

GARRONS AGAINST BANBURY.

Intrespass for taking of a mare, the defendant justifies that the Lord Stanhop was general post-master of England, and that he made a commission to A. and B. constables of Torrington in Devonshire for to take 4 pegasos (Anglice) post-horses, virtute cujus they make a warrant to the defendant to take, &c. by force of which he took the said mare, &c.

First, It is a good bar notwithstanding that pegasus be a poets fiction: for it is made good by the (Anglice.)

Secondly, Notwithstanding that the defendant hath not shewed the place where the commission or warrant was made: for if the plaintiff had denied it in his replication the defendant might well have shewed it in his rejoynder, ve 21 H. 7. 23. a.

Thirdly, Notwithstanding that the defendant had not shew'd, that the said mare was imployed in the said service. And if he be not imploy'd, the owner hath his remedy by action against the party for mis-using of his beast. And judgment, quod querens nihil cap, &c.

Note, it was moved in discharge of a rescous. The return was, that they, (viz.) A. and B. aforesaid, the baylies ad tunc & ibidem vulneraverunt, &c. and the aforesaid George Ball rescusserunt, without tunc & ib. And upon that the parties were discharged, for the first ad tunc, &c. referr'd only to the vulneraverunt and not to rescusserunt. And the return judg'd insufficient.

BRADLEY AGAINST BENNEY.

Errour upon a recovery in an assumpsit in Bristol Court. There the plaintiff had counted that the defendant was a common carrier by boat from Bristol to Gloucester, and that he had delivered two buts of muskadel, to the defendant, who assum'd to transport it, pro quadam pecuniæ summa. The defendant his assumption aforesaid not caring, &c. the aforesaid buts so long and carelesly kept, that one of them ran out. And the defendant pleads not guilty, and the issue found against him. And now upon errour, by the Court, the issue was erroneous; for it ought to have been non assumpsit, for the plaintiff replyed upon that chiefly.

[115] Bafford against Ventres.

A repleader after verdict.

In replevin, the defendant pleads that it is his francktenement. The plaintiff replyes, that the beasts escap'd thence by default of the enclosure, &c. The defendant replyes that tempore raptionis the hedge was well repaired. And issue upon that is found against the plaintiff, who now moves in arrest of judgement, that it is not a good issue, for it ought to have been tempore escapii, or intrationis. But by the Court, that was now disallow'd, being mov'd after a verdict. But because, upon view of the return of the venire fac. nothing was indorsed, but the jurors names, the Court awarded a repleader. 5 Rep. 4.

Hudson against Crane.

Upon evidence in battery, Poph. Fenner, and Williams, directed the jury, that if A. assaults B. and in fighting A. falls to the ground, and then there B. beats and wounds him, that that is an assault in B. not justifiable. And so if another had held A. in his arms, and then B. striks him, that assault is a battery in B. not justifiable, &c. and the jury found accordingly. But Yelverton and Tanfield on the contrary, because it is but a continuance of the former assault, and that all is de son assault dem.

Wood against Smith.

In trover many exceptions were taken.

1. Because the plaintiff had counted that the testator had divers goods, without saying notabilia, in divers diocesses, by which the metropolitan had committed the administration to him, &c. and the Court held that count to be good enough, for if the defendant denied it, the plaintiff might give that in evidence.

2. He had counted, that the intestate was possest of divers goods, and of one gelding, and of one mare, of the price of 50s. without any price of the gelding. And yet by the Court good enough, ve. 44 E. 3. 20 a. Rep. 34. 7 E. 4. 25.

Note by the Court, that a creditor cannot, by the custom of London, of attaching, attach a legacy that is to be paid to the party: because it is a spiritual duty.

2. That the Mayor of London being Chancellour there for petty matters, may examine and order matters after verdict. But Tanfield, No more than after judgement: for it is not reason, that after the party hath been at charges of a tryal, that he should lose his advantage by the order of the mayor, ve. 10 H. 6. 14.

Covil against Barton.

Upon evidence in an action upon 27 Eliz. for avowing of fraudulent conveyances, the defendant in his examination in Chancery had deposed that he thought that it had been a good and simple deed, and upon good consideration, and it was resolved by the Court.

1. That a purchasor after such an avowing shall not have an action.

2. That that (thought) or (believing) is not a direct affirmation.

[116] 3. That it is not a voluntary avowing; but the party is compelled to it, by sub pœna, and so not within that statute.

4. That he that had the future interest for years, might have an action upon that statute, as he in the remainder might have an action for forging of deeds, &c. 15 E. 4. 33 H. 6.

PESCOD AGAINST MARSAM.

P. brought an action upon the case, because M. had maliciously caused him to be indicted for stealing of a plank, that usque acquietatus fuit. And by the Court, It is good without saying, legitimo modo acquietatus, in an action upon the case, which lies as well before as after the acquital, for the infamie by the indictment. And that so it was adjudg'd 29 Eliz. B. R. Knight against Ierome. But otherwise it is in conspiracy; as it was adjudg'd M. 40, 41 Eliz. Gooch against Bricket: for there he ought to say, legitimo modo, &c. ve. N. B. 116. 115.

SIDNER AGAINST CALVER.

Note by Tanf. that by the Stat. 13 Eliz. cap. 20. of Non-residency, that if the parson be absent 80 days in a year, although it be at several times (viz.) 10 dayes at one time, and 20 dayes at another time, until 80 dayes, &c. that is within the statute, by which it hath been adjudg'd.

WITTAMS CASE.

In an action upon the case for words, (viz.) If ever man was perjured, Wittam was. And issue upon not guilty, it is found for the plaintiff; and it was moved in arrest of judgement, because that the plaintiff hath not averr'd that any man was perjured. And by Tanfield only in Court, that judgement shall be stayed, for by him it hath been adjudged, that for words Thou art as very a thief as any in Gloucester Goal, is not actionable, without averment that there was a thief in Gloucester Goal. And the reason is, because theft and perjury are such bad things in themselves, that they shall not be intended without an averment, &c.

VAUGHANS CASE.

He brought a writ de droit close in the inferiour Court in nature of an assize, &c. for 50 acres against five defendants, two of the defendants are found guilty of 3 acres, and the other are quit; yet the verdict was entred against them two, as guilty of all the 50 acres, and execution upon that accordingly. And after the five defendants joyn in false judgement in the Common Bench, and aver the matter aforesaid, according to 1 E. 3. cap. 1. and there adjudged, that it was error. And now in error in the Kings Bench it is now adjudged error.

1. Because all the five defendants joyn in false judgement, where it ought to be brought by the two only, &c.

2. By Popham and the rest, that such an averment is not receivable. Read the words of the statute, G. B. 20. L.

[117] Where a judgement shall be revers'd in part.

Note in the argument of Boswells case, 6 Rep. Crooke cited 14 E. 3. Scire fac. 122. where judgement in an annuity was revers'd as to the annuity and damages, and good for the arrearages; and also voucht 38 Eliz. in the Exchequer, Agar against Candish, who was found guilty in an information, tam pro Rege quam pro seipso, upon the Statute of Liveries. He brought errour, and assign'd for errour that the statute 8 E. 4. cap. 2. gives the examination of that offence to the Kings Bench, and the Common Bench. But because the King may chuse his Court to sue where he will for his moyety, stet. judic. as to the moyety of the King. And the information for that good. But as to the moyety of the party, reversetur.

MOLINEUX'S CASE.

The case, as by the arguments of it in Tr. 4. M. 4. & H. 4 Jac. B. R. was thus: A man makes a grant of several rent-charges by several deeds for the youngest sons, and never executes it by livery, &c. And afterwards by his will devises that his younger children shall have the inheritances according to the several writings. And resolv'd that although that the writings and deeds were not parcel or part of the will, but another matter, yet that reference being to the matter in deed, is a good devise of the rent-charge, within 32 H. 6. of Wills.

GRIMSTONE AGAINST STONES.

Int. P. 3 Jac. B. R. rot. 112.

In an information for not repairing to the church, &c. upon 23 Eliz. cap. 1, it was resolv'd, that if the party be convicted upon an information, there the informer shall have the penalty, according to that statute. But if the party, before the information, be convicted of it upon an indictment at the sute of the King, there the King shall have all the penalty to himself, by 28 Eliz. cap. 6, and the informer and the poor shall have nothing. And the defendant in our case pleaded, that he was indicted at the assises, &c. before A. and B. Justices, &c. and it was held a good barr, and that so it was adjudg'd in the Exchequer, and in the Kings Bench accordingly.

THORNE AGAINST ALICE DURHAM.

D. had sued T. in the Spiritual Court for this, that whereas he was of good fame, and kept a victualling house in good order; that the said T. had publish'd that D. kept an house of bawdry. T. now brought a prohibition, and by the Court well, for D. might have had an action for that at the common law; especially where she kept a victualling house as her trade. Note 27 H. 8. 14. And by the justices, that the keeping of a brothel-house is inquirable in the leet, and so a temporal offence. And so was the opinion of the Court. T. 7. Car. B. R. Mrs. Hollands case.

TAYLOR AGAINST PERKINS.

An action upon the case was brought for words, Thou art not worthy to come into any mans company. Thou art a leprous knave and a leper. Adjudg'd that it is actionable, for a leper shall be secluded, &c. N. B. 134. Br. fo. 12. a.

[118] CHALCHMAN AGAINST WRIGHT.

[See Girdlestone v. Brighton Aquarium, 1878-79, 3 Ex. D. 143; 4 Ex. D. 107.]

In an information upon 23 H. 8. cap. for selling of beer, (viz.) 100 barrels, contrary to the price set down by the justices. The defendant pleads that there is a former information hanging against him in the Exchequer, for the said offence. And adjudg'd a good barr, if it be bona fide; and if it be not bona fide, the plaintiff may avert the fraud, &c.

2. That that statute extends to the successors of the King: although that they be not there expressed.

3. That in reciting the said statute the plaintiff hath counted for a foris faciat dicto Domino Regi, where (dicto) is not in the statute. And for that, as it is now pleaded, that shall restreyn the penalty only to H. 8. who is only named in the Act.

4. That the orders of the justices of the peace for the price, &c. ought to be publickly proclaim'd and made known to the country, otherwise the brewers cannot take notice of it.

Austin against Moyle.

A. leases by deed to M. for ten years, and M. covenants at the end of the term, to leave four acres of the land fallow'd and plow'd. And in that there was also a proviso that if M. mislike his bargain, that upon a years warning he may surrender his estate. And after M. surrenders accordingly, but had not left any fallow'd. And adjudg'd by the Court, that that acceptance of the surrender hath not dispenc'd with the covenant. Otherwise it had been if the proviso had been in the end of the 10 years; for then if the lessor accepts the surrender before the ten years expires, it is impossible for the lessee to perform the covenant. Judgment that the plaintiff should recover.

Raymond against Harard.

H. 4. Jac. B. R.

Errour, upon judgment, in the Court of Linne, in debt, for five pound upon an insimul computav. And issue was joyn'd upon nil debet. The jury found quod insimul computav. and that H. was found in arrear of five pound. Sed ultra com. prædict. &c. And upon that judgment was given for the plaintiff. And now it was revers'd for this errour. For the jury hath not found any thing of the debet, which was their issue. But if they had found a debet, &c. then the circumstance after shall not impair that. As Dyer 372. a.

Hill against Prowse.

In an ejectione firm. a special verdict was found; that A. was seis'd, &c. and being so seis'd the first of May, &c. fecit, sigillavit, & scriptum suum tradidit & deliberavit, an indenture purporting a lease for life, which follows, &c. This indenture made, &c. by force of which the Lessee entred, &c. And by the Court, that is no good finding of a lease for life. Because they have not found livery and seisin, nor an express demise for life. But after upon search of the notes of the special verdict, it appears livery and seisin was found; but the Clerk of Assize had omitted that in the entring of the postea. Resolv'd by the Court that the [119] clark should amend the postea, and then the record should be amended accordingly. ve. 4. rep. 52.

Parrey against Dale.

An obligation was made of 50l. for 50l. &c. And adjudg'd quod querens nil cap. per bill. For it is not a Latine word, and it differs from 9 H. 6. 7. a. wigint. libr. which is good enough. for v and w are all one, and differs in the pronounciation only in English. But M. and N. are several and distinct letters. Note 2 H. 4. 8. nundare for mundare; the writ shall abate. And 14 Assize 1. tenenent pro tenement. The writ abates, &c.

Heigate against Williams.

Intr. M. 3 Iac. B. C.

In an action of trespass, the case was thus. A. had a cross way by prescription to go to Wh. acre over Bl. acre, and after he purchases Bl. acre, and of that enfeoffs I. S. And adjudg'd that the cross way is extinct. Because by the unity the prescription fails. 21 E. 3. 2. 21 Ass. 1. Dyer. 295. b. 11 H. 4. 5. 11.

Fawcets Case.

If a man be indicted for a forcible entry upon 8 H. 6. and before restitution, the force is pardoned by statute or general pardon, that now there shall not be any restitution upon that indictment; for the first force and offence is pardoned. But of the party had brought his action for forcible entry, &c. such a pardon shall not reach the restitution. And by the Court that so it hath been adjudg'd. The Lord Stafford against Sir John Thinne.

Bagshaw against Gawin.

B. brought an action of trespass (quare vi & armis) for his horse pretii 5l. after the 14 of October. The defendant justifies as bayly, &c. for an estray, and that he delivered it to the plaintiff the 16 of Octob. And the plaintiff replies, that the defendant himself the said 16 day of Oct. before there delivery had us'd and work'd the said horse. The defendant demurrs. And it was resolv'd by the Court,

1. That although that it be a general writ of trespass, yet it is good although that the price of the horse be put in, the declaration and the damages may be qualified upon the evidence, and yet the plaintiff may have a special action.
2. That by his acceptance of his horse, be it before or hanging the action, the plaintiff has not abated his writ.
3. That an estray cannot be wrought no more than a distress; for the party hath not any interest, but only a custody of it.
4. That by the using the 16 of Octob. he was a trespasser ab initio (viz.) the 14 day of Octob.
5. That he that seises an estray, may detein it till he is satisfied for his feeding. 44 E. 3. 14.
6. That one may milk an estray cow. So by Noy Atturney General. That it was resolv'd in one Prideux's case, which he vowch'd in Lincolns-Inne Hall 23 March 1633. That a man may shear a stray, but cannot work it. But a cow taken for a distress cannot be milk'd nor wrought, because it is a punishment to the owner, and in custodia legis.

[120] Buchgrave against Heale.

Errour was assign'd, that in debt against an executor, he pleads fully administred, and afterwards relicta verificatione confesses the action; and judgment that the plaintiff shall recover the debt and damages de bonis testatoris, if not de bonis propriis, whereas the damages ought to have been de bonis propriis. For it is no reason to charge the goods of the testator, with damages for the obstinacy of the executor. And 14 H. 8. 12. 32 H. 6. 23. 7 E. 4. 9. And Dyer 185. differs; because there the defendant stood out the tryal. 6 E. 4. It was so adjudg'd in a judgment upon a nihil dicit against an executor.

Harrington's Case.

Errour assign'd upon a judgment in Shrewsbury Court.

1. Because upon the writ of enquiry of damages no day was given to the plaintiff.
2. Upon the return of the writ of enquiry, &c. in was entered continuato processu jurata ponitur, &c. in respect that it is a proper continuance for a pannel to try an issue, and not upon an inquest of office, as so it is. But that ought to be returned to be executed, or that the sheriff hath not sent the writ, because it is not yet executed. And for these errours judgment revers'd.

Note, an indictment upon 8 H. 6. for forcible entry, was quash'd, because it was, & in disseisivit without saying (inde). And by the justices Sir John Parrats case in the Exchequer, that a pleader that A. was seis'd, & sic seisitus, enfeoffs, B. &c. That is not good without saying, & sic inde seisitus, &c.

Stone against Wakeman.

P. 5 Jac. B. R.

Stone brought an action upon the case against W. for stopping of a way, and issue upon not guilty it is found for the plaintiff, and mov'd in arrest of judgment, because in the county the plaintiff hath prescrib'd that the inhabitants of C. have used to have a common cross way &c. And that he is an inhabitant in a messuage in C. and hath not shewn that C. is antiqua villa. But by the Court that was disallowed, and the prescription held good enough. For he does not claim any right or interest in the cross way, but only an easement. ve. 6. rep. 59. Dy. 70. Yet for another cause by the Court the plaintiff shall not have judgment. Because he hath not shewn how he hath suffered any particular damage or loss by that stopper, &c. ve. 5. Rep. 73. 27 H. 8. 27.

Preston against Love.

Upon evidence in an ejectione firm. by the Court.

1. That if the lessee for years after his term expired takes a new lease for years of an estranger rendring rent, and pays that; yet he remains tenant at sufferance, as to the first lessor.

2. That in such a case the lessor may lease it to another before any entry by him, for it is not out of his possession.

[121] Smalls Case.

By the Court (Poph. being absent) it is clear, that an agreement betwixt the parson and one of the parishoners; that he shall have his own tythes for years, is good enough without deed; but otherwise if it had been for life. And it is a better way to plead that as an agreement, and not as a lease.

Sir Henry Cheverells Case.

A quo warranto was brought against him, ten. divers. libertat. privil. &c. without putting of any certainty, as waife, stray, frankpledge, &c. To which the defendant might make a particular answer. And by the Court that is nought. But Mr. Waterhouse the prothonotary said, that there are presidents accordingly. And therefore a day was given to search the presidents. And in the interim let processe cease against the defendant. N. B. 160. b.

Doctor Atkins against Doctor Gardener.

Doctor Langton late president of the College of Physicians had recover'd for the King and for himself, by the name of Presidens Collegii 60l. and dies. And afterwards Doctor Atkins being made president brought a sciri fac. upon that judgment. And by the whole Court adjudged well. And it ought not to be brought by the executor of Doctor Langton. ve. Dyer 148. a.

Note, the sheriff delivers possession upon a recovery in an ejectione firm. by A. against B. and in the interim B. ejects A. again. And now A. prays new writ of habere fac. possess. And by the 4 justices, because the first writ is not yet return'd, so that it may appea rof record if it be executed or not; a new writ shall be awarded. And the entry of the first writ shall be quia vice comes non mifit, &c. And by Tanfield that Hastings case was so adjudg'd.

COMYN AGAINST WHEATLY.

Upon error it was resolv'd that an ejectione firm. lies, of a cole-mine. 43 E. 3. 35. An assize lies and was brought for a cole-mine.

THIMBLETHORPS CASE.

Judgment was reversed by errour, because no pledges of prosecuting were found in the first action to prevent the unjust vexation of the party. Dyer 288. N. B. 31. a. 195.

ORCELLS CASE.

The wardship of the body and land of William Rosse was granted to him during the minority; and under the seal of the Court of Wards. And O. frames an indictment against A. upon 8 H. 6. for a forcibly entry in that land. And held, that it is good, although that the King at the full age of the ward, shall award livery to him of that land; and yet for that, the King hath not the possession of the land, but a cer-[122]-tain power and interest to make livery. And by Fenner, that a lessee for years of the King hath brought an ejectione firm. and adjudg'd maintainable, 1 H. 7. 17.

BROWNE AGAINST BANKS.

In an ejectione firm. the defendant pleads, that locus in quo, &c. And by the Court it is a good plea, for a writ of habere fac. possess. out of the Court cannot be executed there. ve. 5. Rep. 105. a. b. of antient demean.

Note, a writ of errour was directed, Maiori, Recordatori, & cap. Aldermanno of Evesham, &c. and the mayor and the recorder only return it, and certifie (viz.) placita ten. coram majore & recordatore (without saying) & cap. aldermanno. And for that, the writ was abated, and the party put to a new writ of errour, &c. Quod coram vobis residet, &c. by the Court.

RAYMONDS CASE.

R. was indicted for stopping of a cross way leading from a certain village called Stoake, unto a village called Melton in the county of Dor. And by the Court that was quash'd, because, in the county of Dor. referrs only to Melton, and not to Stoake. And then it is not shewn in what county Stoake is. And for that the indictment nought.

BOLLS AGAINST SIR HENRY WINTON.

M. for natural affection to his son, covenants to stand seised to the use of his son for life, and after his death, to such a woman as he should marry, for her life, the remainder to D. in tayl; and before that the son had married, A. leases that land for an hundred years to I. S. The son marries S. and dies, she enters upon I. S. and leases to B. who being ousted, brings an ejectione firm.

1. That it is a good consideration to raise an use to her that shall be the wife of the son, ve. Plo. 154.

2. That a lease for years by the covenanter to I. S. does not hinder the raising of the use contingent, ve. Dy. 290. But otherwise it had been, if the covenanter by the same deed had rais'd a power to himself to make leases for years. But in our case the lease for 100 years takes effect as a future interest out of the fee; that was in the covenanter after the estates determined; and at the worst the feme shall have the reversion, and rent during her life; and Williams voucht Ralph Egertons case, where it was judged accordingly. And now judgment for the plaintiff.

WARD AGAINST MATHEW.

A. in consideration of service and other causes gives Bl. acre to B. his servant, and C. my cosin in tayl. And the jury found an intention of marriage at that time between B. and C. which was effected. After B. the husband dies, having issue D. C. takes E. to husband, and they enfeoff D. the issue in tayl. E. also dies, C. re-enters, D. levies a fine sur. conusans de droit, to I. S. and D. after enters upon C. for the forfeiture by the statute, 11 H. 7. cap. 20. leases to W. the plaintiff, who being ousted by M. the defendant, to whom C. the wife had [123] leas'd it, brought an ejectione firm. And it was adjudg'd against the plaintiff.

1. For first, for a moyety there is no question, for the gift being before the marriage, D. and C. shall take by divided moyeties. And so it was adjudg'd in the Court of Wards. Edmunds case, upon such a gift by a father of the son upon an intention of marriage.

2. D. the son hath barr'd himself to take benefit of the forfeiture, by 11 H. 7. cap. 20. for levying of a fine. And I. S. the conusee shall not take benefit of the forfeiture, for it was a fine by estoppel only, and no interest pass'd by that. As it is in the 3 Rep. There he that levyed the fine had a real remainder in him. But in our case D. had not but a dry right to the estate tayl, after the death of C. his mother. And so note the difference; and by the Court judgment against the plaintiff.

HANNOCK AGAINST THE EXECUTORS OF CROUTH.

Lessee for years covenants to repair and leave it repaired. He dies, and in a covenant brought against his executors, it was resolv'd by the Court, that release of all actions and demands, does not discharge that covenant, because in a covenant damages shall be only recovered, which are not due, nor a sute lawfull for them, before the covenant broken. And that word demand, as it is referr'd to the action by cause of a subsequent wrong, does not discharge any thing before cause of action for the wrong, ve. Dyer 57. 217. 11 H. 4. 6.

OLDFIELDS CASE.

A. had an acre of land which was in the middle, and incompass'd with other of his lands, and enfeoffs B. of that acre. And resolv'd by the four justices, that B. shall have a convenient way over the lands of the feoffor, and he is not bound to use the same way that the feoffor uses.

COOK AGAINST WALL.

In an audita querela, it was resolved by the Court, that if a debt be brought upon an obligation, and issue (upon nihil debet) is found for the plaintiff. Now the defendant shall not have an audita querela upon a surmise, that it was an usurious contract, For he might have pleaded that in the action of debt.

Note, that a prohibition was granted, where the commissary, at his visitation court, cited many men of several parishes to appear before him there, and for not appearing they were excommunicated. And a prohibition was granted, because the Ordinary hath not power to cite any to that Court but the churchwardens and sidesmen, and those he may impannel, and give articles to them, for to enquire as the Justices of Assise. ve. N. Br. 41.

HUNT AGAINST FIELD.

Errour assign'd upon judgment given at Worcester. Hunt summonitus fuit ad respondend. R. F. & unde idem querens per B. his atturney, &c. And because the plaint was so short written, so that of it there could not be sense. And if it were taken for the plaintiff that is not good, for idem may have relation to H. as well as to R. F. But otherwise if it had been & unde idem R. F. quer. for it must of necessity have been [124] intended of the plaintiff querens. and for that fault judgment was revers'd.

JENNINGS CASE.

It was resolved upon a special verdict, for the avoiding of a lease for non-residency within 13 Eliz. cap. 20. But that statute was not found by the jury, nor pleaded by the party. For if that statute be general, then the Judges shall take notice of it ex officio, and it need not be pleaded.

ROCKWOODS CASE.

The sheriff sues a scire fac. and inquisition to make execution of the goods of I. S. The enquest found that the goods now in question, were the goods of I. S. who in truth appertained to R. And by the Court, the action of trespass is well brought, for that inquisition is not an absolute discharge for the sheriff, but only matter of evidence, for to excuse or mitigate the offence. ve. N. B. 35. 5 Rep. 32.

BAYLY AGAINST CHILD.

An infant by his guardian brought an action for words, I charge thee with felony, and the issue upon not guilty is found for the plaintiff. And now mov'd in arrest of judgment, because it is not averr'd that the plaintiff was of such an age that he might commit felony. But by the Court that was disallowed, and if in truth he be not of such an age, that ought to be pleaded by the defendant, and not averr'd by the plaintiff for avoiding his own action, and judgment for the plaintiff.

REEDHEAD AGAINST HARPER.

An action upon the case was brought in nature of a disceit. That the defendant had sold to the plaintiff certain sheep, and had warranted them to be sound, when in truth they were rotten. The defendant pleads that they were sound at the time of the sale; et de hoc ponit se super patriam. The plaintiff demurrs, and it was adjudg'd for him, because the defendant had taken traverse to the cause of action (viz.) absque hoc that they were rotten. And issue shall not be taken upon two affirmatives. 4 H. 7. 13. a. 1 H. 7. 9. b. c.

WATS & LEE AGAINST OGNELL.

In debt for rent arrear. It was resolved that the fine was levied to A. and B. to the use of A. B. and C. that they are all joyntenants, although A. and B. was in by the fine at common law. And by 27 H. 8. of Uses. And that in 21 Eliz. it was adjudg'd accordingly upon a feoffment. ve. Dyer 200.

Stanred against Laycock.

In an assumsit the plaintiff declares that the defendant promised to convey Bl. acre (being copyhold land) to the plaintiff by such assurance as shall be devised. And that B. had devised it to be made by letter of atturney to C. to make a surrender in the name of the defendant, &c. to the use of the plaintiff. And obliges for the quiet en-[125]-joying, &c. And that he had tendred the letter of atturney, &c. to the defendant: and that he had refused to seal it. And the issue upon non assumpsit is found for the plaintiff. And now moved in arrest of judgment, that the defendant had not shew'd if the obligation was sealed or not, and that perhaps the jury had given greater damages in regard of that. Yet by the Court it was adjudg'd for the plaintiff. For the obligation is not part of the assurance; and that it is out of the reference to B. and the not sealing it is not accomptible. And therefore it shall not be intended that greater damages were in regard of that.

Nicholas against Loddington.

In a replevin, it was held by Fenner and Yelverton, that the pleader of an atturnment (viz.) that the tenant of the franktenement attourn'd is not good without naming him. For perhaps the tenant of the franktenement ought not to attourn, as assignee of the tenant in dower, 11 H. 4. 19. Crook accordingly. And if issue be joyned upon another point collateral, then such a pleader is well done, and judgement staid.

Sir James Skidnes against Huson.

If an estranger enters my close, and cuts my trees, and carries them away. That I may have trover, although, that after the cutting and before the carrying away, I could not claim them, and no actual possession in me.

Watts's Case.

An indictment upon 8 H. 6. wanted (illicite), and it was rul'd to be good. For disseisivit implies as much. See a president in Lamberts Justice of Peace, 155.

Winksworth against May.

An action of trespass, for a trespass in Wh. acre, the buttals exprest. And upon not guilty, the jury found the defendant guilty, quoad medietatem acræ prædictæ, without any certainty of which moity. And yet resolv'd that the verdict is good in trespass, because damages only shall be recovered. But otherwise it is in an ejectione firm. Because there, there ought to be a certainty, to make the execution of it. And judgement for the plaintiff, 1 H. 7. 9. a. So in the moyety of a mannor, ve. 1 E. 5. In the case of a detinue.

Andrews against The Hundred of Lewkner.

In an action upon the Statute of Hue and Cry, upon a robbery. The plaintiff concludes contra form. statuti, and resolved that it is good, and that shall refer to the statute, 13 E. 3. And that 27 Eliz. is but restrictive, and for the better direction in such cases.

In debt against baron and feme as executrix, &c. they plead payment by the testator, and upon issue it is found against them, and judgement, quod recuperet debitum, de bonis testatoris, and the costs and damages &c. And if not, then the costs and damages, de bonis propriis. [126] And in error it was held to be a good judgement; although a feme covert cannot have goods in his own right; yet she may have them as executrix. And so judgement affirmed.

Note by Yelverton and Williams, nullo negante, upon the motion of Mr. Clark, that if A. be lessee for life, the remainder to B. in tayle, and a præcipe is brought against B. If he happens to have a surrender of the lessee for life at any time before the recovery. That then it shall be a good recovery, and the pæcipe is now made good. That was in the case of a common-recovery. And yet to many intents the judgment shall relate to the first day of the term. But a fiction does not destroy a lawful thing. 5 H. 5. 9. A. brought a præcipe against B. for Bl. acre. B. purchases Bl. acre. Now B. cannot plead non-tenure. Otherwise if Bl. acre had descended to B. hanging the action. 35 H. 6. 4. 41 E. 3. 5. a. b.

CULCOE AGAINST SHARP.

A lease was made with a condition to re-enter for not repayring, &c. the lessor, &c. with the consent of the lessee builds a new barn upon part of the land; and the lessee takes a new lease of the said barn. And resolved by the Court, in an ejectione firm. That by the new lease, the condition is suspended. For it cannot be apportioned, and the new lease is surrendred for that part.

GELLYE AGAINST CLARK.

A man comes to an inne and lodges there that night; and in the morning he departs, and says to his hostess that he will return within two dayes, and that he would leave his hamper there, in which were many hatts; and his host promised that they should be safe. He returns accordingly, but in the interim the hatts were stollen, and judgement quod querens nil cap. per bil. Because he was not a guest at the time of the stealing: and the host had not any benefit or profit by the goods being there. But otherwise it had been of an horse. For then the host hath a benefit for the food.

BROWNLOWE AGAINST THE EXECUTOR OF ELLIN LITTLETON.

L. had recovered in dower against B. and damages from the death of her husband. B. brings errour, and assigns errour, &c. hanging which L. dies. It was resolved upon search of presidents, that a sc. fac. shall not issue against the executor for the damages. And there need not a new writ of errour. For that errour does not abate by the death of the defendant in the errour; as our case is. Otherwise if the plaintiff had died. And as to the land there needs not new errour, because by the death of L. the land belongs to B. So in P. 39. El. B. R. Williams against Williams. In errour brought upon a judgement in dower, with the damages. The defendant in the writ of errour dies. The plaintiff brought a new writ of errour ad coram vobis resident, against the executor, who brings a sciri fac. for to have execution of the damages. And the party pleads, that there is errour hanging for the damages. And by the Court, if the plaintiff in the errour, had assigned errour according to the course of the Court, then the plea is good; but otherwise if he hath not assigned errours. For the sciri fac. for the damages, is, for to hasten him to proceed cum effectu in the errour.

[127] MAUNSELL AGAINST ORIAN.

An habeas corpus was awarded to remove them, being imprisoned for not taking the oath ex officio, before the High Commissioners for Conventicles by the statute 1 Eliz. 5. By Justice Poph. That it hath been adjudg'd, that a fine imposed by the High Commissioners was estreated into the Exchequer. And that was levied by process out of the Exchequer, and well. And if they may impose a fine, they may imprison; and that it hath been so used these 50 years, without any repugnancy, if the offence be ecclesiastical, and belong to them.

FULLERS CASE.

F. was of counsel in an habeas corpus with one Ladd, who was committed to prison by the High Commissioners for refusing the oath ex officio, &c. And F. in his argument, said and objected many things contrary to the proceedings of the High Commissioners; for which he was convented before them, and committed. F. brought a prohibition, and in that shewed the antiquity of the Innes of Courts, and that he was a barrester of Grays Inne, and of counsel for his fee, with Ladd. And afterwards F. brought an habeas corpus, and in that Lees case was voucht, that L. being an atturney of the Court, was committed by the High Commissioners, and afterwards was bayl'd, because of his necessary attendance in Court. And that so it was also ruled in one Mittons case in the time of the Lord Dyer. And in that case it was agreed, that the High Commissioners may commit to prison. And Fuller now was remanded.

BUCK AGAINST AMCOTTS.

H. 5 Jac. B. R.

In a prohibition. The defendant said, that in Hornchurch in Essex are chappels of ease (viz.) Rumford and Haveringe Chappels, and that they of Haveringe have used time out of mind, &c. to contribute to the reparation of Rumford: and that in the time of H. 4. virtute literar. patent. & concurrentibus iis, &c. And Rumford was pulled down, and erected in a more convenient place within this precinct and circuit, (viz.) twenty eight foot longer, and fourteen foot broader. Noy, That it does not lie.

1. Virtute literar. patent. in general is not good. But the patent ought to have been shewn in hæc verba or produced in Court; by which the Court might judge: for a new church cannot be erected without letters patents, because it is a sanctuary, ve. 5 E. 3. 26. 1 H. 7. 25. and 22 E. 4. The Lord Lislees case.

2. The prescription is gone, by the erecting in another place, and longer, &c. as aforesaid, ve. 4 Rep. P. 6. And that shall be taken strict, Perkins 761. 7 E. 4. 27. 10 E. 3. 23. But the Court was on the contrary. Because it is pro bono publico, and in such a case a pleader, by concurrentibus iis, is good. As of an union, 11 H. 7. 8. And that the conusans for reparation of the church, appertains to the Spiritual Court. And is not like the case of a tenure, 4 Rep. 86. Because the tenant by that is put to a greater charge; and no profit or benefit accrews to the tenant, as it does to the parishioner. And Easter term ensuing, a consultation was granted by the Court.

[128] SIR ROBERT MILLERS CASE.

Adjudged by the Court, that a man cannot be punisht by the statute of 5 Eliz. cap. 9. for perjury in his own cause, as wager of law, &c. But by that he shall be indicted at common law, and it was commanded to be observed from henceforth; and that it hath been so adjudged.

Note by the Court, that if a warrant of attorney be entred in any term pendente placito, before judgment, that that is good enough; and for that, a certiorari to search in one term particularly is not good; but it ought to be general. For otherwise a judgement may be reversed without cause.

HARIS'S CASE.

He steals cattel, and sell them at Coventry in an open market, and immediately he was apprehended by the Sheriffs of Coventry, and they seised the money; and afterwards the thief was arraigned and hang'd at the suit of the owner of the cattel. And by the Court, the party shall have restitution of the money; notwithstanding the words of 21 H. 8. The goods stollen, &c. and by Crook, that it is usual at Newgate.

HORN AGAINST TAYLOR.

Adjudged, that whereas T. had a way over the close of H. and H. sows that close and leaves a way in another place of that close, within the same close; that yet T. might well justifie to go, where the ancient way was: and is not bound to go in the way that is unplowed: and accordingly it was adjudged, M. 6 Jac. Horn against Woodlacke.

MARY PALMER AGAINST ANTHONY HARSEY.

In an ejectione firm. the case was thus, Lessee for years dies intestate, administration is granted to A. and P. A. by indenture grants that for 3 years to P. the plaintiff, who now brought the action in her own name. And upon that, the evidence being moved for the defendant, the counsel of the defendant offered voluntarily to have it so specially found; but the Court delivered no opinion. But the verdict past against the plaintiff upon another point.

STURGION AGAINST DOROTHY PAINTER.

There was articles drawn between A. and S. (viz.) articles agreed upon, &c. Imprimis, A. doth demise his close to S. to have it for fourty years, and a rent reserv'd; with a clause of distress, &c. In witness whereof, &c. And afterwards there was written in the same paper, a memorand. that these articles are to be ordered by counsel of both parties, according to the due form of law. And because the intent of both parties appeared by that memorand. and the lease was drawn by the counsel, but never sealed, (for the parties disagreed about fireboot) it was ruled upon evidence in an eject. firm. by the Court, that the articles were not a sufficient lease; and the jury found accordingly, without departing from the Barr.

[129] FALDER AGAINST RIDGE.

F. brought trespass against R. in the Kings Bench. And upon demurrer upon plea of the defendant, it was adjudg'd for the defendant. F. brought errour in the Exchequer Chamber, and there the judgement in the Kings Bench was revers'd, but no writ of enquiry of damages might be awarded out of the Exchequer Chamber, by the statute 27 Eliz. cap. 8. Lege. And now F. sues a writ of enquiry out of the Kings Bench, and well; for the first judgement being revers'd is not a barr.

SIR CHRISTOPHER HODSMAN AGAINST JOHN GRISSEL.

Upon evidence to the jury. By the Court that an action upon the case for words lyes against an infant of 17 years of age. For malitia supplet ætatem.

Note by Yelverton. That an executor pays a debt upon a usurious contract. That that is a devastavit. ve. 4 H. 7.

DAVIS AGAINST ANDERSON.

Intr. H. 5 Jac. B. R. rot. 329.

Debt brought against A. by D. in a court baron, and judgement for it, and 44s. 6d. for costs and damages, and upon that judgement there. D. brings it also in the Kings Bench. And judgement by the Court for the plaintiff. See yet 4. Rep. 30. b. which seems to be contrary. But that was for damages given by the statute.

VENTRES AGAINST CARTER.

Errour upon a judgement in Cambridge, because the cause of action is laid to be in a close called Bl. acre, and it is not averr'd, that it was infra jurisdictionem. ve. Kellw. 33. a. 89. a.

2. The judgement was entred, ideo videtur. And by the Court, Judgement shall not be by a videtur. And judgement for those causes was revers'd.

GORE AGAINST STARK.

Two churchwardens sue S. for reparation of the church according to the tax assest. S. pleads he always offered to pay. By which the sentence in the Spl. Court passed against them. Then they appeal, and sentence is repeal'd and 15l. costs given to them, and they sue for that 15l. in the Spl. Court. And S. pleads a release of one of the churchwardens. And in a prohibition it seem'd to the 3 justices, that that release is a barr against the other, and that if it be disallow'd in the Spiritual Court. By the Court it was said a prohibition shall lie. 7 Jac. B. R. rot. 852. A consultation in such a case was granted, for the churchwardens in such a case are a corporation for the benefit, but not for the prejudice of the parish. 13 H. 7. 9. 11 H. 4. 12. And they shall recover the costs, to the use of the church. And the release shall be well enough determined there, where the suit was commenc'd.

Note; if a man sues in the Spiritual Court, prescribing to have a seat in a church ratione messuagii where he inhabits. And upon the [130] motion of Serjeant Henden. A prohibition was granted, for it is a temporal thing.

KENDRIDGE AGAINST PARGETTOR.

In a replevin, the plt. shews that there is a field, the franktenement whereof belongs to the plt. and that at certain times of the year the plt. should put in but so many horses only, according to the custom. And that the defendant had common there for his cattel, and that he had distreyn'd the cattel of the plt. there damage feasant, because there were more than 3 horses. And the issue upon the custom is found for the defendant. And adjudg'd that such custom is good, and that the owner of the land or soyl of the waste or common may be stinted for the number of his cattel. But it seem'd that he ought to allege the custom also to destreyn the cattel of the owners of the same land.

THOMPSON & ALII.

They had acknowledged a statute merchant, and judgement was had upon it in the Common Bench, and the land of Thompson only was extended, because the other had not any thing, now he brought errour in the Kings Bench, and the judgment in the Common Bench was revers'd. And now the question was, if they both may joyn in the scir fac. for to have restitution of that which they lost, and the mean profits; where in truth one of them had not lost any thing, but resolved by the Court that they may joyn, and that the words of the restitution to Thompson only, may be good enough, because he only had sustained the losse. Also both were parties to the first judgement, and to the reversal of it, and by the restitution he that lost nothing shall recover nothing.

Dr. Meadhouse against Dr. Taylor.

A prohibition for a suit in the Spiritual Court, for tithes of rent in London. It was held by the Court, that by 38 H. 8. cap. 12. the sute ought to be before the Mayor of London by complaint in writing, and not by word of mouth only, in nature of a monstrans de droit, declaring all the title. And if the sute be in the Spiritual Court for tithes in London, that Court may grant a prohibition, and yet that Court hath not power to meddle with them.

2. It was resolved, that a reservation by lessee for life, who leases for years to A. is not sufficient to bind him in the reversion, to pay tithes according to that rate.

3. That a rent for half a year, and afterwards for another half year, is a yearly rent within the meaning of the decree. And note, as the same was last let, is not intended last before the decree, but before the demand of the tithes.

Rames against Machin.

In an ejectione firm. by the Court, that a lease for years for an infant to try the title, is good enough, because it is for his advantage. Note 21 H. 6. 31. Letter of atturney by an infant to receive livery and seisin for him.

[131] Heale against The Churchwardens of Hoblton.

They sued H. in the Spiritual Court, for a tax assest, for the reparation of the church. H. sues a prohibition. And after a consultation was granted. Then H. sues an appeal to the superior Court; and then he praid another prohibition. And it was urged, that it was out of the statute. But Fleming and Williams were on the contrary. And that that was within the statute; because it was upon an appeal in the same case.

Secondly, that the rate was made perpetuis duratura temporibus. But all agreed that that is not good to bind the inheritance. But yet it is good by way of direction. How and how much shall be levied as need requires.

Sir Nicholas Pogars Case.

An indictment upon 8 H. 6. was quasht. Because it was in quoddam mess. existens. lib. tenent. in, &c. And did not say, adhuc existens. And for that fault the party was discharged. And it was ruled accordingly. P. 42 Eliz. Br. rot. 27. Stansby against Croxton.

Pinkard against Ridge.

In covenant, P. said that R. demis'd to him for life per dedi & concessi. And that a stranger had an elder title for years, and had entred. The defendant pleads, that the plaintiff had a warrantia chart. hanging against him for that land; and by the Court that was held no plea. For by the covenant he shall recover damages only: but by a warrantia chart. he shall recover in value. And that the covenant well lies. Because an estate for years only is evicted. Otherwise it had been; if all the estate for life had been evicted. ve. 17 E. 3. 28. Covenant 8. also N. B. 134. That such a lessee shall not have a warrantia chart, but the lessor himself. But he may have a covenant against the heir.

Scaddings Case.

A habeas corpus was awarded for him, being imprisoned in the Admiral Court. And the cause was returned to be, one Eaton being there imprisoned for pyracy. S. excited him to break the prison, and helpt him out with a ladder of ropes. And by Fleming, Fitzwill. and Crooke. That he is well imprisoned there, and the cause good, although that the offence was done in corpore comitatus. For the offence of breaking and ayding out of prison, shall be of the same nature as the principal offence; and for that the party was imprisoned. 1 H. 7. 6. Yelverton was onely on the contrary. And the prisoner was remanded and was not discharged.

B. and two others sues for three several libells in the Spiritual Court, and they joyn in a prohibition. And by the Court that is not good. But they ought to have had three several prohibitions. And therefore a consultation was granted. M. 26, 27 Eliz. C. B. If A. libels against B. for 3 things by one libel, B. may have one or three prohibitions. Note Dyer 171.

[132] In an ejectione firm. it was found by special verdict, that A. tenant in tayl to him and his heirs males, and the remainder to B. in fee. B. by deed enrol'd bargains and grants to Queen Elizabeth, all his estate, title, interest and demand, habend. for the life of the said A. and after his death, so long as he had issue male of his body; with a proviso, upon payment of 20s. to be void. A. suffers a common recovery, and dies without issue. B. tenders the 20s. and resolv'd that that recovery by A. hath barr'd the remainder in fee; for the grant to the Queen was void: for it was impossible that ever it could take any effect, by that grant to the Queen. And issue in the grant, shall be intended issue male inheritable to the tayl, and shall not be intended of a son of the daughter. And this case was put by the justices. Land is given to A. and his heirs, so long as B. hath issue male, &c. B. dies his wife being big with a son, who is afterwards born. Yet the estate of A. is determined; and judgement was given accordingly.

Dentons Case.

An action of debt was brought upon two obligations. And the defendant pleads, non sunt facta, or per minas. And adjudged good by one plea.

Whitehead Darcyes Case.

An indictment of riot and battery, &c. contra formam diversor. stat. it was rul'd to be good, although he does not express any statute in certain: and the Clerks of the Court said, there were divers presidents for that.

Sanders against Partridge.

An ejectione firm. was brought of a boylary of Salt. and there was no doubt of it. But the case was argued upon points upon the Statute of 27 Eliz. of Fraudulent Conveyances.

In a long prohibition, it was agreed by the Court, that a coppyholder of an inheritance may prescribe in the name of his lord to be discharged of tithes. And that in 44 Eliz. Crowch. against Fryer, it was adjudged accordingly. And Serjeant Hatton voucht Brewer and Veyseys case, in an action of trespass in the Exchequer, that if the parson of a church which is not impropriate leases his glebe, the lessee shall pay tithes. But otherwise if it had been an impropriate church, because of the Statute of 32 H. 8. of Dissolutions. And that it was rul'd accordingly. Note Dy. 43 a.

PARKER AGAINST HEBLETHWAIT.

D. had recover'd in the Court of Rye within the Cinque-ports. And now brings debt also upon that recovery, quod cum debet. per legis cursum recuperasset, without more of the proceedings there. And it was doubted if that was good. Such a count in a sciri fac. is good, ve. 9 H. 6. 49. 18 E. 4. 7. Plow. 47. And so it has been tryed. And by Henden that the recital of any particular of the proceedings of the other Court is not traversable. 21 E. 4. 54 H. 5. Jac. B. R. rot. 229. Davies against Anderson. And now in our case, issue is taken upon nul teil record. [133] And the writ was directed to the warden of the Cinque-ports, that he should use the best means to the Mayor of Rye to send the record; who returns, that the mayor hath certified him, quod habetur tale recordum, in hæc verba; but he hath not sent the record it self. And for that insufficient.

HUNTER AGAINST MOONE.

An information was brought upon 5 Eliz. cap. 4. (for using the trade of a dyer, whereof he had not been an apprentice) at the Quarter Sessions in Southwarke, and was removed by certiorari, and traverse taken; and upon the evidence it appear'd, that the defendant was a feltmaker; and that the feltmakers for the space of 60 years last past, have us'd to dye felts: and many haberdashers deposed, that the colours dyed by them, was better than that which was coloured by the common dyers. And it was adjudged by the Court, that that is part of their trade of feltmaker. And the jury found accordingly for the defendant.

PRIDAM AGAINST TUCKER.

An action upon the case was brought for words, Thou art an healer of felonies, and adjudged maintainable, because in Devonshire where, &c. Healer signifies the same as hider or concealer. And the proverb there is, The healer is as bad as the stealer.

PHIMMER AGAINST HOCKETT.

An ejectione firm. and a tryal at Barre. The plaintiff had declared of a lease made to him by baron and feme; and that he being out of possession, they had made a letter of atturney, to enter and to deliver that lease, and that they sealed and delivered it. And now ruled, that the the declaration is naught; because it is not the lease of the wife, but of the husband onely; and that so it hath been adjudged in one Riches case. And that the letter of atturney of the wife is void, because it is only executory. And the counsel of the plaintiff confest, that it hath been adjudged accordingly.

SIR WILLIAM HALL AGAINST ELLIS.

T. 7 Jac. B. R.

[See Stileman-Gibbard v. Wilkinson [1897], 1 Q. B. 762.]

E. farmor of a rectory impropriate, libels in the Spiritual Court pro sedile in dextra parte Cancellæ, and in his additional libel, he libels pro loco primo, and principally in dextra parte Cancellæ. The defendant there surmises to have a prohibition, quod est antiqua parochia & antiqua Cancella; and that he is seised of an antient messuage in that parish, and that he and all those, &c. have used to sit in dextra parte Cancellæ prædict. to hear, &c. And it was resolv'd by the Court.

1. That of common right, the parson impropriate, and per consequens his farmor ought to have the chief seat in the chancell; because he ought to repair it. But by prescription another parishioner may have it. But in our case a consultation was awarded, with a quoad, &c. because the libel and the additional that now is all one, is pro primo loco, &c. and the surmise is only pro sedile in dextra parte, and not pro loco primo in it.

[134] CHRISTOPHER DEANS CASE.

By the Court, that if an archdeacon make a general mandat for the induction of a parson (viz.) univers. personis vicariis clericis & literatis infra archidiaconat. meum ubicunque constitut. That if a minister or a preacher who is not resident within that archdeaconry, makes the induction, yet it is good. And the opinion of the four doctors of the civil law was shewn to the Court accordingly, upon a special verdict.

BRICKENDINE AGAINST DENWOOD.

It was found upon a special verdict, that the parson of the parish makes a collector of tithes, and that A. had licenced a parishioner to carry away his corn, without setting forth of tithes. By the Court clearly, that licence is void. ve. 5 E. 3. 63. Plou. 104. That a collector of rents cannot make an acquittance and discharge them. And a consultation was awarded.

LOUCHES CASE.

Errour was brought to reverse a common recovery had against an infant, and upon that scire fac. ad audiend. errores, estrep. was pray'd. And by the Court allowed, because it lies in the original writ, see likewise in a writ of entry in the post.

Note, an action upon 5 Eliz. cap. 14. for forging of an obligation. And upon not guilty it is found for the defendant. And upon the motion of Hitcham, it was ordered by the Court, that judgment should be staid, because the action is brought only in the name of the party, and not tanquam pro Dom. Rege, &c.

Note, it was said by Williams, that upon judgment in a scire fac. judgment does not lie in the Exchequer Chamber, by 27 Eliz. cap. 8. For that action is not mentioned in that statute.

Note, in an action upon the case for words. If the defendant plead not guilty, and the jury find part of the words, the plaintiff shall recover. But otherwise if the defendant had taken a traverse to the words.

BROWN AGAINST BARWICK.

Errour was brought upon judgment in an account.

1. Because the judgment gives to recover damages. But not allowed. For the defendant hath delayed the plaintiff, and pleaded to the issue, which is found against him. So occasione interplacitandi he shall recover damages. But otherwise if the defendant comes the first day, and enters in the accompt taken, for to make accompt 2 R. 2. accompt 42. 5 E. 3. 40.

2. Errour was assign'd, because upon the first judgment quod computet, it was entred defendens in misericordia, and upon the second judgement also defendens in miser. and so twice punish'd. But that was not allowed, because there were two several judgments. And Manwood said that so it was adjudg'd between Brown and Marsh.

[135] BREERTON AND HIS WIFE.

They brought an action upon the case upon an assumpsit to the wife, dum sola fuit against 3. By the Court it was rul'd.

1. That if 3 assume, and one dies, the survivors shall be charg'd. But if they are alive the action shall be brought against them all.

2. If 3 assume to pay or give, &c. upon request, &c. If the request be made to one of them it is good.

AYRES AGAINST OSWALL.

An action upon the case for these words, Thou art a thief, and hast stollen my appletrees out of my orchard. By the Court maintainable. But otherwise it had been if he had said, for thou hast stollen, &c.

BRUMLEY AGAINST TODD.

T. assumes, that if B. marries his servant, &c. that he will give him 50l. And the plaintiff in the assumpsit shews, that he had taken the servant to wife, and that the defendant licet sæpius requisit. hath not pay'd, &c. And it was moved in arrest of judgement, that the plaintiff hath not shown, that he had given notice of the marriage to the defendant: and yet judgement was given for the plaintiff. And a president was shewed in 34 Eliz. An assumpsit to pay 100l. at the day of marriage, and no notice was shewn, and yet good, and affirm'd upon errour brought.

STONE AND ALII AGAINST BROWICKE.

Two tenants in common (and so expresly said in the declaration throughout) bring an action upon the case against B. for stopping of a river, so that it overflowed the meadow whereof they were tenants in common. And well, for that is but a trespass upon the matter; in which they may joyn. But in forging of false deeds or slander of title: they ought to sever. For that prejudices them with respect to the inheritance, and franktenement. And so 'twas now adjudg'd.

SYMONDS AGAINST BARHAM.

Errour upon a judgement in the Common Bench in an ejectione firm. brought by a gardian in soccage, because he has not shewn in the writ that the heir was within age at the time, &c. But by the Court it is yet good. And judgment affirm'd. But note that the nonage of the heir appears in the declaration 14 H. 4. 13. bre. 471. 17 E. 3. 30. 22 Eliz. C. B. rot. 733. Ass.

LOYDS CASE.

M. 7 Jac. B. R.

A rescous was returned against Evanum alias Jevanum Loyd, which appears upon the exigent. And by the Court the rescous is naught, because he cannot have two Christian names.

JOHN RIVET AGAINST DOWE.

The lord may distreyn the copyholder for the services, or he may seise the copyholders land.

[136] CHAMBERS'S CASE.

A prohibition was awarded to the Court of the Bishop of Oxford. For that, that Ch. was sued there for a perpetual charge impos'd upon his land, for the reparation of the church. For by the Court, an inheritance cannot be charg'd with that.

COX AGAINST SMALL.

The plaintiff brought two actions upon 2 E. 6. for treble damages, &c. and he is non-suted in one action, and discontinues the other, and by the whole Court that the defendant shall not have costs, by 8 Eliz. cap. or 4 Jac. cap. 3. Because if the plaintiff had recover'd he should have recover'd but the treble damages only, by the statute.

Note, an executor brought an action of debt upon an obligation to the testator, and is non-suted. And by the five Judges, the defendant shall not recover costs, by 4 Jac. cap. 3. for although that the words are general; yet they ought to have a general construction. And that in M. 3 Jac. B. R. upon 8 Eliz. cap. 1. It was so rul'd.

FORD AGAINST POMROY.

H. 7 Jac. B. R.

Baron & feme lessees of a parsonage, &c. The parishioner sets forth the tithes fraudulently, and presently takes them away again; as it appears upon the evidence. And the husband only brought the action, upon 2 E. 6. for the treble damages. And it was resolv'd, that debt lies for treble damages, upon such a fraudulent setting forth of tithes, although that the clause of treble damages speaks nothing of fraud.

2. But it was resolv'd, that the husband and wife ought to have joyn'd in the action. Because it is not for a thing in possession. And if the husband dies the wife shall have the damages, and not the executor of the husband.

DARSON AGAINST HUNTER.

Intr. Tr. 7 Jac. rot. 234.

Copyholder had us'd to have common. The lord by deed grants and confirms to him in fee. And adjudg'd that the common is gone. For the custome for the common was individual from the copyhold estate; which is now gone by the confirmation. And so it was adjudg'd for a custome to have loppings of trees for estovers in M. 32, & 33 El. rot 367.

BEADE AGAINST ORME.

P. S. Jac. B. R.

Upon the traverse of an indictment upon the 8 H. 6. of forcible entry: and upon the evidence, amongst other things it was resolved.

1. If two come to make a forcible entry, and one of them breaks open the door of the house, and 2 or 3 hours after, the other enters peaceably, without a weapon, the door being open: yet it is a forcible entry by him.

2. That is a forcible entry, although no person being in the house [137] at the time of the entry; if that be an ordinary dwelling house, &c.

3. By Yelverton, That the putting back of the bolt with his hand, or drawing up of the latch, is a forcible entry; which was granted.

Note, it was ruled in full Court, if a sentence be given in the Spiritual Court, and costs taxed, and the defendant brings an appeal: yet if the sute did not appertain originally or properly to them, as tithes of trees spent in fewel: a prohibition shall be awarded as well to the costs, as to the principal sute. Notwithstanding that the 32 H. 8. cap. 7. says, that the Ecclesiastical Judge shall compell the appellant forthwith to pay costs. This is, when the case appertains properly to the Spiritual Court.

OKELEY AGAINST SALTER.

In an action of trespass against the churchwardens, where by the statute 43 Eliz. cap. 2. If for a distresse taken by them, for money for the relief of the poor: trespass be brought against them, and verdict pass for them, the defendants shall recover treble damages, with their costs, and that to be assest, &c. by the same jury, or by writ of enquiry of damages, it was resolv'd,

1. That the costs shall not be trebled but only the damages.

2. The treble damages are well assest by the jury, although that it be not done by the Court. Because the words are, (by the same jury to be assest) and not damages to be trebled by them.

SIR RICHARD FRANKS CASE.

The very point of Hargraves case, 5 Rep. 31. was agreed and resolv'd. And that that case was after revers'd in the Exchequer-Chamber, but it was for another cause. And Williams said, that he had view'd the very record of that case accordingly: in which case is, if A. brings debt against B. as administrator to I. S. without saying that I. S. died intestate. But yet it is good. For it may be that I. S. made a will and testament, and yet administration might be committed to the defendant by refusal, &c. But otherwise it is where the plaintiff is administrator. There he ought to shew that the party died intestate.

SIR JOHN RATCLIFF AGAINST DAVIS.

[See S. C. Cro. Jac. 244.]

In trover and conversion for a hat-band set with diamonds. The case was this, R. pawns it to A. for 25l. without any day certain for the redemption; A. delivers it to D. A. makes B. his executor and dies, R. tenders the money to the executor, who refuses it. R. demands the hat-band of D. who also refuses; and R. brought an action of trover: and it was resolv'd,

1. That the goods pawn'd without any day of redemption, are not absolutely gone, by the death of him to whom they were pawned. But otherwise by the death of him that pawn'd them, ve. Litt. 334.

2. The tender to the executor, although it be not any payment in fact, and the request after to the defendant, vests the property of the pledge in the plaintiff. And so adjudged.

A. gives in tayl to B. an alien, the remainders to C. in fee. B. suffers a common recovery: and after office is found, the alien dies without issue. Yet that recovery shall bind C. in the remainder.

[138] NOTE MANY PRESIDENTS, THAT BY DETERMINATION OF COMMENDAMS RETINERE, BE IT BY DEATH, RESIGNATION, TRANSLATION, OR OTHERWISE, IT BELONGS TO THE KING TO PRESENT.

By Resignation.—John Flower was presented by the Queen 21 Eliz. 159. to the Prebendary of Caddington Major, from St. Pauls London, after resignation by John Bishop of Rochester, who held it by commendam retinere.

Andrews was presented by the Queen 31 Eliz. 1599 to the Prebendary of North Masham in York, by resignation of the Archbishop of York; who had a commendam retinere.

Richard Renninghton, &c. 23 Eliz. 1600. to the Archdeanery of the East Riding in York, by resignation of John Bishop of Carlile; who had a commendam retinere.

Morgan Jones, &c. 39 Eliz. to the treasurership of Landaff, by resignation of Gervas Bishop of Landaff.

John Goodwin, &c. 33 Eliz. to the rectory of Morton, by resignation of the Bishop of Bangor, who had a commendam retinere.

By Death.—John Underhil, &c. 27 Eliz. to the rectory of Northapp, by the death of the Bishop of Bangor, &c. Asaph.

John Robins, &c. 36 Eliz. 1794. to the rectory of Kenne, by the death of John Bishop of Exceter, &c. Devon.

Thomas Jones, &c. 43 Eliz. 1600. to the rectory of the castle, by the death of William Bishop of St. Asaph. Asaph.

David Humphrys, &c. 43 Eliz. 1600. to the rectory of Lismaine, by the death of William Bishop of St Asaph. Asaph.

Dr. Eden, &c. 43 Eliz. 1600 to the prebendary in the church of Hereford, by the death of Godrey Bishop of Gloucester, &c. Hereford.

William Heltar, &c. 45 Eliz. 1602. to the vicaridge of Haverton, with the chappel annex'd to it, by the death of John Bishop of Downe and Conier in Ireland, &c. Devon.

Thomas Playford, &c. 3 Jac. 1606. to the rectory of Clayham, by the death of Anthony Watson, Bishop of Chichester, &c. Surrey.

By Translation.—Walter Bennet, &c. 4 Jac. 1607. to the rectory of Little Wittam, by the translation of Dr. Ravise of Gloucester to London. Berks.

John Barham, &c. 8 Jac. 1611. to the Bishoprick of Landrich, by the translation of Henry Bishop of Gloucester, to Worcester, &c. Kent.

William Powel, 15 Jac. 1618 &c. to the rectory of Lambeth, by the translation of Doctor Goodwin from Landaff to Hereford, &c. Southampton.

Christopher Foster, 11 Jac. 1613. &c to the rectory of Calborne, by translation of Dr. Hampton of Derrey in Ireland, to the Archbishoprick of Armagh. Southampton.

By Determination.—Dr. Hugh Gray, &c. 42 Eliz. the rectory of Meanstock by promotion of Dr. Cotton to Sarum, who held it for two years, by commendam retinere, &c. Southampton.

Dr. Donne, &c. 14 Jac. to the rectory of Savenoke, by promotion of Dr. Milburne to St. Davids, who held it by commendam retinere for a year. Kent.

There are infinite numbers of such presidents.

[139] Mich. 4 Jac. C. B.

The parson and churchwardens in London by the custom are a corporation, and the parishioners time out of mind, &c. have used at a certain day in the vestry to elect churchwardens, they elect A. and present him to the archdeacon, who refuses A. and forbids him to exercise the office of a churchwarden, because the parson pretended, that by the new canon the election of a churchwarden belong'd to him to dispose, &c. and exercise the office of churchwarden. And A. is sued ex officio in the High Commission Court, amongst other things touching that, A prays a prohibition, because the canon does not take away the custom. Also it would be very mischievous if the parson should elect whom he please to be churchwarden. And the parson and churchwarden being a corporation, then they may dispose of the goods and lands of the parish as they please. Cook Chief Justice said, that a convocation hath power to make constitutions for ecclesiastical things or persons. 20 H. 6. 14. 21 E. 4. 46. But they ought to be according to the law and custom of the realm. And they cannot make churchwardens that were elegible, to be donative, without Act of Parliament; and the canon is to be intended where the parson had nomination of a churchwarden before the making of the canon. And now rule was given for a prohibition, if cause be not shewn to the contrary, &c. ex motione. Serjeant Foster.

Note, it was mov'd in arrest of judgment by Sherley in an assumpsit. The plaintiff declares of a promise made at D. to pay 10l. to S. &c. and issue joyn'd upon non assumpsit. And the visne was awarded from S. where it ought to have been from D. And for that judgment was arrested, for that is material and not ayded by the Statute of Jeofayles. By the Court: But it had been good, if the issue had been joyn'd upon the payment.

Andrews against Lakin.

In trover the plaintiff, P. Jac. 4. upon the imparlance roll he declares of a feather-bed, and T. 4 Jac. he declares of a feather and flock bed. And upon the general issue it is found for the plaintiff, and 6l. damages given. And Walmsly and Daniell only in Court, that the plaintiff shall not have judgment; for the writ is general, and demands nothing in certain, but the declaration upon the imparlance roll, is the original and warrant of the second declaration. So that the addition of the flock bed is ill, and the damages are intirely given. And for that the plaintiff shall not have judgment.

Sir Richard Vernon's Case.

Debt against A. B. and C. by 3. several præcipes, and is at issue upon non est factum with A. And when the jury returned to give their verdict, the plaintiff is non-suited. And the entry was non prosequitur de verdicto habendo. And by the Court that is most barbarous, for it ought to have been non prosequitur bre. suum, and the non-sute against one is the non-sute against all. But otherwise of a discontinuance as to one, &c. ve 7 H. 6. 27. 21 E. 3. 36. 27 E. 3. 87. And another day the opinion of the Court was, that if a trespass be brought against two, & non prosequitur against one, that is a retraxit, and may stand against the other. Note, the reason was because of the benefit of the King; for if he ought to be found guilty of a trespass, being vi & armis, a fine is due to the King.

[140] Note, Harris mov'd to pass a common recovery, in which an infant was vouch'd. Cook Chief Justice, that a common recovery is the common assurance, and is a forfeiture of the estate. 1 Rep. 15. And by that means the wisdom of the law, for tryal of nonage shall be ousted, and the examination of the infant taken away. And he was against it, M. 3 Jac. B. 4 Jac. So was the opinion of the whole Court. And Cook then said confidently, that that shall not bind the infant. So also he affirm'd P 6 Jac. And said that Popham held accordingly.

Summers Case.

A variance of the juror in the venire fac. and in the postea leronimmus with one (m) too much. The venire fac. cannot be amended. But Cook said that it shall be taken for leronimus without any amendment. Also a writ of errour awarded to the Justices of Assize before whom the judgment was given, was good.

Edwards's Case.

He was found to be a bankrupt by 13 Eliz. 7. And was committed to the Fleet, the warrant to the warden of the Fleet was, to return and keep in prison, to answer and to satisfie all such matters as shall be objected against him. The question now was, if the commissioners may licence him to go at large to treat about his debts. By the Court, If the warrant had been, that the party should have been in execution, then he could not be inlarg'd; but the Court advised them to take security, lest he should withdraw himself: but if one had judgment against a bankrupt, and upon a habeas corpus brought he is committed in execution, without a cap. utlagat.: then the commissioners cannot deal with him any more, for to inlarge him.

Oldfeilds Case.

In an assumpsit upon a general issue it was found for the plaintiff. Hutton mov'd in arrest of judgment, because it appears by the declaration that the plaintiff sold clothes to A. &c. 20 Decemb. And the plaintiff there present assum'd, that if A. did not pay, he would, &c. And it appears also the 20 of Jan. ensuing, the plaintiff had accepted of A. a bond for all the sum upon the contract, by which the contract is determined, and discharged: and by consequence the assumpsit of the defendant, which depended upon it. By the Court then the judgment shall be stayed. For it is all one, as if A. had paid it, or the plaintiff had releas'd the debt due upon the contract. But Altham of the other part shewed, that upon the contract the agreement was, that A. shall pay in hand 13l. and that he should make a bond after for the residue to the plaintiff. And in consideration that the plaintiff would suffer A. to have the clothes, and for 6d given in earnest he assumes. So that the bond is pursuant and part of the contract, and agreement, and does not destroy it. Then by the whole Court judgment shall be entred for the plaintiff, saying to the defendant, your word is better than the others bond, and rule for judgement accordingly.

[141] Sir Fulk Grevill against Stapleton.

In a replevin, it was found by special verdict a private Act of Parliament 27 H. 8. for intailing lands, &c. called Littlewood, alias Littwood, to the ancestor Sir Henry Grevill, with a restraint to make leases but for one life, rendring the ancient rent. Or for a joynture to his wife. And they found also the statute 32 H. 8. cap. 28. And the question was, if the statute 32 H. 8. hath taken away the restraint of the statute of 27 H. 8. which is particular, and 32 H. 8. being general, and in the affirmative. And by the Court, not. ve. 21 H. 7. 17. And that it was adjudged by all the Justices of England, that it is in the original, but not in the printed book of the Lord Dyer. And that 16 R. 2. cap. 5. of a premunire, hath not taken away the statute of W. 2. And that the estate tayl is not forfeited by that. But yet it is forfeited by 26 H. 8. cap. 13. for treason. Note the words of that, any estate of inheritance; which is strong and precise. I may enter upon my villain, if he be enfeoff'd, notwithstanding the Statute of Marlbr. And that if I bring an action against him, he shall be infranchis'd. And the word (notwithstanding) in 32 H. 8. is, as to the estate tayl; but not as to the particular statute. And the Statute of Glocester does not extend to waste in ancient demean, ve. 1 H. 7. 13 Dy. 48. b. That he shall not alien an estate in fee.

2. If the rule be for judgment, per hunc & tunc, and after one of the parties dies, such a rule cannot be given after, as to a continuance to another day, because there is none that can appear for him that is dead.

3. But because the prisell was laid in Littwood, and the jury found the intayl of Littlewood, alias Littwood, without saying that the entail was of the lands aforesaid; or that, Littlewood, or Littwood, are in one and the same place: for that fault only judgment was given against the plaintiff. Note an inference by Harris, upon Sir George Browns case, that a joyntress in tayl, by 11 H. 7. cannot make leases for three lives. But the Court was on the contrary.

BENDICK AGAINST THATCHER.

B. had recover'd in the Common Bench against T. by judgment. T. petitions the King to refer the matter to three justices. They make an award. B. will not stand to it. T. sues him in the Court of Requests, for performance of an award. B. confesses the reference, but denies his consent to it, or assent of the award. And yet for not standing to that award, he was committed to the Fleet by the Court of Requests, and now B. brought an habeas corpus.

And by the Court this difference was agreed, when the party submits himself to an arbitrament, by an extrajudical course, as by consent, there he cannot be sued in equity, or imprisoned for non-performance of the award; unless he hath any time agreed or assented to it. But when by any Court the matter is referr'd to gentlemen of the country, and the party will not stand to it, the Court may commit him. For upon the matter, that was the award of the Court. So that now in our case B. was let out upon bayl; yet the Court would not grant a prohibition to the Court of Requests. And Cook Chief Justice (in that difference before) said confidently, that the party might have an action upon the case, if the other would not perform the arbitrament; by which he is damnified, quod nemo dedixit.

[142] SMITH AGAINST PAYTER.

A writ of covenant was brought in London, and the breach was alledged in Hertfordshire. The plaintiff had judgment upon a nihil dicit. By the Court, and the prothonotaries said, that the writ of enquiry of damages, shall be awarded to London, and not to Hertford; for the action is laid in London; although that the thing, in which the breach is alledg'd, was meerly local, because damages only are to be recover'd, as in trespass in London the defendant pleads a release, &c. at Hertford, that shall be tryed in London. And that is but a jury of office, whereof no attaint lies.

CALCHMANS CASE.

By the Court. If an obligation be taken in the name of another to the use of a bankrupt, the commissioners may well assign that; unless the other party hath of his own mony paid and satisfied debts due by the bankrupt. In consideration of that also creditors within 13 Eliz. are intended, for merchandizes, &c. and not creditors upon counter-bonds. And the commissioners shall judge of that. For if they make an assignment to such creditors, such allegations afterwards come tarde. For the statute vests the thing assign'd in the party to whom, &c.

GRAY AGAINST BRISCOE.

[See Turner v. Moon, [1901] 2 Ch. 830.]

B. covenants, that he was seis'd of Bl. acre in fee-simple, where in truth it was copy-hold land in fee, according to the custom. By the Court, the covenant is not broken. And the jury shall give damages, in their consciences, according to that rate, that the country values fee-simple land, more than copy-hold land.

STRANGE AGAINST FOOTE.

Intr. P. 2 Jac. C. B. rot. 1320.

The sole point upon the special verdict was, if one Prideux being admitted and instituted to a prebendary, with the cure, 4 Eliz. he being but of nine years of age. Notwithstanding the statute, it is meerly void. Note 4 H. 6. 3. That if the feme of an infant, under 14 years, had issue, it is a bastard.

ABIGALL BAKER AGAINST MOUNFORD.

In an ejectione firm. the point was, The patron takes an obligation of the clerk (which he presented) that he should pay 10l. to the son of the last incumbent, so long as he should be a student in Cambridge unpreferr'd. By the Court, adjudged that that was not simony. Otherwise if it had been to have paid to the son of the patron. Foster Justice voucht the Earl of Sussex's case. An obligation made by the presentee to the patron, to pay 5l. annually, to the wife and children of the late incumbent. And notwithstanding great opposition to the contrary, the parson keeps and enjoys his parsonage to this day. And judgment accordingly, by verdict in our case.

[143] A. recover'd in debt against B. A. brought a scire fac. B. pleads that A. is outlawed, &c. That is a good plea if he be outlawed after the plea in barr pleaded in the action of debt, but otherwise it is if he be outlawed before, for then B. might have pleaded that in bar in the first action: and that if in our case. The money being in Court, the Kings Serjeant prays to have it for the King; he ought to shew the outlawry sub pede sigilli, and the party ought to confess that he is the same Party.

In an ejectione firm. amongst other things, these points were resolved.

1. Tenant in tayl of a mannor, with an advowson appurt. grants the proche in avoidance and dies, and the issue enters in the mannor, then the grant is void, but not without entry: as it seem'd by 3 Rep. 81. And although that such a grantee present by colour of such a grant, yet that is an usurpation which shall bind, &c.

2. A lease for 3 years, and after for 3 years, and so from 3 years to 3 years, until 10 years be expired. That is a lease but for 9 years, and the odd year shall not be accounted, because that does not happen to be determined by 3 years. And so if it had been for 20 years, &c.

3. That it was found, that the lessor was now incumbent; and good, although they do not find (that he is in life) for it is more than implyed, &c.

NASIES CASE.

An information upon the Statute of Usury, for a contract with persons unknown, recipiendo ultra 10l. in the hundred.

1. That was held ill (because with persons unknown.) Because that is not allowable, but in case of an indictment, pro morte hominis ignoti.

2. That an informer who is not party, although the contract was ultra 10l. &c. per cent. shall not have any benefit, unless there was a receipt of the usury according to the contract. And for that the recipiendo is naught, because there is no place nor time put of the receipt, which is now traversable in that information.

RAY AND JOYCE HIS WIFE.

In waste, estrepment was directed to the party and to the sheriff before judgment. Although that Br. 60. v. says, that a writ of estrepment lies in an action where damages shall not be recovered in waste, but only treble damages for the waste, before the action brought. Note N. B. 61. n.

BAYLYE AGAINST KNIGHTON.

In a partitione facienda, by tenant in common against the other, an estrepment was granted, for all that the plaintiff had confest to be held in common, and not of more, for by such means, a man may be inhibited to cut his own bows, according to his occasions. But Benelowes. cap. 5. fo. 4. seem'd, that an estrepment does not lie between tenants in common. But in M. 6 Jac. it was rul'd that the estrepment shall be granted, although that Cook Chief Justice held with Benelowes. But note, that in 5 Jac. Lady Lucy against Oxenbridge. An estrepment was granted in a partitione faciend. because it is a real action, and no damages to be recovered. And Brownlowe shewed many presidents contrary to Benelowes.

[144] LADY RAYNOR AGAINST THO. HOLCROFT & UXOR.

In dower against baron and feme, the husband appears and was essoign'd. The wife makes default, as well she might, because they appear by several atturneys; and the same day is given to her, at which day she appear'd, and was essoign'd, and then the husband makes default, & idem dies given to him. And it was resolv'd,

1. That an essoign lies in dower, ve. 2 E. 4. 16. a. 21. b. notwithstanding the 44 Eliz. 5. a. And the stat. 12 E. 2. cap. 1. That is to be intended of an essoign of the service of the King, or of an essoign after issue, and so it was also rul'd in Symers case, and in Bedingfields case, and others.

2. The idem dies is given to him that made default. And the Court is so although that otherwise it was done in 2 E. 4. 16. a. 21. b. For that is but a discontinuance of the process.

3. That the husband and wife might have several essoigns.

SIR GEORGE REED AGAINST WAINFORD.

In a writ de valore maritagii, and a jury of two counties, 6 of either of the counties, and the title for the tenure being clear for the plaintiff. The Court directed the jury not only to consider the value of the land held of the plaintiff. But also of all the other lands, leases, and goods, and all his estate, and to give damages according to the rate that a man of such an estate might have with his wife. And they give 40l. although that the plaintiff had prov'd, that one profer'd 100 with him bona fide.

PETER GEE AGAINST PETER LONGE.

Trover and conversion was brought against A. and B. A. pleads not guilty, and that issue is found against A. B. pleads and traverses absque hoc, that he and A. converted, &c. And that issue is found for B. against the plaintiff; yet it seem'd to the Court that the plaintiff shall have judgment against A. upon the first verdict. For although that the declaration be, that they converted, &c. yet that shall be intended joyntly and severally: and so the opinion of the Court was against A.

TAYLOR AGAINST JEANES.

In the replication, the plaintiff avows the taking as an estray, &c. as bayly, &c. And that he delivered the mare and colt to the copyholder of the said mannor, to depasture in a close, which is within the said mannor; and that a year and a day was past, and that within the year the plaintiff had refus'd to satisfie for the feeding. And in that case by the Court,

1. The proof of the property by the plaintiff when his cattel estrays, need not be by oath, but it suffices to be by marks, and affirmance of the neighbours. As for wreck 39 E. 3. ve. Magna Charta cap. 2.

2. The party ought to demand the amends for the feeding at his peril. So that the reasonableness may be adjudg'd by the Court, &c.

3. The bayly cannot delegate his authority to another, or deliver the estray to be kept by another, but the estray ought to be kept within the demeans of the mannor in loco aperto. So that it be obvious to the view, if search be made.

[145] Note, that a man in execution shall not have a supersedeas upon an audita querela, unless it be grounded upon a specialty; but he shall have an audita querela upon a surmise, if he put in bayl, &c. but not a supersedas. Cook Chief Justice advis'd every student to take notice of that. And after in many cases it was rul'd accordingly.

VALENTINE AGAINST PENNY.

A trespass quare clausum fregit, & solum fodit. The defendant justifies, that he and his ancestors, and all whose estate he had in a cottage, have us'd to have common of turbary, to dig and sell ad libitum, as belonging to the house, &c. and adjudg'd that it is an ill plea. For such a common as abovesaid is an interest and a franck-tenement. ve. 7 Assise. 4. and is repugnant in it self. For a common appertaining to a house, ought to be spent in the house, and not sold abroad. And judgment accordingly.

Note, Nichols pray'd the opinion of the Court. Lessee of a portion of tithes (without any soyl or barn) rendring a rent, with a proviso, that if the rent be not pay'd, that the lease should be void. By Walmsly, that the lessor shall not be compelled to seek the lessee, and demand the rent of him. But the lessee ought to seek the lessor (he that needs must blow the coal) and so it hath been rul'd before that time. Daniel agreed expressly, and Warberton non dedixit. Dyer. 88. a.

WELBIES CASE.

In a quare impedit. The plaintiff intitles himself to a mannor, to which there is an advow appendant. That his father was seis'd, &c. And covenanted, without saying by indenture brought here into the Court for natural affection, &c. with B. to stand seis'd to himself for life, the remainder to the plaintiff, &c. And that his father dies, and the defendant demurr'd for that fault: but by the Court the pleading is good, for the party is not privy nor party to the deed, nor hath he a remedy to come to it; and he hath the estate by 27 H. 8. of Uses. And now the deed properly belongs to the covenantee. And so was the better opinion, in Dyer. 277. and that differs from the 14 H. 8. 7, 8. And judgment was given accordingly.

JEFFRY AGAINST JOHN BOYS.

In a replication in the avowry, prescribes to have common appurt. but doth not shew and aver that the cattel were levant and couchant upon the land, &c. And for that it was held to be naught by the Court. ve. 15 E. 4. 32. But in our case, the issue was joyn'd upon the prescription. And by the other fault is allowed as confest. And is helped after verdict by the stat. ve. 5. rep. 43. a.

CUTTER & UXOR AGAINST BARBAR & SON UXOR.

In a partione facienda by consent quod partitio fiat. And a writ was to the sheriff to make partition. And before that it was fil'd (but after the return) the Court being informed, that one of the wives was dead, and it was pray'd that the writ should not be fil'd. By the Court. If it should be fil'd, then the Court should give an erroneous judgement against the dead person. And a day was given to the other party to [146] shew, if the wife was dead. And in the interim the filing of the writ was staid. But after, because it appear'd that she was not dead, until after the return day of the writ, to which day the judgment shall have relation, it was rul'd, that judgment shall be given, and the writ filed: so it should be if the defendant in accompt dyes before the second judgment: or if the defendant in trespass, after judgment upon a demurrer, dies before the return of the writ of enquiry of damages.

TYRWHITE AGAINST KYNASTAN.

An action upon the case upon an indebitatus existit, of an assumpsit. And the plaintiff demurs, because there is not shew'd how, and for what things he was indebted. And in H. 5 Jac. ensuing, without argument, it was clear by the Court, against the plaintiff. And in P. 28 Eliz. B. R. Wood against Draper, that the defendant may safely plead non debet, as well as in debt. By Fenner and Gawdy, and in M. 7 Jac. B. R. Ivers against Ingram. It was adjudged, that he ought to shew how he became indebted, (viz.) for merchandizes, or for ready money.

Note, by Cooke Chief Justice, that the keeping of a church-book for the age of those which should be born and christened in the parish, began in the 30th year of Henry the Eighth: by the instigation of the Lord Cromwel.

BALLARD AGAINST BALLARD.

In a warrant. chart. The plaintiff shews that he and A. were seised in fee, and so seised, that A. releases with warranty for him and his heirs, to B. and his heirs, (without saying contra omnes gentes) and the writ was of two messuages, and half an acre in St Clements Danes, &c. And the deed of release was, as it appears upon demand. And upon sight of parcel of the land, cum edificatione upon it, with the buttals, containing in length from east to west, 28. feet, &c. and in bredth from north to south 21 feet. And upon that the defendant demurrs, and it was adjudged against him. And it was resolv'd, that the count is good, although it is not shewn by what means or conveyance they were seised, or how they were seised; for if they are tenants in common, the release is not good; or that they were joyntenants. But otherwise it is, when a tenant in a real action, pleads joyntenancy, in abatement of the writ. See for that difference 2 E. 4. 11. 30 E. 3. And now agreed by the Court.

2. The variance between the writ and the deed is not material, because the plaintiff in his writ ought to demand it in form, according to the register. Also, it is not any prejudice to the defendant. For the recovery shall be only according to that, which the plaintiff demands.

3. That is a general warranty, and a war. char. lyes upon it; although he does not say, contr. omnes gentes, ve. 1. Rep. 2. And judgment now given accordingly.

Eveling against Sawyer.

In trespass. It was resolved upon evidence at Bar, that where the defendant intitles himself to land, by a feoffment made to A. to the use of the defendant of a mannor, in which, &c. is parcel. That that was [147] naught, because no attornment is shewn to be made to the feoffee, to the use of A. although that it was shewn, that the tenants have paid their rent to the defendants.

Andrews against Webb.

It was agreed by the Court, that the Court of Chancery, may be by prescription; as the Counties Palatine, and the Mayors Court of London, which is called the Mark Court, because the mayor may mark any cause in the Sheriffs Court before judgment; although it be after verdict, and may examine it, 10 H. 6. 14. But by Cooke Chief Justice. The Court of Chancery or Equity, cannot be by grant of the King. Because it took its birthright from the subject. And that he had seen the grant of the County Palatine of Chester to Hugh de Lupus, who was the first Earl of Chester after the Conquest; to hold it tam libere per gladium, quam Rex regnum Angliæ per Coronam; yet the Chancery might be before that by prescription. And he said, that the dignities before the Conquest, were not patrimonial, to descend. Which Doderidge, the Kings Serjeant affirm'd. And he said, that he had seen charters before the Conquest, with the additions of dukes and earls: and in our principal case a procedendo was granted to the Mayors Court.

Randall against Knowles.

A prohibition was prayed upon a surmise, that the tithes, for which the sute was, belonged to the vicar, and not to the parson; by the Court, that a consultation shall be granted; for the right of tithes is confessed. And if they belong to the parson or to the vicar, that is meerly spiritual. And that so it was ruled in one Bushels case. The parson of Pancras, and in one Milbrays case it was adjudged accordingly.

Phillips against Slacke.

By the Court; that a prohibition shall not be granted, upon a bare surmise, that he is sued for tithes by the parson of D. of lands in the parish of S. unless it appears, in the pleading in the Spiritual Court. For they there shall not be judges of the bounds of the parish, ve. 5 H. 5. 10. 22 E. 4. 24.

Pawlinge against Baker.

An ejectione firm. of 10 acres. The verdict upon not guilty, found the defendant guilty of 8 pieces, and for that cause judgment was staid; for the verdict ought to be certain: so that the execution may be made of it. Also they did not find him guilty of the residue. And for that it was also naught.

Smith against Foaves.

In a quare impedit, it was resolv'd and agreed by all upon evidence at Bar.

1. That a resignation to a proctor, does not make the church void; until it be accepted by the bishop, and acknowledged before him. So that a presentation in the mean time was void.

2. The special verdict finds an instrument under the seal of the bishop, [148] upon which was indorsed, that the resignation was acknowledged and accepted by the bishop; yet that is no absolute finding that it was a resignation in facto, as the finding of a deed with an indorsement that livery was made, is not good finding of a lease for life; or the finding of an acquittance of the debtee, is not good finding, upon an issue of plene administravit. For it was but a circumstance and inducement to the jury.

SHARPE AGAINST SHARPE.

A prohibition was pray'd upon a sute in the Spiritual Court for tithes in kinde of of a park now converted into tillage, upon a surmise de modo decimandi, to pay a buck and a doe for all tithes. And allowed by the Court and agreed,

1. Although that they are feræ naturæ, yet they may be given for tithes. So to pay feasants, &c.

2. Although they are not tithable of themselves, yet they may be given for modus decimandi; as a great tree may be given for tithe of trees tithable.

3. That that is a discharge to the very soyl, and the park is not but a liberty, and the owner may furnish it with game, when he please. But after a consultation was granted, because the surmise was not proved within the 6 months. So adjudged, H. 6 Jac. C. B. The vicar of Clare in Suffolke, who sued for hopps. And there also a prohibition was granted upon such a surmise. But after a consultation was granted in that case. For the modus decimandi was alledg'd for discharge of tithes of hay and herbage, and not of all tithes, where the libel was for tithes of hopps. And Cook Chief Justice, voucht one Shibdens case, that such a modus decimandi generally for the park, is not good, if it be disparked. But it shall be particularly, for all acres conteined in the park.

PELLAMS CASE.

A quare impedit was brought against the Archbishop of Canterbury (sede vacante de Chichester) and the disturber and the clark. The plaintiff had judgment upon a non sum informatus. By the Court, the writ shall be directed to the new bishop, in the mean time chosen and consecrated: although he was not party to the first writ, 22 E. 3. 13.

GOODWIN AGAINST TOMKINS.

A sute was in the Admiral Court for setting a ship in a wharf to the damage of the plaintiff: so that none could come to his wharf, which is said within the bill to be within the ward of Saint Mary Hill: and a prohibition was granted: upon a suggestion, that it was good for the ordering of ships. A consultation was granted, but afterwards upon good advice and opening the matter, a supersedeas to the consultation was granted, & quod prohibitio stet; for the wrong and fact is said to be within a county and ward; and for that it does not belong to the admiral: and for civil contracts or trespasses done upon the river of Thames, or any other river that is proper to the common law, triable in that county, which is next to the bank, and that side of the river where the fact done, but in criminal matters upon any river, that is given to the admiral, by the statute, 28 H. 8. cap. 15.

[149] NORTON AGAINST GLOVER.

It was adjudg'd upon a demurrer. A. makes an obligation to baron and feme, the baron dyes, the wife takes letters of administration, and brings debt upon that obligation, as administratrix, and declares accordingly. But she dyes before judgment, and her executor brought debt upon that obligation. And adjudg'd that it does not lie.

1. That personal duty being chose enaction, shall well lie in joynture between baron and feme. But otherwise of other personal things. ve. 4 H. 6. 6. a.

2. That is a sufficient election and waiver. Although she had judgement to have it as administratrix, and not in her own right.

THOMPSON AGAINST JACKSON.

In a warrantia chartæ upon warranty, his ancestor the defendant pleaded riens per discent. By the Court, that judgment shall be entered for the plaintiff without tryal if he will. For the warranty is confest pro loco & tempore. For the tryal may be long and chargeable.

THE KING AGAINST THE BISHOP OF CHICHESTER.

In a quare impedit it was doubted. If A. having two benefices with the cure, by dispensation, and then takes a third benefice with cure, if now both the first benefices, or the first of them only be void. Heron said, that it was adjudg'd that both of them should be void.

ARNOLD AGAINST SKEALE.

Baron and feme joyntenants for life. The husband he sowes the land and dies: the wife takes the corn, and the executor of the husband brought trespass, quare clausum fregit. And two justices were against two. If the wife, or the executor shall have them. ve. Dy. 316. a. But all agreed that if they belong to the executor, that he may well have that action, quare clausum fregit. For as to that intent, for the corn, the close is his. 27 H. 6. 28. a.

ROOPER AGAINST BULBROKE.

Upon a prohibition to the High Commissioners: and it was disputed from M. 3 Jac. Untill now by the Court. The High Commissioners have nothing to do with the interest of meum and tuum, or legacies, tithes, or pensions, which are given to the King by 31 H. 8. And there was no remedy for them at the Spiritual Court, (notwithstanding the saving) in 31 H. 8. until the 34 H. 8. It was enacted, which recites the mischief, and gives jurisdiction for them to the Ordinary, and that was before the statute of 1 Eliz. for the High Commission.

WHARTONS CASE.

Upon an habeas corpus, the cause was return'd to be, that he being churchwarden, and refus'd to take the oath upon enquiry of 39 Articles touching ecclesiastical matters. And the warrant of the commit-[150]-ment of the commissioners, was to retain him, and untill we shall give order for his delivery. By the Court the cause is not traversable. Because there is no person in Court to take issue upon that. But the party is put to his action upon the case if the return of the cause be false, or may have a false imprisonment. 9 H. 6. 44. 10 H. 7. 17. b.

2. Untill we, that is all we, 22 E. 4. 3. a. 1 H. 7. 7. a. that is not good: for if then any of them dyes or be removed: the party shall never be delivered by that means. But it ought to be, until he shall be lawfully delivered. But notwithstanding, Wharton was not out upon bayl, because now also he refused to take that oath: but with a so far forth as the articles do agree with the law of God and the land. Note, that such subscription or consent to the articles 13 Eliz. by a parson is not good. As it was adjudg'd in 33 and 34 Eliz. B. R. Clark against Smithfield. But afterwards Wharton was delivered by the High Commissioners.

PINSON AGAINST READHEAD.

P. brought debt for 11l. 5s. and declares that he was herauld of Chester by several letters patents, with the fees and profits: and that 11l. 5s. belong'd to him for his share of fees, of a knight lately made, and that the defendant was collector of the said fees, and had made a bill of that 11l. 5s. to the plaintiff, upon which he now declared. And the question upon the evidence was, P. was a compleat officer by the very letters pattents, without the ceremony of the investure, and allowance of the six Commissioners of the Marshal Court, according to their rules and commission, in which there is a clause; that none shall be herauld, if he hath not been before a pursevant. Cook delivered his and the opinion of the whole Court. That he was a good officer by the letters patents, and vouch'd one Dethicks case, who was indicted by the name and addition of Garter King of Arms, and yet he had only the letters patents, without ceremony. Also a nobleman is compleat by his patent of creation, without the ceremonies of the robes, or to be gladio cinctus, as it was Anthony Browns case a justice; who being questioned in the Upper Bench of Parliament, for being so without being a gent. He pluckt out his patent of his creation as Baron out of his bosom. And that was allowed him. One is a Judge by letters patents', although he be not sworn, or hath not sat upon the Bench in Court: and Clarentius now a herauld, never was a pursevant. And the jury found accordingly.

Note, if two recover in debt, &c. and before execution one of them dies, if execution be sued in both their names it is not errour. Brownlowe said, that in such a case, the survivor ought to sue a scire fac. before that he can sue execution. But Cook, and all the Court said, that he may sue execution without a scire fac. because he is privy and party to the judgment; and vouch'd 21 E. 3.

Note, that divers outlawries were revers'd that term; because upon the return and proclamations, it appears that some proclamations were made in the time of the former sheriff, and others in the time of the now sheriff, and his name to them. But does not return, istud breve mihi deliberat, fuit de recordo, of the proceedings of the former sheriff.

[151] SMITHS CASE.

An action upon the case for words, thou hast had the French pox. And upon issue not guilty, it is found for the plaintiff. It was now moved in arrest of judgment. Because the words are in the preterperfect tense, and the party it may be now is well, and sound, and no scandal. To which all the Court agreed, and judgment arrested. Cooke Chief Justice took this difference of such a slander, de tempore præterito, when it touches the mind, and when it touches the body. If it be a scandal to the mind, and the affections, as perjury, felony, &c. there the mind that remains is slander. But if it be of an accidental infirmity, or disease of the body, otherwise it is. For none now will forbear his company, although he had the plague in times past.

PARSON LATTERS AGAINST SUSSEX.

T. & M. Jac. C. B.

He was convented before the High Commissioners, and they would put him to his oath touching simony (supposing it to be committed by him). And a prohibition was granted, that none shall be compelled to accuse himself upon his oath; where he is to incurr a temporal punishment, at the common law, or a temporal loss, as in that case of his church: so for usury. Note Dyer 175. in the margin. And Cooke Chief Justice voucht 10 Eliz. Smiths case, an atturney of that Court. The High Commissioners would put him to his oath, for hearing of mass. And a prohibition was granted: for by that he is to lose 100l. by the statute, and a prohibition was now granted by the Court.

The King against The Bishop of Litchfield, &c.

The King brought a quare impedit against the bishop, Smith incumbent, and Langford the incumbent. Plead no patron was named in the writ. And by the Court, that is a good plea in barr, although the King be plaintiff, claiming to present by lapse for simony. Also the patron now, was only grantee of the procheine avoidance, and had presented Smith, yet he ought to be named; but if the clerk had been in by collation by the Ordinary for lapse, or provision of the Pope in former times, or ex presentatione Regis, against whom no writ lyes. If a common person had been plaintiff in the quare impedit. In those cases it might be without any patron, ve. 7 H. 4. 37. 7 Rep. 26. 9 H. 6. &c.

Symonds against Cockeril.

Upon a demurrer, in a replevin for 20l. and an avowry, &c. the plaintiff pleads in barr, that the defendant had not given 100l. and for that he granted to him 20l. per annum for 8 years annually, as a rent-charge; and after that for two years more, if three men live so long, and concludes that it was a corrupt deed. And this difference was agreed by the Court. If the original contract, was for to have a rent-charge, as in our case, that is not usury but a good bargain and pennyworth; but if the party had come for to borrow the money, and then such a contract ensued by security, then that is usury; but the party there also ought to plead that, quod fuit per viam corruptæ barganiæ. See 5 Rep. 69. [152] And it is not sufficient to conclude that it was corrupt, although that by the demurrer only it be confest. And now the Court mediated an agreement, to take the principal. And so it was concluded.

Allin against Nash.

Intr. H. 5 Jac. C. B. rot. 208.

In an ejectione firm. it was resolv'd, that if a copyholder surrenders according to the custome, to the use of N. after the death of the surrenderer; that that is good notwithstanding that one cannot preserve the same estate to himself; for the estate is in the lord. And the surrenderer during his life shall take the profits, and afterwards the lord ought to admit B. according to the direction of the said surrender.

2. Although that after the death of the surrenderer, the lord admits an estranger, who leases to the plaintiff, and the defendant, who had right to enter without admittance, enters. He is not guilty as to the stranger, because his entry is lawful, and the admision of the stranger was void. And Cooke Chief Justice voucht a case, there are two copyholders, and the one surrenders to the use of his will, and makes his will, &c. and dies. And adjudg'd there shall be no survivorship. And judgement was given accordingly in the principal case.

Atkins against Gage.

Huntingdon ss.

A writ of deceit, upon recovery in dower, for default of summons was abated.

1. Because Edward Cooke, &c. dated apud Castrum Norwici. Now where it was a judicial writ, it ought to have been dated there where the Common Bench is.

2. Resolved by the Court clearly, although that the words of the writ of deceit are, Interim terram illam in manus nostras, capias, ita quod neuter eorum manum apponat, &c. Yet the sheriff cannot remove the party out of possession; but he ought only to make a general seizure. See Bracton 365.

3. That the summoners, that appear to be examined, shall not have any charges, by the course of the Court. But the plaintiff at his peril ought to procure them, and to bear their charges.

ROCHESTER AGAINST PORTER.

Upon a surmise to have a prohibition after sentence, at the Spiritual Court two judgments were voucht, upon the statute 2 E. 6. for not setting forth of tithes. And 43 Eliz. B. R. A parishioner privately sets forth his tithes, and takes witness of it, and immediately after he carries them away; that is not a setting forth within the statute. For the words are truly, justly, and without fraud or covin, ve. 10 H. 4. 2.

2. 44 Eliz. B. R. Bakers case. A parishioner sells his grain upon his land, and after, by command of the vendee, he takes his corn, being severed, without setting forth of the tithes. That the parson may well have an action against him upon the statute, and shall not be compelled to sue the vendee, who it may be was not known to him. And it is not traversable, if the tithes were set forth according to 47 Eliz. It was resolved in T. 7 Jac. B. R. Brickendine against Denwood.

[153] SIR WALTER SANDS AGAINST ADAMS AND CURWIN.

Mich. 3 Jac. C. B. rot. 519.

The case was thus. A. leases to B. for 35 years rendring 10l. rent, &c. B. dies intestate during the years. The lessor himself enters and then enfeoffs one Goddard, who leases to I. S. for 21 years. Sir William Sands takes letters of administration to B. and enters, &c. The defendants as bayles to G. distrained for rent of a year. But that case was not then adjudg'd. But they cited many cases. As Plou. 433. and 6 Rep. 5, 6. & 69.

Note upon motion to have a prohibition to the counsel of York. Walmsly seem'd, that no prohibition may be originally granted out of the Common Bench, unless there be a plea there depending for the same thing, and not upon a bare surmise. ve. Regist. 34. N. B. 43. 1. 2 E. 4. 11. Except in case de modo decimandi, because the Spiritual Court will not allow that. ve. 22 E. 4. 20.

Note in debt upon an obligation by Cook Ch. Justice. And that so was the opinion of the civilians, that a disagreement to the marriage had under the age of consent. At the age it ought to be published in Court. Otherwise the issue may be bastarded. For a disagreement in writing is not a sufficient disagreement, nor a good proof.

FITCH AGAINST VAUGHAN.

In an ejectione firm. the case was thus. V. leases Bl. acre to A. for 20 years, rendring a rent, &c. And afterwards leases Wh. acre, and the rent and reversion of Bl. acre to F. by demise, grant, and to farm let for 99 years: habend. Wh. acre, the reversion of Bl. acre, the rent and premises for 99 years rendring rent, &c. A. never atturns, the 20 years expire, and F. enters in Bl. acre; and by the Court well, for that shall enure as a lease. By the words demise, &c. Cook Ch. Justice put this case, A. leases to B. for 10 years. And after he demises and grants that land to C. for 20 years. That is a good lease for 10 years presently. But if B. happen to have atturnment, then he shall have the reversion presently. And those two estates shall be in him, and stand divided.

The Prebend of Hatcherlies Case.

The deanry of Wolverhampton annex'd to the deanry of Windsor, being peculiar, and having ordinary jurisdiction, the dean makes a commissary by his deed, which is confirm'd by the chapter. The dean dies. The question was, if that was good to bind the successor. By Doderidge that such a jurisdiction is judicial, and that grant is but a commission and authority, all times remaining in the Ordinary. True it is, that ecclesiastical jurisdiction in judicial acts may be executed by substitute. But in law, they are the acts of them who substitutes the other. ve 11 H. 4. 64. a. 7 E. 4. 14. 20 H. 6. 1. That a commissary may excommenge and prove a testament: but that shall be made in the name of an Ordinary. 20 E. 3. And a grant of that by the bishop is not good, but during his life; and shall not bind the successor: for the law hath appointed, that he shall exercise that jurisdiction (sede vacante) (si licet) the archbishops in their several provinces. ve 17 E. 3. 23. That the archbishop and the dean and chapter, cannot grant the juris-[154]-diction of the warden of the spiritualties, after the death of the archbishop, which is a more strong case. And if the substitute as abovesaid offends, the Ordinary shall be punish'd for it. Which is unreasonable: so that the grant being void, that cannot be made good by the confirmation of the chapter. Cooke Ch. Just. If that should be a good grant to bind the successor: then the successor cannot remove him. And yet the successor shall answer for the acts and offences of the commissary, which would be too hard.

Intr. P. 19 Jac.

In the Star Chamber between the King ex relatione of the deputy of Ireland, and the Lord Desmond, Sir Percy Cresby and other defendants it was resolv'd.

1. That if there be divers defendants, and one of them does not accuse himself, but accuses his companion another defendant, he shall not be receiv'd as a competent testimony to condemn his companion, but if he had accus'd himself, then he should have been received as a competent testimony to condemn his companion.

2. If there be divers defendants in the Star-Chamber, and one of them is examined upon interrogatories for the King. None of the other defendants shall take advantage, nor shall bind any part of his testimony, which was not bound for the King: for it was their folly that they had not examined him upon their own interrogatories: but every defendant may take advantage of every thing that any testimony hath depos'd. Although that the King hath not bound his deposition for himself, if he be not a defendant ut antea, &c.

3. That if a Privy Counsellor be to be examined in the Star-Chamber. If the Privy Counsellor said, that the defendant related that to him, as a Privy Counsellor, and not otherwise. The counsellor is not bound to render more over to any thing than the defendant hath related to him.

The Widow Dolbins Case.

A. for debt extended the lands to B. D. to extend the lands of B. for his own debt, and to have the lands out of the hands of A. (by recognisance) acknowledges himself to be indebted to the Kings auditors. For which debt of D. the lands of B. were extended and taken out of the hands of A. for abusing the prerogative of the King. In that D. was censured in the Star-Chamber.

Evers against Teynton.

A. seis'd of lands, acknowledges a recognisance to B. in the Chancery, and afterwards sells the lands to C. and dies. B. sued a scire fac. against C. terretenant and the heir of A. To which C. pleads that A. was not seis'd of the lands at the time of the acknowledgment of the recognisance. And it was found by the jury for the plaintiff, upon which C. moves to arrest judgment. For that, that the sheriff had return'd the terretenant only, and not the heir. Upon which judgment was staid until the sheriff had made an alias return ; and return'd the heir as well as the terre-tenant. And then judgment was given for the plaintiff. The plaintiff himself shew'd the very case to me.

[155] Banisters Case.

Tr. 15 Car. B. R.

Banister was indicted and found guilty by the jury of common barretry in Denbigh, and he brought errour in the Kings Bench. And in the record in Denbigh it was entred ideo venit inde jurata, and no venire fac. nor præcipe to summon them was entred upon the roll. And that was the exception, for it was agreed by the Court, that in superiour Courts, as at Westminster, the entry is ideo venit inde jurat. But in inferiour Courts, as now the use is, to recite the venire fac. or præcipe. But the Court gave a day to shew presidents of the entry. Ideo venit inde jurat.

Note, Executors ought to pay debts upon judgments, before debts upon specialties. 7 E. 6. Dyer 80. 21 E. 4. 21.

An indictment for a forcible entry. And because it was said expulsatus, where it should have been expulsus, and fortiori modo, where it should have been forti modo. The party was discharg'd.

Note, it was said by the Court, that a covenant to pay money shall be forfeited to the King by attainder of felony. And so it was adjudg'd in the case of George Norice.

Barcham against Nethersale.

An action upon the case was brought for saying, B. is a bad minded man, and none but he did burn my fathers barn, and he doth use to set fire of barns about Michaelmas, when they are full of corn. Hadd. that an action is not maintainable, because it is not surmis'd that there were barns burn'd about Michaelmas. Also it is not shewn that they were near a dwelling house. Yet adjudg'd for the plaintiff.

The Lord Comptons Case.

Robbery upon the Statute of Winch.

Upon the Statute of Winchester, for robbing of his servant in the hundred of Ogden : upon evidence to the jury at Bar. It was resolv'd by the Court.

1. That the party rob'd ought to give convenient notice so soon as he can.
2. If any other aske him what he ayles, and he says that he was robbed, that is good notice.
3. If the hundred of A. and B. are adjoyning, and the robbery is done in the utmost confines of A. and the party not knowing the hundreds goes to B. there gives notice, that is sufficient, because he is an estranger, and they ought to make hue and cry, east, west, north, and south. And so the hundred of A. shall know it.
4. If a man be rob'd in an hundred, and after the hundredor sells or leases his land ; the purchasor or the lessee shall be charg'd. For the land it self is for that charg'd.
5. If the party robbed, knows the robber, now he shall be bound in a recognisance to prosecute the robber ; but yet he shall have his action against the hundred, if he be not taken.

6. The party robbed is not bound to lend his horse, to pursue the [156] thief, nor he himself is bound to go and pursue the thief presently.

Tr. 4 Car. B. R.

In a replevin the sheriff does not return any pledges; and after issue joyn'd, and found, it was moved, if they can be put in by the Court after verdict. And by the Court, that they may, notwithstanding the statute of W. 2. cap. 2. For before that statute, the Court might take pledges upon the omissions of the sheriff. But that diversity was agreed, between

1. Pledges of prosecuting: and those may be inserted at any time after, and then the sheriff cannot be punisht, 3 H. 6. 3.

2. As well of prosecuting, as retorn. habend. as now and there by the common law. Also the Court may take pledges for default of the sheriff. But then the sheriff shall be only amerc'd. But now by that statute, a penalty is likewise given against the sheriff: but that statute does not take away the power of the Court, to take pledges for default of the sheriff: for if the sheriff omit that, and the Court take pledges, yet the party shall have his action against the sheriff, upon that statute. And for that, the taking of pledges now by the Court, will not make the judgment erroneous.

The Grand Case of the Habeas Corpus.

The Privy Counsel directed an order to the Mayor of London, to apprehend certain citizens of London, and to make them appear before the Lords of the Privy Counsel to answer all such matters as should be objected against them. And the mayor took them and imprisoned them, because they would not enter into recognizance. And the prisoners sue an habeas corpus in the Kings Bench. And the mayor returns, quod virtute cujusdam Ordinis ad illum direct. à Dominis Privati Concilii, and does not recite the particulars of the order. He imprisoned them, because they would not enter into a recognizance, &c. as abovesaid; and exception was taken to that return, by Peard, Maynard, Keely, Holborne, and St. John.

1. It is said to be virtute cujusdam ordinis, and not does recite the particulars of the order, and that is ill,

1. Because the order remains with the mayor, and he is conusant of it.

2. That is of the essence of the return; and therefore in Baggs's case, all the warrants were returned in hæc verba.

3. Otherwise all that is for the prisoners in the order shall be amist, and all that shall be against them, shall or may be included, and so a grand inconvenience shall ensue.

2. Exception. The mayor ought to shew, for what cause there ought to be recognisance entred into. Which he hath not done; therefore naught.

1. That a recognisance is a restriction to his liberty: so that he ought alwayes to attend for saving his recognisance; and if it shall be broken, his lands are chargeable.

2. A recognisance is a judicial act upon record, and for that the Judge ought to have some internal cause to move him to take that recognisance; and if he ought to know the cause, then he may make it known to the Court.

3. The cause ought to be known to the mayor, for then he may make it known to the Court over. For if the King intrusts him to be a justice of oyer and terminer, which is a thing of great consequence; [157] then the Privy Counsel may intrust him with a lesser matter; as in our case. And for that, it is not like a warrant made to a constable, or a warrant or command made by the justices at Westminster to a tipstaff. For there it would be inconvenient to reveal the cause to such petty officers. But now the mayor is a great Judge (as tis said) and so no inconvenience.

4. A grand inconvenience should ensue if otherwise. For if that warrant of the Privy Counsel, was directed to take a man at remote parts of the realm, as Carlisle. He ought first to come to London to know the cause, and after returns for his witnesses or evidences to clear and discharge himself; and so he shall make two journeys, where one would have served, if he had known the cause at first.

5. Perhaps the Privy Counsel attacht him to appear and answer to a thing of which they have not jurisdiction, and for that the cause ought to be returned: so that the Court now may judge, if they have jurisdiction or not. And for that it was resolved in that Court, upon an habeas corpus returned, that if the High Commissioners fine, and imprison for that fine, and the prisoner sues an habeas corpus; it is not sufficient to return, that he was fined, and for the said fine was imprisoned. But he ought to shew precisely the cause for which the Court imposed that fine. For it is a rule, that alwayes where the Court hath but a limited jurisdiction, there upon the habeas corpus, the cause ought to be certified; for perchance it is out of their jurisdiction; upon which the Court ought to adjudge. So now that Court shall be judge, if the return of the order and all the cause be insufficient or not.

3. Exception. For that, that it is to enter into a recognisance, and they have not power to compel them to enter into recognisance; for it is that the counsel may apprehend them, but not compel them, for to enter into recognisance, and for that no inconvenience may ensue to the counsel; for they may attach him to appear. But if they shall compel the party to enter into recognisance, a grand inconvenience should ensue to the party. But if he enters or not enters, the mischief shall be great to him. For first, if he will not enter, then he shall be deteined in prison, until he will enter. And of the other side, if he does enter into a recognisance, then he hath no remedy to adnull that recognisance. But it shall be good against him for ever.

2. A recognisance is a judicial act, and the counsel cannot give authority to them to take a recognisance.

3. Every recognisance is either

1. Voluntary; and this is not so.

2. Compulsory; and that cannot be but for a crime committed. But now no crime appears to be committed. But it may be objected, that upon a supplicavit in Chancery the sheriff or justice of peace may take a recognisance to keep the peace. So upon a ne exeas regnum. To that it was answered, that the sheriff or a justice of peace have power to take a recognisance. But the mayor now hath not jurisdiction. For the counsel cannot give it to him.

HARBIN AGAINST LOBY.

In an ejectione firm. upon not guilty pleaded, the jury gave a special verdict. A. and B. joyntenants for life. A. makes a lease for 99 years to commence after his death, if B. shall so long live. B. surrenders to the lessor during the life of B. And it was resolved and adjudged by 3 justices: but Fenner against them. That the lease is void by the death of A. and two points were moved.

[158] 1. If that lease was good in point of creation (viz.) if two joyntenants are, and the one makes a lease to commence after his death, and then dies, and all survives to the other. And agreed by the whole Court that it was.

2. If A. and B. jointenants. A. makes a lease for 99 years, and then B. surrenders, or makes partition; and then A. dies: yet the lessee shall return the part of A. during the life of B. And it was objected, that so because the land was bound by the lease; and if he had survived, then it is clear, that the lessee shall retain. But now it does not lie in the power of the lessor or his companion to defeat that that was once executed. But it was answered and adjudged, that now by the death of A. the lease is become void. For first the lessee had not but a possibility to have it during the life of B. which is now destroyed by the severance of the joynture.

3. In that case B. was the cause of the severance of the joynture, and not A. But it would have been all one, if A. or B. destroyed the joynture; for the lessee shall not have that absolutely during their two lives, but upon a contingency and a possibility, that the joynture continues. But now it is destroyed, and with that the lease. And in that case, this case was put. Two joyntenants joyn in a lease for years to two; and afterwards they make partition, and the one dies. Yet the term continues for all.

COURTNEY AGAINST THOMPSON.

An action upon the case was brought for words. Thou art a bankrupt. And in the declaration they set out, that he was a tradesman that dealt by retayl, and no merchant, and judgement for the plaintiff. And it was moved in arrest of judgement, because they do not set out in their declaration, that he was a merchant, but one that sold wool, which is not within the statute. But the Court said, that that was all one, and no difference, but the statute extends to such a tradesman, as well as the word merchant. And so judgement was affirm'd.

THE KING AGAINST BORESTON AND ADAMS.

In Exchequer.

An information of intrusion was exhibited pro Dom. Reg. against Boreston and Adams for entry in Alton woods in the county of Worcester, who entred as servants to the Countess of Warwick. And the point of the case was thus. William Hobby had issue, Philip Hobby his son, and Mary his daughter. Philip purchases land to him and his heirs in fee. William Hobby the father was attainted of treason, and Philip dies without issue. The question was, if Mary be heritable to Philip or not, by reason of the corruption of blood in the common ancestor. And that term the case was argued before the Barons of the Exchequer, by Stephens, who argued for the countesse, and that she may well inherit, he said, that the circumstances to be considered in this case are,

1. That a descent between brethren requires intirety of blood: and the eldest son is not heir because he is more near of blood; but because he is more worthy. But in other descents, the more near of blood shall be preferred, as to the uncles or cozins. Also the brother in making of his descent shall not make mention of the father, nor shew as he is brother; as cozen shall make. As appears 40 E. 3. And Britton said expresly, that the eldest does not inherit, ergo he is more old, or near of blood; but for that, that is more worthy. And Green said so: for he said, the daughter is as near to the father as the son. So that the attainder of the father, shall be a disablement for all heirs to claim by descent, where the descent is made by him. 17 E. 4. 1. 20 H. 6. 43. The [159] uncle of the part of the mother; shall not have an appeal of the death of the son of the mother; for he ought to convey by the mother, and ought to make mention of her. But where an immediate conveyance may be made without mention of him that is disabled; it is contrary. Littleton said, that if lands be given to a man and the heirs males of his body: if he hath issue a daughter, who hath issue a son, that son cannot inherit, for he cannot convey by an heir male, but he ought to name the daughter in the conveyance, and that destroys his title. But if it had not been requisite to have nam'd the daughter, the son might inherit. If a son hath issue a son, who purchases lands, the mother of the son is attainted, and he dies without issue, the uncle of the part of the father shall inherit, for he does not convey nor makes a descent by the mother. So if the issue of a bastard purchase lands, and dies without issue; although that land cannot descend to any heir of the part of the father, yet the heir of the part of the mother may: so if the bastard was attainted. For the heirs of the part of the mother makes not any conveyance by the bastard. Littleton said, that by the attainder of the father, the bloud is corrupted between him and all those which are his heirs. By which it may be collected, that if they are not to make them heirs by him, that between them the bloud is not corrupted, but there was objections raised out of Stanford: for he said, that by the attainder of the father, the heirs are desabled to make a discent from any ancestor; but that is to be intended from those of whom he ought to claim by the father; for otherwise by the attainder of the father the heir should not inherit the mother. And Bracton saies expresly, that notwithstanding the mother be attainted, yet the son might inherit the father. 12 H. 7. There it is, that if a man hath issue by his wife, the husband is attainted and pardoned, if he hath issue another son, he shall be tenant by the curtesie.

Stanford yet says, that by the attainder of a nobleman his heirs shall be ignoble. But that is to be intended of the nobility that descends from the person attainted. If an alien hath issue two sons, the eldest purchases lands, and dies without issue, the youngest shall inherit; and yet there is not any privity of bloud in them to inherit the father, as a common ancestor.

An other objection was made, for that, that the father is their fountain, and if it be corrupt, all the branches and streams must of necessity be corrupt, that is, when the father is the conduit, and they are to derive their estate from him: but these do not claim so. And to make a privity in their bloud, the mother suffices. An other objection was made upon that; the fathers bloud is more worthy, so that his disability destroys all: but that is not so. For the bloud of the son is indifferently participant of both. 12 E. 4. If a purchasor hath issue, who dies without issue, that land shall go to the heir of the part of the mother of the purchaser; if there be no heir of the part of the father. And 5 H. 7. Colts case. If land be given to baron and feme, and the heirs of their two bodies, the husband being attainted dies, the issue shall not inherit. But now in our case it is not so; for he is not to make a conveyance by the father: and consequently his attainder shall not disable him to inherit. Fleminge the Queens sollicitor argued on the contrary. The question is now, whether Mary shall be heir to her brother Sir Philip, the father being attainted of felony, and he said, that the attainder did disable the sister to be heir to her brother. In the argument of the case two general points were to be considered.

1. The course of descents.
2. Attainders and their effects.

1. For descents, there can be no descents, without an inheritance to [160] descend, and a person upon whom it may descend: and the person upon whom it doth descend is called hæres, ab hæreditate. And this person is not made heir by any act or disposition of the owner. For he dyeth, and leaveth it indispos'd; but it is setled by the course of the law. The law doth not cast or settle an inheritance upon any person, at adventure; but by a sure and setled course, founded and grounded upon reason. Let us then examine the reason, why the law doth settle the descent by inheritance upon one person more than upon another, and wherefore one person is preferr'd in course of descent, before another? The reason of our law therein, is grounded upon the law of nature, and the law of God, to provide, love, preserve and advance the same person, the law will prefer and advance, executing that which the owner by all intendment would or should in his lifetime have done. But by nature and Gods law, every man is bound to love, preferr, and advance his own blood before any stranger. Therefore the law following nature and reason, will advance him to be heir; that is, of the bloud of the owner; for where there is no derivation of bloud, from or between the owner, and him that shall succeed as heir, there the law will not advance or preferr him to be heir. And as every one of bloud by possibility may inherit, so all of bloud cannot inherit simul, but there is a preferment of one of the bloud before another, in the next of bloud, before one more remote. And if in equal degree, then the worthiest. And to discern who are of bloud, who near, who remote, we must resort to a line mentioned both in our law, the civil law, and the law of God, which line is a collection descending or deriving from one common stock, containing certain degrees, by which it may easily be discerned, what distance and degree there is between persons linked and coupled in bloud, the one from the other, and they are called degrees, ad similitudinem graduum, per quos gradimur à primo ad proximum; and this line is either recta or transvers. and these other, ascendent or descendent, and those in linea recta descendente are alwaies preferred before those in linea transversali, and in both lines the descendents are preferr'd before the ascendents from the common stock, quia hæreditas est quoddam ponderosum cadens, as Bracton saith, and hereby it is very evident, and cannot be denyed, whatsoever person is not comprehended within this line of consanguinity, that person cannot be heir by any means; for the law respects no man that is not of bloud, because of the line of bloud and consanguinity. The law cannot ground itself upon such a sound and certain rule, as is the law of nature; and therefore our law doth yield many tollerations, between those persons that are united in bloud, which it doth not tollerate in strangers, viz. one brother cannot have an assize of mortd.

against an other, no descent in the youngest shall take away the entry of the eldest, where the warranty is collateral, it is a barr only in presumption, that the one will not hurt the other. Between them no wager of battail: so that the law presumeth such love between those that descend from one and the same parentage, that she intendeth that the one will not wrong the other, the one will revenge the loss of the other; and where there is such love to revenge, and not to wrong, there must also be a love to prefer and advance before all other. And because this love between those that are of bloud and consanguinity, is the bond of nature, the surest and the greatest, therefore God to enlarge and spread this love in the world, did prohibit marriage within certain degrees of consanguinity. Hereof I thus conclude, that for as much as the law in course of descent will admit no man to be heir, but such as the owner by nature, and the law of God was bound to love, prefer, and advance, and that is that person that is nearest cou-[161]-pled unto him in bloud, whom nature it self doth invite to love: therefore where there is not this natural love proceeding from bloud and consanguinity, there is no advancement, no descent: so that the efficient and effectual cause of descents is proximity of bloud.

And touching attainders, and their operations and effects. Stamf. saith, and common experience sheweth, that in penal judgment of treason or felony, there is no mention made, that the offender shall forfeit his lands or goods; that his wife shall lose her dower, or that his bloud or linage shall be corrupted. But the same in every judgment is implyed. But wherefore shall his wife lose her dower, or his bloud be corrupted, and his children and kinsmen be disabled? they are not offenders. Litt. and Stamf. give these reasons, grounded upon the law of nature also: viz. men will more eschew those capital crimes, when they shall see those persons who in nature are nearest and dearest unto them, and by nature most to be beloved, shall be punished with themselves: so that if themselves will not refrain from such crimes for themselves; yet they should the rather refrain for the love of their wife, children, kindred, upon whom, through their faults they bring so perpetual punishment and stain of so infamous a note, as that their stock, bloud and linage shall be corrupted and attainted, and their children disinherited. And hereby it is truly collected, that as in descents the effectual and efficient cause, is, the natural love that is presupposed to be between those that are linked in bloud; by reason whereof the law doth prefer and advance one man to be heir to another: so also in attainders, for that the offenders do not restrain from committing these capital offences, for the love of their wives, children and kindred, but unnaturally, as it were, to hate their own bloud; the law doth also with them abhor their offences, and hate their bloud: so that it doth not think any person descending of that bloud, worthy of any advancement, but disablement and exheredation; and our law in both these points touching descents, and disablement of descents by attainder, is grounded upon nature, and the law of God, in the plea and judgment of the daughters of Zelophead, Numbers 27. 6. and 36. 2. Of which general reasons I may thus infer, if there be not a person from whom, as from a common stock, his bloud is deriv'd to others, whereby they are with the bloud of the same bloud united, as descending from the unity of one and the same stock, there can be no heir to succeed: and on the other side, if that common stock be rotten and corrupted, that the succeeding from thence be as no bloud, because it is corrupted; then cannot any person be heir to another, that is not united otherwise in bloud, but from and by this corrupted and attainted stock. From these general grounds, let us descend to particulars, and to no further degrees in bloud, than between brother and brother, or sister, as our case is. Is there any cause or reason to be given, why one brother shall be heir to an other, but this only, that they are born of the same parents, participating of one and the same bloud, and descending from one and the same stock? the civilians say, that fratres aut sorores proprie sint consanguinei, quia ex eadem parte prognati, & consanguinitas, & sanguinis unitas, à con & sanguine, quia de communi sanguine descendit; for one brother deriveth not bloud from an other. And therefore I make my first argument out of Littleton, for the person who shall be heir in this case, whose words are, If a man purchase land, and dye without issue, his next cozin of the whole bloud of the part of the father shall inherit. Then put our case, Sir Phil. Ho. purchased Alton woods, and is now dead, without issue of his body. Now by Littletons description, that person must be heir, that is his next cozin of the whole bloud of the part of the father; then if Mary Ho. be such a per-[162]-son, she must inherit; if not, she cannot inherit. But you have pleaded William Hoby and Alice his wife had issue, the said Sir Ph. and Mary, and so plainly Mary is the next cozin of the whole bloud to Ph. on the part of the father. And you have told us, that William her father was attainted of felony, and then out of your pleading I thus answer you, It is true, that she is sister, and next cozin on the part of her father to her brother, natura, or secundum carnalem consanguinitatem, but not jure secundum jus consanguinitas; there is sanguis naturalis, or sanguis hæreditarius, or civilis, the natural bloud can never be attainted, corrupted or taken away between them; but the civil or hereditary may be. And herein the civilians say truly with us, Consanguinitas diminutione capitas non tollitur sed jus consanguinitatis tolli potest. Sir Ph. and Mary are brother and sister in respect of the natural bloud. But civili ratione & intellectualiter, they are not cozins, the father being attainted; nor of bloud to be heir one to the other: for as the law would have judged them heirs one to another by their bloud, so long as the same bloud had remained hereditary bloud of the same hereditary bloud being taken away and corrupted by the attainder is now in judgment of law no bloud, and now the law cannot judge them to be heirs by that bloud, which jure and civiliter is no bloud; for every corruption is as it were a privation, presupposing a thing ought to have been and now is not; and therefore though re & subjecto the blood remain, yet jure and civiliter it is not: for what in law hath no force nor virtue is truly said not to be, as every void thing in law is said to be nothing. And therefore to prove this distinction of bloud, and attainted bloud is no blood, these cases following may satisfie. 1. An alien hath issue two sons, who are made denizens, which purchase land and dieth without issue, his brother shall not be his heir; yet are they cozins naturaliter, but not jure or hereditary. 2. A man marrieth a wife precontracted, they have issue two sons; a divorce is had, one of them purchaseth land and dieth without issue, th'other shall not be his heir, causa qua supra. 3. A man hath many cozins, he is attainted and executed; the natural bloud remaineth, yet none of them shall inherit. The law saith the land shall escheat for want of heir, & Persaye 48 E. 3. 2. saith, The lord may have his writ of escheat, either that his tenant was attaint, or that he died without heir, at his election. Therefore I conclude from Littleton, that Mary cannot be cozin and next heir unto her brother Ph. of the bloud of her father, because the fathers bloud is no hereditary blood, nor effectual, nor available to make them cozins, jure & civiliter. There is between them consanguinitas, but there is not jus consanguinitatis; for that by the attainder is taken away. A second argument I take from Stamf. from the consequents and effects that follow attainders, he saith, that the bloud and linage shall be corrupted by attainder, and his children cannot be heir to him, nor any other ancestor, and not only himself if he were noble, is become ignoble, but his children also, having regard to the nobility of their birth. I will not deal with the science of heraldry, I leave that to the professors thereof. Yet I hold it plain, that the arms which William Hoby the father could bear, Ph. his son cannot bear. And what arms Sir Ph. by his own desert did newly acquire, his brother a cozin collateral by the law of heraldry cannot give or bear. But out of the generality of the words of Stamf. I frame this argument. The children of a man that is attainted cannot inherit any ancestor. But one of them is ancestor to another; therefore one cannot inherit the other. The first proposition consisteth of Stamf. own words, another to be reverenced, who in those matters he in his book hath handled, hath very laboriously and judicially [163] travailed, and it is to be proved by reason; for resort to the line which before I mentioned, and see whether there can be any ancestor to the children by the unity or bond of any bloud; but that of necessity is derived from one and the same stock, that is the person attainted, you shall plainly perceive by the line that one of these children cannot have any ancestor, or be cozins to any but by the bloud of the father; and seeing that bloud is ineffectual to make them heirs or cozins jure and hereditarie; therefore they can have no ancestors. Now that one brother is ancestor to an other, no man will deny; therefore the conclusion standeth, one of them cannot be heir to the other. A 3. argument from Littleton, a fortiori, A man hath two sons by several venters, one purchaseth, and dieth without issue, the other shall not be his heir, but the next of the whole blood of the part of the father, that is the uncle. viz. the fathers brother; examine the reason why the uncle shall be prefer'd: is not one of those brothers nearly lincked to the other, both of them immediately participating the blood of the father, then is the uncle, between whom there is not immediate participating of blood but in degrees remote, viz. in the grandparents; but forasmuch as the uncle and one of those brothers do fetch their cozinage from the unity of the whole blood, although by a remote stock, yet shall the cozin of the whole blood inherit before the brother of the half blood, because the whole blood is more forcible than the half: if then the half blood want force to make an heir, how can corrupted blood? which in the eye and judgment of law is void blood, and as it were no blood, cause any man to be heir by no rule of reason where the sons cannot be heir to the father by reason of an impediment on the part of the father, there cannot those sons be heirs, the one brother to the other; for if the blood descended from the father be not effectual to make the son heir to the father, the same blood by which brothers are consanguinei cannot be available to make them heir one to another: if the blood cannot have hereditary operation in linea recta, it is impossible to have operation in linea transversali: as for example, let the case be remembered which I put before, which as they are put no man will deny for law. An alien hath two sons, aliens, they are made denizens, the father purchaseth and dyeth, none of these sons shall inherit, even so if one of the sons purchase and die without issue, the other shall not be his heir, the reason is the blood of the father was not hereditary between him and his son, and therefore cannot possibly be hereditary between the brothers: and the same law do I hold, if the two sons had been born in England, and no difference albeit by their birth they had been born denizens, for their birth as brothers will not avail them, unless there be any hereditary bloud also between them, as the next case doth plainly prove. A man taketh a wife within the degrees prohibited, or precontracted, and hath issue two sons, and after a divorce is had, these sons cannot be heir to the father, so can they not be heirs one to the other, yet were they at their births inheritable to their father, and one of them to the other: but by matter ex post facto, that bloud that made them to be inheritable, is after made unable, and uneffectual to make them heirs, viz. son to be heir to the father, and by consequence, the brother to the brother. By all which arguments grounded upon Littleton and Stamf. and upon the reasons of the law in course of descents, I hope I have sufficiently proved that Mary Hobby cannot be heir to her brothor Sir Ph. which shall more evidently appear by the resolutions and answers made to the objections and arguments of the contrary part. And first it is said of the contrary part, that descents between brothers do differ from all other descents collateral, for that is an immediate descent [164] the one brother to the other, and not from father or mother, and therefore the one shall be heir to the other, without making narration of father or mother, or other collateral ancestor, and where the father or mother or other ancestors attainted need not be mentioned, but by his omission the descent may well be conveyed, there the attainder of that person omitted cannot hinder the descent, but wherein the conveyance of a descent of a necessity mention'd must be made, there the attainder will hurt, and to prove their intent they vouch 17 E. 41. 20 H. 6. 43. 31 E. 3. bar ult. 3 E. 2. 7 E. 3. 46 E. 3. 22 Eliz. I will first answer their reason, and after the cases, that in form of pleading a descent between brothers, it sufficeth to say that one brother is dead without issue, but that the other is his heir, without mentioning how they are brothers. I willingly grant, and it must also be granted, that if in pleading the father and the mother be mentioned, the pleading is not evil, for so you shall see it sometimes allowed and in Cleer and Haddons case of the part of Yonger it is so pleaded, and no exception: and it was pleaded in our case; so then this reason consisteth in formality of pleading, and not upon the substance of matter; but let us examine the reason why this form of pleading is allowed, and we shall easily perceive that it concerneth form and not matter, good pleading, saith Litt. is laudable and profitable; laudable for a pleader to set forth to the Judge certainly and briefly, without superstitie frustra fit per plura quod fieri potest per pauciora: profitable to plead all that which may profit his clyents cause, and to leave unpleaded that which is not for his profit, whereof cometh this rule, that no man is bound to shew matter against himself: if a man in pleading will intitle himself, as cozin and heir to his ancestor, he must also shew how cozin, or otherwise, his plea is uncertain; for whether he be cozin in the first, second, or third degree non constat, and there may be many between them and the ancestors; beside the shewing how cozin, doth offer certain matter to the adverse party to answer the cozinage: the same reason is, if a man intitle himself proximus sanguine upon the Statute of 6 R. 2. of Ravishment, he must shew how proximus, although he be brother, because proximus is too general, and hath no certainty in this case. If one will plead he holdeth in copercenary, with an other, he must shew how; for besides sisters there can be others that may hold in copercenary, in degrees more remote; and therefore when the pleading doth contain such words of generality, there must that be shewed in certainty. But when a man intitleth himself as brother, that is so certain as none can come between them, as there may when he is pleaded cozin and heir, and therefore between brothers need not for certainty and brevity, that their father and mother had issue between them these two brothers, for in saying they are brothers all this is certainly intended prima facie, and therefore to plead at large that is included in few words were but surplusage, and so having certainty and brevity in this manner of pleading, it is formall, and good; but if it be otherwise pleaded, as in our case it is pleaded, that William Hobby and Alice his wife had issue Philip and Mary, and then shew the attainder of the father, his pleading is also good, for where the matter is plainly set forth, the pleading is not evil, and albeit the defendants were not compellable to set forth the attainder in their plea, because it is matter against themselves, yet who doubteth but that the plea touching the form hereof is good, and the defendant had omitted to mention the attainder of the father in their plea, Mr. Atturney for the Queen in the replicate might have shewed it, for where there is matter which one side doth omit to plead, as not profitable for him, the adverse party in his advan-[165]-tage shall be received to alleage the same. A man hath two sons by divers venters, a bastard or an alien hath two sons, if one of the sons will intitle himself to be the brother and heir to the other, shall not the adverse party allege by bar or replication, as the cause shall fall out, that the father had two wives, or that he was a bastard, or an alien what more certain, what more common in our books? now let us come to the inferrence made thereupon, where in the conveyance of the descent, mention must be made of the person attainted, there his attainder will hurt, but otherwise it is where the descent may well be conveyed, without making mention of such person; I hold this difference not good, consisting more of form of pleading than matter of substance, as before I have said; but if the descent between the ancestors and the heir cannot be made in veritate, but by reason of a cozinage that groweth by unity of blood attainted, and otherwise they be cozins; I hold the matter so appearing in pleading, that the attainder will be an impediment to the descent, as before I have proved. Now let us consider the cases of 17 E. 41. a feme had issue a son that was murthered, the uncle could not have an appeal, because the mother was disabled, by the same reason, if the mother had been attainted, the uncle could not inherit the sons land, & sic è converso: the reason, because the uncle to the son, the son to the uncle in their conveyance must needs mention the mother: I say that is not the main and material reason. But in as much as the uncle and the son were compelled in cozinage by the bloud of the mother, and her bloud by her attainder unavailable to make any descent, therefore the one cannot succeed the other: and hereof I collect, that if the attainder of the mother be an impediment to the uncle to be heir to her son, albeit the uncle deriveth no bloud from her, but he and she as participants of the blood they receiv'd from the common stock above, a fortiori must her attainder be an impediment to her sons, the one to be heir to the other, forasmuch as they both do derive blood from her, and not the one from her, and the other from the common ancestor, as the son and the uncle do: but they do further inferr upon this case, that if a son had issue two sons, and the one were murthered, the other should have an appeal, and so if a man attainted have two sons, one shall have an appeal of the others death. If I should deny the cases, the books vouched prove rather for me than against me, and they are æque dubii with our case in hand, yet I may answer them well, if I should grant them: first I hold a difference between a disablement, which cometh natura, and that which groweth a culpa, for the one is odious and hatefull to the law, the other is not: I will explain the difference more hereafter. Also there is a difference between an action of appeal as heir, and the course of descent as heir to an inheritance. The one is to receive an advancement, therefore an appeal is given to him that is not heir to the party murthered, but in the respect of the loss the party hath of him that is killed, and therefore by the common law the wife might have an appeal of the death of her husband, as appeareth by Stamford, and that hath been agreed by all the Judges about 26 Eliz. That if the eldest son kill his father, the youngest shall have an appeal against his brother, and yet if his brother be attainted at his sute, he shall never inherit his fathers lands. The case of 20 H. 6. 43. is, that one brought an appeal of the death of his ancestor, and made his descent as heir, viz. fitz. Katherine, file dels ancestor; and shewed that Kat. died in the life of the ancestor, yet adjudged that the appeal will not lie, because he makes his descent by the daughter that can have no appeal of the death of her father, and albeit she were dead in the life of the ancestor, yet because her issue must needs mention his mother, therefore they say the appeal lies not; other-[166]-wise where omission may be made, and therefore all the rest of the cases are put 8 E. 1. 13 E. 3. 1 E. 3. 11 H. 6. 31 E. 3. bar ult. all these cases are, that if the son be attainted in the life of the father, and survive, the land shall escheat: but if he dye without issue in the life of the father, then his brother shall inherit the father, the reason they say, that being dead in the life of the father, without issue, the other son shall make himself immediate heir to the father, but so could he not if brother attainted had surviv'd, that is but a formal reason, and not substantial, as shall appear out of these and the like cases: a man hath issue two sons by divers venters, and die seis'd, the eldest never entreth, or is seised, and dyeth without issue, the son of demy sancke shall be heir to the father: because notwithstanding the eldest son surviv'd the father, and had no seisin, the other son may make himself mediate heir to the father. So if a lease for life be made, or an estate tayl, the remainder to I. S. and his heirs, I. S. hath two sons by several venters, and dieth, the eldest son after dieth without issue, the second son shall be heir to the father, albeit the first did survive, causa qua supra, but in these cases it is not evident and clear, that if the eldest son had been attainted, and survived, and after died before any seisin, that the other son shall not be heir to the father: yet if your reason hold, he should not hold, for he need not mention him in the descent from the father: yea, that is formality. Here is matter, that hindreth this formality of pleading when it is disclosed that is the attainder: even so in our case the reason is the same as here, and so are the cases for me, and not against me. Every descent between brothers doth require to be of the whole blood, both of father and mother, but mother, in other collateral descents it sufficeth to be heir of the part of the fathers side, or of the part of the mothers side alone, therefore the impediment of the fathers side will not hinder one brother to be heir to an other on the part of the mothers side, and è contra; and to this end these cases have been put, if an alien marry an English woman, and he have issue two sons, the one purchaseth and dyeth without issue, his brother shall be heir on the part of his mother, although not of the part of the father, and so if the son of a bastard purchase and dye without issue, his next cozin on the part of the mother shall inherit. If one brother purchase and die, his brother enters and dieth without issue, and without heir of the part of the father, his heir of the part of his mother shall inherit, which cannot be, if the brother were heir to the brother ex parte matris tantum. If the father be attainted, the son shall inherit the mother, and if the mother be attainted, the son shall inherit the father; or else by the book, the father having charter of pardon and issue after, could not be tenant per le curtisie, unless the issue might inherit. The conclusion thereupon is, that albeit Mary Hobby cannot be heir to her brother on the part of the father, yet she may be heir of part of the mother: first I answer the reasons, and the cases afterwards, and then the conclusion. It is true, that one brother that will succeed an other as heir, must be of the whole bloud both of father and mother, and therefore it doth not absolutely follow, that an impediment of the fathers side will not disable them to be heir on the part of the mothers side, contr. But I rather conclude, that if of necessity brothers must be of the intire bloud of the fathers and mothers side, then uno deficiente deficit alter. But admit the cases to be law, yet are they thus to be answered, there are impediments to hinder descents of the part of the fathers side, or of part of the mothers side, some that happen sine culpa, and some cum culpa civiliter, or criminaliter: those that are civiliter, or sine culpa, are such as to make the father and mother not capable of any descent, or heir [167] ab initio, or à nativitate; those that are criminaliter, or cum culpa, are such as deprive or disable the father or mother to be capable of any descent or heir, where before they were capable. The one sort of impediments will not happily hinder descents between brothers, the other will. Therefore, when in the first case an English woman hath issue by an alien two sons, and the one purchaseth and dieth without issue, now in default of heir of part of the father, the heirs of part of the mother shall inherit: but in this case the father can have no heir, because he is an alien, and never was capable of succession; therefore the brother dyed with heir of the part of the father, not because the father was disabled culpa, and so forfeited the capacity he had to have an heir, but civiliter and sine culpa, is never born and endued with any such capacity. The second case standeth also upon the same reason. For the father of the purchasor being a bastard, was never inheritable to any descent, or can have other heir than the issue of his body. So as when the son of a bastard doth purchase and dye without issue, he also dieth without heir of part of the father, not because his father hath lost or forfeited by any crime or offence, the capacity he had to have any heir collateral: but for that he was never born worthy that dignity, and so ab initio nativitatis he never had it. But if a bastard have issue two sons, the one purchaseth and dyeth without issue, it is plain that his brother shall be his heir, not ex parte matris, but patris, as most worthy, and the father although a bastard, yet he was inheritable by his blood to make his sons or heir to another, albeit himself could derive no blood from any ancestor whatsoever; for a bastard may purchase, and have heir of his body, as his blood is available to make his son to inherit him. So also it is to make one of his sons to inherit the other; and where there is an heir of the blood of the father, the heir of the blood of the mother shall never inherit the purchasor; otherwise it is in the case of the alien, for that he could not purchase to his own use, nor could his son without him, and by consequence one of the sons in regard of his blood cannot inherit the other; but in regard of the mother they might. But in this case also if the alien be made denizen, and then take an English woman to wife, and have two sons; there because each of them by possibility may inherit the father, they also shall be heirs the one to the other, not ex parte matris, but ex parte patris; which reason proveth the third case to be grounded upon a falacy; for albeit when one brother purchaseth and dyeth without issue, the other brother doth enter, and dyeth likewise without issue, and heir of the part of the father, that the heirs of the part of the mother shall inherit, yet the heirs of the part of the mother shall not inherit the second brother, because he did inherit his eldest brother ex parte matris; but because that when a descent is ex parte patris, and then that line doth fail, by his death the land shall resort to the heir of the purchasor of the part of his mother. So here, the second brother had his land as heir to the brother ex parte patris, and when he dy'd, having no heir of part of his brother by the fathers side, then it shall descend to the heirs of the brother the purchasor of part of his mother, which although she be one mother to both brothers, yet her heirs shall inherit not as mother, not to the mother to the second brother, but to the first that was the purchasor. The 4th. case seemeth at first to make much against me, and hath been very strongly rely'd upon; for thence the impediment grows non culpa, and doth disable the father of that capacity he once had, and now by his attainder hath lost it, shall the son inherit the land of the mother, & è contr. But if this case be well examined it will not match with our case, nor make anything against [168] me; for between husband and wife there are several lines of blood in consanguinity and descent to be drawn: the husband to have his heir, is to have his heir, which cannot be heir to the wives land, the wife for her land is to have her heir, which cannot be heir to the husbands land. And as they have several inheritances, so by the law they have several heirs by descent, whosoever is heir to the husband claimeth to be heir in blood onely from the husband, not from the wife, whosoever claims to be heir to the wife, claims only to be heir in blood to the wife, and not to the husband; and so must they that be heirs to either of them of necessity make their several resorts and line by their several blood, and not joyntly by both their bloods, when they claim by descent from either of them: as for example. A man is seised of land in fee in his own right, and also in right of his wife, and they have issue a daughter, his wife dieth, and by another wife hath issue a son, and then dieth, the daughter shall inherit the mothers land, and the son the fathers land, and so several heirs, because one is of the mothers blood, and the other of the fathers, and here the attainder of the father will not prejudice the daughter to inherit the mother, nor the attainder of the mother prejudice the son to inherit the father; because the lines by which these several heirs claim are several. A man seized in fee hath issue a daughter, and taketh a wife also seised in fee, and by her also hath another daughter, these two daughters shall inherit the fathers land; but the last daughter onely shall be heir to the mother; here be two daughters only of demy sancke, and both these shall inherit the father; for in respect of him, they are of his intire blood, and therefore shall make one intire heir to him; but one daughter onely is of the mothers blood, and therefore shall solely be heir to the mother, and between themselves they are of demy sancke, and one cannot be heir to the other, and hereby doth appear a plain difference between descents from father and mother to their children, and between the brothers and sisters, for it sufficeth that the son or the daughter be of the blood of either father or mother, viz. which of them have inheritance; but the brothers and sisters must of necessity be of the same father and mother, or else they cannot inherit one the other, and see the 4th case put upon the 3 H. 7. matcheth not our case. Now put the case of one son as thus: the husband and wife have several inheritances, and they have issue one son and dye, this son supplyeth the place of several heirs, and must make his claim and descent to land severally, viz. to the lands of the father as son and heir to the father, and shall not intitle himself to that land as son to his mother, nor name his mother, and to the land of the mother as son and heir to the mother, and never mention the father: and yet it is true that the son as he had a father, so had he a mother, and from them both doth derive his blood and issue; yet will it not follow, that by the attainder of the father the son shall be disabled to inherit the mother; nor by attainder of the mother be disabled to inherit the father, for the son claimeth not to be heir to both by the intire blood he receiveth from both; but severally to be heir to the father by the blood from the father, and heir to the mother by the blood of the mother. And this will be plain if you do remember the distinction before made of blood. There is sanguis naturalis, and sanguis hereditarius. The son, as touching his natural blood, hath it proceeding both from the father and the mother, joyntly, intirely, and inseparably: but as touching his hereditary blood, that is descended unto him, he hath that derivedly and severally from his father for his inheritance from his mother, for her inheritance; therefore the fathers attainder which doth not corrupt sanguinem, but jus sanguinis, is not the natural, but the hereditary blood may [169] be an impediment that the son cannot be his heir, because between them the hereditary blood is corrupted. But it can be no impediment to the son to inherit the mothers land, for that hereditary blood between the mother and the son is not corrupted by the attainder of the father, so that hereby it appears that the case collected, upon 13 H. 7. doth neither match our case, nor make against me, and therefore the conclusion inferred thereupon is weaker, for Mary Hob. cannot be heir to her brother, by the blood of the mothers side, because she must be of the whole blood to her brother both by father and mother, and both their bloods must unite in her, and continue also not one entire blood natural, but hereditary. But by the attainder of her father for hereditary blood to her brother derived from the father is corrupted, therefore by the mothers blood solely she cannot inherit her brothers land, albeit she may inherit her mothers land, for the reason aforesaid. But before I passe further, I will object against my self in this manner; admit their father had not been attainted, but their mother, should her attainder have discharged Mary to have been heir to her brother; yet will there be a difference between their attainders, for admit also, as the other side would have it, that it sufficeth for the sister to be heir to her brother, either by the fathers side, or by the mothers side. Yet it is by Littleton plain as before I have shewed, that when one purchaseth and dyeth without issue, his next cozin collateral of the part of the father must inherit, before the heir of the part of the mother, hereof it followeth that Mary Hobbs, admitting that neither father nor mother were attainted, should be heir to her brother by the blood of her father as the worthiest, and not by the blood of her mother; and so then the fathers blood is sanguine hæreditatis and not her mothers blood until there be defect on the fathers part. But the father not being attainted, there is no defect, therefore though the mother be attainted, yet that hereditary blood from the father which is sound, and to be preferr'd, cannot be corrupted by the attainder of the mother; and therefore Mary Hob. may by her fathers blood be heir to her brother. But on the other side, when the father is attainted, then that hereditary blood which should have had preferment to make M. heir to her brother; is corrupted in Mary, and she having that corrupted blood and living, that corrupted blood in her is an impediment that the mothers blood cannot take place, for there is no difference when both bloods are in one person, and when they are in several persons; as before I have shewed: for if Mary be heir to her brother on part of father, she cannot be heir also of her brother on part of the mother. And then being to be preferred by the line of her father, and cannot because his linage is corrupted, that line in her must be an impediment unto her self, that her self cannot be his heir on the part of the mother. But it hath been objected, that brothers by the blood, that is, between themselves, are immediate heirs one to the other, and so born heirs one to the other, and that they have by their birthright cannot be taken from them by the act of a third person, but by their own act. And therefore the attainder of the father cannot take away that immediate right between them to be heir the one to the other. And if a man be attainted and have his charter of pardon, he shall be heir to the father, and by consequence, if he had two sons after the pardon, the one of them shall be heir to the other. That brothers are immediate heirs one to the other by any blood between them derived from the one to the other, that I deny, for one brother takes no blood from the other, they are immediate heirs by the blood derived between them from their common stock, which is the father. And this is manifestly proved by all those authorities in our books, that if the eldest brother be attainted [170] in the life of the father, his attainder shall not prejudice his younger brother to be heir to the father, if the eldest dye without issue in the life of the father. The reason is, because the youngest is of blood of the father, and by that blood is now become heir of the father, and is not of the eldest sons blood, for then his attainder would be an impediment to all of his blood to inherit. And albeit brothers by their birth are inheritable one to the other, yet doth the attainder so strongly relate, that look whatsoever they gained by their birth, by the blood of their father, there the same even from their birth, they have lost, the same blood being corrupted, and therefore Stamford saith, albeit they were born noble, they are now ignoble from the birth as having lost all dignity and advancement whatsoever they had by their birth. And when as a man taketh a wife precontracted, and have two sons, now at the time at their birth they are born inheritable one to the other, yet if divorce be had these sons have again lost from their birth, that they had by their birth, and as the divorce coming after maketh them to be no children inheritable. So the attainder ex post facto, makes them also no children inheritable, and where you vouch 9 H. 6. that if a man attainted have a pardon, and then have issue, that this issue shall inherit; I deny that book to be law, for the contrary is proved by E. 4. and divers other authorities, for the attainder doth corrupt the blood between father and son, as well such as were born before the attainder, as after, and a pardon coming after cannot make restitution of blood, as all authorities do agree. But it must be by Parliament, and therefore there is a great difference between charter of pardon, and charter of denization, for if an alien be made denizen and then have a son and purchase, his son shall inherit, for while he was an alien, he was not capable of inheritance to his own use, nor to have a son and heir; but when he was made free by his denization, then there was a capacity in him to take inheritance, and to have an heir to inherit him, not by way of restitution lost, and now restored, which the Queen by her charter cannot do, but onely to make the person free, and a denizen, which by her charter the Queen may do, and the descent is by consequence in free blood never corrupted and attainted, otherwise it is case of attainder. But if you make such interruption of descents by reason of corrupted blood, why, so you may do where the grandfather was attainted, and the father purchase, that his son shall not inherit, for the same is of the grandfathers corrupted blood, which he received by his father, yea, and so he is, if he will claim any hereditary blood from the grandfather, viz. to claim to him, the son should be barred, but when the son to inherit the fathers land, doth claim by the blood hereditary between him and his father, and that by a fresh blood and not by the old corrupted blood, then is there no impediment, but that the fresh blood shall be available to make him heir to his father. Lastly, it hath been objected, that it is plain that if the brother had died before the attainder of the father, then the sister should have been his heir. And the attainder after should never devest that descent, and therefore as the attainder after will not destroy the descent, the attainder before will not disable the descent negate argumentum. A more neer heir will divest a descent of them that was one in by descent by a remote decree, as if a man dyed having a daughter his wife priviment enfeant with a son, now this daughter is heir, and in by descent, but when the son is born he now shall be heir and the other descent avoided, but it is clear otherwise in case of attainder which giveth title of escheat; and if when the title of escheator came, the lord hath a tenant in by title, he then hath no right to the land; for [171] his right is for want of a tenant; but he findeth a tenant, and such a one as is in by descent, whom the law favoureth. Otherwise it is when the title of the escheat happeneth before the descent can come. And so is there none of those objections which are sufficient to alter my former reasons. Wherefore I conclude, that Mary Hobby cannot be heir to her brother Sir Philip, by reason their father was attainted. And so judgment ought to be given for the Queen.

T. 42 Eliz. Usury.

Upon evidence that term at Guild-hall, London, in the case of one Dalton. Where in debt upon an obligation, where the Statute of Usury was pleaded, it was said by Poph. If a man lend 100l. for a year, and to have 10l. for the use of it. If the obligor pays the 10l. 20 dayes before it be due, that does not make the obligation void, because it was not corrupt. But if upon making the obligation, it had been agreed, that the ten pound should have been paid within the time, that should have been usury. Because he had not the 100l. for the whole year. When the 10l. was to be paid within the year. And verdict was given accordingly.

It was agreed, that if the lord maim his villain, he is infranchised.

DOROTHY WATTS AGAINST BRYNES AT SEVERSAM.

Murther.

In an appeal of the death of her husband. The defendant there, upon the indictment was found guilty of man slaughter, and the issue was if he kill'd the husband or not, and the evidence was very strong against the defendant. (scil.) The begining of the quarrel was, on Monday there, the person that was kill'd beat the now defendant. On Tuesday, Watts in the defendants shop being a butcher, flurted him on the nose. On Wednesday, Watts, and one Bissei walking by the shop, made a wry mouth at the defendant: upon which the defendant comes out of the shop, with a short sword behind the back of Watts, and gives him a great stroak upon the calf of the legg, whereof he died. And the Court directed the jury to find it murther.

JOHNSON AGAINST BACON.

Time to assign errors.

Johnson of Grayes-Inne recovered in debt against Bacon of Grayes-Inne upon a bond of 400l. where the condition was to save harmlesse, being surety for Bacon. And Bacon was outlawed after judgement: and a cap. utlagat. was delivered to the sheriff in Court. And now Bacon brought errour. And would assign errours without yielding himself in execution, quod contra legem. By the clerks, that a man outlawed may not take benefit of the law, without a submission to it.

GAGE AGAINST TAYLOR.

To reverse a fine.

It was mov'd to reverse a fine. Because the writ of covenant bore test. 15 of April, returnable Quindena Paschæ. And that year Quindena Pasche was the 14 of April. And so the return was before the teste. And the fine was revers'd.

HART AGAINST ARROWSMITH.

The lord licences a copyholder for life to make lease for twenty years; if he shall so long live. And he leases for years 20 generally. And a good lease; for the licence is pursued in effect.

A man was indicted upon the statute of E. 6. That in the churchyard, such a day, extraxit gladium against I. L. et ipsum per-[172]-cussit. And because the statute was, If any person malitiously strike another, or shall draw any weapon with an intent to strike any person. And the indictment was, quod extraxit. But does not say, ad percutiendum. And because it is, quod percussit, without saying malitiose, the party was discharg'd upon judgement.

SIMSON AGAINST GILLION.

Where trespass may be brought by a copyholder without admission.

Simson brought trespass. And the defendant pleads, that the land is copyhold, and parcel of the mannor of Dale. And that J. Farmer in 24 Eliz. granted that to him by copy. The plaintiff replies, that Sir H. Farmer in 28 H. 8. granted it to one Thomas the husband, and his wife, and their heirs. And the husband dies, the wife survives and dies. J. Farmer admits the defendant, and the plaintiff as heir to the wife re-enters, and upon that re-entry brought this action: upon which the defendant demurrs. And adjudg'd for the plaintiff without argument. And the point was this, the copyholder dies, the lord admits a stranger: the heir may enter, and upon the re-entry maintain trespass, without an admission by the lord.

Errour was brought upon a judgment given in the Kings Bench, in an action upon the case for an escape, and errour assign'd in this. That that action does not lie, but debt; and judgment was affirm'd; because he might have that action at common law: by the opinion of all the Justices of the Common Bench, and the Barons of the Exchequer.

A man said, Thou hast stollen my mare, or was consenting to it. By Fenner and Clench, No action lies: for he may consent tacendo, and yet be faultless.

BISSE AGAINST WILLS.

Errour was assign'd, for that the venire fac. in the Common Bench was 12 liberos & legales homines quorum quilibet habeat quatuor librat. where the new statute is quatuor libras. For it was said that libratus is a pound weight: but because it was a general case, the justices would view how the Parliament roll was, and it was found to be libras. And then it was mov' dagain. And Poph. said, that the intent of the statute was only to have sufficient jurors. Gaudy agreed to that. And the statute is to be expounded, as the usage has been ever after the making of it. And the form of the writ is not upon any demand upon title. Fenner agreed. The Statute de Mercatoribus, that the manner of the recognisance shall be of money starling: but it is sufficient, if it be lawfull money. To which Clench agreed: for it was said, that if that should be revers'd, a thousand judgments in the Common Bench would be revers'd upon the same point.

Rowles and How arrest a man upon a latitat. And there was an obligation made to the sheriff, with a condition to make an appearance; and the question was if it be good; for he may make his appearance by his atturney. Yet Clench and Fenner, cæteris absentibus, thought it to be good; for the law intends, that he is in person, when he is in custodia marescall. And Kempe said it was adjudg'd. Where Mr. Sackford Bayly of the liberty of St. Andrew, took an obligation in his own name, for a personal appearance, upon a latitat. At another day Doderidge mov'd that the bond was void. For the statute being [173] general, that he shall take a bond for his appearance, and the sheriff hath not taken a bond for his personal appearance, and he may answer to the action by his atturney; but that he ought to be alwayes in custodia marescall. which is intended in proper person, and ought to be put in bayl, which is good enough. And it was rul'd, that judgment should be entred for the plaintiff, unless better cause were shewed within four dayes. And so it was adjudged, 30 Eliz. Rot. 126. In Banstons the Sheriff of Sussex.

EDWARD DARCY Esquire } Plaintiff. } THOMAS ALLIN OF LONDON Haberdasher } Defendant, Action upon the case.

[S. C. 11 Co. Rep. 84 b. See Marsden v. Saville Street Company, 1878, 3 Ex. D. 206; R. v. County Court Judge of Halifax, [1891] 1 Q. B. 798; [1891] 2 Q. B. 263.]

Mr. Fuller,

The plaintiff declareth, that whereas the Queen perceiving that divers subjects of able bodies which might go to plow, did imploy themselves in the art of making of cards, she did by her letters patents, dated the 13 Junii, anno 30. grant to Ralph Bowes Esquire, that he by himself, his factors, and assigns, as well denizens as strangers, might buy and provide beyond the seas playing cards, and cause them to be brought into England, or in her dominions, by whatsoever means, and to utter, sell, or distribute the same in grosse, or by retail, and that he should have the whole trade of making and selling of cards in England, &c. And that none should have the making and selling of cards within her dominions, but he, for 12 years, streightly restraining all other subjects other than the said Ralph Bowes his factors and assigns from the making and selling thereof.

Then he rehearseth the letters patents made to himself, dated 11 August. anno 40. for 12 years to begin after the expiration of the former term of 21 years, and that he was possessed of that interest, and that the former term expired 13 Junii, anno 42. and that he ult. Junii, caused 4000 grosse of cards to be made in London at his charges, amounting to 5000l. for the necessary use of the subjects.

That the defendant knowing the premises 15 Maii, anno 44. caused 80 grosse of cards to be made, he being a subject, and no assignee or factor to the plaintiff, and that the defendant 16 Maii, anno 44. did sell half a grosse of playing cards to John Freer and Francis Freer for 13s. 4d. which were not made in England, or brought into England by the plaintiff or his factor, without licence of the Queen, or consent of the plaintiff, he being a subject, whereby the plaintiff was defrauded of the benefit which he was to enjoy by his charter to his damages of 200l.

The defendant pleadeth to all, except half a gross of cards sold to Jo. Freer, and Francis Freer, not guilty, and for them pleadeth that the City of London is an ancient city, and that from time whereof no memory of man is to the contrary, within the same city, there hath been a fellowship or company of citizens called Haberdashers of London: and that within the same city one lawful custom hath been used de tempore, &c. That every citizen of the said company may buy, sell, and merchandize all things merchandable within the realm of England. And sheweth that the defendant tempore quo, &c. and before and since was a citizen and haberdasher of London: and that by reason thereof he did sell the said grosse of cards, as was lawful for him to do, and [174] averreth that they were things merchantable.

To this plea the plaintiff hath demurred in law.

Edward Darcy Esq. plaintiff. Thomas Allin defendant.

Mr. Fuller,

This cause is of great weight, and to be dealt in with good regard, for on the one side, it concerneth the prerogative of the Queens Majesty in a material point thereof; and on the other side it doth concern many of Her Majestys subjects in present; and in the rule thereof it may concern all the subjects in England; and yet the cause is such, as may, yea ought to be disputed and censured before competent Judges, as this Court is. For I learn in Bracton, lib. 1. cap. 8. thus. Ipse autem Rex non debet esse sub homine, sed sub Deo & sub lege, quia lex facit regem, attribuat igitur Rex legi quod lex attribuat ei. And after he saith, Non est enim Rex ubi dominatur voluntas, & non lex: which latter words, as also the cases following, prove the intent to be sub lege loquente. According to the opinion of Bracton it is said, 19 H. 6. fo. 62. That the law is the most high inheritance of the realm, by which the King and all his subjects are governed; and that if the law were not, there would neither be King nor inheritance: for to outrun the law, is to hast to confusion.

This law all subjects are bound to obey, and the Queens Majesty hath given her assent to perform the same in some sort at her coronation by her oath, which I know not precisely what it is; but I find by the statutes of 2 E. 3. and 14 E. 3. and others, that the King shall grant no pardon contrary to his oath, and that if he do grant any such pardon contrary to his oath, it shall be void; which sheweth, that his oath referreth to some rules of law. And to come near to the point of prerogative, it is said in the Commentaries, fol. 236. That the law doth so admeasure the Kings prerogative, that it shall not tend to the prejudice or hurt of the inheritance of any of his subjects.

Being thus inabled to speak in this weighty cause, to the intent that the whole course of my argument may the better be conceived, I have divided that into these heads.

1. That all patents concerning the King and his subjects are to receive exposition and allowance how far they are lawful, and how far not, by the Judges of the law.

2. That the Judges in the exposition of the Kings letters patents, are to be guided not by the precise letters, and the words of the letters patents, but by the laws of the realm, the laws of God, and according to the ancient allowance thereof. And herein I mean the laws of God, because we are now the house of God and the people of God, the Jews being cut off to whom God was the law-giver, and we being ingraffed in their stead: so as the judgments that are executed, are not the judgments of men but of God, and he is with them in the cause and in the judgment.

3. That the letters patents made to the plaintiff are contrary to the laws of the realm, contrary to the laws of God, hurtful to the commonwealth, and in no part good or allowable.

[175] 4. That the action upon the case grounded upon this void patent, is no lawful action.

5. In the last place I will answer all the material matters and cases that have been alledged on the plaintiffs part, to the intent that this monopoly patent should have no ground to stand upon.

In the argument of this case I am eased much: for that it is confessed by Mr. Solicitor, who very learnedly argued on the part of the plaintiff, that such letters patents as tended to change the law, or course of any mans inheritance, or that was contra commune jus, or that tended to any generall charge of the subjects, were void in law, for which I meant to have put divers cases, which I omit.

It is agreed by the Court, that the grants of the King shall not be expounded according to the letter; but according to the antient allowance, and to prove the same, I will put some particular cases. (10 H. 7. f. 14.)

The Kings grants in many cases are controlled by the Judges of the law for the benefit of the King, contrary to the expresse letters of the grant. As when the King granteth the mannor of Dale, and all manner of woods, underwoods, mines and quarries in the same: yet mines of gold and silver shall not passe. And so when the goods and chattels of persons qualitercunque damnatorum are granted, yet the goods of persons attainted of treason passe not, because by rule of law these things of prerogative will not passe by such general words. So in cases that concern the subjects as shall hereafter appear, the Judges shall controll patents contrary to the letters, because they have liked rules of law so to do, whereby it shall appear that the Judges stand indifferent between the King and his subjects, for which many cases more might be put on the Kings part: for power of judgment is so commited to the Judges. (Com. fo. 337. 45 ass. p. 15. 22 ass. p. 49.)

Now I will shew you that patents shall be controlled for justice sake, albeit they do concern but particular persons, and not generall ones. (1 E. 3. fo. 26.)

The King granteth to I. S. that he shall not be sued by N. T. this is void: so when it is more particular. As when the King doth grant to the Chancellor of Oxford, that he shall not be sued for debt or trespass concerning his office, is void. And when the King doth grant conusans de plee licet ipsemet fuerit pars, or generally, not naming before whom, is void for the reasons abovesaid, being contrary to the rule of justice. (8 H. 6. fo. 19. 1 H. 4. fo. 6. 44 E. 3. fo. 27. 6 H. 4. fo. 1.)

A commission is granted under the Great Seal of England to persons of credit, to take the body and goods of I. S. without indictment and due proceeding according to law. This is adjudged unlawful. (42 ass. p. 5.)

A commission is awarded to persons of credit to examine the title of Scrogges concerning the office of exigenter, and to commit him to prison, if he refused. Scrogges refused, and was committed to prison, but was delivered by the Judges of the Common Place upon a habeas [176] corpus, as an unlawful imprisonment, the reasons I gather to be these. (23 Eliz. fo. 175.)

The law knoweth no commandement but by writ, nor no minister to execute the commandements of the law, but the sheriff and the officers under him, for he is the only lieutenant in the time of peace, who is to be guided by the law, and to be controlled, if he follow not the course of law in the commandements of the King or of the law.

For commissions to subjects of any absolute power, which be occasions of absolute wrongs, as the law knoweth them not, so the law alloweth not such proceedings. I do not here speak of justices of peace, who have power given them by divers statutes, who if they exceed their power, are to be punished by law, nor of commissioners of bankrupts, nor of sewers, which are grounded upon particular Acts of Parliament. (13 Eliz. cap. 7. 23 H. 5. cap. 5.)

Now touching patents that tend to prejudice or to charge particular subjects, how they are to be controlled, I will put some cases.

20 acres of land are holden of the Bishop of Winchester, by I. S. I. S. granteth the same 20 acres to the King, to the intent that the King should grant them in mortmayne to a monastery; which is done accordingly. Afterwards, notwithstanding that the grant to the King were lawful, and the grant of the King to the monastery in itself is lawful; yet because it tended to take away the mean surrender of the Bishop of Winchester, upon petition it was repelled. (19 E. 3. fo. 39. 46 E. B. Pet. 19.)

The King granted to A. B. his servant the office of measuring of cloth in London, with a fee, and a writ was awarded to the Mayor and Sheriffs of London to put him in possession thereof, who refused to put him in possession, and returned that there is no such office in London. Hereupon it is excellently argued by the Judges, how far the King may charge his subjects by his patents, and agreed, that without the Parliament the King cannot grant any new office with charge to charge the subjects: and although in this case there had been a former grant of this office to an other man deceased, and that he had executed the office, and received some fees for a time, yet the Judges thought that seisin by wrong upon an unlawful patent to be of no force. (13 H. 4. fo. 15.)

It is agreed, that the King cannot grant toll to be taken in the highway, which is free, but pontage and murage may be granted; because there is quid pro quo; and no longer than the bridge is maintained for use of the subjects, nor shall continue for defence of the subject, the toll is not due to be paid for the pontage, nor for the murage. (13 H. 4. fo. 15. 50 E. 3. tit. p. 112. Brook.)

Like learning in the cases of the office of brocage, tonage, &c. and the difference between the clerk of the market and such offices. (22 H. 6. fo. 14. 21 E. 4. fo. 1.)

I. S. is indebted to R. in 20l. by contract. R. is outlawed, the Queen shall not have this debt, for the Queen shall rather lose this debt, than the subject lose the benefit of waging of law, wherein it is to be noted, how indifferent the law is for the subject. (49 E. 3. fo. 5. 50 Ass. p. 1. 16 E. 4. fo. 4.)

[177] The King shall not arrest one for suspicion of felony or treason, because if it be without cause the subject hath no remedy. By Markham. So that the King shall rather lose the liberty that a subject hath, than that the subject shall lose the benefit of his action. (4 H. 7. fo. 4. prerog. 139. Brook.)

To come near to the point of prerogative, the King did grant a protection, quia profecturus, to I. B. and sheweth it was for the service of the King, and of his realm at Rome, to continue for 3 years, & sit quietus ab omnibus actionibus sectis, &c. and it was refused by the Judges, for that it was for 3 years, and the law alloweth but for one year. And for that there was not exception of dower, quare impedit and assize, as should be in such protections. (39 H. 6. f. 39.)

A protection was granted to I. B. quia profecturus in a voyage royal with the King into Ireland, and rejected by the Judges, because it was no voyage royal into Ireland, otherwise in Scotland. Per Noyle. Note that these protections are not to take any thing from the subject; but tend only to delay the lawful sutes of some particular subjects, and yet rejected as abovesaid. (1 E. 4. f. 29.)

NOW TOUCHING THE KINGS MERCY, HOW THAT SHALL BE CONTROULED FOR THE GOOD OF THE SUBJECTS, IT IS MEET TO SEE.

The King doth pardon I. S. the making or repairing of a bridge, which he ought to do: now for that in this bridge the subjects have a use or kind of interest, for that reason the pardon is void. 2 R. 3. Rex potest dare licentiam alicui ad deferend. literas apostolicas infra hoc regnum, ubi tantum Regem tangat, sed non ubi tangat partem. (Com. f. 48. 3 E. in Northf. ss. 445. 2 R. 13. fo. 12.)

Thus it appeareth how all the attributes given to the King, of power, justice and mercy are in him to dispose to the good of the subjects: that justice controuleth both the power and mercy in grants, commissions, protections, pardons, as for the good of the subject in the time of 1 E. 3. H. 4. H. 6 E. 4. H. 7. &c. why did the Judges withstand the Kings letters patents in this sort? And why are these things recorded and left to us, but that it may appear to the ages following what great care those reverend Judges had to leave the land and people in like liberty to the ages following as they found it, and so ought every man in conscience in his place to have the like care.

NOW TOUCHING THIS PARTICULAR PATENT.

The pretence is chiefly upon this, viz. that the Queen may restrain all card-playing, and then by consequence all making, buying and selling of cards, because for the good of the whole common-wealth, the card-maker or seller may receive particular loss in his trade.

First it is not to be confessed, that the Queen may by letters patents without Parliament restrain all card-playing, which I will prove by reason, use, and by intent of statutes.

For this is true without any contradiction, that no man can continue alwaies in labour, alwaies in reading, or alwaies in meditation, but he must have reasonable recreation, and all persons cannot take recreation [178] abroad, for some be sick, weak, or impotent, that need refreshing, some seasons are such, as that there is no recreation abroad, and in these times, and to these persons to make restraint is wrong.

For as Mr. Solicitor said, that the benefit of government was not that the subjects should live safely only, but tutè vivere, pacificè vivere, honestè vivere, & jucundè vivere. And the law in ages past alloweth as much: for Cicero saith, that sex est vinculum civitatis, fundamentum libertatis, & sons æquitatis; and how can it be said that freemen should according to the Statute of Magna Charta, use libertatibus & liberis consuetudinibus suis, when Mr. Darcy hath a patent to restrain cards, another to restrain tennis play, another hawking and hunting, &c. Is not this to make freemen bondmen? And if the Queen cannot to maintain her war, take from her subject 12d. but by Parliament, much lesse may she take moderate recreation from all subjects, which hath continued so long, and is so universal in every country, city, town and houshold, but to punish the abuse is necessary: for common-weals are not made for King's, but Kings for common-weals. (Mag. car. c. 29. 25 E. 3. a. 8.)

The statutes of 12 R. 11 H. 4. and 5. do shew plainly that none were restrained from playing at dice, but servants, and they not altogether restrained, but at times, and from card-playing none restrained untill 33 H. 8. and in that statute, certain persons and certain places restreined, which declareth the intents of the Parliaments to be, that it should be lawful for the rest not restrained, and for them restrained in the times prescribed for times for them to play in. 12 R. 2. cap. 6. 11 H. 4. cap. 4. 33 H. 8. cap. 9.

And if in the times of K. R. 2. H. 4. and 5. it was thought necessary to have several Acts of Parliament to restrain the use of playing in servants, much more is it necessary to have an Act of Parliament to restrain all the subjects of the realm from the moderate use of playing, and not by letters patents only.

But allow that the Queen could restrain card-playing; yet that proveth not that this patent is good, which restraineth not the place, but rather increaseth playing at cards, and taketh away the trade of making and selling of cards from many subjects that used it well, and giveth it to another that knoweth not how to use it: for thus should the argument be to uphold this monopoly patent.

Major. All patents made for the general good of the realm may restrain some subjects in their particular trades lawfully.

Minor. But this patent is made for the general good of the realm.

Conclusio. Therefore this patent may restrain some in their particular trades lawfuly.

The minor proposition or assumption is untrue, and that I will prove so plainly as no man shall gainsay that, and so the force of these letters patents must needs fall to the ground.

[179] Before the making of these letters patents, many subjects were set on work in making of cards, as the preamble of the patent doth partly expresse, and as in truth it is, for that many carvers, painters, carpenters, card-makers and card-sellers maintained themselves, their children and families by their trade.

And now Mr. Darcy hath power to bring all from beyond the seas, contrary to the intent of the statute of 3 E. 4. cap. 6. 1 R. 3. cap. 12. and to restrain all the subjects from making and selling of the same, which is a manifest hurt to the realm, by the opinion of 2 Parliaments.

Where before this patent, men skilful in the trade, being subjects born, and brought up 7 years as apprentices in the trade, according to the statute of 5 Eliz. were imployed in this work in due order, to be seen and corrected by the wardens of the company.

Now Mr. Darcy may set to work in this trade I. a done, and his fellows, without any view search or correction: yea he may set a work only strangers if he will, which is also hurtful to the realm.

Where before cards were, and ought to be sold at reasonable prizes, or else to be punished as enhauncers of merchandize, as appeareth 27 E. 3. by the common laws of the realm.

Now Mr. Darcy by the words of this patent may sell cards for his most advantage, as he doth, viz. one grosse for 35s. where the haberdashers have offered to sell better for 20s. the grosse, and this is malum in se against the common law, that cannot be dispenced with by pat. as malum prohibitum may be.

Where before if any made naughty and false cards, one might buy of others better cards; for that there were then many makers and many sellers.

Now by this patent, be they good, be they bad, be they false, be they true, be they dear, or good cheap, you must buy all of him and his assignes in what manner pleaseth him.

Where before if any person by his industry had obtained excellent skill in his trade, he might have reaped the fruits thereof, and that hath been thought the surest thing a man could obtain, skill and knowledge, because theeves could not steal it.

Now Mr. Darcy hath devised a means to take away a mans skill from him, which was never heard of before, which if others should do the like in other trades, it would discourage men to labour to be skillful in any art, and bring in barbarism and confusion.

Where by the laws of God, the poor and the stranger were to be relieved with the gleaning of the harvest, and the latter grapes of the vintage.

Mr. Darcy by his patent may take all the harvest and vintage of this trade from the natural subjects, and give it to strangers, and not leave so much as the gleaning of the harvest or latter grapes of the vin-[180]-tage for natural born subjects, which is an hatefull thing:

And may not these subjects thus put from their trade, say as the steward in the Gospel said, when he was put out of service, What shall I do? digg I cannot, and to beg I am ashamed, I will use this fraud, &c. And if none will trust them to be beguiled, then will they rob and steal, and become thieves and traitors; for extreamity breedeth nothing but thefts, and then what comfort this will be to him that procured this mischief, I leave to God and his own conscience, remembring this withall, that Bracton saith, It is a good part of a King to reject no person, but to make every person profitable to the common-wealth. And Cicero saith, Qui autem parti consulunt, partemque negligunt, seditiones & discordias inducunt.

NOW TO PROVE THAT IT IS AGAINST THE LAW OF GOD AND MAN.

The ordinance of God is, that every man should live by labour, and that he that will not labour, let him not eat. (Thess. cap. 3.)

This general ordinance of God, by the policy of the realm, and by the laws and customs of the same, is distributed into several arts, manual occupations and trades, whereby we may have the mutual help one of another, and all governed in due order by the wardens and governours of the same society and fellowship.

Now therefore it is as unlawful to prohibit a man not to live by the labour of his own trade, wherein he was brought up as an apprentice, and was lawfully used, as to prohibit him not to live by labour, which if it were by Act of Parliament, it were a void act: for an Act of Parliament against the law of God directly is void, as is expressed in the Book of Doctor and Student, much more letters patents against the law of God are void.

But Mr. Darcy will say this is no necessary trade, and therefore, &c. so others may say the like of silk lace, another of womens tyers, another of gilt rapiers and gilt daggers, and some already have added a reason for the onely making of aqua vitæ aqua composita, vinegar and allegant throughout the whole realm, whereby the several trades that now maintain many thousand good subjects may be cut off by letters patents at an instant upon bare sugestion, which ought only to be done in Parliament; where amongst the assembly of such wise men, some will consider the inconvenience, some the damage, some the profit, some the mischief; some what is meet for this place, some for that place: therefore it is well said of Plato, Except wise men be made governours, or governours made wise men, mankind shall never have quiet rest, nor vertue be able to defend it self.

Now I will put a case of the common law. I. S. is bound to A. B. in 40l. that he shall not use the trade of a dyer in the town of Dale for the space of half a year. The condition of this bond is thought to be against the law, to restrain a man from his lawful trade, though it were but in one town, and but for half a year: much more this patent, which is to restrain men from their trade 21 years, and throughout the whole realm. The like patent whereof is not to be found in any record, or [181] in any book-case within this realm, since the Conquest, until within 20 or 30 years last past, which I do more confidently affirm, because Mr. Solicitor being a very learned man, and others who have argued in this cause for the plaintiff, after much search and study cannot find any such case or record. (2 H. 5. fol. 5.)

I will put other cases where the laws of God and the laws of the realm do agree, as one squared by the rule of the other, to confound this monopoly patent.

Thou shalt not take to pledge the upper or nether milstone, for it is his living. By this law none may take to pawn that which was the living of another, and so to force him to seek another trade, though constrained by need, he give his consent thereunto. (Deut. 24. 6.)

But Mr. Darcy will take from men against their wills, their living and lawful trade, and force them to seek other trades, directly contrary to the law of God.

Agreeing to this rule of God are these book-cases, viz. that none shall distrain, which is a kind of taking to pledge, the upper or nether milstone; yea though the milstone be not then upon the mil, but lieth in the house to be picked, because it is his living, where the other goods in the house are destrainable by law. (14 H. 3. fo. 25.)

In like manner the anvil in the smiths shop, the garment in the taylors shop, the horse within an inne, or at a smiths forge a shooing, are not distrainable, because it is their trades and living, although the rest of the goods in the house are distrainable. (22 E. 4. 49.)

This difference I have always thought reasonable, that because justice floweth from the Queen, as from the head or fountain of justice, that therefore she may grant or restrain the same, more liberally or more sparingly, as she thinketh good, according to the rules of law.

As to grant conusans of plea in such actions, within such precincts as she thinks good, and to save the defaults of the tenant by writ of warrantia die, giving of power to make atturneys in Court by dedimus potestatem, and such like things.

But arts and skill of manual occupations rise not from the King, but from the labour and industry of men, and by the gifts of God to them, tending to the good of the commonwealth, and of the King, the head thereof, and do meet with commutative justice by the way, to see that there be just measure and just weight in things to be measured and weighed, and that no deceipt or fraud be used therein, to the deceipt of the subjects, and for that purpose the office of the clark of the market, gager, and garbler, &c. are used; but to restrain men from any lawful trade whereunto they are inclined, is unnatural and unmeet.

By these statutes and others, as well all merchant-strangers as denizens, have liberty granted to them to bring their wares into England, and to sell the same in grosse, or by retail, notwithstanding any patent, priviledge or custom to the contrary: therefore this monopoly patent to restrain, or take away that from the subjects being merchants, which was [182] given unto them by Parliament, is not good in law, for it is not like the case where the King may dispense with malum prohibitum, and there it is said, that such a charter is hurtful to the King and to his people. (9 E. 3. cap. 1. 25 E. 3. cap. 2.)

And the statute of 26 H. 8. cap. 10. doth give power to the King during his life to restrain or set at liberty traffick beyond the seas for certain countries, which act had been an idle and vain act, if the King by letters patents might have done so much without act. And the writ of ne exeas regnum, was never granted generally against all merchants, but against particular persons, for particular causes; for if partial affection by private discretion do govern publique affairs, there one mans will becometh every mans misery. (26 H. 8. cap. 10. 31 E. 3. cap. 9.)

It is a ground in law, that the King by his patent cannot do wrong, as to make discont. &c. and that his prerogative is no warrant to injure any subject. (Case de Alton woods, fo. 44.)

And sith the law is clear, that if the King grant my lands or goods, the grant is void and unlawful. I see no reason when the King cannot grant away 22d. which I have gotten by my trade, that he should grant away my trade whereby I got that 22d. and maintained my wife and children. (1 H. 4. c. 8. 21 Ass. 24. 8 H. 4. fo. 168.)

That this is a monopoly patent it appeareth by the description or definition set forth by Mr. Solicitor, which is thus. It is a monopoly cum penes vestrum potestas vendendi sit. But when there be many sellers, although they be all free of one company, as goldsmiths, clothiers, merchants, drapers, taylors, shoomakers, tanners, and such like, who have settled governments, and wardens and governours to keep them in order, they were never accounted a monopoly, which the statute of anno. 5 Eliz. in some sort proveth, because in many of these trades all persons are prohibited to use the same, but onely such as have served in the same trade seven years as an apprentice. But if they, or any other like society, should conspire together to inhaunce the prices of their wares, or of their labours, it is a thing punishable by the common laws, presentable in every Court, and to be censured severely in the Star Chamber; but in this patent the sole and whole traffick for the making, buying and selling of cards throughout the realm is given to Mr. Darcy and his assigns onely for twenty one years; which is plain monopoly patent.

Now therefore I will shew you how the Judges have heretofore allowed of monopoly patents, which is, that where any man by his own charge and industry, or by his own wit or invention doth bring any new trade into the realm, or any engine tending to the furtherance of a trade that never was used before: and that for the good of the realm: that in such cases the King may grant to him a monopoly patent for some reasonable time, until the subjects may learn the same, in consideration of the good that he doth bring by his invention to the commonwealth: otherwise not.

In the 9th Eliz. there was a patent granted to Mr. Hastings of the Court. That in consideration that he brought in the skill of making of frisadoes as they were made in Harlem and Amsterdam beyond the seas, [183] being not used in England: that therefore he should have the sole trade of the making and selling thereof for divers years; charging all other subjects not to make any frisadoes in England during that time, upon pain to forfeit the same frisadoes by them made, and to forfeit also 100l. the one moiety thereof to the Queen's Majestie, the other to Mr. Hastings: upon which patent Mr. Hastings about 20 years past exhibited an information in the Exchequer against certain clothiers of Coxsall for making of frisadoes, contrary to the intent of this patent. To which information, for that it was against law to have such penalties of the goods, and 100l. to be forfeited by force of a letter patent; therefore did demur upon the information, and moved the Court, and the opinion of the Court being clear against him, he never went further in his information: but exhibited his English bill in the Exchequer Chamber against them, where upon the examination of the cause it appeared that the same clothiers did make baies very like to Mr. Hastings frisadoes, and that they used to make them before Mr. Hastings patent; for which cause they were neither punished nor restrained from making their baies like to his frisadoes.

Another monopoly patent was granted to Mr. Matthey a cutler at Fleetbridge in the beginning of this Queens time, which I have here in Court to shew, by which patent it was granted unto him the sole making of knives with bone hafts and plates of lattin; because as the patent suggested, he brought the first use thereof from beyond seas; yet neverthelesse when the wardens of the company of cutlers did shew before some of the councel, and some learned in the law, that they did use to make knives before, though not with such hafts, that such a light difference or invention should be no cause to restrain them, whereupon he could never have benefit of this patent, although he laboured very greatly therein.

Lastly the monopoly patent granted to one Humphrey of the Tower, for the sole and only use of a sive or instrument for melting of lead, supposing that it was of his own invention, and therefore prohibited all others to use the same for a time: and because others used the like instrument in Darbyshire, contrary to the intent of his patent, therefore he did sue them in the Exchequer Chamber by English bill. In which Court the question was, whether it was newly invented by him, whereby he might have the sole priviledge, or else used before at Mendiff in the west country, which if it were there before used, then the Court was of opinion he should not have the sole use thereof.

In Easter term last, in the Kings Bench Gowby brought an action of trespass against Knight for false imprisonment. Knight justified because of the Mayor and Citizens of C. have used time out of mind to nominate a town chandler within Cant. and that all the butchers within Canter. should sell there tallow to him at such a price as the mayor should appoint, or else to be committed: and that because the plaintiff was a butcher in the town, and refused to sell his tallow to the town chandler, was committed, and so justified, &c. Whereupon the Court was moved this term, that the issue concerning the custom might be tryed out of Cant. And the Court then thought that the custom was not good, but unreasonable and unlawful, because it did tend to a monopoly. Wherefore the plaintiff did demur upon the same plea.

[184] NOW TOUCHING THE ACTION OF THE CASE GROUNDED UPON THE MONOPOLY PATENT.

There is no wrong done to the plaintiff by the defendant selling of cards better cheap than the plaintiff would, though he received loss, and therefore no cause of action, like unto the case of 11 H. 4. f. 47. where there was a school of long continuance, and another had erected a new school in the same town; whereby the school-master of the ancient school gained not so much as he did before, yet he could have no action against the new school-master for the same: and Mr. Darcies case is much stronger against him: for that he newly intruding into the trade of making and selling of cards, doth bring his action against the ancient card-seller for hindring his sale: which is all one, as if the new school-master should bring his action against the old school-master for teaching so well that he cannot gain so much by teaching his scholars as he desired, which the law will not allow, being damnum absque injuria, as in this case. (11 H. 4. f. 47.)

A man hath a mill in a town of ancient continuance, and another buildeth a mill in the same town, whereby some of his customers doth forsake the ancient mill, this is no wrong though it be damage, and therefore no cause of action, and then also I compare that to this case. (22 H. 6. fo. 14.)

I. S. hath a pasture in the town of Dale, where the tenants do use sometimes to put their cattel to jost, and another person in the same town doth recover grounds overflown with water, and doth make that good pasture, where the tenants have cattel better cheap to the damage of I. S. and yet no cause of action, being neither wrong to I. S. nor hurt to the common-wealth.

The case was this, B. said unto R. that I. S. said, that if he did meet R. he would kill him, whereupon R. for fear of I. S. fled so fast that he killed his horse: this was damage to him, and yet he had no cause of action. So in our case, although the ancient cardseller do sell better cheap than Mr. Darcy, yet it is no wrong to him nor to the common-wealth, so no cause of action.

NOW TO ANSWER THE CASES AND MATTERS MATERIAL TO BE ANSWERED.

Object.

It is first objected, that it is unlawful and hurtful the playing at cards in all parts of the realms, and therefore restrainable by pat. in all parts of the realm.

Resp.

I answer, that moderate playing at cards was never thought unlawful, or prohibited generally, but for servants, and in some particular manner for some persons, which by the intent of the same laws must be thought lawful for the persons not thereby prohibited. And Mr. Darcy in his declaration saith: that he made 4000 grosse of cards for the necessary use of subjects, &c. which necessary use cannot be of a thing hurtful. (12 R. 2. c. 6. 1 H. 4. c. 9. 33 H. 8. c. 9.)

This patent is no restraint of card-playing. But rather an occasion [185] of increase of play, as I can prove plainly, as it is now used, and doth but take the trade of making and selling of cards from many persons, and giveth that trade to one, which is unlawful.

Object.

Where it is objected, that an action of case was maintainable for money won by false dice.

Resp.

This maketh rather against the plaintiff, than with him, for that if it had been won by true dice, it had been so lawfully done, that the party had had no remedy.

Object.

Where they object a writ in the register, rehearsing of a grant made to the Abbot of Westminster, that he should have a fair to continue 32 days at Westminster, and that none during that time should buy or sell any merchandise, within seven miles of the fair.

Resp.

To this I answer, that upon this writ there was never judgment or allowance given in any Court, and that it is unreasonable and absurd that none should buy or sell within seven miles, whatsoever occasion should happen: as many times men are robbed of their apparel, and then they must go seven miles to buy new, or go naked, and there be divers writs in the register which have no warrant of law, as action of waste against tenant for life, when there is a mean remainder for life between, and likewise an action of waste by the heir for waste done in the time of the father, which are against law, and it is a fit answer to vouch against this writ, the writ that Thorninge saith he hath seen in the register, precepe Domino Regi, which is as absurd as the other, though in an other degree, which writs are more meet to be concealed than vouch'd, by such as regard the credit of the law. But it was adjourned till another day.

DIXSON AGAINST WILLIAMS.

An action upon the case was brought against Chester. And he counts, how the plaintiff did certain businesses for him the defendant. And the defendant said to him, Do it, and I will repay whatsoever you lay out. And he shews that he had expended 4l. And does not shew in certain and particular circa quid. And for that cause it was held ill.
